

they were astonished at the tale. And they said, "Do we see? Is this a vision or the truth? If we are not be-witched it is true." And they beat upon their faces, and they said, "We are Faustus and Faustianus, and our hearts were straitened when thou didst begin the tale, and we held firm till we should hear the end of the tale, because many of the things are like one another. And this by my life is our mother, and this is our brother." And when they said this, they embraced me with much weeping, and they kissed me, and they went in to our mother, and found her asleep. And Peter said to them, "Do not wake her, lest an emotion of joy overcome her suddenly, and her soul grow small within her." And when our mother awoke, Peter began to say to her, "I will instruct thee, O woman, about our religion, and our faith in God; we believe in one God, Creator of all this visible world, and we keep His commands, and sanctify and honour [our] parents; and we live a pure life, and have no communion with the heathen in meat or in drink, unless they are baptised in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. And if there is a father or mother or wife or son or brother unbaptised, we do not trust him and do not be grieved if thy son is bound by this unless thou become like him." And when she heard this, she said, "And what is necessary, that I should not be baptised today, and that I should not come to this, because my soul has hated false gods, because they inspire the reverse of chastity, on account of which I fled from Rome with my sons Faustus and Faustianus?" And when our mother said this, my brothers Niceta and Aquila did not wait, but they [were] overjoyed and they embraced her and kissed her. And the woman said, "What is this thing?" Said Peter, "O woman, keep thy presence of mind. These are thy sons Faustus and Faustianus, whom thou didst think were drowned in the sea, how are they here before thee? The sea swallowed them in the middle of the night, and how is the one called Niceta, and the other Aquila?" "Let them tell us now that we and thou may know. I And when Peter said this, the woman fell in a faint from joy, and we restored her with great labour, and when she sat up, she said to us, "I beg of you, my beloved sons, tell me what happened to you in that night." And my brother Niceta said, "I relate to thee, O my mother, that in that night when our ship was wrecked they carried us into the boat, to make merchandise of us, and they rowed with us to the land, and came with us to Caesarea, and they tormented us there with hunger, and beating, in order that we should not say anything that did not suit them. And they changed our names, and sold us to a Jewess, whose name was Justa, and she bought us and educated us, and when we came to years of discretion, we acquired a sure faith in God, and we began disputing and conversing that the godlessness of all the heathen might be reprov'd; and we learnt the sayings of philosophy, that by this we might examine vain philosophies and reasonings. And we associated with a man, a wizard, whose name was Simon, and we had much affection for him, and he nearly led us astray. And it came to us that there was a prophet in the land of Judaea, and everyone who believed in him would live without sorrow or death, and we thought it was Simon; and after that we met a disciple of our master Peter, whose name was Zacchaeus, and he exhorted us much and hurried us from the wizard, and conducted us to Peter, and he led us to the knowledge of the truth. And we seek from God that he would count thee worthy to welcome thee to the grace to which we have come, that we may be filled with grace towards one another. This is the reason why thou didst think that we were drowned that night, and we also thought that thou hadst perished in the sea." And when Niceta said this, our mother ran to Peter and said, "I ask and beg of thee that thou wouldst baptise me, that I may not be deprived one day of intercourse with my children." And we begged this of him; and he commanded her to fast for three days, then after that he baptised her in the sea, in presence of her children, and we took food with her, and we rejoiced at this in the glory of God and the teaching of Peter, and in the knowledge we had got of our mother; and we learnt that chastity is the cause of salvation to the nations; and after that day Peter took us to the harbour, and we washed there, and prayed. And behold, an old man sitting there looking towards us, and observing our prayer closely, and after we had prayed, he approached us to reprove us and to say that everything happens by fortune, and that invocation and prayer are useless; and we remained three days to persuade him to change his opinion of this thing. And thereupon, during our discourse to him, we were calling him "O Father"; and he was calling us, "O my sons." And this was a providence from God, because by it we began to know this word; and Aquila said to me and to Niceta, "Why do you call this stranger Father?" And my brother said to me, "Do not complain of this," and we continued in our talk to him, and he in that opinion of his, and he said: "Although the discourse has convinced me, yet I think of my wife, whose star and whose fortune was in vice, and she fled from wickedness on account of the disgrace, and she was drowned in the sea." And I Clement said to him, "And how dost thou know that the woman when she fled did not marry one of the slaves, and that she died?" "I know certainly, that she did not marry, because she was chaste, and after her death, my brother related to me how she loved him at first and he, in fidelity towards me and his continence in his chastity, did not wish to defile my bed. And she, poor creature, in her fear of me and of disgrace, used an artifice, and she is not to be blamed, for this was fated against her, and she feigned that she had seen a vision and she said to me that: "if I remain here, I shall perish with my sons." And when I heard that from her, verily, through my desire for her safety and [that of] her sons, I sent her, and I kept with me a third son whom I had, as she asserted that she saw in her dreams." And when I heard this from him, I said, "Perhaps this is my father," and my eye wept. And when my brothers Sprung forward, wishing to embrace him, Peter prevented them, and said to them, 'Be silent till it pleases me.' And Peter answered and said to the old man, 'What is the name of thy son, the youngest boy?' And the old man said: "His name is Clement." And Peter answered him and said, "If I show thee today thy chaste wife with her three sons, wilt thou believe that a chaste mind is able to conquer animal emotions, and that my discourse which I made to thee about God is the truth?" And the old man said, "Just as what thou hast promised me cannot be, so there cannot be (anything) without fate." Said Peter, "I call those present to witness that this day I present to thee thy wife with her three sons alive in her chastity. And the proof of this is my knowing the certainty of the thing better than thee. And I tell thee all that she related, in order that thou mayest know and all these may know all this." And when Peter said this he began to relate, saying, "This man whom ye see, my brethren, in his ragged raiment, he is of the people of Rome, of a great lineage, and noble dignity, akin to Cesar, and his name is Faustianus; and he married a noble woman, and her name is Matthidia; and he had three sons by her, two of them twins, and the third younger than they, whose name is Clement, and this is he, and these are the others, the one Aquila, and the other Niceta, and their names at first were, one Faustus, and the other Faustianus. And when Peter said this, and named them by their names, the old man was bewildered, and fainted, and his sons fell upon him kissing him and weeping, supposing that he was dead. And the people were bewildered by this marvel, and Peter commanded us to lean off from the old man, and he took him by the hand, and raised him, and he related to the people all the misfortunes that had befallen him, and the reason that they happened. And when our mother learned this, she came hurrying, crying and saying: "Where is my husband and lord Faustianus, who has been miserable on account of me for a long time, seeking me in every city?" And while she was crying thus, the old man sprang hastily towards her with tears, and they embraced one another. And after all this Peter sent away the crowd of people, and commanded them to come the next day and hear the story. And behold, a man of the nobles came with his wife and children to ask us to go to his house, and Peter did not accept that from him.

And thereupon, behold, [there was] a daughter of the man [who had been] struck by a devil who had possessed her for twenty years, and on that account she was bound with chains, imprisoned in a house; the house was opened suddenly, and the chains were broken, and the devil came out from her; and the girl came and did obeisance to Peter, and said: "O lord, I have come to thee today on account of my salvation, and do not grieve me nor my father." And Peter asked them about the girl, and her parents were bewildered when they saw the chains fallen from her, and her request to Peter. And Peter had pity on her, and commanded us to go to his house. And on the morrow our father came to us, and did all that Peter commanded him; and we turned the discourse so that there might be certainty in the controversy, and after very much speech in reproof of folly, Peter commanded our father not to dwell for any time on what is not necessary to God in religion, but that he should repent, for the end of life is near not only to old men, but also to young ones. And he exhorted the old man with all the people for some days, then he baptised the old man in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, to whom be glory and praise for ever and ever, Amen.

O [thou] who readest, pray for him who wrote it.
The Lord remember thee in mercy, Amen, and all believers.

THE APOCALYPSE OF THOMAS

The Apocalypse of Thomas
From: The Apocryphal New Testament, Oxford
Estimated Range of Dating: 2nd - 4th century A.D.

(The Apocalypse of Thomas is a work from the New Testament apocrypha. It concerns the end of the world, and appears to be a rendering of the Apocalypse of John, although written in a somewhat less enigmatic or mystical manner. It is the inspiration for the popular medieval millennial list Fifteen Signs before Doomsday. The text was written in Greek between the 2nd and the 4th century, and was either copied or translated in Latin in Italy or North Africa.

There are two recensions of the text, the second one of which containing an interpolation apparently written in the 5th century. The Apocalypse of Thomas was widespread in Northwestern Europe, with manuscripts dating between the 8th and the 11th century. It was proscribed by Gelasius of Cyzicus in the 5th century, but this seemed not to have harmed its popularity: the Apocalypse was most likely accepted as canonical "in certain parts of Western Christendom in the 9th and 10th centuries".

The Apocalypse, we see, was known in England in the 9th century at least. It must probably be regarded as the ultimate parent of a little piece which is found in innumerable manuscripts and has often been printed. The interpolated version of the Apocalypse is notable for having inspired the Fifteen Signs before Doomsday, a list of fifteen signs given over fifteen days announcing Judgment Day, a visionary list which spread all over Europe and remained popular possibly into Shakespeare's day.

None of the Latin texts seem to be complete. But we see that Wilhelm's text is a blend of two sorts of Apocalypse -that akin to Daniel which, under the form of prophecy, describes events contemporary with the author and continues them into the future; and that which is more akin to John and describes the signs of the end.

Bihlmeyer's text has only the latter element, and as it agrees pretty closely with our oldest authority, the Vienna fragment (though in that, as I have said, something did precede Bihlmeyer's opening) I judge it to be the older of the two forms. The first part of Wilhelm's text with its clumsy indication of Arcadius and Honorius by means of their initials is much in the manner of the later Sibyllines, in which this particular trick is pushed to an absurd length, and used for quite imaginary personages as well as historic ones. In the second part Wilhelm's text departs widely from the Vienna fragment, and here again shows itself as probably inferior.)

VERSION A

[Verona fragment (8th century) and Wilhelm's text (Munich Clm. 4585, 9th century).]

Here beginneth the epistle of the Lord unto Thomas.

Hear thou, Thomas, the things which must come to pass in the last times: there shall be famine and war and earthquakes in divers places, snow and ice and great drought shall there be and many dissensions among the peoples, blasphemy, iniquity, envy and villainy, indolence, pride and intemperance, so that every man shall speak that which pleaseth him. And my priests shall not have peace among themselves, but shall sacrifice unto me with deceitful mind: therefore will I not look upon them. Then shall the priests behold the people departing from the house of the Lord and turning unto the world and setting up (or, transgressing) landmarks in the house of God. And they shall claim (vindicate) for themselves many things and places that were lost and that shall be subject unto Caesar as also they were aforesaid: giving poll-taxes of for the cities, even gold and silver and the chief men of the cities shall be condemned (here Verona ends: Munich continues) and their substance brought into the treasury of the kings, and they shall be filled.

For there shall be great disturbance throughout all the people, and death. The house of the Lord shall be desolate, and their altars shall be abhorred, so that spiders weave their webs therein. The place of holiness shall be corrupted, the priesthood polluted, distress (agony) shall increase, virtue shall be overcome, joy perish, and gladness depart. In those days evil shall abound: there shall be respecters of persons, hymns shall cease out of the house of the Lord, truth shall be no more, covetousness shall abound among the priests; an upright man (al. an upright priesthood) shall not be found.

On a sudden there shall arise near the last time a king, a lover of the law, who shall hold rule not for long: he shall leave two sons. The first is named of the first letter (A, Arcadius), the second of the eighth (H, Honorius). The first shall die before the second (Arcadius died in 408- Honorius in 423).

Thereafter shall arise two princes to oppress the nations under whose hands there shall be a very great famine in the right-hand part of the east, so that nation shall rise up against nation and be driven out from their own borders.

Again another king shall arise, a crafty man, and shall command a golden image of Caesar to be made (al. to be worshipped in the house of God), wherefore martyrdoms shall abound. Then shall faith return unto the servants of the Lord, and holiness shall be multiplied and distress (agony) increase. The mountains shall be comforted and shall drop down sweetness of fire from the facet, that the number of the saints may be accomplished.

After a little space there shall arise a king out of the east, a lover of the law, who shall cause all good things and necessary to abound in the house of the Lord: he shall show mercy unto the widows and to the needy, and command a royal gift to be given unto the priests: in his days shall be abundance of all things.

And after that again a king shall arise in the south part of the world, and shall hold rule a little space: in whose days the treasury shall fail because of the wages of the Roman soldiers so that the substance of all the aged shall be commanded (to be taken) and given to the king to distribute.

Thereafter shall be plenty of corn and wine and oil, but great dearth of money, so that the substance of gold and silver shall be given for corn, and there shall be great dearth.

At that time shall be very great rising of the sea, so that no man shall tell news to any man. The kings of the earth and the princes and the captains shall be troubled, and no man shall speak freely (boldly). Grey hairs shall be seen upon boys, and the young shall not give place unto the aged.

After that shall arise another king, a crafty man, who shall hold rule for a short space: in whose days there shall be all manner of evils, even the death of the race of men from the east even unto Babylon. And thereafter death and famine and sword in the land of Chanaan even unto Rome. Then shall all the fountains of waters and wells boil over and be turned into blood or, into dust and blood. The heaven shall be moved, the stars shall fall upon the earth, the sun shall be cut in half like the moon, and the moon shall not give her light. There shall be great signs and wonders in those days when Antichrist draweth near. These are the signs unto them that dwell in the earth. In those days the pains of great travail shall come upon them. (al. In those days, when Antichrist now draweth near, these are the signs. Woe unto them that dwell on the earth; in those days great pains of travail shall come upon them.) Woe unto them that build, for they shall not inhabit. Woe unto them that break up the fallow, for they shall labour without cause. Woe unto them that make marriages, for unto famine and need shall they beget sons. Woe unto them that join house to house or field to field, for all things shall be consumed with fire. Woe unto them that look not unto themselves while time alloweth, for hereafter shall they be condemned for ever. Woe unto them that turn away from the poor when he asketh.

[Here is a break: the text goes on: For I am of the high and powerful: I am the Father of all. (al. And know ye: I am the Father most high: I am the Father of all spirits.) This, as we shall see, is the beginning of the older(?) and shorter text, and of the Vienna fragment: only, in the latter, some words now unintelligible precede it: not the words, however, which are in Wilhelm's text. I will continue with Wilhelm.]

These are the seven signs the ending of this world. There shall be in all the earth famine and great pestilences and much distress: then shall all men be led captive among all nations and shall fall by the edge of the sword.

On the first day of the judgement will be a great marvel (or, the beginning shall be). At the third hour of the day shall be a great and mighty voice in the firmament of the heaven, and a great cloud of blood coming down out of the north, and great thunderings and mighty lightnings shall follow that cloud, and there shall be a rain of blood upon all the earth. These are the signs of the first day (Monday in the Anglo-Saxon, and so for the other days).

And on the second day there shall be a great voice in the firmament of the heaven, and the earth shall be moved out of its place: and the gates of heaven shall be opened in the firmament of heaven toward the east, and a great power shall be sent belched forth by the gates of heaven and shall cover all the heaven even until evening (al. and there shall be fears and tremblings in the world). These are the signs of the second day.

And on the third day, about the second hour, shall be a voice in heaven, and the abysses of the earth shall utter their voice from the four corners of the world. The first heaven shall be rolled up like a book and shall straightway vanish. And because of the smoke and stench of the brimstone of the abyss the days shall be darkened unto the tenth hour. Then shall all men say: I think that the end draweth near, that we shall perish. These are the signs of the third day.

And on the fourth day at the first hour, the earth of the east shall speak, the abyss shall roar: then shall all the earth be moved by the strength of an earthquake. In that day shall all the idols of the heathen fall, and all the buildings of the earth. These are the signs of the fourth day.

And on the fifth day, at the sixth hour, there shall be great thunderings suddenly in the heaven, and the powers of light and the wheel of the sun shall be caught away, and there shall be great darkness over the world until evening, and the stars shall be turned away from their ministry. In that day all nations shall hate the world and despise the life of this world. These are the signs of the fifth day.

And on the sixth day there shall be signs in heaven. At the fourth hour the firmament of heaven shall be cloven from the east unto the west. And the angels of the heavens shall be looking forth upon the earth the opening of the heavens. And all men shall see above the earth the host of the angels looking forth out of heaven. Then shall all men flee.

[Bihlmeyer's text, from Munich Clm. 4563 (11th to 12th century, from Benedictbeuren): and the Vienna fragment.]

Hear thou, O Thomas, for I am the Son of God the Father and I am the father of all spirits. Hear thou of me the signs which shall come to pass at the end of this world, when the end of the world shall be fulfilled (Vienna: that it pass away) before mine elect depart out of the world. I will tell thee that which shall come to pass openly unto men (or, will tell thee openly, etc.): but when these things shall be the princes of the angels know not, seeing it is now hidden from before

Then shall there be in the world sharings (participations) between king and king, and in all the earth shall be great famine great pestilences, and many distresses, and the sons of men shall be led captive among all nations and shall fall by the edge of the sword (and there shall be great commotion in the world: Vienna omits). Then after that when the hour of the end draweth nigh there shall be for seven days great signs in heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be moved.

Then shall there be on the first day the beginning: at the third hour of the day a great and mighty voice in the firmament of heaven and a bloody cloud coming up (down, Vienna) out of the north, and great thunderings and mighty lightnings shall follow it, and it shall cover the whole heaven, and there shall be a rain of blood upon all the earth. These are the signs of the first day.

And on the second day there shall be a great voice in the firmament of heaven, and the earth shall be moved out of its place, and the gates of heaven shall be opened in the firmament of heaven toward the east, and the (smoke of a great fire shall break forth through the gates of heaven and shall cover all the heaven until evening. In that day there shall be fears and great terrors in the world. These are the signs of the second day. Vienna is defective here).

But on the third day about the third hour shall be a great voice in heaven, and the abysses of the earth (Vienna ends) shall roar from the four corners of the world; the pinnacles (so) of the firmament of heaven shall be opened, and all the air shall be filled with pillars of smoke. There shall be a stench of brimstone, very evil, until the tenth hour, and men shall say: We think the time draweth nigh that we perish. These are the signs of the third day.

And on the fourth day at the first hour, from the land of the east the abyss shall melt (so) and roar. Then shall all the earth be shaken by the might of an earthquake. In that day shall the ornaments of the heathen fall, and all the buildings of the earth, before the might of the earthquake. These are the signs of the fourth day.

But on the fifth day at the sixth hour, suddenly there shall be a great thunder in heaven, and the powers of light and the wheel of the sun shall be caught away (MS. opened), and there shall be great darkness in the world until evening, and the air shall be gloomy (sad) without sun or moon, and the stars shall cease from their ministry. In that day shall all nations behold as in a mirror (or, behold it as sackcloth) and shall despise the life of this world. These are the signs of the fifth day.

And on the sixth day at the fourth hour there shall be a great voice in heaven, and the firmament of the heaven shall be cloven from the east unto the west, and the angels of the heavens shall be looking forth upon the earth by the openings of the heavens, and all these that are on the earth shall behold the host of the angels looking forth out of heaven. Then shall all men flee unto the monuments (mountains ?) and hide themselves from the face of the righteous angels, and say: Would that the earth would open and swallow us up! And such things shall come to pass as never were since this world was created.

Then shall they behold me coming from above in the light of my Father with the power and honour of the holy angels. Then at my coming shall the fence of fire of paradise be done away - because paradise is girt round about with fire. And this shall be that perpetual fire that shall consume the earth and all the elements of the world.

Then shall the spirits and souls of all men come forth from paradise and shall come upon all the earth: and every one of them shall go unto his own body, where it is laid up, and every one of them shall say: Here lieth my body. And when the great voice of those spirits shall be heard, then shall there be a great earthquake over all the world, and by the might thereof the mountains shall be cloven from above and the rocks from beneath. Then shall every spirit return into his own vessel and the bodies of the saints which have fallen asleep shall arise.

Then shall their bodies be changed into the image and likeness and the honour of the holy angels, and into the power of the image of mine holy Father. Then shall they be clothed with the vesture of life eternal, out of the cloud of light which hath never been seen in this world; for that cloud cometh down out of the highest realm of the heaven from the power of my Father. And that cloud shall compass about with the beauty thereof all the spirits that have believed in me.

Then shall they be clothed, and shall be borne by the hand of the holy angels like as I have told you aforetime. Then also shall they be lifted up into the air upon a cloud of light, and shall go with me rejoicing unto heaven, and then shall they continue in the light and honour of my Father. Then shall there be unto them great gladness with my Father and before the holy angels. These are the signs of the sixth day.

And on the seventh day at the eighth hour there shall be voices in the four corners of the heaven. And all the air shall be shaken, and filled with holy angels, and they shall make war among them all the day long. And in that day shall mine elect be sought out by the holy angels from the destruction of the world. Then shall all men see that the hour of their destruction draweth near. These are the signs of the seventh day.

And when the seven days are passed by, on the eighth day at the sixth hour there shall be a sweet and tender voice in heaven from the east. Then shall that angel be revealed which hath power over the holy angels: and all the angels shall go forth with him, sitting upon chariots of the clouds of mine holy Father (so) rejoicing and running upon the air beneath the heaven to deliver the elect that have believed in me. And they shall rejoice that the destruction of this world hath come.

The words of the Saviour unto Thomas are ended, concerning the end of this world.

THE (FIRST) APOCALYPSE OF JAMES, THE BROTHER OF JESUS

From: The Nag Hammadi Library

Translation: William R. Schoedel

Estimated Range of Dating: 2nd - 4th centuries A.D.

(The First Apocalypse of James is an early third century Gnostic apocalypse. It is regarded as part of the New Testament apocrypha. It was first discovered, amongst 52 other Gnostic Christian books and other texts spread over 13 codices, by an Arab peasant, Mohammad Ali al-Samman, in the Egyptian town of Nag Hammadi in 1945. They were hidden during the fourth century, in an effort to hide the texts from destruction by the new official Church of state created by Emperor Flavius Constantinus. When originally found, they were sealed within a large terra cotta vessel. Another copy has more recently been found in the Codex Tchacos, where it is merely titled 'James'. Those texts were in the Coptic language. In 2017, the first Greek copy was found, the original language of all Christian texts, amongst unpublished Oxyrhynchus Papyri housed at Oxford University.)

The form of the text is primarily that of a Revelation Dialogue between James the brother of Jesus (James the Just) and Jesus, with a rather fragmentary account of the departure (possibly meaning martyrdom) of James appended to the bottom of the manuscript, connected to the remainder by an oblique reference to crucifixion. Some of the framing background details about James given in the text:

1. James was the head of the early church - and not Peter!

2. James was the most senior apostle - not Peter!

3. James fled to Pella [the historical capital of the ancient Greek kingdom of Macedon and birthplace of Alexander the Great] when the Romans invaded Jerusalem in 70 AD. This contradicts the claim of other historians that James was executed or came to death in the fights of the War of the Jews.

The first-known Greek copy of the text was discovered in 2017 at Oxford University by Geoffrey Smith and Brent Landau, religious studies scholars at the University of Texas at Austin. The fragments date from the fifth or sixth century and were probably a teacher's model used to help students learn to read and write. The fragments will be published in the Oxyrhynchus compilation The Greco-Roman Memoirs. One of the most curious features of the First Apocalypse of James is that the range of dating of its original text, assigned to it by scholars, requires that it was written after the so-called Second Apocalypse of James.)

It is the Lord who spoke with me: "See now the completion of my redemption. I have given you a sign of these things, James, my brother. For not without reason have I called you my brother, although you are not my brother materially. And I am not ignorant concerning you; so that when I give you a sign - know and hear."

"Nothing existed except Him-who-is. He is unnameable and ineffable. I myself am also unnameable, from Him-who-is, just as I have been given a number of names - two from Him-who-is. And I, I am before you. Since you have asked concerning femaleness, femaleness existed, but femaleness was not first. And it prepared for itself powers and gods. But it did not exist when I came forth, since I am an image of Him-who-is. But I have brought forth the image of him so that the sons of Him-who-is might know what things are theirs and what things are alien (to them). Behold, I shall reveal to you everything of this mystery. For they will seize me the day after tomorrow. But my redemption will be near."

James said, "Rabbi, you have said, 'they will seize me.' But I, what can I do?" He said to me, "Fear not, James. You too will they seize. But leave Jerusalem. For it is she who always gives the cup of bitterness to the sons of light. She is a dwelling place of a great number of archons. But your redemption will be preserved from them. So that you may understand who they are and what kinds they are, you will [...]. And listen. They are not [...] but archons [...]. These twelve [...] down [...] archons [...] upon his own hebdomad."

James said, "Rabbi, are there then twelve hebdomads and not seven as there are in the scriptures?" The Lord said, "James, he who spoke concerning this scripture had a limited understanding. I, however, shall reveal to you what has come forth from him who has no number. I shall give a sign concerning their number. As for what has come forth from him who has no measure, I shall give a sign concerning their measure"

James said, "Rabbi, behold then, I have received their number. There are seventy-two measures!" The Lord said, "These are the seventy-two heavens, which are their subordinates. These are the powers of all their might; and they were established by them; and these are they who were distributed everywhere, existing under the authority of the twelve archons. The inferior power among them brought forth for itself angels and unnumbered hosts. Him-who-is, however, has been given [...] on account of [...] Him-who-is [...] they are unnumbered. If you want to give them a number now, you will not be able to do so until you cast away from your blind thought, this bond of flesh which encircles you. And then you will reach Him-who-is. And you will no longer be James; rather you are the One-who-is. And all those who are unnumbered will all have been named."

<James said,>, "Rabbi, in what way shall I reach Him-who-is, since all these powers and these hosts are armed against me?" He said to me, "These powers are not armed against you specifically, but are armed against another. It is against me that they are armed. And they are armed with other powers. But they are armed against me in judgement. They did not give [...] to me in it [...] through them [...]. In this place [...] suffering, I shall [...]. He will [...] and I shall not rebuke them. But there shall be within me a silence and a hidden mystery. But I am fainthearted before their anger."

James said, "Rabbi, if they arm themselves against you, then is there no blame?"

"You have come with knowledge, that you might rebuke their forgetfulness. You have come with recollection, that you might rebuke their ignorance"

"But I was concerned because of you. For you descended into a great ignorance, but you have not been defiled by anything in it. For you descended into a great mindlessness, and your recollection remained. You walked in mud, and your garments were not soiled, and you have not been buried in their filth, and you have not been caught."

And I was not like them, but I clothed myself with everything of theirs. There is in me forgetfulness, yet I remember things that are not theirs. There is in me [...], and I am in their [...]."

[...] knowledge [...] not in their sufferings [...]. But I have become afraid before them, since they rule. For what will they do? What will I be able to say? Or what word will I be able to say that I may escape them?"

The Lord said, "James, I praise your understanding and your fear. If you continue to be distressed, do not be concerned for anything else except your redemption. For behold, I shall complete this destiny upon this earth as I have said from the heavens. And I shall reveal to you your redemption."

James said, "Rabbi, how, after these things, will you appear to us again? After they seize you, and you complete this destiny, you will go up to Him-who-is." The Lord said, "James, after these things I shall reveal to you everything, not for your sake alone but for the sake of the unbelief of men, so that faith may exist in them. For a multitude will attain to faith and they will increase in [...]. And after this I shall appear for a reproof to the archons. And I shall reveal to them that he cannot be seized. If they seize him, then he will overpower each of them. But now I shall go. Remember the things I have spoken and let them go up before you." James said, "Lord, I shall hasten as you have said." The Lord said farewell to him and fulfilled what was fitting.

When James heard of his suffering and was much distressed, they awaited the sign of his coming. And he came after several days. And James was walking upon the mountain which is called "Gaugelan", with his disciples, who listened to him because they had been distressed, and he was [...] a comforter, saying, "This is [...] second [...]" Then the crowd dispersed, but James remained [...] prayer [...], as was his custom.

And the Lord appeared to him. Then he stopped (his) prayer and embraced him. He kissed him, saying, "Rabbi, I have found you! I have heard of your sufferings, which you endured. And I have been much distressed. My compassion you know. Therefore, on reflection, I was wishing that I would not see this people. They must be judged for these things that they have done. For these things that they have done are contrary to what is fitting."

The Lord said, "James, do not be concerned for me or for this people. I am he who was within me. Never have I suffered in any way, nor have I been distressed. And this people has done me no harm. But (this people) existed as a type of the archons, and it deserved to be destroyed through them. But [...] the archons, [...] who has [...] but since it [...] angry with [...] The just [...] is his servant. Therefore your name is 'James the Just'." You see how you will become sober when you see me. And you stopped this prayer. Now since you are a just man of God, you have embraced me and kissed me. Truly I say to you that you have stirred up great anger and wrath against yourself. But (this has happened) so that these others might come to be."

But James was timid (and) wept. And he was very distressed. And they both sat down upon a rock. The Lord said to him, "James, thus you will undergo these sufferings. Do not be sad. For the flesh is weak. It will receive what has been ordained for it. But as for you, do not be timid or afraid". The Lord ceased.

Now when James heard these things, he wiped away the tears in his eyes and very bitter [...] which is [...]. The Lord said to him, "James, behold, I shall reveal to you your redemption. When you are seized, and you undergo these sufferings, a multitude will arm themselves against you that <they> may seize you. And in particular three of them will seize you - they who sit (there) as toll collectors. Not only do they demand toll, but they also take away souls by theft. When you come into their power, one of them who is their guard will say to you, 'Who are you or where are you from?' You are to say to him, 'I am a son, and I am from the Father.' He will say to you, 'What sort of son are you, and to what father do you belong?' You are to say to him, 'I am from the Pre-existent Father, and a son in the Pre-existent One.' When he says to you, [...], you are to say to him [...] in the [...] that I might [...]."

And these she produced as she brought down the race from the Pre-existent One. So then they are not alien, but they are ours. They are indeed ours because she who is mistress of them is from the Pre-existent One. At the same time they are alien because the Pre-existent One did not have intercourse with her, when she produced them.' When he also says to you, 'Where will you go?', you are to say to him, 'To the place from which I have come, there shall I return.' And if you say these things, you will escape their attacks."

"But when you come to these three detainers who take away souls by theft in that place [...] these. You [...] a vessel [...] much more than [...] of the one whom you [...] for [...] her root. She produced you without a male, since she was alone (and) in ignorance as to what lives through her mother because she thought that she alone existed. But I shall cry out to her mother. And then they will fall into confusion (and) will blame their root and the race of their mother. But you will go up to what is yours [...] you will [...] the Pre-existent One."

"They are a type of the twelve disciples and the twelve pairs, [...] Achamoth, which is translated 'Sophia'. You are to hide <these things> within you, and you are to keep silence. But you are to reveal them to Addai. When you depart, immediately war will be made with this land. Weep, then, for him who dwells in Jerusalem. But let Addai take these things to heart. In the tenth year let Addai sit and write them down. James said, "I am satisfied [...] and they are [...] my soul. Yet another thing I ask of you: who are the seven women who have been your disciples? And behold all women bless you. I also am amazed how powerless vessels have become strong by a perception which is in them." The Lord said, "You [...] well [...] a spirit of [...], a spirit of thought, a spirit of counsel [...], a spirit [...] a spirit of knowledge [...] of their fear: [...] when we had passed through the breath of this archon who is named Adoniaos [...] him and [...] he was ignorant [...] when I came forth from him, he remembered that I am a son of his. James said, "Rabbi, [...] I [...] all together [...] in them especially [...]." The Lord said, "James, I praise you [...] walk upon the earth [...] the words while he [...] on the [...] For cast away from you the cup which is bitterness. THE (SECOND) APOCALYPSE OF JAMES, THE BROTHER OF JESUS

Translation: Charles W. Hedrick
Estimated Range of Dating: 2nd - 4th centuries A.D.

(The Second Apocalypse of James is a 2nd century apocalyptic text of the Nag Hammadi library which describes the trial and martyrdom of James the Just. It is believed to have been written around the second century AD. The gnostic text contains many Jewish-Christian themes, making many scholars think it to be one of the earlier texts, originally from the early or mid-second century. One of the most curious features of the second apocalypse of James is that this range of dating, of its original text, assigned to it by scholars, requires that it was written before the First Apocalypse of James. The text features a kiss between James and Jesus, on the lips, in a similar manner to the way in which Jesus is said to have kissed Mary Magdalene in other gnostic texts (which lent credence to the idea that early tradition considered Mary to be The Beloved Disciple).

A number of differences are seen from the more canonical history that the text describes. For example, it names James' father Theudas (Thaddeus, which is another name for Jude) rather than Joseph, who is presented as the biological father of James by the mid-second-century Protevangelium of James. The wife of this Theudas is named Mary, but whether this Mary is the same woman as the mother of Jesus, or whether this wife of Theudas named Mary is supposed to be the biological mother of James, is not clear from the text. The First Apocalypse of James explicitly claims that James and Jesus are not biological brothers. There is an Apostle Jude in some lists of the Twelve, but not in others. He is called Jude of James. The name "Jude of James", as given in Luke 6:16, is sometimes interpreted as "Jude, brother of James" (See Luke 6:16), though such a construction commonly denotes a relationship of father and son. The name "Jude of James" could therefore also be interpreted as "James the son of Jude". This would implicate that this James was another James who could have been Jesus' nephew. We have to bear in mind that a cousin or nephew in Antiquity was called "brother" as well.)

This is the discourse that James the Just spoke in Jerusalem, which Mareim, one of the priests, wrote. He had told it to Theuda, the father of the Just One, since he was a relative of his. He said, "Hasten! Come with Mary, your wife, and your relatives [...] therefore [...] of this [...] to him, he will understand. For behold, a multitude are disturbed over his [...], and they are greatly angry at him. [...] and they pray [...]. For he would often say these words and others also."

THE GRAND BIBLE

As I raised my face to stare at him, (my) mother said to me, "Do not be frightened, my son, because he said 'My brother' to you (sg.). For you (pl.) were nourished with this same milk. Because of this he calls me "My mother". For he is not a stranger to us. He is your step-brother [...]"

After these things, when he is ashamed, he shall be disturbed that his labour, which is far from the aeons, is nothing. And his inheritance, which he boasted to be great, shall appear small. And his gifts are not blessings. His promises are evil schemes. For you are not an (instrument) of his compassion, but it is through you that he does violence. He wants to do injustice to us, and will exercise dominion for a time allotted to him.

"But understand and know the Father who has compassion. He was not given an inheritance that was unlimited, nor does it have a (limited) number of days, but it is as the eternal day [...] it is [...] perceive [...]. And he used [...]. For in fact he is not one (come) from them, (and) because of this, he is despised. Because of this he boasts, so that he may not be reproved. For because of this he is superior to those who are below, those by whom you were looked down upon. After he imprisoned those from the Father, he seized them and fashioned them to resemble himself. And it is with him that they exist.

"I saw from the height those things that happened, and I have explained how they happened. They were visited while they were in another form, and, while I was watching, they came to know <me> as I am, through those whom I know.

"Now before those things have happened they will make a [...] I know how they attempted to come down to this place

And those who wish to enter, and who seek to walk in the way that is before the door, open the good door through you. And they follow you; they enter and you escort them inside, and give a reward to each one who is ready for it.

For you are not the redeemer nor a helper of strangers. You are an illuminator and a redeemer of those who are mine, and now of those who are yours.

You shall reveal (to them); you shall bring good among them all.

You they shall admire because of every powerful (deed). You are he whom the heavens bless.

You he shall envy, he who has called himself your Lord. I am the [...] those who are instructed in these things with you.

For your sake, they will reign, and will become kings. For your sake, they will have pity on whomever they pity.

For just as you are first having clothed yourself, you are also the first who will strip himself, and you shall become as you were before you were stripped."

"And he kissed my mouth. He took hold of me, saying, "My beloved! Behold, I shall reveal to you those things that (neither) the heavens nor their archons have known. Behold, I shall reveal to you those things that he did not know, he who boasted, "[...] there is no other except me. Am I not alive? Because I am a father, do I not have power for everything?" Behold, I shall reveal to you everything, my beloved. Understand and know them, that you may come forth just as I am. Behold, I shall reveal to you him who is hidden. But now, stretch out your hand. Now, take hold of me."

"And then I stretched out my hands and I did not find him as I thought (he would be). But afterward I heard him saying, "Understand and take hold of me." Then I understood, and I was afraid. And I was exceedingly joyful.

"Therefore, I tell you judges, you have been judged. And you did not spare, but you were spared. Be sober and [...] you did not know.

He was that one whom he who created the heaven and the earth and dwelled in it, did not see.

He was this one who is the life.

He was the light. He was that one who will come to be.

And again he shall provide an end for what has begun, and a beginning for what is about to be ended.

He was the Holy Spirit and the Invisible One, who did not descend upon the earth.

He was the virgin, and that which he wishes, happens to him.

I saw that he was naked, and there was no garment clothing him.

That which he wills, happens to him [...].

"Renounce this difficult way, which is (so) variable, and walk in accordance with him who desires that you become free men with me, after you have passed above every dominion. For he will not judge (you) for those things that you did, but will have mercy on you. For (it is) not you that did them, but it is your Lord (that did them). He was not a wrathful one, but he was a kind Father.

"But you have judged yourselves, and because of this you will remain in their fetters. You have oppressed yourselves, and you will repent, (but) you will not profit at all. Behold him who speaks and seek him who is silent. Know him who came to this place, and understand him who went forth (from it). I am the Just One, and I do <not> judge. I am not a master, then, but I am a helper. He was cast out before he stretched out his hand. I [...].

The Lord has taken you captive from the Lord, having closed your ears, that they may not hear the sound of my word. Yet you will be able to pay heed in your hearts, and you will call me 'the Just One.' Therefore, I tell you: Behold, I gave you your house, which you say that God has made - that (house) in which he promised to give you an inheritance through it. This (house) I shall doom to destruction and derision of those who are in ignorance. For behold, those who judge deliberarate [...]"

On that day all the people and the crowd were disturbed, and they showed that they had not been persuaded. And he arose and went forth speaking in this manner. And he entered (again) on that same day and spoke a few hours. And I was with the priests and revealed nothing of the relationship, since all of them were saying with one voice, 'Come, let us stone the Just One.' And they arose, saying, 'Yes, let us kill this man, that he may be taken from our midst. For he will be of no use to us.'

And they were there and found him standing beside the columns of the temple beside the mighty corner stone. And they decided to throw him down from the height, and they cast him down. And they [...] they [...]. They seized him and struck him as they dragged him upon the ground. They stretched him out and placed a stone on his abdomen. They all placed their feet on him, saying 'You have erred!'

Again they raised him up, since he was alive, and made him dig a hole. They made him stand in it. After having covered him up to his abdomen, they stoned him in this manner.

And he stretched out his hands and said this prayer - not that (one) which it is his custom to say:

'My God and my father, who saved me from this dead hope, who made me alive through a mystery of what he wills,

Do not let these days of this world be prolonged for me, but the day of your light [...] remains in [...] salvation.

Deliver me from this place of sojourn! Do not let your grace be left behind in me, but may your grace become pure!

Save me from an evil death! Bring me from a tomb alive, because your grace - love - is alive in me to accomplish a work of fullness!

Save me from sinful flesh, because I trusted in you with all my strength, because you are the life of the life!

Save me from a humiliating enemy! Do not give me into the hand of a judge who is severe with sin! Forgive me all my debts of the days (of my life)!

Because I am alive in you, your grace is alive in me. I have renounced everyone, but you I have confessed. Save me from evil affliction!

But now is the time and the hour. O Holy Spirit, send me salvation [...] the light [...] the light [...] in a power [...]'

"After he spoke, he fell silent [...] word [...] afterward [...] the discourse [...]"

THE (GREEK) APOCALYPSE OF PETER

From "The Apocryphal New Testament"

Estimated Range of Dating: 2nd - 4th centuries A.D.

(There is no complete version of this book. Therefore it was necessary to build a reconstruction from several fragment and text elements: From Clement of Alexandria's so-called Prophetical Extracts: A fragment in Greek, called the Akhmim fragment, found with the Passion-fragment of the Gospel of Peter in a manuscript known as the Gizeh manuscript. (discovered in a tomb) now at Cairo. Other fragments are from the Symposium of Methodius of Olympus, a fragment from the Bodleian Library, text from an Ethiopic version contained in one of the numerous forms of the books of Clement, and the last chapter was found in the Sibylline Oracles. The scientific translation by M. R. James has lots of notes and paragraphs. They had to be left out in order to make reading easier and smooth. However, the text is the original translation.

Mind that there is another book in existence with the same name but different contents in Coptic. It was found in Nag Hammadi, Egypt, in 1945. It will follow this version.)

APOCALYPSE OF PETER CHAPTER 1

1 (From Clement of Alexandria's so-called Prophetical Extracts): The Scripture saith that the children which have been exposed (by their parents) are delivered to a care-taking angel by whom they are educated, and made to grow up, and they shall be, it saith, as the faithful of an hundred years old are here in this life.

Wherefore also Peter in the Apocalypse saith: And a flash (lightning) of fire leaping from those children and smiting the eyes of the women.

2 The providence of God doth not light upon them only that are in the flesh. For example, Peter in the Apocalypse saith that the children born out of due time abortively that would have been of the better part (would have been saved if they had lived)--these are delivered to a care-taking angel, that they may partake of knowledge and obtain the better abode, having suffered what they would have suffered had they been in the body. But the others (those who would not have been saved, had they lived) shall only obtain salvation, as beings that have been injured and had mercy shown to them, and shall continue without torment, receiving that as a reward.

But the milk of the mothers, flowing from their breasts and congealing, saith Peter in the Apocalypse, shall engender small beasts (snakes) devouring the flesh, and these running upon them devour them: teaching that the torments come to pass because of the sins (correspond to the sins).

3. (From the Symposium, 2.6, of Methodius of Olympus): Whence also we have received in inspired writings that children born untimely -even if they be the offspring of adultery- are delivered to care-taking angels. For if they had come into being contrary to the will and ordinance of that blessed nature of God, how could they have been delivered to angels to be nourished up in all repose and tranquillity? And how could they have confidently summoned their parents before the judgement seat of Christ to accuse them? saying: Thou, O Lord, didst not begrudge us this light that is common to all, but these exposed us to death, condemning thy commandment.

THE GRAND BIBLE

4. (From the Apocritica, 4.6-7 of Macarius Magnes): And by way of superfluity let this also be cited which is said in the Apocalypse of Peter. He introduces the Heaven, to be judged along with the earth, thus: The earth, he says, shall present all men to God to be judged in the day of judgement being itself also to be judged along with the heaven that encompasseth it.

5. And this again he says, which is a statement full of impiety: And every power of heaven shall be melted, and the heaven shall be rolled up like a book, and all the stars shall fall like leaves from the vine, and as the leaves from the fig-tree.

6. (From an old Latin homily on the Ten Virgins): The closed door is the river of fire by which the ungodly shall be kept out of the kingdom of God, as is written in Daniel and in Peter, in his Apocalypse.... That company of the foolish also shall arise and find the door shut, that is, the fiery river set against them.

APOCALYPSE OF PETER CHAPTER 2

(From The Akhmim Fragment.)

1 Many of them shall be false prophets, and shall teach ways and diverse doctrines of perdition.

2 And they shall become sons of perdition.

3 And then shall God come unto my faithful ones that hunger and thirst and are afflicted and prove their souls in this life, and shall judge the sons of iniquity.

4 And the Lord added and said: Let us go unto the mountain (and) pray.

5 And going with him, we the twelve disciples besought him that he would show us one of our righteous brethren that had departed out of the world, that we might see what manner of men they are in their form, and take courage, and encourage also the men that should hear us.

6 And as we prayed, suddenly there appeared two men standing before the Lord (perhaps add, to the east) upon whom we were not able to look.

7 For there issued from their countenance a ray as of the sun, and their raiment was shining so as the eye of man never saw the like: for no mouth is able to declare nor heart to conceive the glory wherewith they were clad and the beauty of their countenance.

8 Whom when we saw we were astonished, for their bodies were whiter than any snow and redder than any rose.

9 And the redness of them was mingled with the whiteness, and, in a word, I am not able to declare their beauty.

10 For their hair was curling and flourishing (flowery), and fell comely about their countenance and their shoulders like a garland woven of nard and various flowers, or like a rainbow in the air: such was their comeliness.

11 We, then, seeing the beauty of them were astonished at them, for they appeared suddenly.

12 And I drew near to the Lord and said: Who are these?

13 He saith to me: These are your (our) righteous brethren whose appearance ye did desire to see.

14 And I said unto him: And where are all the righteous? or of what sort is the world wherein they are, and possess this glory?

15 And the Lord showed me a very great region outside this world exceeding bright with light, and the air of that place illuminated with the beams of the sun, and the earth of itself flowering with blossoms that fade not, and full of spices and plants, fair-flowering and incorruptible, and bearing blessed fruit.

16 And so great was the blossom that the odour thereof was borne thence even unto us.

17 And the dwellers in that place were clad with the raiment of shining angels, and their raiment was like unto their land.

18 And angels ran round about them there.

19 And the glory of them that dwelt there was all equal, and with one voice they praised the Lord God, rejoicing in that place.

20 The Lord saith unto us: This is the place of your leaders (or, high priests), the righteous men.

21 And I saw also another place over against that one, very squalid; and it was a place of punishment, and they that were punished and the angels that punished them had their raiment dark, according to the air of the place.

22 And some there were there hanging by their tongues; and these were they that blasphemed the way of righteousness, and under them was laid fire flaming and tormenting them.

23 And there was a great lake full of flaming mire, wherein were certain men that turned away from righteousness; and angels, tormentors, were set over them.

24 And there were also others, women, hanged by their hair above that mire which boiled up; and these were they that adorned themselves for adultery. And the men that were joined with them in the defilement of adultery were hanging by their feet, and had their heads hidden in the mire, and said: We believed not that we should come unto this place.

25 And I saw the murderers and them that were consenting to them cast into a strait place full of evil, creeping things, and smitten by those beasts, and so turning themselves about in that torment. And upon them were set worms like clouds of darkness. And the souls of them that were murdered stood and looked upon the torment of those murderers and said: O God, righteous is thy judgement.

26 And hard by that place I saw another strait place wherein the discharge and the stench of them that were in torment ran down, and there was as it were a lake there. And there sat women up to their necks in that liquor, and over against them many children which were born out of due time sat crying: and from them went forth rays of fire and smote the women in the eyes: and these were they that conceived out of wedlock (?) and caused abortion.

27 And other men and women were being burned up to their middle and cast down in a dark place and scourged by evil spirits, and having their entrails devoured by worms that rested not. And these were they that had persecuted the righteous and delivered them up.

28 And near to them again were women and men gnawing their lips and in torment, and having iron heated in the fire set against their eyes. And these were they that did blaspheme and speak evil of the way of righteousness.

29 And over against these were yet others, men and women, gnawing their tongues and having flaming fire in their mouths. And these were the false witnesses.

30 And in another place were gravel-stones sharper than swords or any spit, heated with fire, and men and women clad in filthy rags rolled upon them in torment. [This is suggested by the LXX of two passages in Job: xli. 30, his bed is of sharp spits; viii. 17, on an heap of stones doth he rest, and shall live in the midst of gravel-stones.] And these were they that were rich and trusted in their riches, and had no pity upon orphans and widows but neglected the commandments of God.

31 And in another great lake full of foul matter (pus) and blood and boiling mire stood men and women up to their knees And these were they that lent money and demanded usury upon usury.

32 And other men and women being cast down from a great rock (precipice) fell (came) to the bottom, and again were driven by them that were set over them, to go up upon the rock, and thence were cast down to the bottom and had no rest from this torment. And these were they that did defile their bodies behaving as women: and the women that were with them were they that lay with one another as a man with a woman.

33 And beside that rock was a place full of much fire, and there stood men which with their own hands had made images for themselves instead of God, [And beside them other men and women] having rods of fire and smiting one another and never resting from this manner of torment....

34 And yet others near unto them, men and women, burning and turning themselves about and roasted as in a pan. And these were they that forsook the way of God.

APOCALYPSE OF PETER CHAPTER 4

(From The Ethiopic Text)

1 The Second Coming of Christ and Resurrection of the Dead (which Christ revealed unto Peter) who died because of their sins, for that they kept not the commandment of God their creator.

2 And Peter pondered thereon, that he might perceive the mystery of the Son of God, the merciful and lover of mercy.

And when the Lord was seated upon the Mount of Olives, his disciples came unto him.

3 And we besought and entreated him severally and prayed him, saying unto him: Declare unto us what are the signs of thy coming and of the end of the world, that we may perceive and mark the time of thy coming and instruct them that come after us, unto whom we preach the word of thy gospel, and whom we set over (in) thy church, that they when they hear it may take heed to themselves and mark the time of thy coming.

4 And our Lord answered us, saying: Take heed that no man deceive you, and that ye be not doubters and serve other gods. Many shall come in my name, saying: I am the Christ. Believe them not, neither draw near unto them. For the coming of the Son of God shall not be plain (i.e. foreseen); but as the lightning that shineth from the east unto the west, so will I come upon the clouds of heaven with a great host in my majesty; with my cross going before my face will I come in my majesty, shining sevenfold more than the sun will I come in my majesty with all my saints, mine angels (mine holy angels). And my Father shall set a crown upon mine head, that I may judge the quick and the dead and recompense every man according to his works.

5 And ye, take ye the likeness thereof (learn a parable) from the fig-tree: so soon as the shoot thereof is come forth and the twigs grown, the end of the world shall come.

6 And I, Peter, answered and said unto him: Interpret unto me concerning the fig-tree, whereby we shall perceive it; for throughout all its days doth the fig-tree send forth shoots, and every year it bringeth forth its fruit for its master. What then meaneth the parable of the fig-tree? We know it not.

7 And the Master (Lord) answered and said unto me: Understandest thou not that the fig-tree is the house of Israel? Even as a man that planted a fig-tree in his garden, and it brought forth no fruit. And he sought the fruit thereof many years and when he found it not, he said to the keeper of his garden: Root up this fig-tree that it make not our ground to be unfruitful. And the gardener said unto God: (Suffer us) to rid it of weeds and dig the ground round about it and water it. If then it bear not fruit, we will straightway remove its roots out of the garden and plant another in place of it. Hast thou not understood that the fig-tree is the house of Israel? Verily I say unto thee, when the twigs thereof have sprouted forth in the last days, then shall feigned Christs come and awake expectation saying: I am the Christ, that am now come into the world. And when they (Israel) shall perceive the wickedness of their deeds they shall turn away after them and deny him [whom our fathers did praise], even the first Christ whom they crucified and therein sinned a great sin. But this deceiver is not the Christ. [something is wrong here: the sense required is that Israel perceives the wickedness of antichrist and does not follow him.] And when they reject him he shall slay with the sword, and there shall be many martyrs. Then shall the twigs of the fig-tree, that is, the house of Israel, shoot forth: many shall become martyrs at his hand. Enoch and Elias shall be sent to teach them that this is the deceiver which must come into the world and do signs and wonders to deceive. And therefore shall they that die by his hand be martyrs, and shall be reckoned among the good and righteous martyrs who have pleased God in their life. [Hermas, Vision III.i.9, speaks of 'those that have already been well-pleasing unto God and have suffered for the Name's sake'.]

And he showed me in his right hand the souls of all men, And on the palm of his right hand the image of that which shall be accomplished at the last day; and how the righteous and the sinners shall be separated, and how they do that are upright in heart, and how the evil-doers shall be rooted out unto all eternity. We beheld how the sinners wept (weep) in great affliction and sorrow, until all that saw it with their eyes wept, whether righteous or angels, and he himself also.

8 And I asked him and said unto him: Lord, suffer me to speak thy word concerning the sinners: It were better for them if they had not been created. And the Saviour answered and said unto me: Peter, wherefore speakest thou thus, that not to have been created were better for them? Thou resistest God. Thou wouldst not have more compassion than he for his image: for he hath created them and brought them forth out of not being. Now because thou hast seen the lamentation which shall come upon the sinners in the last days, therefore is thine heart troubled; but I will show thee their works, whereby they have sinned against the Most High.

9 Behold now what shall come upon them in the last days, when the day of God and the day of the decision of the judgement of God cometh. From the east unto the west shall all the children of men be gathered together before my Father that liveth for ever. And he shall command hell to open its bars of adamant and give up all that is therein.

10 And the wild beasts and the fowls shall he command to restore all the flesh that they have devoured, because he willeth that men should appear; for nothing perisheth before God, and nothing is impossible with him, because all things are his.

11 For all things come to pass on the day of decision, on the day of judgement, at the word of God: and as all things were done when he created the world and commanded all that is therein and it was done - even so shall it be in the last days; for all things are possible with God. And therefore saith he in the scripture: [Ezek. xxxvii.] Son of man, prophesy upon the several bones and say unto the bones: bone unto bone in joints, sinew, nerves, flesh and skin and hair thereon [and soul and spirit].

12 And soul and spirit shall the great Uriel give them at the commandment of God; for him hath God set over the rising again of the dead at the day of judgement.

13 Behold and consider the corns of wheat that are sown in the earth. As things dry and without soul do men sow them in the earth: and they live again and bear fruit, and the earth restoreth them as a pledge entrusted unto it.

[And this that dieth, that is sown as seed in the earth, and shall become alive and be restored unto life, is man. Probably a gloss.]

14 How much more shall God raise up on the day of decision them that believe in him and are chosen of him, for whose sake he made the world? And all things shall the earth restore on the day of decision, for it also shall be judged with them, and the heaven with it.

15 And this shall come at the day of judgement upon them that have fallen away from faith in God and that have committed sin: Floods (cataracts) of fire shall be let loose; and darkness and obscurity shall come up and clothe and veil the whole world and the waters shall be changed and turned into coals of fire and all that is in them shall burn, and the sea shall become fire. Under the heaven shall be a sharp fire that cannot be quenched and floweth to fulfil the judgement of wrath. And the stars shall fly in pieces by flames of fire, as if they had not been created and the powers (firmaments) of the heaven shall pass away for lack of water and shall be as though they had not been. And the lightnings of heaven shall be no more, and by their enchantment they shall affright the world (probably: The heaven shall turn to lightning and the lightnings thereof shall affright the world. The spirits also of the dead bodies shall be like unto them (the lightnings?) and shall become fire at the commandment of God.

16 And so soon as the whole creation dissolveth, the men that are in the east shall flee unto the west, unto the east; they that are in the south shall flee to the north, and they that are in the south. And in all places shall the wrath of a fearful fire overtake them and an unquenchable flame driving them shall bring them unto the judgement of wrath, unto the stream of unquenchable fire that floweth, flaming with fire, and when the waves thereof part themselves one from another, burning, there shall be a great gnashing of teeth among the children of men.

17 Then shall they all behold me coming upon an eternal cloud of brightness: and the angels of God that are with me shall sit (prob. And I shall sit) upon the throne of my glory at the right hand of my Heavenly Father; and he shall set a crown upon mine head. And when the nations behold it, they shall weep, every nation apart.

18 Then shall he command them to enter into the river of fire while the works of every one of them shall stand before them (something is wanting) to every man according to his deeds. As for the elect that have done good, they shall come unto me and not see death by the devouring fire. But the unrighteous the sinners, and the hypocrites shall stand in the depths of darkness that shall not pass away, and their chastisement is the fire, and angels bring forward their sins and prepare for them a place wherein they shall be punished for ever (every one according to his transgression).

19 Uriel (Urael) the angel of God shall bring forth the souls of those sinners (every one according to his transgression: perhaps this clause should end the preceding paragraph: so Grebaut takes it) who perished in the flood, and of all that dwell in all idols, in every molten image, in every (object of) love, and in pictures, and of those that dwelt on all hills and in stones and by the wayside, whom men called gods: they shall burn them with them (the objects in which they dwelt, or their worshippers?) in everlasting fire; and after that all of them with their dwelling places are destroyed, they shall be punished eternally.

APOCALYPSE OF PETER CHAPTER 5

1 Then shall men and women come unto the place prepared for them. By their tongues wherewith they have blasphemed the way of righteousness shall they be hanged up. There is spread under them unquenchable fire, that they escape it not.

2 Behold, another place: therein is a pit, great and full (of . . .) In it are they that have denied righteousness: and angels of punishment chastise them and there do they kindle upon them the fire of their torment.

3 And again behold [two: corrupt] women: they hang them up by their neck and by their hair; they shall cast them into the pit. These are they which plaited their hair, not for good (or, not to make them beautiful) but to turn them to fornication, that they might ensnare the souls of men unto perdition. And the men that lay with them in fornication shall be hung by their loins in that place of fire; and they shall say one to another: We knew not that we should come unto everlasting punishment.

4 And the murderers and them that have made common cause with them shall they cast into the fire, in a place full of venomous beasts, and they shall be tormented without rest, feeling their pains; and their worms shall be as many in number as a dark cloud. And the angel Ezrael shall bring forth the souls of them that have been slain, and they shall behold the torment of them that slew them, and say one to another: Righteousness and justice is the judgement of God. For we heard, but we believed not, that we should come into this place of eternal judgement.

5 And near by this flame shall be a pit, great and very deep, and into it floweth from above all manner of torment, foulness, and issue. And women are swallowed up therein up to their necks and tormented with great pain. These are they that have caused their children to be born untimely, and have corrupted the work of God that created them. Over against them shall be another place where sit their children [both] alive, and they cry unto God. And flashes (lightnings) go forth from those children and pierce the eyes of them that for fornication's sake have caused their destruction.

6 Other men and women shall stand above them, naked; and their children stand over against them in a place of delight, and sigh and cry unto God because of their parents, saying: These are they that have despised and cursed and transgressed thy commandments and delivered us unto death: they have cursed the angel that formed us, and have hanged us up, and withheld from us (or, begrudged us) the light which thou hast given unto all creatures. And the milk of their mothers flowing from their breasts shall congeal, and from it shall come beasts devouring flesh, which shall come forth and turn and torment them for ever with their husbands, because they forsook the commandments of God and slew their children. As for their children, they shall be delivered unto the angel Temlakos (i.e. a care-taking angel: see above, in the Fragments). And they that slew them shall be tormented eternally, for God willeth it so.

7 Ezrael the angel of wrath shall bring men and women, the half of their bodies burning, and cast them into a place of darkness, even the hell of men; and a spirit of wrath shall chastise them with all manner of torment, and a worm that sleeth not shall devour their entrails: and these are the persecutors and betrayers of my righteous ones.

8 And beside them that are there, shall be other men and women, gnawing their tongues; and they shall torment them with red-hot iron and burn their eyes. These are they that slander and doubt of my righteousness. Other men and women whose works were done in deceitfulness shall have their lips cut off, and fire entereth into their mouth and their entrails. These are the false witnesses (al. these are they that caused the martyrs to die by their lying).

9 And beside them, in a place near at hand, upon the stone shall be a pillar of fire, and the pillar is sharper than swords. And there shall be men and women clad in rags and filthy garments, and they shall be cast thereon, to suffer the judgement of a torment that ceaseth not: these are they that trusted in their riches and despised the widows and the woman with fatherless children. . . before God.

10 And into another place hard by, full of filth, do they cast men and women up to the knees. These are they that lent money and took usury.

11 And other men and women cast themselves down from an high place and return again and run, and devils drive them. [These are the worshippers of idols] and they put them to the end of their wrist (drive them up to the top of the height) and they cast themselves down. And thus do they continually, and are tormented for ever. These are they which have cut their flesh as [apostles] of a man: and the women that were with them . . . and these are the men that defiled themselves together as women. (This is very corrupt: but the sense is clear in the Greek.)

12 And beside them (shall be a brazier ?) . . . and beneath them shall the angel Ezrael prepare a place of much fire: and all the idols of gold and silver, all idols, the work of men's hands, and the semblances of images of cats and lions, of creeping things and wild beasts, and the men and women that have prepared the images thereof, shall be in chains of fire and shall be chastised because of their error before the idols, and this is their judgement for ever. (In the Greek they beat each other with rods of fire: and this is better.)

13 And beside them shall be other men and women, burning in the fire of the judgement, and their torment is everlasting. These are they that have forsaken the commandment of God and followed the (persuasions ?) of devils.

APOCALYPSE OF PETER CHAPTER 6

(Parts of these two sections are in the Bodleian Fragment. At this point the Akhmim fragment ends. The Ethiopic continues):

1 And there shall be another place, very high (corrupt sentences follow. Duensing omits them: Grebaut renders doubtfully: There shall be a furnace and a brazier wherein shall burn fire. The fire that shall burn shall come from one end of the brazier). The men and women whose feet slip, shall go rolling down into a place where is fear. And again while the fire that is prepared floweth, they mount up and fall down again and continue to roll down. (This suggests a narrow bridge over a stream of fire which they keep trying to cross.) Thus shall they be tormented for ever. These are they that honoured not their father and mother and of their own accord withheld (withdrew) themselves from them. Therefore shall they be chastised eternally.

2 Furthermore the angel Ezrael shall bring children and maidens to show them those that are tormented. They shall be chastised with pains, with hanging (their bodies) up and with a multitude of wounds which flesh-devouring birds shall inflict upon them. These are they that boast themselves (trust) in their sins, and obey not their parents and follow not the instruction of their fathers, and honour not them that are more aged than they.

3 Beside them shall be girls clad in darkness for a garment and they shall be sore chastised and their flesh shall be torn in pieces. These are they that kept not their virginity until they were given in marriage, and with these torments shall they be punished, and shall feel them.

4 And again, other men and women, gnawing their tongues without ceasing, and being tormented with everlasting fire. These are the servants (slaves) which were not obedient unto their masters; and this then is their judgement for ever.

5 And hard by this place of torment shall be men and women dumb and blind, whose raiment is white. They shall crowd one upon another, and fall upon coals of unquenchable fire. These are they that give alms and say: We are righteous before God: whereas they have not sought after righteousness.

6 Ezrael the angel of God shall bring them forth out of this fire and establish a judgement of decision. This then is their judgement. A river of fire shall flow and all judgement (they that are judged) shall be drawn down into the middle of the river. And Uriel shall set them there.

7 And there are wheels of fire and men and women hung thereon by the strength of the whirling thereof. And they that are in the pit shall burn: now these are the sorcerers and sorceresses. Those wheels shall be in all decision (judgement, punishment) by fire without number.

8 Thereafter shall the angels bring mine elect and righteous which are perfect in all uprightness, and bear them in their hands, and clothe them with the raiment of the life that is above. They shall see their desire on them that hated them, when he punisheth them, and the torment of every one shall be for ever according to his works.

9 And all they that are in torment shall say with one voice: have mercy upon us, for now know we the judgement of God, which he declared unto us aforesaid, and we believed not. And the angel Tatirokos (Tartaruchus, keeper of hell: a word corresponding in formation to Temeluchus) shall come and chastise them with yet greater torment, and say unto them: Now do ye repent, when it is no longer the time for repentance, and nought of life remaineth. And they shall say: Righteous is the judgement of God, for we have heard and perceived that his judgement is good; for we are recompensed according to our deeds.

10 Then will I give unto mine elect and righteous the washing (baptism) and the salvation for which they have besought me, in the field of Akrosja (Acherousia, a lake in other writings, e.g. Apocalypse of Moses -where the soul of Adam is washed in it: see also Paul 22, 23) which is called Aneslasleja (Elysium). They shall adorn with flowers the portion of the righteous, and I shall go . . . I shall rejoice with them. I will cause the peoples to enter in to mine everlasting kingdom, and show them that eternal thing (life ?) whereon I have made them to set their hope, even I and my Father which is in heaven.

11 I have spoken this unto thee, Peter, and declared it unto thee. Go forth therefore and go unto the land (or city) of the west. (Duensing omits the next sentences as unintelligible; Grebaut and N. McLean render thus: and enter into the vineyard which I shall tell thee of, in order that by the sickness (sufferings) of the Son who is without sin the deeds of corruption may be sanctified. As for thee, thou art chosen according to the promise which I have given thee. Spread thou therefore my gospel throughout all the world in peace. Verily men shall rejoice: my words shall be the source of hope and of life, and suddenly shall the world be ravished.)

(We now have the section descriptive of paradise, which in the Akhmim text precedes that about hell.)

1 And my Lord Jesus Christ our King said unto me: Let us go unto the holy mountain. And his disciples went with him, praying. And behold there were two men there, and we could not look upon their faces, for a light came from them, shining more than the sun, and their raiment also was shining, and cannot be described, and nothing is sufficient to be compared unto them in this world. And the sweetness of them . . . that no mouth is able to utter the beauty of their appearance (or, the mouth hath not sweetness to express, &c.), for their aspect was astonishing and wonderful. And the other, great, I say (probably: and, in a word, I cannot describe it), shineth in his (sic) aspect above crystal. Like the flower of roses is the appearance of the colour of his aspect and of his body . . . his head (al. their head was a marvel). And upon his (their) shoulders (evidently something about their hair has dropped out) and on their foreheads was a crown of nard woven of fair flowers. As the rainbow in the water (in the time of rain) so was their hair. And such was the comeliness of their countenance, adorned with all manner of ornament. And when we saw them on a sudden, we marvelled. And I drew near unto the Lord (God) Jesus Christ and said unto him: O my Lord, who are these? And he said unto me: They are Moses and Elias. And I said unto him: Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and the rest of the righteous fathers? And he showed us a great garden, open, full of fair trees and blessed fruits, and of the odour of perfumes. The fragrance thereof was pleasant and came even unto us. And thereof (al. of that tree) . . . saw I much fruit. And my Lord and God Jesus Christ said unto me: Hast thou seen the companies of the fathers?

2 As is their rest, such also is the honour and the glory of them that are persecuted for my righteousness' sake. And I rejoiced and believed [and believed] and understood that which is written in the book of my Lord Jesus Christ. And I said unto him: O my Lord, wilt thou that I make here three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias? And he said unto me in wrath: Satan maketh war against thee, and hath veiled thine understanding; and the good things of this world prevail against thee. Thine eyes therefore must be opened and thine ears unstopped that a tabernacle, not made with men's hands, which my heavenly Father hath made for me and for the elect. And we beheld it and were full of gladness.

3 And behold, suddenly there came a voice from heaven, saying: This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased: my commandments. And then came a great and exceeding white cloud over our heads and bare away our Lord and Moses and Elias. And I trembled and was afraid: and we looked up and the heaven opened and we beheld men in the flesh, and they came and greeted our Lord and Moses and Elias and went into another heaven. And the word of the scripture was fulfilled: This is the generation that seeketh him and seeketh the face of the God of Jacob. And great fear and commotion was there in heaven and the angels pressed one upon another that the word of the scripture might be fulfilled which saith: Open the gates, ye princes.

4 Thereafter was the heaven shut, that had been open. And we prayed and went down from the mountain, glorifying God, which hath written the names of the righteous in heaven in the book of life. There is a great deal more of the Ethiopic text, but it is very evidently of later date; the next words are:

5 'Peter opened his mouth and said to me: Hearken, my son Clement, God created all things for his glory,' and this proposition is dwelt upon. The glory of those who duly praise God is described in terms borrowed from the Apocalypse: 'The Son at his coming will raise the dead . . . and will make my righteous ones shine seven times more than the sun, and will make their crowns shine like crystal and like the rainbow in the time of rain (crowns) which are perfumed with nard and cannot be contemplated (adorned) with rubies, with the colour of emeralds shining brightly, with topazes, gems, and yellow pearls that shine like the stars of heaven, and like the rays of the sun, sparkling which cannot be gazed upon.' Again, of the angels: 'Their faces shine more than the sun; their crowns are as the rainbow in the time of rain. (They are perfumed) with nard. Their eyes shine like the morning star. The beauty of their appearance cannot be expressed.... Their raiment is not woven, but white as that of the fuller, according as I saw on the mountain where Moses and Elias were. Our Lord showed at the transfiguration the apparel of the last days, of the day of resurrection, unto Peter, James and John the sons of Zebedee, and a bright cloud overshadowed us, and we heard the voice of the Father saying unto us: This is my Son whom I love and in whom I am well pleased: hear him. And being afraid we forgot all the things of this life and of the flesh, and knew not what we said because of the greatness of the wonder of that day, and of the mountain whereon he showed us the second coming in the kingdom that passeth not away.'

6 'The Father hath committed all judgement unto the Son.' The destiny of sinners - their eternal doom - is more than Peter can endure: he appeals to Christ to have pity on them.

7 And my Lord answered me and said to me: 'Hast thou understood that which I said unto thee before? It is permitted unto thee to know that concerning which thou askest: but thou must not tell that which thou hearest unto the sinners lest they transgress the more, and sin.' Peter weeps many hours, and is at last consoled by an answer which, though exceedingly diffuse and vague does seem to promise ultimate pardon for all: 'My Father will give unto them all the life, the glory, and the kingdom that passeth not away,' . . . 'It is because of them that have believed in me that I am come. It is also because of them that have believed in me, that, at their word, I shall have pity on men.'

(From The Sibylline Oracles, Many lines are borrowed from the older books, especially 3 and 8.) After saying (1.187) that Elias will descend on earth and do three great signs, it proceeds:

1 Woe unto all them that are found great with child in that day, and to them that give suck to infant children, and to them that dwell by the sea (the waves). Woe to them that shall behold that day. For a dark mist shall cover the boundless world, of the east and west, the south and north. And then shall a great river of flaming fire flow from heaven and consume all places, the earth and the great ocean and the grey sea, lakes and rivers and fountains, and merciles

2 Hades and the pole of heaven: but the lights of heaven shall melt together in one and into a void (desolate) shape (?). For the stars shall all fall from heaven into the sea (?), and all souls of men shall gnash their teeth as they burn in the river of brimstone and the rush of the fire in the blazing plain, and ashes shall cover all things. And then shall all the elements of the world be laid waste, air, earth, sea, light poles, days and nights, and no more shall the multitudes of birds fly in the air nor swimming creatures any more swim the sea no ship shall sail with its cargo over the waves;

3 No straight-going oxen shall plough the tilled land; there shall be no more sound of swift winds, but he shall fuse all things together into one, and purge them clean.

4 Now when the immortal angels of the undying God Barakiel, Ramiel, Uriel, Samiel, and Azazel, [These names are from Enoch.] knowing all the evil deeds that any hath wrought aforetime - then out of the misty darkness they shall bring all the souls of men to judgement, unto the seat of God the immortal, the great.

5 For he only is incorruptible, himself the Almighty, who shall be the judge of mortal men. And then unto them of the underworld shall the heavenly one give their souls and spirit and speech, and their bones joined together, with all the joints, and the flesh and sinews and veins, and skin also over the flesh, and hair as before, and the bodies of the dwellers upon earth shall be moved and arise in one day, joined together in immortal fashion and breathing.

6 Then shall the great angel Uriel break the monstrous bars framed of unyielding and unbroken adamant, of the brazen

7 gates of Hades, and cast them down straightway, and bring forth to judgement all the sorrowful forms, yea, of the ghosts of the ancient Titans, and of the giants, and all whom the flood overtook. And all whom the wave of the sea hath destroyed in the waters, and all whom beasts and creeping things and fowls have feasted on: all these shall he bring to the judgement seat; and again those whom flesh-devouring fire hath consumed in the flames, them also shall he gather and set before God's seat. And when he shall overcome Fate and raise the dead, then shall Adonai Sabaoth the high thunderer sit on his heavenly

8 throne, and set up the great pillar, and Christ himself, the undying unto the undying, shall come in the clouds in glory with the pure angels, and shall sit on the seat on the right of the Great One, judging the life of the godly and the walk of ungodly men.

9 Moses also the great, the friend of the Most High shall come, clad in flesh, and the great Abraham himself shall come, and Isaac and Jacob, Jesus, Daniel, Elias, Ambacum (Habakkuk), and Jonas, and they whom the Hebrews slew: and all the Hebrews that were with (after ?) Jeremias shall be judged at the judgement seat, and he shall destroy them, that they may receive a due reward and expiate all that they did in their mortal life.

10 Then shall all men pass through a blazing river and unquenchable flame, and the righteous shall be saved whole all of them, but the ungodly shall perish therein unto all ages, even as many as wrought evil aforetime, and committed murders, and all that were privy thereto, liars, thieves, deceivers, cruel destroyers of houses, gluttons, marriers by stealth, shedders of evil rumours, sorely insolent lawless, idolaters: and all that forsook the great immortal God and became blasphemers and harmers of the godly, breakers of faith and destroyers of righteous men. And all that look with guileful and shameless double faces - reverend priests and deacons - and judge unjustly, dealing perversely, obeying false rumours . . . more deadly than leopards and wolves, and very evil: and all that are high-minded, and usurers that heap up in their houses usury out of usury and injure orphans and widows continually: and they that give alms of unjust gain unto widows and orphans, and they that when they give alms of their own toil, reproach them; and they that have forsaken their parents in their old age and not repaid them at all, nor recompensed them for their nurture; yea, and they that have disobeyed and spoken hard words against their parents: they also that have received pledges and denied them, and servants that have turned against their masters; and again they which have defiled their flesh in lasciviousness, and have loosed the girdle of virginity in secret union, and they that make the child in the womb miscarry, and that cast out their offspring against right: sorcerers also and sorceresses with these shall the wrath of the heavenly and immortal God bring near unto the pillar, all round about which the untiring river of fire shall flow. And all of them shall the undying angels of the immortal everlasting God chastise terribly with flaming scourges, and shall bind them fast from above in fiery chains, bonds unbreakable. And then shall they cast them down in the darkness of night into Gehenna among the beasts of hell, many and frightful, where is darkness without measure.

11 And when they have dealt out many torments unto all whose heart was evil, thereafter out of the great river shall a wheel of fire encompass them, because they devised wicked works. And then shall they lament apart every one from another in miserable fate, fathers and infant children, mothers and sucklings weeping, nor shall they be sated with tears nor shall the voice of them that mourn piteously apart be heard (?); but far under dark and squalid Tartarus shall they cry in torment, and in no holy place shall they abide and expiate threefold every evil deed that they have done, burning in a great flame; and shall gnash their teeth, all of them worn out with fierce thirst and hunger (al. force violence), and shall call death lovely and it shall flee from them: for no more shall death nor night give them rest, and oft-times shall they beseech in vain the Almighty God, and then shall he openly turn away his face from them. For he hath granted the limit of seven ages for repentance unto men that err, by the hand of a pure virgin.

12 But the residue which have cared for justice and good deeds, yea, and godliness and righteous thoughts, shall angels bear up and carry through the flaming river unto light, and life without care, where is the immortal path of the great God; and three fountains, of wine and honey and milk. And the earth, common to all, not parted out with walls or fences, shall then bring forth of her own accord much fruit, and life and wealth shall be common and undistributed. For there shall be no poor man, nor rich, nor tyrant, nor slave, none great nor small any longer, no kings, no princes; but all men shall be together in common. And no more shall any man say 'night is come', nor 'the morrow', nor 'it was yesterday'. He maketh no more of days, nor of spring, nor winter, nor summer, nor autumn, neither marriage, nor death, nor selling, nor buying, nor set of sun, nor rising. For God shall make one long day.

13 And unto them, the godly, shall the almighty and immortal God grant another boon, when they shall ask it of him. He shall grant them to save men out of the fierce fire and the eternal gnashing of teeth: and this will he do, for he will gather them again out of the everlasting flame and remove them else whither, sending them for the sake of his people unto another life eternal and immortal, in the Elysian plain where are the long waves of the Acherusian lake exhaustless and deep bosomed;

14 Plainly false: for the fire will never cease to torment the damned. I indeed could pray that it might be so, who am branded with the deepest scars of transgressions which stand in need of utmost mercy. But let Origen be ashamed of his lying words, who saith that there is a term set to the torments.'

THE (COPTIC) APOCALYPSE OF PETER

From: Nag Hammadi Library, Egypt
Translation: James Brasher and Roger A. Bullard
Estimated range of dating: 100-180 AD.

(The Coptic Apocalypse of Peter is a text found amongst the Nag Hammadi library, and part of the New Testament apocrypha. It was probably written around 100-200 AD. Since it represents Gnostic views, it is also known as the Gnostic Apocalypse of Peter.)

The text takes gnostic interpretations of the crucifixion to the extreme, picturing Jesus as laughing and warning against people who cleave to the name of a dead man, thinking they shall become pure. Like some of the rarer Gnostic writings, this one also doubts the established Crucifixion story which places Jesus on the cross. Instead, according to this text, there was a substitute: "He whom you saw on the tree, glad and laughing, this is the living Jesus. But this one into whose hands and feet they drive the nails is his fleshly part, which is the substitute being put to shame, the one who came into being in his likeness. But look at him and me.")

1 As the Saviour was sitting in the temple in the three hundredth (year) of the covenant and the agreement of the tenth pillar, and being satisfied with the number of the living, incorruptible Majesty, he said to me, "Peter, blessed are those above belonging to the Father, who revealed life to those who are from the life, through me, since I reminded they who are built on what is strong, that they may hear my word, and distinguish words of unrighteousness and transgression of law from righteousness, as being from the height of every word of this Pleroma of truth, having been enlightened in good pleasure by him whom the principalities sought. But they did not find him, nor was he mentioned among any generation of the prophets. He has now appeared among these, in him who appeared, who is the Son of Man, who is exalted above the heavens in a fear of men of like essence. But you yourself, Peter, become perfect in accordance with your name with myself, the one who chose you, because from you I have established a base for the remnant whom I have summoned to knowledge. Therefore be strong until the imitation of righteousness - of him who had summoned you, having summoned you to know him in a way which is worth doing because of the rejection which happened to him, and the sinews of his hands and his feet, and the crowning by those of the middle region, and the body of his radiance which they bring in hope of service because of a reward of honour - as he was about to reprove you three times in this night."

2 And as he was saying these things, I saw the priests and the people running up to us with stones, as if they would kill us; and I was afraid that we were going to die.

3 And he said to me, "Peter, I have told you many times that they are blind ones who have no guide. If you want to know their blindness, put your hands upon (your) eyes - your robe - and say what you see."

4 But when I had done it, I did not see anything. I said "No one sees (this way)."

5 Again he told me, "Do it again."

6 And there came in me fear with joy, for I saw a new light greater than the light of day. Then it came down upon the Saviour. And I told him about those things which I saw.

7 And he said to me again, "Lift up your hands and listen to what the priests and the people are saying."

8 And I listened to the priests as they sat with the scribes. The multitudes were shouting with their voice.

9 When he heard these things from me he said to me, "Prick up your ears and listen to the things they are saying."

10 And I listened again, "As you sit, they are praising you".

11 And when I said these things, the Saviour said, "I have told you that these (people) are blind and deaf. Now then, listen to the things which they are telling you in a mystery, and guard them, Do not tell them to the sons of this age. For they shall blaspheme you in these ages since they are ignorant of you, but they will praise you in knowledge."

12 "For many will accept our teaching in the beginning. And they will turn from them again by the will of the Father of their error, because they have done what he wanted. And he will reveal them in his judgement, i.e., the servants of the Word. But those who became mingled with these shall become their prisoners, since they are without perception. And the guileless, good, pure one they push to the worker of death, and to the kingdom of those who praise Christ in a restoration. And they praise the men of the propagation of falsehood, those who will come after you. And they will cleave to the name of a dead man, thinking that they will become pure. But they will become greatly defiled and they will fall into a name of error, and into the hand of an evil, cunning man and a manifold dogma, and they will be ruled without law."

13 "For some of them will blaspheme the truth and proclaim evil teaching. And they will say evil things against each other. Some will be named: (those) who stand in (the) strength of the archons, of a man and a naked woman who is manifold and subject to much suffering. And those who say these things will ask about dreams. And if they say that a dream came from a demon worthy of their error, then they shall be given perdition instead of incurrption."

14 "For evil cannot produce good fruit. For the place from which each of them is produces that which is like itself; for not every soul is of the truth, nor of immortality. For every soul of these ages has death assigned to it in our view, because it is always a slave, since it is created for its desires and their eternal destruction, in which they are and from which they are. They love the creatures of the matter which came forth with them."

15 "But the immortal souls are not like these, O Peter. But indeed, as long as the hour is not yet come, it (the immortal soul) shall resemble a mortal one. But it shall not reveal its nature, that it alone is the immortal one, and thinks about immortality, having faith, and desiring to renounce these things."

16 "For people do not gather figs from thorns or from thorn trees, if they are wise, nor grapes from thistles. For, on the one hand, that which is always becoming is in that from which it is, being from what is not good, which becomes destruction for it and death. But that which comes to be in the Eternal One is in the One of the life and the immortality of the life which resemble."

17 "Therefore all that which exists not will dissolve into what exists not. For deaf and blind ones join only with their own kind."

18 "But others shall change from evil words and misleading mysteries. Some who do not understand mystery speak of things which they do not understand, but they will boast that the mystery of the truth is theirs alone. And in haughtiness they shall grasp at pride, to envy the immortal soul which has become a pledge. For every authority, rule, and power of the aeons wishes to be with these in the creation of the world, in order that those who are not, having been forgotten by those that are, may praise them, though they have not been saved, nor have they been brought to the Way by them, always wishing that they may become imperishable ones. For if the immortal soul receives power in an intellectual spirit -. But immediately they join with one of those who misled them."

19 "But many others, who oppose the truth and are the messengers of error, will set up their error and their law against these pure thoughts of mine, as looking out from one (perspective) thinking that good and evil are from one (source). They do business in my word. And they will propagate harsh fate. The race of immortal souls will go in it in vain, until my Parousia. For they shall come out of them - and my forgiveness of their transgressions, into which they fell through their adversaries, whose ransom I got from the slavery in which they were, to give them freedom that they may create an imitation remnant in the name of a dead man, who is Hermas, of the first-born of unrighteousness, in order that the light which exists may not be believed by the little ones. But those of this sort are the workers who will be cast into the outer darkness, away from the sons of light. For neither will they enter, nor do they permit those who are going up to their approval for their release."

20 "And still others of them who suffer think that they will perfect the wisdom of the brotherhood which really exists, which is the spiritual fellowship of those united in communion, through which the wedding of incorruptibility shall be revealed. The kindred race of the sisterhood will appear as an imitation. These are the ones who oppress their brothers, saying to them, "Through this our God has pity, since salvation comes to us through this," not knowing the punishment of those who are made glad by those who have done this thing to the little ones whom they saw, (and) whom they took prisoner."

21 "And there shall be others of those who are outside our number who name themselves bishop and also deacons, as if they have received their authority from God. They bend themselves under the judgement of the leaders. Those people are dry canals."

22 But I said "I am afraid because of what you have told me, that indeed little (ones) are, in our view, the counterfeit ones, indeed, that there are multitudes that will mislead other multitudes of living ones, and destroy them among themselves. And when they speak your name they will be believed."

23 The Saviour said, "For a time determined for them in proportion to their error they will rule over the little ones. And after the completion of the error, the never-aging one of the immortal understanding shall become young, and they (the little ones) shall rule over those who are their rulers. The root of their error he shall pluck out, and he shall put it to shame so that it shall be manifest in all the impudence which it has assumed to itself. And such ones shall become unchangeable, O Peter."

24 "Come therefore, let us go on with the completion of the will of the incorruptible Father. For behold, those who will bring them judgement are coming, and they will put them to shame. But me they cannot touch. And you, O Peter, shall stand in their midst. Do not be afraid because of your cowardice. Their minds shall be closed, for the invisible one has opposed them."

25 When he had said those things, I saw him seemingly being seized by them. And I said "What do I see, O Lord? That it is you yourself whom they take, and that you are grasping me? Or who is this one, glad and laughing on the tree? And is it another one whose feet and hands they are striking?"

26 The Saviour said to me, "He whom you saw on the tree, glad and laughing, this is the living Jesus. But this one into whose hands and feet they drive the nails is his fleshly part, which is the substitute being put to shame, the one who came into being in his likeness. But look at him and me."

27 But I, when I had looked, said "Lord, no one is looking at you. Let us flee this place."

28 But he said to me, "I have told you, 'Leave the blind alone!'. And you, see how they do not know what they are saying. For the son of their glory instead of my servant, they have put to shame."

29 And I saw someone about to approach us resembling him, even him who was laughing on the tree. And he was <filled> with a Holy Spirit, and he is the Saviour. And there was a great, ineffable light around them, and the multitude of ineffable and invisible angels blessing them. And when I looked at him, the one who gives praise was revealed.

30 And he said to me, "Be strong, for you are the one to whom these mysteries have been given, to know them through revelation, that he whom they crucified is the first-born, and the home of demons, and the stony vessel in which they dwell, of Elohim, of the cross, which is under the Law. But he who stands near him is the living Saviour, the first in him, whom they seized and released, who stands joyfully looking at those who did him violence, while they are divided among themselves. Therefore he laughs at their lack of perception, knowing that they are born blind. So then the one susceptible to suffering shall come, since the body is the substitute. But what they released was my incorporeal body. But I am the intellectual Spirit filled with radiant light. He whom you saw coming to me is our intellectual Pleroma, which unites the perfect light with my Holy Spirit."

31 "These things, then, which you saw you shall present to those of another race who are not of this age. For there will be no honour in any man who is not immortal, but only (in) those who were chosen from an immortal substance, which has shown that it is able to contain him who gives his abundance. Therefore I said, 'Every one who has, it will be given to him, and he will have plenty.' But he who does not have, that is, the man of this place, who is completely dead, who is removed from the planting of the creation of what is begotten, whom, if one of the immortal essence appears, they think that they possess him - it will be taken from him and be added to the one who is. You, therefore, be courageous and do not fear at all. For I shall be with you in order that none of your enemies may prevail unto you. Peace be to you, Be strong!"

32 When he (Jesus) had said these things, he (Peter) came to himself.

THE (GREEK) APOCALYPSE OF PAUL

or Visio Pauli or Visio sancti Pauli

From The Apocryphal New Testament

Montague Rhodes James, 1924

Estimated Range of Dating: 3rd century A.D.

(The Apocalypse of Paul (Apocalypsis Pauli, more commonly known in the Latin tradition as the Visio Pauli or Visio sancti Pauli) is a third-century text of the New Testament apocrypha. The text purports to present a detailed account of a vision of Heaven and Hell experienced by Paul the Apostle; "its chief importance lies in the way it helped to shape the beliefs of ordinary Christians concerning the afterlife". The text extends the Apocalypse of Peter by framing the reasons for the visits to heaven and hell as the witnessing of the death and judgement of one wicked man, and one who is righteous. The text is heavily moralistic.

The original Greek version of the Apocalypse is lost and must be reconstructed from later versions and translations. Greek copies of the texts are rare; those that exist contain many omissions. Of the Eastern versions – Syriac, Coptic, Amharic, Georgian – the Syriac are considered to be the most reliable. Greek copies of it are rare, and the texts they contain are disfigured by many omissions. Of the Eastern versions - Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic- the Syriac is the best. But possibly the full Latin version is superior to all other authorities. In the Greek, Latin, and Syriac the book is incomplete: it ends abruptly in a speech of Elijah. The Coptic version is the most complete. The full Latin version is the basis of this translation. The Greek, Syriac, and Coptic versions are used where the Latin is corrupt.)

Here beginneth the Vision of Saint Paul the Apostle.

But I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Christ fourteen years ago, whether in the body I know not or whether out of the body I know not -God knoweth- that such an one was caught up unto the third heaven: and I knew such a man, whether in the body or out of the body I know not -God knoweth- that he was caught up into paradise and heard secret words which it is not lawful for men to utter. For such an one will I boast, but for myself I will boast nothing, save of mine infirmities.

1 At what time was it made manifest In the consulate of Theodosius Augustus the younger and Cynegius, a certain honourable man then dwelling at Tarsus, in the house which had been the house of Saint Paul, an angel appeared unto him by night and gave him a revelation, saying that he should break up the foundation of the house and publish that which he found; but he thought this to be a lying vision.

2 But a third time the angel came, and scourged him and compelled him to break up the foundation. And he dug, and found a box of marble inscribed upon the sides: therein was the revelation of Saint Paul, and his shoes wherein he walked when he taught the word of God. But he feared to open that box, and brought it to the judge; and the judge took it, sealed as it was with lead, and sent it to the emperor Theodosius fearing that it might be somewhat strange; and the emperor when he received it, opened it and found the revelation of Saint Paul. A copy thereof he sent to Jerusalem and the original he kept with him. (Gr. reverses this: he kept the copy and sent away the original. It adds: And there was written therein as followeth.)

3 Now while I was in the body, wherein I was caught up unto the third heaven, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying: Speak unto this people: How long will ye transgress, and add sin upon sin, and tempt the Lord that made you Saying that ye are Abraham's children but doing the works of Satan (so Gr.: Lat. Ye are the sons of God, doing the work of the devil), walking in the confidence of God, boasting in your name only, but being poor because of the matter of sin. Remember therefore and know that the whole creation is subject unto God, but mankind only sinneth. It hath dominion over the whole creation, and sinneth more than the whole of nature.

4 For oftentimes hath the sun, the great light, appeared unto the Lord, saying: O Lord God Almighty, I look forth upon the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. Suffer me, and I will do unto them according to my power, that they may know that thou art God alone. And there came a voice unto it, saying: All these things do I know, for mine eye seeth and mine ear heareth, but my long-suffering beareth with them until they turn and repent. But if they return not unto me, I will judge them all.

5 And sometimes the moon and the stars have appeared unto the Lord, saying: O Lord God Almighty, unto us hast thou given rule over the night; how long shall we look upon the ungodliness and fornications and murders which the children of men commit suffer us to do unto them according unto our powers, that they may know that thou art God alone. And there came a voice unto them, saying: I know all these things, and mine eye looketh upon them and mine ear heareth, but my long-suffering beareth with them until they turn and repent. But if they return not unto me, I will judge them.

6 Oftentimes also the sea hath cried out, saying: O Lord God Almighty, men have polluted thine holy name in me: suffer me and I will arise and cover every wood and tree and all the world, till I blot out all the children of men from before thy face, that they may know that thou art God alone. And again a voice came, saying: I know all, for mine eye seeth all things, and mine ear heareth, but my long-suffering beareth with them until they turn and repent. But if they return not I will judge them. Sometimes also the waters have appealed against the children of men, saying: O Lord God Almighty, the children of men have all defiled thine holy name. And there came a voice, saying: I know all things before they come to pass, for mine eye seeth and mine ear heareth all things: but my long-suffering beareth with them until they turn. And if not, I will judge. Often also hath the earth cried out unto the Lord against the children of men, saying: O Lord God Almighty, I suffer hurt more than all thy creation, bearing the fornications, adulteries, murders, thefts, forswearings, sorceries, and witchcrafts of men, and all the evils that they do, so that the father riseth up against the son, and the son against the father, the stranger against the stranger, every one to defile his neighbour's wife. The father goeth up upon his son's bed, and the son likewise goeth up upon the couch of his father; and with all these evils have they that offer a sacrifice unto thy name polluted thine holy place. Therefore do I suffer hurt more than the whole creation, and I would not yield mine excellence and my fruits unto the children of men. Suffer me and I will destroy the excellence of my fruits. And there came a voice and said: I know all things, and there is none that can hide himself from his sin. And their ungodliness do I know, but my holiness suffereth them until they turn and repent. But if they return not unto me, I will judge them.

7 Behold then ye children of men. The creature is subject unto God, but mankind alone sinneth. Therefore, ye children of men, bless ye the Lord God without ceasing at all hours and on all days; but especially when the sun setteth. For in that hour do all the angels go unto the Lord to worship him and to present the deeds of men which every man doeth from morning until evening, whether they be good or evil. And there is an angel that goeth forth rejoicing from the man in whom he dwelleth. When therefore the sun is set, at the first hour of the night, in the same hour goeth the angel of every people and of every man and woman, which protect and keep them, because man is the image of God: and likewise at the hour of morning, which is the twelfth hour of the night, do all the angels of men and women go to meet God and present all the work which every man hath wrought, whether good or evil.

And every day and night do the angels present unto God the account of all the deeds of mankind. Unto you, therefore, I say, O children of men, bless ye the Lord God without ceasing all the days of your life.

8 At the hour appointed, therefore, all the angels, every one rejoicing, come forth before God together to meet him and worship him at the hour that is set; and lo, suddenly at the set time there was a meeting, and the angels came to worship in the presence of God, and the spirit came forth to meet them, and there was a voice, saying: Thence could ye, our angels, bringing burdens of news

9 They answered and said: We are come from them that have renounced the world for thy holy name's sake, wandering as strangers and in the caves of the rocks, and weeping every hour that they dwell on the earth and hungering and thirsting for thy name's sake; with their loins girt, holding in their hands the incense of their heart, and praying and blessing at every hour, suffering anguish and subduing themselves, weeping and lamenting more than all that dwell on the earth.

And we that are their angels do mourn with them, whither therefore it pleaseth thee, command us to go and minister lest they do otherwise, but the poor more than all that dwell on the earth. (The sense required as shown by Gr. is that the angels ask that these good men may continue in goodness.) And the voice of God came unto them, saying: Know ye that from henceforth my grace shall be established with you, and mine help which is my dearly beloved Son, shall be with them, ruling them at all times; and he shall minister unto them and never forsake them, for their place is his habitation.

10 When, then, these angels departed, lo, there came other angels to worship in the presence of the majesty, to meet therewith, and they were weeping. And the spirit of God went forth to meet them, and the voice of God came, saying: Whence are ye come, our angels bearing burdens, ministers of the news of the world? They answered and said in the presence of God: We are come from them which have called upon thy name, and the snares of the world have made them wretched, devising many excuses at all times, and not making so much as one pure prayer out of their whole heart all the time of their life. Wherefore then must we be with men that are sinners? And the voice of God came unto them: Ye must minister unto them until they turn and repent; but if they return not unto me, I will judge them. Know therefore, O children of men, that whatsoever is wrought by you, the angels tell it unto God, whether it be good or evil.

11 [Syr. Again, after these things, I saw one of the spiritual ones coming unto me, and he caught me up in the spirit, and carried me to the third heaven.] And the angel answered and said unto me: Follow me, and I will show thee the place of the righteous where they are taken when they are dead. And there after will I take thee to the bottomless pit and show thee the souls of the sinners, into what manner of place they are taken when they are dead. And I went after the angel, and he took me into heaven, and I looked upon the firmament, and saw there the powers; and there was forgetfulness which deceiveth and draweth unto itself the hearts of men, and the spirit of slander and the spirit of fornication and the spirit of wrath and the spirit of insolence and there were the princes of wickedness. These things saw I beneath the firmament of the heaven.

And again I looked and saw angels without mercy, having no pity, whose countenances were full of fury, and their teeth sticking forth out of their mouth: their eyes shone like the morning star of the east, and out of the hairs of their head and out of their mouth went forth sparks of fire.

And I asked the angel, saying: Who are these, Lord? And the angel answered and said unto me: These are they which are appointed unto the souls of sinners in the hour of necessity, even of them that have not believed that they had the Lord for their helper and have not trusted in him. [Apocalypse of Zephaniah (Steindorff's 'anonymous Apocalypse'): I went with the angel of the Lord and looked before me and saw a place through which passed thousand thousands and myriads of myriads of angels, whose faces were as of panthers, and their teeth stuck forth out of their mouth, and their eyes were bloodshot, and their hair loose like woman's hair, and burning scourges were in their hands. (I feared and asked: Who are these? The angel answered:) These are the ministers of the whole creation, which come unto the souls of the ungodly and take them and lay them down here: they fly three days with them in the air before they take them and cast them into their everlasting torment.]

12 And I looked into the height and beheld other angels whose faces shone like the sun, and their loins were girt with golden girdles, holding palms in their hands, and the sign of God, clad in raiment whereon was written the name of the Son of God, full of all gentleness and mercy. And I asked the angel and said: Who are these, Lord, that are of so great beauty and compassion? And the angel answered and said unto me: These are the angels of righteousness that are sent to bring the souls of the righteous in the hour of necessity, even them that have believed that they had the Lord for their helper. And I said unto him: Do the righteous and the sinners of necessity meet [witnesses] when they are dead? And the angel answered and said unto me: The way whereby all pass unto God is one: but the righteous having an holy helper with them are not troubled when they go to appear in the presence of God.

13 And I said unto the angel: I would see the souls of the righteous and of the sinners as they depart out of the world. And the angel answered and said unto me: Look down upon the earth. And I looked down from heaven upon the earth and beheld the whole world, and it was as nothing in my sight; and I saw the children of men as though they were nought, and failing utterly; and I marvelled, and said unto the angel: Is this the greatness of men? And the angel answered and said unto me: This it is, and these are they that do hurt from morning until evening. And I looked, and saw a great cloud of fire spread over the whole world, and said unto the angel: What is this, Lord? And he said to me: This is the unrighteousness that is mingled by the princes of sinners (Gr. mingled with the destruction of sinners; Syr. mingled with the prayers of the sons of men).

14 And I when I heard that sighed and wept, and said unto the angel: I would wait for the souls of the righteous and of the sinners, and see in what fashion they depart out of the body. And the angel answered and said unto me: Look again upon the earth. And I looked and saw the whole world: and men were as nought, and failing utterly; and I looked and saw a certain man about to die; and the angel said to me: He whom thou seest is righteous. And again I looked and saw all his works that he had done for the name of God, and all his desires which he remembered and which he remembered not, all of them stood before his face in the hour of necessity. And I saw that the righteous man had grown in righteousness, and found rest and confidence: and before he departed out of the world there stood by him holy angels, and also evil ones: and I saw them all; but the evil ones found no abode in him, but the holy ones had power over his soul and ruled it until it went out of the body. And they stirred up the soul, saying: O soul, take knowledge of thy body whence thou art come out; for thou must needs return into the same body at the day of resurrection, to receive that which is promised unto all the righteous. They received therefore the soul out of the body, and straightway kissed it as one daily known of them, saying unto it: Be of good courage, for thou hast done the will of God while thou abodest on the earth. And there came to meet it the angel that watched it day by day, and he said unto it: Be of good courage, O soul: for I rejoice in thee because thou hast done the will of God on the earth; for I told unto God all thy works, how they stood. Likewise also the spirit came forth to meet it and said: O soul, fear not, neither be troubled, until thou come unto a place which thou never knewest; but I will be thine helper, for I have found in thee a place of refreshment in the time when I dwelt in thee, when I was (thou wast) on the earth. And the spirit [thereof] strengthened it, and the angel thereof took it up and carried it into the heaven. And the angel said (Syr. And there went out to meet it wicked powers, those that are under heaven. And there reached it the spirit of error, and said): Whither runnest thou, O soul, and presumest to enter heaven stay and let us see if there be aught of ours in thee. And lo! we have found nothing in thee. I behold also the help of God, and thine angel; and the spirit rejoiceth with thee because thou didst the will of God upon earth. (Syr. has more here. There is a conflict between the good and evil angels. The spirit of error first laments. Then the spirit of the tempter and of fornication meet it and it escapes, and they lament. All the principalities and evil spirits come to meet it and find nothing, and gnash their teeth. The guardian angel bids them go back, 'Ye tempted this soul and it would not listen to you.' And the voice of many angels is heard rejoicing over the soul. Probably this is original matter.) And they brought it until it did worship in the presence of God. And when they (it) had ceased, forthwith Michael and all the host of the angels fell and worshipped the footstool of his feet and his gates, and said together unto the soul: This is the God of all, which made thee in his image and likeness.

And the angel returned and declared, saying: Lord, remember his works; for this is the soul whereof I did report the works unto thee, Lord, doing according to thy judgement.

And likewise the spirit said: I am the spirit of quickening that breathed upon it: for I had refreshment in it in the time when I dwelt therein, doing according to thy judgement. And the voice of God came, saying: Like as this soul hath not grieved me neither will I grieve it, for like as it hath had mercy, I also will have mercy. Let it be delivered therefore unto Michael the angel of the covenant, and let him lead it into the paradise of rejoicing that it become fellow-heir with all the saints. And thereafter I heard the voices of thousands of thousands of angels and archangels and the cherubim and the four-and-twenty elders uttering hymns and glorifying the Lord and crying: Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just are thy judgements, and there is no respect of persons with thee, but thou rewardest every man according to thy judgement. And the angel answered and said unto me: Hast thou believed and known that whatsoever every one of you hath done, he beholdeth it at the hour of his necessity? And I said: Yea, Lord.

15 And he said unto me: Look down again upon the earth and wait for the soul of a wicked man going forth of the body, one that hath provoked the Lord day and night, saying: I know nought else in this world, I will eat and drink and enjoy the things that are in the world. For who is he that hath gone down into hell and come up and told us that there is a judgement there? And again I looked and saw all the despising of the sinner, and all that he did, and they stood together before him in the hour of necessity: and it came to pass in that hour when he was led out of his body to the judgement, that he (MS. I) said: It were better for me (MS. him) that I (he) had not been born. And after that the holy angels and the evil and the soul of the sinner came together, and the holy angels found no place in it. But the evil angels threatened (had power over) it, and when they brought it forth out of the body, the angels admonished it thrice, saying: O wretched soul, look upon thy flesh whence thou art come out; for thou must needs return into thy flesh at the day of resurrection to receive the due reward for thy sins and for thy wickedness;

16 And when they had brought it forth, the accustomed (i.e. guardian) angel went before it and said unto it: O miserable soul, I am the angel that clave unto thee and day by day reported unto the Lord thine evil deeds, whatsoever thou wroughtest by night or day; and if it had been in my power I would not have ministered unto thee even one day; but of this I could do nothing, for God is merciful and a just judge, and he commanded us not to cease ministering unto your soul till ye should repent: but thou hast lost the time of repentance. I indeed am become a stranger unto thee and thou to me. Let us go then unto the just judge: I will not leave thee until I know that from this day I am become a stranger unto thee. (Here Copt. inserts a quite similar speech of the spirit to the soul, which may be original.) And the spirit confounded it, and the angel troubled it. When therefore they were come unto the principalities, and it would now go to enter into heaven, one burden (labour, suffering) was laid upon it after another: error and forgetfulness and whispering met it, and the spirit of fornication and the rest of the powers, and said unto it: Whither goest thou, wretched soul and darest to run forward into heaven stay, that we may see whether we have property of ours in thee, for we see not with thee an holy helper. (Syr. adds: And the angel answered and said: Know ye that it is a soul of the Lord, and he will not cast it aside, neither will I surrender the image of God into the hand of the wicked one. The Lord supported me all the days of the life of the soul, and he can support and help me: and I will not cast it off until it go up before the throne of God on high. When he shall see it, he hath power over it, and will send it whither he pleases.) And after that I heard voices in the height of the heavens, saying: Present this miserable soul unto God, that it may know that there is a God, whom it hath despised. When therefore it was entered into the heaven, all the angels, even thousands of thousands, saw it, and all cried out with one voice saying: Woe unto thee, miserable soul, for thy works which thou didst upon the earth, what answer wilt thou make unto God when thou drawest near to worship him The angel which was with it answered and said: Weep with me, my dearly beloved, for I have found no rest in this soul. And the angels answered him and said: Let this soul be taken away out of our midst, for since it came in, the stench of it is passed upon us the angels. And thereafter it was presented, to worship in the presence of God, and the angel showed it the Lord God that made it after his own image and likeness. And its angel ran before it, saying: O Lord God Almighty, I am the angel of this soul, whose works I presented unto thee day and night, not doing according to thy judgement. And likewise the spirit said: I am the spirit which dwelt in it ever since it was made, and I know it in itself, and it followed not my will: judge it, Lord, according to thy judgement. And the voice of God came unto it and said: Where is thy fruit that thou hast yielded, worthy of those good things which thou hast received did I put a distance even of a day between thee and the righteous did I not make the sun to rise upon thee even as upon the righteous And it was silent, having nothing to answer; and again the voice came, saying: Just is the judgement of God, and there is no respect of persons with God, for whosoever hath done his mercy he will have mercy on him, and whoso hath not had mercy, neither shall God have mercy on him. Let him therefore be delivered unto the angel Tartaruchus (Gr. Temeluchus) that is set over the torments, and let him cast him into the outer darkness where is weeping and gnashing of teeth, and let him be there until the great day of judgement. And after that I heard the voice of the angels and archangels saying: Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just is thy judgement.

17 And again I beheld, and lo, a soul which was brought by two angels, weeping and saying: Have mercy on me, thou righteous God, O God the judge; for to-day it is seven days since I went forth out of my body, and I was delivered unto these two angels, and they have brought me unto those places which I had never seen. And God the righteous judge said unto it: What hast thou done for thou hast never wrought mercy; therefore wast thou delivered unto such angels, which have no mercy, and because thou hast not done right, therefore neither have they dealt pitifully with thee in the hour of thy necessity. Confess therefore thy sins which thou hast committed when thou wert in the world. And it answered and said: Lord, I have not sinned. And the righteous Lord God was wroth with indignation when it said: I have not sinned, for it lied. And God said: Thinkest thou that thou art yet in the world If every one of you there when he sinneth, hideth and concealeth his sin from his neighbour, yet here no thing is hidden, for when the souls come to worship before the throne both the good works and the sins of every one are made manifest. And when the soul heard that, it held its peace, having no answer. And I heard the Lord God, the righteous judge, saying again: Come, thou angel of this soul, and stand in the midst. And the angel of the sinful soul came, having a writing in his hands, and said: These, Lord, that are in mine hands, are all the sins of this soul from its youth up unto this day, even from ten years from its birth: and if thou bid me, Lord, I can tell the acts thereof since it began to be fifteen years old. [Apocalypse of Zephaniah: I looked and saw that a writing (the same word, chirographum) was in his hand: he began to open it, and when he had spread it out I read it in mine own language, and I found all my sins that I had committed, recorded by him, even those which I had committed from my childhood up unto this day.] And the Lord God the righteous judge said: I say unto thee, O angel, I desire not of thee the account since it began to be fifteen years old; but declare its sins of five years before that it died and came hither. And again God the righteous judge said: For by myself I swear, and by mine holy angels and by my power, that if it had repented five years before it died, even for the walk (conversation) of one year, there should be forgetfulness of all the evil which it committed before and it should have pardon and remission of sins: but now let it perish. And the angel of the sinful soul answered and said: Command, Lord, that (such and such an) angel to bring forth those (such and such) souls.

18 And in that same hour the souls were brought forth into the midst, and the soul of the sinner knew them. And the Lord said unto the soul of the sinner: I say unto thee, O soul, confess thy deeds which thou didst upon these souls whom thou seest, when they were in the world. And it answered and said: Lord, it is not yet a full year since I slew this one and shed its blood upon the earth, and with another I committed fornication; and not that only, but I did it much harm by taking away its substance. And the Lord God the righteous judge said: Knewest thou not that he that doth violence to another, if he that suffered violence die first, he is kept in this place until he that hurt him dieth, and then do both of them appear before the judge and now hath every one received according as he did. And I heard a voice saying: Let that soul be delivered into the hands of Tartaruchus, and he must be taken down into hell. Let him take him into the lower prison and let him be cast into torments and be left there until the great day of judgement. And again I heard thousands of thousands of angels singing an hymn unto the Lord and saying: Righteous art thou, O Lord, and just are thy judgements.

19 The angel answered and said unto me: Hast thou perceived all these things And I said: Yea, Lord. And he said unto me: Follow me again, and I will take thee and show thee the places of the righteous. And I followed the angel and he took me up unto the third heaven and set me before the door of a gate; and I looked on it and saw, and the gate was of gold, and there were two pillars of gold full of golden letters; and the angel turned again to me and said: Blessed art thou if thou interest in by these gates, for it is not permitted to any to enter save only to those that have kept goodness and pureness of their bodies in all things. And I asked the angel and said: Lord, tell me for what cause are these letters set upon these tables The angel answered and said unto me: These are the names of the righteous that minister unto God with their whole heart, which dwell on the earth. And again I said: Lord, then are their names also their countenance and the likeness of them that serve God is in heaven, and they are known unto the angels: for they know them that with their whole heart serve God before they depart out of the world.

20 And when I had entered within the gate of paradise there came to meet me an old man whose face shone like the sun, and he embraced me and said: Hail, Paul, dearly beloved of God And he kissed me with a joyful countenance, but he wept, and I said unto him: Father (Lat. Brother), why weepest thou And again sighing and weeping he said: Because we are vexed by men, and they grieve us sore; for many are the good things which the Lord hath prepared, and great are his promises, but many receive them not. And I asked the angel and said: Who is this, Lord And he said unto me: This is Enoch the scribe of righteousness. And I entered within that place and straightway I saw Elias I and he came and saluted me with gladness and joy. And when he had seen me, he turned himself away and wept and said unto me: Paul, mayest thou receive the reward of thy labour which thou hast done among mankind. As for me, I have seen great and manifold good things which God hath prepared for all the righteous, and great are the promises of God, but the more part receive them not; yea hardly through much toil doth one and another enter into these places.

21 And the angel answered and said unto me: What things soever I now show thee here, and whatsoever thou hearest, reveal them not unto any upon earth. And he led me and showed me: and I heard there words which it is not lawful for a man to utter; and again he said: Yet again follow me and I will show thee that which thou must relate and tell openly. And he brought me down from the third heaven, and led me into the second heaven, and again he led me to the firmament, and from the firmament he led me unto the gates of heaven. And the beginning of the foundation thereof was upon the river that watereth all the earth. And I asked the angel and said: Lord, what is this river of water and he said unto me: This is the Ocean. And suddenly I came out of heaven, and perceived that it is the light of the heaven that shineth upon all the earth (or, all that land). And there the earth (or, land) was seven times brighter than silver. And I said: Lord, what is this place and he said unto me: This is the land of promise. Hast thou not yet heard that which is written: Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth The souls therefore of the righteous when they are gone forth of the body are sent for the time into this place. And I said unto the angel: Shall then this land be made manifest after (lat. before) a time The angel answered and said unto me: When Christ whom thou preachest cometh to reign, then by the decree of God the first earth shall be dissolved, and then shall this land of promise be shown and it shall be like dew or a cloud; and then shall the Lord Jesus Christ the eternal king be manifested and shall come with all his saints to dwell therein; and he shall reign over them a thousand years, and they shall eat of the good things which now I will show thee.

22 And I looked round about that land and saw a river flowing with milk and honey. And there were at the brink of the river trees planted, full of fruits: now every tree bare twelve fruits in the year, and they had various and divers fruits: and I saw the fashion (creation) of that place and all the work of God, and there I saw palm-trees of twenty cubits and others of ten cubits; and that land was seven times brighter than silver. And the trees were full of fruits from the root even to the upper branches. (Lat. is confused here. Copt. has: From the root of each tree up to its heart there were ten thousand branches with tens of thousands of clusters, [and there were ten thousand clusters on each branch,] and there were ten thousand dates in each cluster. And thus was it also with the vines. Every vine had ten thousand branches, and each branch had upon it ten thousand bunches of grapes, and every bunch had on it ten thousand grapes. And there were other trees there, myriads of myriads of them, and their fruit was in the same proportion.) And I said unto the angel: Wherefore doth every tree bring forth thousands of fruits The angel answered and said unto me: Because the Lord God of his bounty giveth his gifts in abundance unto the worthy; for they also of their own will afflicted themselves when they were in the world, doing all things for his holy name's sake. And again I said unto the angel: Lord, are these the only promises which the most holy Lord God promiseth and he answered and said unto me: No; for there are greater by seven times than these. But I say unto thee, that when the righteous are gone forth out of the body and shall see the promises and the good things which God hath prepared for them, yet again they shall sigh and cry, saying: Wherefore did we utter a word out of our mouth to provoke our neighbour even for a day And I asked again and said: Be these the only promises of God And the angel answered and said unto me: These which now thou seest are for them that are married and keep the purity of their marriage, being continent. But unto the virgins, and unto them that hunger and thirst after righteousness and afflict themselves for the name of the Lord, God will give things seven-fold greater than these, which now I will show thee. And after that he took me out of that place where I saw these things, and lo, a river, and the waters of it were white exceedingly, more than milk, and I said unto the angel: What is this and he said to me: This is the lake Acherusa where is the city of Christ: but not every man is suffered to enter into that city: for this is the way that leadeth unto God, and if any be a fornicator or ungodly, and turn and repent and bear fruits meet for repentance, first when he cometh out of the body he is brought and worshippeth God, and then by the commandment of the Lord he is delivered unto Michael the angel, and he washeth him in the lake Acherusa and so bringeth him in to the city of Christ with them that have done no sin. And I marvelled and blessed the Lord God for all the things which I saw.

23 And the angel answered and said unto me: Follow me and I will bring thee into the city of Christ. And he stood by (upon) the lake Acherusa, and set me in a golden ship, and angels as it were three thousand sang an hymn before me until I came even unto the city of Christ. And they that dwell in the city of Christ rejoiced greatly over me as I came unto them, and I entered in and saw the city of Christ. And it was all of gold, and twelve walls compassed it about, and there were twelve towers within (a tower on each wall, Copt.: 12,000 towers, Syr.), and every wall had a furlong between them (i.e. the walls were a furlong apart, so Syr., Copt. the circumference of each was 100 furlongs) round about; and I said unto the angel: Lord, how much is one furlong The angel answered and said unto me: It is as much as there is betwixt the Lord God and the men that are on the earth, for the great city of Christ is alone. And there were twelve gates in the circuit of the city, of great beauty, and four rivers that compassed it about. There was a river of honey, and a river of milk, and a river of wine, and a river of oil. And I said unto the angel: What are these rivers that compass this city about And he said to me: These are the four rivers which flow abundantly for them that are in this land of promise, whereof the names are these: the river of honey is called Phison, and the river of milk Euphrates, and the river of oil Geon, and the river of wine Tigris. Whereas therefore when the righteous were in the world they used not their power over these things, but hungered and afflicted themselves for the Lord God's sake, therefore when they enter into this city, the Lord will give them these things without number () and without all measure.

24 And I when I entered in by the gate saw before the doors of the city trees great and high, having no fruits, but leaves only. And I saw a few men scattered about in the midst of the trees, and they mourned sore when they saw any man enter into the city. And those trees did penance for them, humbling themselves and bowing down, and again raising themselves up. And I beheld it and wept with them, and I asked the angel and said: Lord, who are these that are not permitted to enter into the city of Christ And he said unto me: These are they that did earnestly renounce the world day and night with fasting, but had an heart proud above other men, glorifying and praising themselves, and doing nought for their neighbours. For some they greeted friendly, but unto others they said not even 'Hail', and unto whom they would they opened, and if they did any small thing for their neighbour they were puffed up. And I said: What then, Lord their pride hath prevented them from entering into the city of Christ And the angel answered and said unto me: The root of all evils is pride. Are they better than the Son of God who came unto the Jews in great humility And I asked him and said: Wherefore is it then that the trees humble themselves and are again raised up And the angel answered and said unto me: All the time that these spent upon earth (Of old time they were on the earth, Copt.) serving God (they served God): But because of the shame and reproaches of men they were ashamed (did blush) for a time and humbled themselves, but they were not grieved, neither did they repent, to cease from this pride that was in them (and one day they bowed themselves because of the disgrace of man, for they cannot endure the pride that is in him, Copt.). This is the cause why the trees humble themselves and again are raised up. And I asked and said: For what cause are they let in unto the gates of the city? The angel answered and said unto me: Because of the great goodness of God, and because this is the entry of all his saints which do enter into this city. Therefore are they left in this place, that when Christ the eternal king entereth in with his saints, when he cometh in, all the righteous shall entreat for them, and then shall they enter into the city with them: yet none of them is able to have confidence such as they have that have humbled themselves, serving the Lord God all their life long.

25 But I went forward and the angel led me and brought me unto the river of honey, and I saw there Esaias and Jeremias and Ezekiel and Amos and Micheas and Zacharias, even the prophets lesser and greater, and they greeted me in the city. I said unto the angel: What is this path and he said unto me: This is the path of the prophets: every one that hath grieved his soul and not done his own will for God's sake, when he is departed out of the world and hath been brought unto the Lord God and worshipped him, then by the commandment of God he is delivered unto Michael, and he bringeth him into the city unto this place of the prophets, and they greet him as their friend and neighbour because he hath performed the will of God.

26 Again he led me where was the river of milk, and I saw in that place all the children whom the king Herod slew for the name of Christ, and they greeted me, and the angel said unto me: All they that keep chastity in cleanness, when they are gone out of the body, after they worship the Lord God, are delivered unto Michael and brought unto the children: and they greet them saying: They are our brothers and friends and members: among them shall they inherit the promises of God.

27 Again he took me and brought me to the north side of the city, and led me to where was the river of wine, and I saw there Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Lot and Job and other saints, and they greeted me. [Apocalypse of Zephaniah: (The angel) ran unto all the righteous that are there, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Enoch, Elias, and David. He conversed with them as a friend with a friend, who talk together.] And I asked and said: What is this place, Lord? The angel answered and said unto me: All they that are entertainers of strangers, when they are departed out of the world first worship the Lord God, and then are delivered unto Michael and brought by this path into the city, and all the righteous greet him as a son and brother, and say unto him: Because thou hast kept kindness and the entertainment of strangers, come thou and have an inheritance in the city of our Lord God. Every one of the righteous shall receive the good things of God in the city according to his deeds.

28 And again he took me to the river of oil on the east side of the city. And I saw there men rejoicing and singing psalms, and said: Who are these, Lord? and the angel said unto me: These are they that have devoted themselves unto God with their whole heart, and had in them no pride. For all that rejoice in the Lord God and sing praises to the Lord with their whole heart are brought here into this city.

29 And he took me into the midst of the city, by the twelve walls (to the twelfth wall, Copt.). Now there was in that place an higher wall; and I asked and said: Is there in the city of Christ a wall more excellent in honour than this place? And the angel answered and said unto me: The second is better than the first, and likewise the third than the second; for one excelleth the other even unto the twelfth wall. And I said: Wherefore, Lord, doth one excel another in glory show me. And the angel answered and said unto me: All they that have in them even a little slandering or envy or pride, somewhat is taken away from his glory, even if he be in the city of Christ. Look thou behind thee. And I turned myself and saw golden thrones set at the several gates, and upon them men having golden crowns and jewels: and I looked and saw within among the twelve men, thrones set in another order (row, fashion), which appeared of much glory so that no man is able to declare the praise of them. And I asked the angel and said: Lord, who is upon the throne? And the angel answered and said unto me: These are the thrones of them that had goodness and understanding of heart and yet made themselves foolish for the Lord God's sake, knowing neither the Scriptures nor many psalms, but keeping in mind one chapter of the precepts of God they performed it with great diligence, and had a right intent before the Lord God; and for these great wonder shall take hold upon all the saints before the Lord God, who shall speak one with another, saying: Stay and behold the unlearned that know nothing [more], how they have earned such and so fair raiment and so great glory because of their innocency. And I saw in the midst of the city an altar exceeding high. And there was one standing by the altar whose visage shone like the sun, and he held in his hands a psaltery and an harp and sang praises, saying: Alleluia. And his voice filled all the city. And when all that were upon the towers and the gates heard him, they answered: Alleluia, so that the foundations of the city were shaken. And I asked the angel and said: Who is this, Lord, that is of so great might? And the angel said unto me: This is David. This is the city of Jerusalem; and when Christ the king of eternity shall come in the fullness (confidence, freedom) of his kingdom, he shall again go before him to sing praises, and all the righteous together shall sing praises, answering: Alleluia. And I said: Lord, how is it that David only above the rest of the saints maketh (made) the beginning of singing praises? And the angel answered and said unto me: When (or, because) Christ the Son of God sitteth on the right hand of his Father, this David shall sing praises before him in the seventh heaven: and as it is done in the heavens, so likewise is it below: for without David it is not lawful to offer a sacrifice unto God: but it must needs be that David sing praises at the hour of the offering of the body and blood of Christ: as it is performed in heaven, so also is it upon earth. 30 And I said unto the angel: Lord, what is Alleluia? And the angel answered and said unto me: Thou dost examine and inquire of all things. And he said unto me: Alleluia is spoken in the Hebrew, that is the speech of God and of the angels: now the interpretation of Alleluia is this: teel . cat . marith . macha (Gr.thebel marematha). And I said: Lord, what is teel cat marith macha? And the angel answered and said unto me: This is teel cat marith macha: Let us bless him all together. I asked the angel and said: Lord, do all they that say Alleluia bless God? And the angel answered and said unto me: So it is: and again, if any sing Alleluia, and they that are present sing not with him, they commit sin in that they sing not with him. And I said: Lord, doth a man likewise sin if he be doting or very aged? The angel answered and said unto me: Not so: but he that is able, and singeth not with him, know ye that such a one is a despiser of the word, for it would be proud and unworthy that he should not bless the Lord God his creator.

31 And when he had ceased speaking unto me, he led me out without the city through the midst of the trees and back from the place of the land of good things (or, men) and set me at the river of milk and honey: and after that he led me unto the ocean that beareth the foundations of the heaven. The angel answered and said unto me: Perceivest thou that thou goest hence? And I said: Yea, Lord. And he said unto me: Come, follow me, and I will show thee the souls of the ungodly and the sinners, that thou mayest know what manner of place they have. And I went with the angel and he took me by the way of the sunset, and I saw the beginning of the heaven founded upon a great river of water, and I asked: What is this river of water? And he said unto me: This is the ocean which compasseth the whole earth about. And when I was come beyond (to the outside of) the ocean, I looked and there was no light in that place, but darkness and sorrow and sadness: and I sighed. And I saw there a river of fire burning with heat, and in it was a multitude of men and women sunk up to the knees, and other men up to the navel; others also up to the lips and others up to the hair: and I asked the angel and said: Lord, who are these in the river of fire? And the angel answered and said unto me: They are neither hot nor cold; for they were not found either in the number of the righteous or in the number of the wicked, for they passed the time of their life upon the earth, spending some days in prayer, but other days in sins and fornications, until their death. And I asked and said: Who are these, Lord, that are sunk up to their knees in the fire? He answered and said unto me: These are they which when they are come out of the church occupy themselves in disputing with idle (alien) talk. But these that are sunk up to the navel are they who, when they have received the body and blood of Christ, go and commit fornication, and did not cease from their sins until they died; and they that are sunk up to their lips are they that slandered one another when they gathered in the church of God; but they that are sunk up to the eyebrows are they that beckon one to another, and privily devise evil against their neighbours.

32 And I saw on the north side a place of sundry and diverse torments, full of men and women, and a river of fire flowed down upon them. And I beheld and saw pits exceeding deep, and in them many souls together, and the depth of that place was as it were three thousand cubits; and I saw them groaning and weeping and saying: Have mercy on us, Lord. And no man had mercy on them. And I asked the angel and said: Who are these, Lord? And the angel answered and said unto me: These are they that trusted not in the Lord that they could have him for their helper. And I inquired and said: Lord, if these souls continue thus, thirty or forty generations being cast one upon another, if (unless) they be cast down yet deeper, I trow the pits would not contain them. And he said to me: The abyss hath no measure: for beneath it there followeth also that which is beneath: and so it is that if a strong man took a stone and cast it into an exceeding deep well and after many hours (long time) it reacheth the earth, so also is the abyss. For when the souls are cast therein, hardly after five hundred years do they come at the bottom.

33 And I when I heard it, mourned and lamented for the race of men. The angel answered and said unto me: Wherefore mournest thou art thou more merciful than God for inasmuch as God is good and knoweth that there are torments, he beareth patiently with mankind, leaving every one to do his own will for the time that he dwelleth on the earth.

34 Yet again I looked upon the river of fire, and I saw there a man caught by the throat (Copt. an old man who was being dragged along, and they immersed him up to the knees. And the angel Atemeloukhos came with a great fork of fire, &c. Syr. similar. Some sentences are lost in Lat.) by angels, keepers of hell (Tartaruchi), having in their hands an iron of three hooks wherewith they pierced the entrails of that old man. And I asked the angel and said: Lord, who is this old man upon whom such torments are inflicted? And the angel answered and said unto me: He whom thou seest was a priest who fulfilled not well his ministry, for when he was eating and drinking and whoring he offered the sacrifice unto the Lord at his holy altar.

35 And I saw not far off another old man whom four evil angels brought, running quickly, and they sank him up to his knees in the river of fire, and smote him with stones and wounded his face like a tempest, and suffered him not to say: Have mercy on me. And I asked the angel and he said unto me: He whom thou seest was a bishop, and he fulfilled not well his bishopric: for he received indeed a great name, but entered not into (walked not in) the holiness of him that gave him that name all his life; for he gave not righteous judgement, and had not compassion on widows and orphans: but now it is recompensed unto him according to his iniquity and his doings.

36 And I saw another man in the river of fire sunk up to the knees: and his hands were stretched out and bloody, and worms issued out of his mouth and his nostrils, and he was groaning and lamenting and crying out, and said: Have mercy on me for I suffer hurt more than the rest that are in this torment. And I asked: Who is this, Lord? And he said unto me: This whom thou seest was a deacon, who devoured the offerings and committed fornication and did not right in the sight of God: therefore without ceasing he payeth the penalty. And I looked and saw beside him another man whom they brought with haste and cast him into the river of fire, and he was there up to the knees: and the angel that was over the torments came, having a great razor, red-hot, and therewith he cut the lips of that man and the tongue likewise. And I sighed and wept and asked: Who is this man, Lord? And he said unto me: This that thou seest was a reader and read unto the people: but he kept not the commandments of God: now also he payeth his own penalty.

37 And I saw another multitude of pits in the same place, and in the midst thereof a river filled with a multitude of men and women, and worms devoured them. But I wept and sighed and asked the angel: Lord, who are these? And he said unto me: These are they that extorted usury on usury and trusted in their riches, not having hope in God, that he was their helper. And after that I looked and saw a very strait place, and there was as it were a wall, and round about it fire. And I saw within it men and women gnawing their tongues, and asked: Who are these, Lord? And he said unto me: These are they that mocked at the word of God in the church, not attending thereto, but as it were making nought of God and of his angels: therefore now likewise do they pay the due penalty.

38 And I looked in and saw another pool (lat. old man!) beneath in the pit, and the appearance of it was like blood: and I asked and said: Lord, what is this place? And he said unto me: Into this pit do all the torments flow. And I saw men and women sunk up to the lips, and asked: Who are these, Lord? And he said unto me: These are the sorcerers which gave unto men and women magical enchantments, and they found no rest (i.e. did not cease) until they died. And again I saw men and women of a very black countenance in a pit of fire, and I sighed and wept and asked: Who are these, Lord? And he said unto me: These are whoremongers and adulterers who, having wives of their own, committed adultery, and likewise the women after the same sort committed adultery, having their own husbands: therefore do they pay the penalty without ceasing.

39 And I saw there girls clad in black raiment, and four fearful angels holding in their hands red-hot chains, and they put them upon their necks (heads) and led them away into darkness. And again I wept and asked the angel: Who are these, Lord? And he said unto me: These are they which being virgins defiled their virginity, and their parents knew it not: wherefore without ceasing they pay the due penalty. And again I beheld there men and women with their hands and feet cut off and naked, in a place of ice and snow, and worms devoured them. And when I saw it I wept and asked: Who are these, Lord? And he said unto me: These are they that injured the fatherless and widows and the poor, and trusted not in the Lord: wherefore without ceasing they pay the due penalty.

And I looked and saw others hanging over a channel of water, and their tongues were exceeding dry, and many fruits were set in their sight, and they were not suffered to take of them. And I asked: Who are these, Lord? And he said unto me: These are they that brake the fast before the time appointed: therefore without ceasing do they pay this penalty.

And I saw other men and women hanged by their eyebrows and their hair, and a river of fire drew them, and I said: Who are these, Lord And he said unto me: These are they that gave themselves not unto their own husbands and wives, but unto adulterers, and therefore without ceasing they pay the due penalty. (For this Copt. has: men and women hung head downwards torches burning before their faces, serpents girt about them devouring them. These are the women that beautified themselves with paints and unguents and went to church to ensnare men. Syr. and Gr. omit.)

And I saw other men and women covered with dust, and their appearance was as blood, and they were in a pit of pitch and brimstone and borne down in a river of fire. And I asked: Who are these, Lord And he said unto me: These are they that committed the wickedness of Sodom and Gomorrah, men with men, wherefore they pay the penalty without ceasing. (Copt., Syr., Gr. omit this paragraph.)

40 And I looked and saw men and women clad in white (bright) apparel, and their eyes were blind, and they were set in a pit, and I asked: Who are these, Lord And he said unto me: These are they of the heathen that gave alms and knew not the Lord God; wherefore without ceasing they pay the due penalty.

And I looked and saw other men and women upon a spit of fire, and beasts tearing them, and they were not suffered to say: Lord, have mercy on us. And I saw the angel of the torments (Aftemeloukhos, Copt.) laying most fierce torments upon them saying: Acknowledge the Son of God. For it was told you before, but when the scriptures of God were read unto you, ye paid no heed: wherefore the judgement of God is just, for your evil doings have taken hold upon you, and brought you into these torments. But I sighed and wept, and I inquired and said: Who are these men and women that are strangled in the fire and pay the penalty And he answered me: These are the women which defiled the creation of God when they brought forth children from the womb, and these are the men that lay with them. But their children appealed unto the Lord God and unto the angels that are over the torments, saying: Avenge us of our parents: for they have defiled the creation of God. Having the name of God, but not observing his commandments, they gave us for food unto dogs and to be trampled on by swine, and others they cast into the river (Copt. adds: and did not permit us to grow up into righteous men and to serve God). But those children were delivered unto the angels of Tartarus (Gr. unto an angel) that they should bring them into a spacious place of mercy: but their fathers and mothers were haled (strangled) into everlasting torment.

And thereafter I saw men and women clad in rags full of pitch and brimstone of fire, and there were dragons twined about their necks and shoulders and feet, and angels having horns of fire constrained them and smote them and closed up their nostrils, saying unto them: Wherefore knew ye not the time wherein it was right for you to repent and serve God, and ye did not And I asked: Who are these, Lord And he said unto me: These are they that seemed to renounce the world (lat. God), wearing our garb, but the snares of the world made them to be miserable: they showed no charity and had no pity upon the widows and fatherless: the stranger and pilgrim they did not take in, neither offered one oblation nor had pity on their neighbour: and their prayer went not up even one day pure unto the Lord God; but the many snares of the world held them back, and they were not able to do right in the sight of God. And the angels carried (lat. surrounded) them about into the place of torments: and they that were in torments saw them and said unto them: We indeed when we lived in the world neglected God, and ye did so likewise. And we when we were in the world knew that we were sinners, but of you it was said: These are righteous and servants of God: now we know that ye were only called by the name of the Lord. Wherefore also they pay the due penalty.

And I sighed and wept and said: Woe unto men! woe unto the sinners! to what end were they born And the angel answered and said unto me: Wherefore weepest thou Art thou more merciful than the Lord God which is blessed for ever, who hath established the judgement and left every man of his own will to choose good or evil and to do as pleaseth him Yet again I wept very sore, and he said unto me: Weepest thou, when as yet thou hast not seen the greater torments Follow me, and thou shalt see sevenfold greater than these.

41 And he took me from the north side (to the west, Syr.) and set me over a well, and I found it sealed with seven seals. And the angel that was with me answered and said unto the angel of that place: Open the mouth of the well, that Paul the dearly beloved of God may behold; for power hath been given unto him to see all the torments of hell. And the angel said unto me: Stand afar off, that thou mayest be able to endure the stench of this place. When therefore the well was opened, straightway there arose out of it a stench hard and evil exceedingly, which surpassed all the torments: and I looked into the well and saw masses (lumps) of fire burning on every side, and anguish, and there was straitness in the mouth of the pit so as to take but one man in. And the angel answered and said unto me: If any be cast into the well of the abyss, and it be sealed over him, there shall never be remembrance made of him in the presence of the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost or of the holy angels. And I said: Who are they, Lord, that are cast into this well And he said unto me: They are whosoever confesseth not that Christ is come in the flesh and that the Virgin Mary bare him and whosoever saith of the bread and the cup of blessing of the Eucharist that it is not the body and blood of Christ.

42 And I looked from the north unto the west and saw there the worm that sleepeth not, and in that place was gnashing of teeth. And the worms were of the measure of one cubit, and on them were two heads; and I saw there men and women in cold and gnashing of teeth. And I asked and said: Lord, who are they that are in this place And he said unto me: These are they which say that Christ rose not from the dead, and that this flesh riseth not again. And I inquired and said: Lord, is there no fire nor heat in this place And he said unto me: In this place is nothing else but cold and snow. And again he said to me: Even if the sun (seven suns, Copt.) rose upon them, they would not be warmed, because of the excessive cold of this place, and the snow. And when I heard this I spread forth mine hands and wept and sighed, and again I said: It were better for us if we had not been born, all we that are sinners.

43 But when they that were in that place saw me weeping, with the angel, they also cried out and wept, saying: Lord God, have mercy upon us. And after that I beheld the heaven open and Michael the archangel coming down out of heaven, and with him all the host of the angels; and they came even unto them that were set in torment. And they when they saw them wept again and cried out and said: Have mercy upon us, thou Michael, archangel, have mercy upon us and upon the race of men, for it is by thy prayers that the earth standeth. We have now seen the judgement and have known the Son of God. It was not possible for us to pray for this before we came into this place: for we heard that there was a judgement, before we departed out of the world, but the snares and the life of the world suffered us not to repent. And Michael answered and said: Hearken when Michael speaketh: I am he that stands in the presence of God always. As the Lord liveth, before whose face I stand, I cease not for one day nor one night to pray continually for the race of men; and I indeed pray for them that are upon earth: but they cease not from committing wickednesses and fornication. And they bring not forth aught of good while they are upon earth; and ye have wasted in vanity the time wherein ye ought to have repented. But I have prayed away, and now do I entreat that God would send dew and that rain may be sent upon the earth, and still pray I until the earth yield her fruits: and I say that if any man doeth but a little good I will strive for him and protect him until he escape the judgement of torment. Where then be your prayers Where be your repentances ye have lost the time despicably. Yet now weep ye, and I will weep with you, and the angels that are with me, together with the dearly beloved Paul, if peradventure the merciful God will have pity and grant you refreshment. And they when they heard these words cried out and wept sore, and all said with one voice: Have mercy upon us, O Son of God. And I, Paul, sighed and said: O Lord God, have mercy upon thy creature, have mercy on the children of men, have mercy upon thine image.

44 I beheld and saw the heaven shake like unto a tree that is moved by the wind: and suddenly they cast themselves down upon their faces before the throne: and I saw the four-and-twenty elders and the four beasts worshipping God: and I saw the altar and the veil and the throne, and all of them were rejoicing, and the smoke of a sweet odour rose up beside the altar of the throne of God; and I heard a voice saying: For what cause do ye entreat me, our angels, and our ministers And they cried out, saying: We entreat thee, beholding thy great goodness unto mankind. And thereafter I saw the Son of God coming down out of heaven, and on his head was a crown. And when they that were in torments saw him they all cried out with one voice, saying: Have mercy upon us, O exalted Son of God (or, Son of God Most High): thou art he that hast granted refreshment unto all that are in heaven and earth; have mercy upon us likewise: for since we beheld thee we have been refreshed. And there went forth a voice from the Son of God throughout all the torments, saying: What good works have ye done that ye should ask of me refreshment My blood was shed for you, and not even so did ye repent: for your sake I bare a crown of thorns on mine head, for you I received buffets upon my cheeks, and not even so did ye repent. I asked for water when I hanged upon the cross, and they gave me vinegar mingled with gall: with a spear did they open my right side: for my name's sake have they slain my servants the prophets, and the righteous: and for ail these things did I give you a place of repentance, and ye would not. Yet now because of Michael the archangel of my covenant and the angels that are with him, and because of Paul my dearly beloved whom I would not grieve, and because of your brethren that are in the world and do offer oblations, and because of your sons, for in them are my commandments, and yet more because of mine own goodness: on that day whereon I rose from the dead I grant unto all you that are in torment refreshment for a day and a night for ever. And all they cried out and said: We bless thee, O Son of God, for that thou hast granted us rest for a day and a night: for better unto us is the refreshment of one day than the whole time of our life wherein we were upon earth: and if we had known clearly that this place was appointed for them that sin, we should have done none other work whatsoever, neither traded nor done any wickedness. For what profit was our pride in the world (Copt. What profit was it to us to be born into the world) For this our pride is taken captive, which came up out of our mouth against our neighbour (Copt. our life is like the breath of our mouth): and this pain and our sore anguish and tears and the worms which are under us, these are worse unto us than the torments which we suffer. (This is hardly sense, but Copt. agrees: should it not have been ' these are worse than not to have been born ') And as they thus spake, the angels of torment and the evil angels were wroth with them and said: How long have ye wept and sighed for ye have had no mercy. For this is the judgement of God on him that hath not had mercy. Yet have ye received this great grace, even refreshment for the night and day of the Lord's day, because of Paul the dearly beloved of God who hath come down unto you.

45 And after these things the angel said unto me: Hast thou seen all these things And I said: Yea, Lord. And he said unto me: Follow me, and I will bring thee into Paradise, that the righteous which are there may see thee: for, behold, they hope to see thee, and are ready to come and meet thee with joy and exultation. And I followed after the angel in the swiftness of the Holy Ghost, and he set me in Paradise and said unto me: This is Paradise, wherein Adam and his wife erred. And I entered into Paradise and saw the head of the waters, and the angel beckoned unto me and said to me: Behold, saith he, these waters: for this is the river Phison that compasseth about all the land of Evila. and this other is Geon that goeth about all the land of Egypt and Ethiopia, and this other is Tigris that is over against the Assyrians, and this other is Euphrates that watereth the land of Mesopotamia. And I entered in further and saw a tree planted, out of whose roots flowed waters, and out of it was the beginning of the four rivers, and the Spirit of God rested upon that tree, and when the spirit breathed the waters flowed forth: and I said: Lord, is this tree that which maketh the waters to flow And he said unto me: Because in the beginning, before the heaven and the earth were made to appear, and all things were invisible, the Spirit of God moved (was borne) upon the waters; but since by the commandment of God the heaven and the earth appeared the spirit hath rested upon this tree; wherefore when the spirit breatheth, the waters flow out from the tree. And he took hold on mine hand and led me unto the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, and said: This is the tree whereby death entered into the world, and Adam taking of it from his wife did eat, and death entered into the world. And he showed me another tree in the midst of Paradise, and saith unto me: This is the tree of life.

46 And as I yet looked upon the tree, I saw a virgin coming from afar off, and two hundred angels before her singing hymns: and I inquired and said: Lord, who is this that cometh in such glory and he said unto me: This is Mary the virgin, the mother of the Lord. And she came near and saluted me, and said: Hail, Paul, dearly beloved of God and angels and men. For all the saints have besought my son Jesus who is my Lord, that thou shouldest come here in the body that they might see thee before thou didst depart out of the world. And the Lord said to them: Wait and be ye patient: yet a little while, and ye shall see him, and he shall be with you for ever. And again they all with one accord said unto him: Grieve us not, for we desire to see him while he is in the flesh, for by him hath thy name been greatly glorified in the world, and we have seen that he hath excelled (done away with) all the works whether of the lesser or the greater. For we inquire of them that come hither, saying: Who is he that guided you in the world and they have told us: There is one in the world whose name is Paul; he declareth Christ, preaching him, and we believe that by the power and sweetness of his speech many have entered into the kingdom. Behold, all the righteous are behind me, coming to meet thee. But I say unto thee, Paul, that for this cause I come first to meet them that have performed the will of my son and my Lord Jesus Christ, even I come first to meet them and leave them not as strangers until they meet with him in peace.

47 While she was yet speaking I saw three men coming from afar, very beautiful, after the appearance of Christ, and their forms were shining, and their angels; and I asked: Who are these, Lord And he answered: These are the fathers of the people, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And they came near and greeted me, and said: Hail, Paul, dearly beloved of God and men: blessed is he that endureth violence for the Lord's sake. And Abraham answered me and said: This is my son Isaac, and Jacob my best beloved, and we knew the Lord and followed him. Blessed are all they that have believed thy word that they may inherit the kingdom of God by labour and self-sacrifice (renunciation) and sanctification and humility and charity and meekness and right faith in the Lord: and we also had devotion unto the Lord whom thou preacheest, covenanting that we will come unto every soul of them that believe in him, and minister unto him as fathers minister unto their sons.

While they yet spake I saw twelve men coming from afar with honour, and I asked: Who are these, Lord And he said: These are the patriarchs. And they came and saluted me and said: Hail, Paul, dearly beloved of God and men. The Lord hath not grieved us, that we might see thee yet being in the body, before thou departedst out of the world. And every one of them signified his name unto me in order, from Ruben unto Benjamin; and Joseph said unto me: I am he that was sold; and I say unto thee, Paul, that for all that my brethren did unto me, in nothing did I deal evilly with them, not in all the labour which they laid upon me, nor did I hurt them in any thing (Copt. kept no evil thought against them) from morning until evening. Blessed is he that is hurt for the Lord's sake and hath endured, for the Lord will recompense him manifold more when he departeth out of the world.

48 While he yet spake I saw another coming from afar, beautiful, and his angels singing hymns, and I asked: Who is this, Lord, that is fair of countenance And he said unto me: Dost thou not know him And I said: No, Lord. And he said to me: This is Moses the lawgiver, unto whom God gave the law. And when he was nigh me, straightway he wept, and after that he greeted me; and I said unto him: Why weepst thou for I have heard that thou excellest all men in meekness. And he answered, saying: I weep for them whom I planted with much labour, for they have borne no fruit, neither doth any of them do well. And I have seen all the sheep whom I fed that they are scattered and become as having no shepherd, and that all the labours which I have endured for the children of Israel are come to nought, and however great wonders I did in their midst [and] they understood not: and I marvel how the strangers and uncircumcised and idolaters are converted and entered into the promises of God, but Israel hath not entered in: and now I say unto thee, O brother Paul, that in that hour when the people hanged up Jesus whom thou preachest, God the Father of all, which gave me the law, and Michael and all the angels and archangels, and Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and all the righteous wept over the Son of God that was hanged on the cross. And in that hour all the saints waited upon me, looking on me and saying: Behold, Moses, what they of thy people have done unto the Son of God. Therefore blessed art thou O Paul, and blessed is the generation and people that hath believed thy word.

49 While he yet spake there came other twelve and saw me and said: Art thou Paul that is glorified in heaven and upon earth And I answered and said: Who are ye The first answered and said: I am Esaias whose head Manasses cut with a saw of wood. And the second said likewise: I am Jeremias who was stoned by the children of Israel, and slain. And the third said: I am Ezechiel whom the children of Israel dragged by the feet over the stones in the mountain until they scattered my brains abroad: and all of us endured these labours, desiring to save the children of Israel: and I say unto thee that after the toils which they laid upon me I would cast myself down upon my face before the Lord, praying for them and bowing my knees unto the second hour of the Lord's day, even until Michael came and raised me up from the earth. Blessed art thou, Paul, and blessed is the people that hath believed through thee.

And as they passed by, I saw another, fair of countenance and asked: Who is this, Lord [And when he saw me he was glad] and he said unto me: This is Lot, which was found righteous in Sodom. And he came near and greeted me and said: Blessed art thou, Paul, and blessed is the generation unto whom thou hast ministered. And I answered and said unto him: Art thou Lot, that wast found righteous in Sodom And he said: I entertained angels in mine house as strangers, and when they of the city would have done them violence I offered them my two daughters, virgins, that had never known man, and gave them to them, saying: Use them as ye will, only do no ill unto these men, for therefore have they entered under the roof of mine house. Therefore ought we to have confidence, and know that whatsoever any man hath done, God recompenseth him manifold more when he cometh (they come) unto him. Blessed art thou Paul, and blessed is the generation which hath believed thy word.

When therefore he had ceased speaking unto me, I saw another coming from afar off, very beautiful in the face, and smiling, and his angels singing hymns, and I said unto the angel that was with me: Hath, then, every one of the righteous an angel for his fellow And he saith to me: Every one of the saints hath his own, that standeth by him and singeth hymns, and the one departeth not from the other. And I said: Who is this, Lord And he said: This is Job. And he drew near and greeted me and said: Brother Paul, thou hast great praise with God and men. Now I am Job, which suffered much for the season of thirty years by the issue of a plague, and in the beginning the blains that came forth of my body were as grains of wheat; but on the third day they became like an ass's foot, and the worms that fell from them were four fingers long: and thrice the devil appeared unto me and saith to me: Speak a word against the Lord, and die. But I said unto him: If thus be the will of God that I continue in the plague all the time of my life until I die, I will not rest from blessing the Lord God, and I shall receive the greater reward. For I know that the sufferings of this world are nought compared with the refreshment that is thereafter: wherefore blessed art thou, Paul, and blessed is the people which hath believed by thy means.

50 While he yet spake there came another crying out from afar off and saying: Blessed art thou, Paul, and blessed am I that have seen thee the beloved of the Lord. And I asked the angel: Who is this, Lord and he answered and said unto me: This is Noe of the days of the flood. And straightway we greeted one another, and he, rejoicing greatly, said unto me: Thou art (or, Art thou) Paul the best beloved of God. And I asked him: Who art thou And he said: I am Noe that was in the days of the flood: but I say unto thee, Paul, that I spent an hundred years making the ark, not putting off the coat (tunic) which I wore, and I shaved not the hair of mine head. Furthermore I kept continence, not coming near mine own wife, and in those hundred years the hair of mine head grew not in greatness, neither was my raiment soiled. And I besought men at that time, saying: Repent, for a flood of waters cometh upon you. But they mocked me and derided my words; and again they said unto me: This is the time of them that would play and sin as much as they will, that have leave to fornicate not a little (lat. confused; other versions omit): for God looketh not on these things, neither knoweth what is done of us men, and moreover there is no flood of waters coming upon this world. And they ceased not from their sins until God blotted out all flesh that had the breath of life in it. But know thou that God loveth one righteous man more than all the world of the wicked. Therefore blessed art thou, O Paul, and blessed is the people that hath believed by thy means.

51 And I turned myself and saw other righteous ones coming from afar off, and I asked the angel: Who are these, Lord and he answered me: These are Elias and Eliseus. And they greeted me, and I said unto them: Who are ye And one of them answered and said: I am Elias the prophet of God. I am Elias that prayed, and because of my word the heaven rained not for three years and six months, because of the iniquities of men. Righteous and true is God, who doeth the will of his servants; for oftentimes the angels besought the Lord for rain, and he said: Be patient until my servant Elias pray and entreat for this, and I will send rain upon the earth.

[Here the Greek, latin, and Syriac texts end, save that the Syriac adds thus much: And he gave not, until I called upon him again; then he gave unto them. But blessed art thou, O Paul, that thy generation and those thou teachest are the sons of the kingdom. And know thou, O Paul, that every man who believes through thee hath a great blessing, and a blessing is reserved for him. Then he departed from me.]

And the angel who was with me led me forth, and said unto me: Lo, unto thee is given this mystery and revelation: as thou pleasest, make it known unto the sons of men.

And I, Paul, returned unto myself, and I knew all that I had seen: and in life I had not rest that I might reveal this mystery, but I wrote it and deposited it under the ground and the foundations of the house of a certain faithful man with whom I used to be in Tarsus a city of Cilicia. And when I was released from this life of time, and stood before my Lord, thus said he unto me: Paul, have we shown all these things unto thee that thou shouldst deposit them under the foundations of a house Then send and disclose concerning this revelation, that men may read it and turn to the way of truth, that they also may not come to these bitter torments.

And thus was this revelation discovered [...] Then follows the history of the finding, which in the other texts is prefixed to the book. But this conclusion can hardly be the original one. The Coptic seems in part better. After the words 'rain upon the earth', it continues:

The sufferings which each endureth for God's sake will God requite unto him twofold. Blessed art thou, Paul, and blessed are the heathen who shall believe through thee. And whilst he was speaking, Enoch (here Enoch replaces Elisha) also came and saluted me and said unto me: The man who endureth suffering for God's sake, God will not afflict when he goeth out of the world.

Then there are similar meetings with Zacharias and John Baptist, and Abel. Zacharias says: I am he whom they killed when I was offering up the offering unto God: and when the angels came for the offering, they carried my body up to God, and no man found my body whither it had been taken.'

Then Adam, taller than the rest, appears. And this seems a suitable finale to the procession of saints.

After this Paul is carried into the third heaven. The angel who is with him changes in appearance and bursts into flames of fire, and a voice forbids Paul to reveal what he has seen.

There is a description of a mysterious vision of an altar with seven eagles of light on the right and seven on the left. And this is followed by more descriptions of Paradise-partly resembling a vision seen by one Siophanes, in the Book of Bartholomew. Some sentences also are taken from, or at least found in, the Apocalypse of Zephaniah. The meek, the prophets, David, all figure again in this episode: last are the martyrs. The conclusion runs thus (in substance):

The angel of the Lord took me up and brought me to the Mount of Olives. I found the apostles assembled and told them all I had seen. They praised God and commanded us, that is me, Mark, and Timothy, to write the revelation. And while they were talking, Christ appeared from the chariot of the cherubim and spoke greetings to Peter, John, and especially Paul. He promised blessings to those who should write or read the Apocalypse, and curses on those who should deride it. Peter and Paul should end their course on the fifth of Epiphi (29 June). He then bade a cloud take the apostles to the various countries allotted to them, and commanded them to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom. And a doxology follows.

I am disposed to think that nothing after the appearance of Adam in this version can be original. The rest is to a great extent, I think a pasticcio from other Coptic apocrypha. It is quite possible, of course that the original end of the Apocalypse was lost at an early date, but the supposition is probable that after the appearance of Adam a short conclusion followed in which Paul returned to earth. With so ill-proportioned and inartistic a book it is not perhaps worth while to spend much time on conjectural restoration. Yet another possibility should be pointed out. The climax of the Apocalypse is reached when the Sunday is granted as a day of rest from torment. Paul has seen Paradise and hell, and there is no more for him to do. Everything after ch. 44 is an otiose appendix.

And we do find in the Ethiopic Apocalypse of the Virgin, which copies that of Paul very literally, that the end comes at ch. 44, when the Virgin procures rest from Friday evening to Monday morning for the lost. The Greek Apocalypse -one form at least ends when she has gained for them the days of Pentecost.

It may be the case, then, that the Apocalypse of Paul as first issued ended here, and that it was reissued with the appendix about Paradise (45-end). In the shorter Latin recensions there is no trace of anything after ch. 44: but this does not furnish a conclusive argument. More to the point would be the discovery of a copy of the full text ending with 44.

THE (COPTIC) APOCALYPSE OF PAUL

The Nag Hammadi Library

Translation: George W. MacRae and William R. Murdock

Estimated Range of Dating: 150-220 A.D.

[...] the road. And he spoke to him, saying, "By which road shall I go up to Jerusalem?" The little child replied, saying, "Say your name, so that I may show you the road". The little child knew who Paul was. He wished to make conversation with him through his words in order that he might find an excuse for speaking with him.

The little child spoke, saying, "I know who you are, Paul. You are he who was blessed from his mother's womb. For I have come to you that you may go up to Jerusalem to your fellow apostles. And for this reason you were called. And I am the Spirit who accompanies you. Let your mind awaken, Paul, with [...]. For [...] whole which [...] among the principalities and these authorities and archangels and powers and the whole race of demons, [...] the one that reveals bodies to a soul-seed."

And after he brought that speech to an end, he spoke, saying to me, "Let your mind awaken, Paul, and see that this mountain upon which you are standing is the mountain of Jericho, so that you may know the hidden things in those that are visible. Now it is to the twelve apostles that you shall go, for they are elect spirits, and they will greet you." He raised his eyes and saw them greeting him.

Then the Holy Spirit who was speaking with him caught him up on high to the third heaven, and he passed beyond to the fourth heaven. The Holy Spirit spoke to him, saying, "Look and see your likeness upon the earth." And he looked down and saw those who were upon the earth. He stared and saw those who were upon the [...]. Then he gazed down and saw the twelve apostles at his right and at his left in the creation; and the Spirit was going before them.

But I saw in the fourth heaven according to class - I saw the angels resembling gods, the angels bringing a soul out of the land of the dead. They placed it at the gate of the fourth heaven. And the angels were whipping it. The soul spoke, saying, "What sin was it that I committed in the world?" The toll-collector who dwells in the fourth heaven replied, saying, "It was not right to commit all those lawless deeds that are in the world of the dead". The soul replied, saying, "Bring witnesses! Let them show you in what body I committed lawless deeds. Do you wish to bring a book to read from?"

And the three witnesses came. The first spoke, saying, "Was I not in the body the second hour [...] I rose up against you until you fell into anger and rage and envy." And the second spoke, saying, "Was I not in the world? And I entered at the fifth hour, and I saw you and desired you. And behold, then, now I charge you with the murders you committed." The third spoke, saying, "Did I not come to you at the twelfth hour of the day when the sun was about to set? I gave you darkness until you should accomplish your sins." When the soul heard these things, it gazed downward in sorrow. And then it gazed upward. It was cast down. The soul that had been cast down went to a body which had been prepared for it. And behold, its witnesses were finished.

Then I gazed upward and saw the Spirit saying to me, "Paul, come! Proceed toward me!". Then as I went, the gate opened, and I went up to the fifth heaven. And I saw my fellow apostles going with me while the Spirit accompanied us. And I saw a great angel in the fifth heaven holding an iron rod in his hand. There were three other angels with him, and I stared into their faces. But they were rivalling each other, with whips in their hands, goading the souls on to the judgement. But I went with the Spirit and the gate opened for me.

Then we went up to the sixth heaven. And I saw my fellow apostles going with me, and the Holy Spirit was leading me before them. And I gazed up on high and saw a great light shining down on the sixth heaven. I spoke, saying to the toll-collector who was in the sixth heaven, "Open to me and the Holy Spirit who is before me." He opened to me.

Then we went up to the seventh heaven, and I saw an old man [...] light and whose garment was white. His throne, which is in the seventh heaven, was brighter than the sun by seven times. The old man spoke, saying to me, "Where are you going, Paul? O blessed one and the one who was set apart from his mother's womb." But I looked at the Spirit, and he was nodding his head, saying to me, "Speak with him!". And I replied, saying to the old man, "I am going to the place from which I came." And the old man responded to me, "Where are you from?" But I replied, saying, "I am going down to the world of the dead in order to lead captive the captivity that was led captive in the captivity of Babylon." The old man replied to me saying, "How will you be able to get away from me? Look and see the principalities and authorities." The Spirit spoke, saying, "Give him the sign that you have, and he will open for you." And then I gave him the sign. He turned his face downwards to his creation and to those who are his own authorities.

And then the <seventh> heaven opened and we went up to the Ogdoad. And I saw the twelve apostles. They greeted me, and we went up to the ninth heaven. I greeted all those who were in the ninth heaven, and we went up to the tenth heaven. And I greeted my fellow spirits.

THE APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH (2 versions)

The Sefer Elijah

The Jewish Hebrew Version

and The Coptic Christian Version

Estimated Range of Dating: 2nd - 4th centuries A.D.

(The Apocalypse of Elijah is an anonymous apocryphal work presenting itself as a revelation given by an angel. Two versions are known today, a Hebrew Jewish version and a Coptic Christian fragmentary version. The title derives from mentions of Elijah within the text, although there is no other reason to assume that he is meant to be the author. This apocalypse is mentioned in the Apostolic Constitutions and other writings. The apocalypse is pre-Pauline, composed in the first century BC. The Jewish version of the Apocalypse of Elijah was published by Adolf Jellinek in 1855 and Moses Buttenwieser in 1897. Theodor Zahn assigns this apocalypse to the 2nd century A.D. but other scholars reject such an early date. The two extant versions are thought to be derived from the same original, which would be the one quoted by Paul the Apostle. The Hebrew version abridged and the Coptic version has been Christianised. The original Tetragrammaton YHWH has been replaced by its spoken version "Yahweh" which is a name for God or Lord.)

THE JEWISH HEBREW VERSION:

THE SEFER ELIJAH

Apocalypse of Elijah

Translation: Moses Buttenwieser, 1897

Estimated range of dating: 150-400 AD

(The Sefer Elijah or 'The Book of Elijah' was first published in an anthology of midrashic texts in Salonika in 1743. This version of the text was subsequently reprinted by Adolph Jellinek in Leipzig, 1853. Another edition based on the version of the work found in Munich Ms. Hebr. 222, a manuscript dating from the fifteenth century containing an anthology of brief midrashim, was prepared by Moses Buttenwieser in 1897. The present translation utilizes Buttenwieser as its base text with frequent reference to the variant renderings found in Jellinek's edition.)

1 'And he lay down and fell asleep beneath a broom-shrub. Then lo, this angel touched him and said, "Get up, eat!"' (1 Kgs 19:5). Michael, 'the great prince' of Israel, revealed this mystery to the prophet Elijah at Mount Carmel; (namely, the eschaton and what was scheduled to transpire at the End of Days at the end of the four empires (and) the things which would take place during the reign of the fourth ruler.

2 A wind from the Lord lifted me (i.e., Elijah) up and transported me to the southern part of the world, and I saw there a high place burning with fire where no creature was able to enter. Then the wind lifted me up and transported me to the eastern part of the world, and I saw there stars battling one another incessantly. Again the wind lifted me up and transported me to the western part of the world, and I saw there souls undergoing a painful judgement, each one in accordance with its deeds.

3 Then Michael said to me, 'The appointed time for the End of Days will occur during the reign of a king who will be named Hrmlt. There are some that say that Trmlyl will be his name.' R. Simai says Hkšrt will be his name. R. Eleazar says Artaxerxes will be his name. R. Judah b. Betira says Cyrus will be his name. R. Simon ben Yodhai says Khusray will be his name. The halakhah in this case follows R. Sim'on who said 'Khusray' will be his name.

4 The last king who rules Persia shall come up against the Romans three successive years until he expands (his gains) against them for twelve months. Three mighty warriors will come up to oppose him from the west, but they will be handed over into his control. Then the lowliest of the kings, the son of a slave woman and whose name is Gigit, will confront him from the west. These will be his signs, for Daniel has already foreseen him: his face will be long, there will be a bald patch between his eyes, he will be very tall, the soles of his feet will be high (sic), and his thighs will be thin. At that time he will attack the faithful people, and he will provoke at that time three agitations. All the constellations will be gathered together and move to one place. They will plunder houses and rob fields and strike the orphan and the widow in the bazaar, but if they perform penitence they will be forgiven.

5 On the twentieth (day) of Marheshvan, the world will be shaken 'and the heavens and the earth will quake.' On the twentieth (day) of Kislev, all Israel will stand in prayer and clamor before their heavenly Father, and a sword will descend and fall upon the nations of the world, in accordance with what scripture says: 'The sword kills indiscriminately' (2 Sam 11:25). On the twentieth (day) of Nisan, the first group of exiles will depart from Babylon: they will number eighteen thousand men and women, and not a single one of them will perish. On the twenty-fifth (day) of Tishri, the second group of exiles will depart from the region of the River Sa(m)batyon: they will number seventeen thousand, but twenty men and fifteen women will be slain from among them. On the twenty-fifth (day) of the eighth month (sic; i.e., Marheshvan), the third group of exiles will depart. They will weep and cry out on behalf of their brethren who were slain, and they will cry out in the desert for twenty-five days and not taste any (food), living instead 'on what issues from the mouth of the Lord' (Deut 8:3). The first group of exiles will not leave Babylon until the second group arrives there, as scripture affirms: 'Writhe and push out, O daughter of Zion, like a woman giving birth. For you will now go out of the city and dwell in the countryside, and you shall come to Babylon. There you will be rescued; there will the Lord redeem you from the hand of your enemies' (Mic 4:10).

6 On the twentieth (day) of Nisan, a king shall come up from the west, ravaging and horrifying the world. He shall encroach upon 'the holy beautiful mountain' (Dan 11:45) and burn it. Most cursed among women is the woman who gave birth to him: that is 'the horn' which Daniel foresaw, and that day will be one of torment and battle against Israel.

7 Demetrius son of Poryphos and Anfolipos son of Panfos will wage a second battle. Accompanying them will be ten myriads of cavalry, ten myriads of foot soldiers, and (another) ten myriads of troops concealed on ships. On the twentieth (day) of Ellul, the Messiah will come: his name is Yinnon. On that same day Gabriel will descend (and) from the ninth to the tenth hour will destroy from the world ninety-two thousand people. On the twentieth (day) of Tebet, Mekketz, Qirtalos, and all the cities allied with them will wage a third battle: a very large nation (extending) from the great plain unto Jaffa and Ashkelon. On the twentieth (day) of Shebat, the Messiah will come: angels of destruction will descend and destroy the whole of that multitude, and they will not leave (alive) a single soul.

8 (It was regarding this time that God spoke about to Abraham: 'Your progeny are destined to sink to the lowest level, as scripture states: "And you shall be low, and you will speak from the ground"' (Isa 29:4), but afterwards they will be exalted higher than all the nations, as scripture affirms: "and the Lord your God will set you high above all the nations of the earth" (Deut 28:1).') After this all the Gentile nations will come and prostrate themselves before every Israelite and lick off the dust from their feet, as scripture says: 'kings will serve as your tutors, [while their princesses will be your nursemaids; they will prostrate themselves facedown on the ground to you and lick off the dust from your feet]' (Isa 49:23).

9 On the twentieth (day) of Adar, the Messiah will come, and with him will be thirty thousand righteous ones, as scripture attests: 'Righteousness will be the wrap girdling his loins' (Isa 11:5). When the nations of the world behold this happening, immediately each one of them will putrefy, both it and its cavalry, as scripture says: 'and this will be the affliction with which the Lord will strike all the nations, etc.' (Zech 14:12, 15). At that time the Holy One, blessed be He, will address the nations of the world: 'Woe to you, O wicked ones, who are (alive) at the cessation of the four world empires! All of you are to be expelled from the world, one wherein one kor of wheat will yield about nine hundred kors, and there will be analogous (fantastic yields) for wine and oil. Every tree will bear choice produce and fruits, as scripture states: "and you, O mountains of Israel, will make your branches yield, etc." (Ezek 36:8).' And Israel will eat (these fruits) and rejoice for forty years.

10 After this the Holy One, blessed be He, will bring up Gog and Magog 'and all their associates,' and then all the peoples of the earth will assemble together and surround Jerusalem in order to make war. The Holy One, blessed be He, will come up and do battle with them. The Messiah will arrive, and with his help the Holy One, blessed be He, will wage war on them, as scripture forecasts: 'then the Lord will go forth and fight with those nations as when He did battle on the day of war' (Zech 14:3). On that day mountains will quake and hills will shake and walls and towers will collapse. The Holy One, blessed be He, will gather all the birds of the sky and the beasts of the earth to feast on their flesh and to drink their blood, as scripture says: 'the vultures will spend summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth will spend winter upon them' (Isa 18:6). Israel will spend seven years burning their weaponry, as scripture states: 'then the inhabitants of the cities of Israel will go out and set fire to the weaponry and burn (it) ... for seven years' (Ezek 39:9). It (also) says: 'The house of Israel will spend seven months burying them in order to purify the land' (Ezek 39:12).

11 These are the cities which will experience devastation: Jericho, Be'erot, Beth Horon, Siserin, Milkah, Arad, Shallum, Samaria, Beth Migdol, Tyre, Beth alsawet, Lod, Buz, Beth 'Aynam, Hamath, Sefar, adashah, Antioch, Alexandria, and 'Edom.' But as for all of the cities of Israel, fire and fiery angels will surround them, as scripture affirms: 'and I will be a wall of fire encompassing it—utterance of the Lord' (Zech 2:9). Afterwards the final day will come: its duration will be that of forty days. The mountains and hills will shudder and quake, and the earth will cry out against the wicked, saying: 'In such-and-such a place did so-and-so kill so-and-so,' as scripture states: 'the earth will reveal her blood-guilt, etc.' (Isa 26:21).

12 Elijah said: I beheld the dead taking form and their 'dust' being reshaped and made like (the forms they had) when they were formerly alive so that they might render praise to God, as scripture states: 'See now that I indeed am He [and there is no deity other than Me; I put to death and I resurrect, I sicken and I heal: none can escape from My power]' (Deut 32:39). Also in Ezekiel it says: 'and I looked, and behold, sinews were upon them' (Ezek 37:8). The ministering angels opened their tombs and injected them with their 'animating breaths,' and they revived. They (the angels) stood them up on their feet. They shoved everyone who merited punishment into a large hollow place two hundred cubits long and fifty cubits wide. The eyes of the righteous will witness the downfall of all those who did not take pleasure in (observing) the Torah of the Holy One, blessed be He, as scripture states: 'they will go out and see the corpses of those people who rebelled against Me ...' (Isa 66:24).

13 Elijah said: I beheld fire and brimstone coming down upon the wicked from heaven, as scripture says: 'the Lord will rain coals of fire and brimstone upon the wicked' (Ps 11:6). The Holy One, blessed be He, will move the Temple a great distance from the place of eternal torment so that the righteous will not hear the sound of the cry of the wicked (suffering) and seek to obtain mercy for them. 'They will be as if they never were.'

14 Elijah said: I saw Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and all the righteous ones in sitting postures, and the land before them was sown with every sort of delightful vegetation. That tree which the Holy One, blessed be He, had prepared was standing in the middle of the garden, as scripture says: 'and there will grow by the stream on its bank on both sides every kind of fruit tree; their foliage will never wither, nor will their fruit ever fail' (Ezek 47:12). Boats will come 'from Egedi as far as' Eglayim bearing wealth and riches for the righteous ones.

15 Elijah (may his memory be for a blessing) said: I beheld a great city, both beautiful and glorious, descending from heaven wherein it had been built, as scripture states: 'The already built Jerusalem, like the city associated to it' (Ps 122:3), perfectly constructed and with its people dwelling within it. It is situated by three thousand towers, with 20,000 ris separating each tower. Within the span of every ris are 25,000 cubits of emeralds, pearls, and (other) jewels, as scripture says: 'I will inlay your battlements with gemstones' (Isa 54:12).

16 Elijah said: I saw the houses and the gates of the righteous with their thresholds and door-frames constructed of precious stones. (I saw) the treasuries of the Temple opened up to their doorways (sic), and among them were Torah and peace, as scripture states: 'all your children will be instructed by the Lord; [your children will have great peace]' (Isa 54:13), and it says: 'those who love Your Torah have great peace' (Ps 119:165), and it says: 'How great is Your beneficence which You have stored up for those who revere You' (Ps 31:20).

End of Sefer Elijah, may his memory be for a blessing.

THE COPTIC CHRISTIAN VERSION:

THE APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH

From: the Pseudepigrapha

Translation: Theodor Zahn, 1908

Estimated range of dating: 150-400 AD

APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH CHAPTER 1

1 The word of Yahweh came to me saying, "Son of man, say to his people, 'why do you add sin to your sins and anger the Lord God who created you?'" Don't love the world or the things which are in the world, for the boasting of the world and its destruction belong to the devil.

2 Remember that the Lord of glory, Who created everything, had mercy upon you so that He might save us from the captivity of this age. For many times the devil desired not to let the sun rise above the earth and not to let the earth yield fruit, since he desires to consume men like a fire which rages in stubble, and he desires to swallow them like water. Therefore, on account of this, the God of glory had mercy upon us, and He sent His Son to the world so that He might save us from the captivity. He did not inform an angel or an archangel or any principality when He was about to come to us, but He changed Himself to be like a man when He was about to come to us so that He might save us [from flesh]. Therefore become sons to Him since He is a father to you.

3 Remember that He has prepared thrones and crowns for you in heaven, saying, "Everyone who will obey Me will receive thrones and crowns among those who are Mine." The Lord said, "I will write My name upon their forehead and I will seal their right hand, and they will not hunger or thirst. Neither will the son of lawlessness prevail over them, nor will the thrones hinder them, but they will walk with the angels up to My city." Now as for the sinners, they will be shamed and they will not pass by the thrones, but the thrones of death will seize them and rule over them because the angels will not agree with them. They have alienated themselves from His dwellings.

4 Hear, O wise men of the land, concerning the deceivers who will multiply in the last times so that they will set down for themselves doctrines which do not belong to God, setting aside the Law of God, those who have made their belly their God, saying, "The fast does not exist, nor did God create it," making themselves strangers to the covenant of God and robbing themselves of the glorious promises. Now these are not ever correctly established in the firm faith. Therefore don't let those people lead you astray.

5 Remember that from the time when He created the heavens, the Lord created the fast for a benefit to men on account of the passions and desires which fight against you so that the evil will not inflame you. "But it is a pure fast which I have created," said the Lord. The one who fasts continually will not sin although jealousy and strife are within him. Let the pure one fast, but whenever the one who fasts is not pure he has angered the Lord and also the angels. And he has grieved his soul, gathering up wrath for himself for the day of wrath.

6 But a pure fast is what I created, with a pure heart and pure hands. It releases sin. It heals diseases. It casts out demons. It is effective up to the throne of God for an ointment and for a release from sin by means of a pure prayer.

7 Who among you, if he is honoured in his craft, will go forth to the field without a tool in his hand? Or who will go forth to the battle to fight without a breastplate on? If he is found, will he not be killed because he despised the service of the king? Likewise no one is able to enter the holy place if he is double minded. The one who is double minded in his prayer is darkness to himself. And even the angels do not trust him. Therefore be single-minded in the Lord at all times so that you might know every moment.

APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH CHAPTER 2

1 Furthermore, concerning the kings of Assyria and the dissolution of the heaven and the earth and the things beneath the earth.

2 "Now therefore those who are Mine will not be overcome" says the Lord, "nor will they fear in the battle." When they see [a king] who rises in the north, [who will be called] "the king of [Assyria] and" "the king of injustice," [he will increase] his battles and his disturbances against Egypt. The land will groan together because your children will be seized. Many will desire death in those days, but death will flee from them.

3 And a king who will be called "the king of peace" will rise up in the west. He will run upon the sea like a roaring lion. He will kill the king of injustice, and he will take vengeance on Egypt with battles and much bloodshed.

4 It will come to pass in those days that he will command a [peace] and a [vain] gift in Egypt. [He will give] peace to these who are holy, [saying], "The name of [God] is one." [He will] give honours to the [saints and] an exalting to the places of the saints. He will give vain gifts to the house of God. He will wander around in the cities of Egypt with guile, without their knowing. He will take count of the holy places. He will weigh the idols of the heathen. He will take count of their wealth. He will establish priests for them. He will command that the wise men and the great ones of the people be seized, and they will be brought to the metropolis which is by the sea, saying, "There is but one language." But when you hear, "Peace and joy exist," I will...

5 Now I will tell you his signs so that you might know him. For he has two sons: One on his right and one on his left. The one on his right will receive a demonic face, (and) he will fight against the name of God. Now four kings will descend from that king. In his thirtieth year he will come up to Memphis, (and) he will build a temple in Memphis. On that day his own son will rise up against him and kill him. The whole land will be disturbed.

6 On that day he will issue an order over the whole land so that the priests of the land and all of the saints will be seized, saying, "You will repay doubly every gift and all of the good things which my father gave to you." He will shut up the holy places. He will take their houses. He will take their sons prisoner. He will order and sacrifices and abominations and bitter evils will be done in the land. He will appear before the sun and the moon. On that day the priests of the land will tear their clothes.

7 Woe to you, O rulers of Egypt, in those days because your day has passed. The violence (being done to) the poor will turn against you, and your children will be seized as plunder. In those days the cities of Egypt will groan for the voice of the one who sells and the one who buys will not be heard. The markets of the cities of Egypt will become dusty. Those who are in Egypt will weep together. They will desire death, (but) death will flee and leave them.

8 In those days, they will run up to the rocks and leap off, saying, "Fall upon us." And still they will not die. A double affliction will multiply upon the whole land.

9 In those days, the king will command, and all the nursing women will be seized and brought to him bound. They will suckle serpents. And their blood will be drawn from their breasts, and it will be applied as poison to the arrows. On account of their distress of the cities, he will command again, and all the young lads from twelve years and under will be seized and presented in order to teach them to shoot arrows. The midwife who is upon the earth will grieve. The woman who has given birth will lift her eyes to heaven, saying, "Why did I sit upon the birthstool, to bring forth a son to the earth?" The barren woman and the virgin will rejoice, saying, "It is our time to rejoice, because we have no child upon the earth, but our children are in heaven."

10 In those days, three kings will arise among the Persians, and they will take captive the Jews who are in Egypt. They will bring them to Jerusalem, and the will inhabit it and dwell there.

11 Then when you hear that there is security in Jerusalem, tear you garments, O priests of the land, because the son of perdition will soon come. In those days, the lawless one will appear in the holy places -- In (those) days the kings of the Persians will hasten and they will stand to fight with the kings of Assyria. Four kings will fight with three. They will spend three years in that place until they carry off the wealth of the temple which is in that place. In those days, blood will flow from Kos to Memphis. The river of Egypt will become blood, and they will not be able to drink from it for three days.

12 Woe to Egypt and those who are in it. In those days, a king will arise in the city which is called "the city of the sun," and the whole land will be disturbed. He will flee to Memphis (with the Persians).

13 In the sixth year, the Persian kings will plot an ambush in Memphis. They will kill the Assyrian king. The Persians will take vengeance on the land, and they will command to kill all the heathen and the lawless ones. They will command to build the temples of the saints. They will give double gifts to the house of God. They will say, "The name of God is one." The whole land will hail the Persians.

14 Even the remnant, who did not die under the afflictions, will say, "The Lord has sent us a righteous king so that the land will not become a desert" He will command that no royal matter be presented for three years and six months. The land will be full of good in an abundant well-being. Those who are alive will go to those who are dead, saying, "Rise up and be with us in this rest."

APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH CHAPTER 3

1 In the fourth year of that king, the son of lawlessness will appear, saying, "I am the Christ," although he is not. Don't believe him! When the Christ comes, He will come in the manner of a covey of doves with the crown of doves surrounding Him. He will walk upon the heaven's vaults with the sign of the cross leading Him.

2 The whole world will behold Him like the sun which shines from the eastern horizon to the western. This is how He will come, with all his angels surrounding Him. But the son of lawlessness will begin to stand again in the holy places.

He will say to the sun, "Fall," and it will fall.

He will say, "Shine," and it will do it.

He will say, "Darken," and it will do it.

He will say to the moon, "Become bloody," and it will do it.

He will go forth with them from the sky.

He will walk upon the sea and the rivers as upon dry land.

He will cause the lame to walk.

He will cause the deaf to hear.

He will cause the dumb to speak.

He will cause the blind to see.

The lepers he will cleanse.

The ill he will heal.

The demons he will cast out.

3 He will multiply his signs and his wonders in the presence of everyone. He will do the works which the Christ did, except for raising the dead alone. In this you will know that he is the son of lawlessness, because he is unable to give life. For behold I will tell you his signs so that you might know him. He is a...of a skinny-legged young lad, having a tuft of gray hair at the front of his bald head. His eyebrows will reach to his ears. There is a leprous bare spot on the front of his hands. He will transform himself in the presence of those who see him. He will become a young child. He will become old. He will transform himself in every sign. But the signs of his head will not be able to change. Therin you will know that he is the son of lawlessness.

APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH CHAPTER 4

1 The virgin, whose name is Tabitha, will hear that the shameless one has revealed himself in the holy places. And she will put on her garment of fine linen. And she will pursue him up to Judea, scolding him up to Jerusalem, saying, "O shameless one, O son of lawlessness, O you who have been hostile to all the saints. Then the shameless one will be angry at the virgin. He will pursue her up to the regions of the sunset. He will suck her blood in the evening. And he will cast her upon the temple, and she will become a healing for the people.

2 She will rise up at dawn. And she will live and scold him, saying, "O shameless one, you have no power against my soul or my body, because I live in the Lord always. And also my blood which you have cast upon the temple has become a healing for the people." Then when Elijah and Enoch hear that the shameless one has revealed himself in the holy place, they will come down and fight with him saying,

3 Are you indeed not ashamed? When you attach yourself to the saints, because you are always estranged. You have been hostile to those who belong to heaven. You have acted against those belonging to the earth. You have been hostile to the thrones. You have acted against the angels. You are always a stranger. You have fallen from heaven like the morning stars. You were changed, and your tribe became dark for you. But you are not ashamed, when you stand firmly against God you are a devil.

4 The shameless one will hear and he will be angry, and he will fight with them in the market place of the great city. And he will spend seven days fighting with them. And they will spend three and one half days in the market place dead, while all the people see them. But on the fourth day they will rise up and they will scold him saying, "O shameless one, O son of lawlessness. Are you indeed not ashamed of yourself since you are leading astray the people of God for whom you did not suffer? Do you not know that we live in the Lord?"

5 As the words were spoken, they prevailed over him, saying, "Furthermore, we will lay down before the flesh for the spirit, and we will kill you since you are unable to speak on that day because we are always strong in the Lord. But you are always hostile to God. The shameless one will hear, and he will be angry and fight them. And the whole city will surround them. On that day they will shout up to heaven as they shine while all the people and all the world see them.

6 The son of lawlessness will not prevail over them. He will be angry at the land, and he will seek to sin against the people. He will pursue all of the saints. They and the priests of the land will be brought back bound. He will kill them and destroy them...them. And their eyes will be removed with iron spikes. He will remove their skin from their heads. He will remove their nails one by one. He will command that vinegar and lime be put in their nose. Now those who are unable to bear up under the tortures of that king will take gold and flee over the fords to the desert places. They will lie down as one who sleeps.

7 The Lord will receive their spirits and their souls to Himself. Their flesh will petrify. No wild animals will eat them until the last day of the great judgement. And they will rise up and find a place of rest, but they will not be in the kingdom of the Christ as those who have endured because the Lord said, "I will grant to them that they sit on my right hand."

8 They will receive favor over others, and they will triumph over the son of lawlessness. And they will witness the dissolution of heaven and earth. They will receive the thrones of glory and the crowns.

9 The sixty righteous ones who are prepared for this hour will hear. And they will gird on the breastplate of Yahweh, and they will run to Jerusalem and fight with the shameless one, saying, "All powers which the prophets have done from the beginning you have done."

10 But you were unable to raise the dead because you have no power to give life. Therein we have known that you are the son of lawlessness." He will hear, and he will be angry and command to kindle altars. And the righteous ones will be bound. They will be lifted up and burned.

APOCALYPSE OF ELIJAH CHAPTER 5

1 And on that day the heart of many will harden and they will flee from him, saying, "This is not the Christ. The Christ does not kill the righteous. He does not pursue men so that he might seek them, but He persuades them with signs and wonders."

2 On that day the Christ will pity those who are His own. And He will send from heaven his sixty-four thousand angels, each of whom has six wings. The sound will move heaven and earth when they give praise and glorify.

3 Now those upon whose forehead the name of Christ is written and upon whose hand is the seal both the small and the great, will be taken up upon their wings and lifted up before his wrath.

4 Then Gabriel and Uriel will become a pillar of light leading them into the holy land. It will be granted to them to eat from the tree of life. They will wear white garments...and angels will watch over them. They will not thirst, nor will the son of lawlessness be able to prevail over them.

5 And on that day the earth will be disturbed, and the sun will darken, and peace will be removed from the earth. The birds will fall on the earth, dead. The earth will be dry. The waters of the sea will dry up.

6 The sinners will groan upon the earth saying, "What have you done to us, O son of lawlessness, saying I am the Christ, when you are the devil? You are unable to save yourself so that you might save us. You produced signs in our presence until you alienated us from the Christ who created us. Woe to us because we listened to you."

7 Lo now we will die in a famine. Where indeed is now the trace of a righteous one and we will worship him, or where indeed is the one who will teach us and we will appeal to him. Now indeed we will be wrathfully destroyed because we disobeyed Yahweh.

8 We went to the deep places of the sea, and we did not find water. We dug in the rivers and papyrus reeds, and we did not find water." Then on that day, the shameless one will speak, saying, "Woe to me because my time has passed by for me while I was saying that my time would not pass by for me."

9 My years became months and my days have passed away as dust passes away. Now therefore I will perish together with you. Now therefore run forth to the desert. Seize the robbers and kill them. Bring up the saints. For because of them, the earth yields fruit. For because of them the sun shines upon the earth. For because of them the dew will come upon the earth." The sinners will weep saying, "You made us hostile to Yahweh. If you are able, rise up and pursue them."

10 Then he will take his fiery wings and fly out after the saints. He will fight with them again. The angels will hear and come down. They will fight with him a battle of many swords.

11 It will come to pass on that day that the Lord will hear and command the heaven and the earth with great wrath. And they will send for fire. And the fire will prevail over the earth seventy-two cubits. It will consume the sinners and the devils like stubble. A true judgement will occur.

12 On that day, the mountains and the earth will utter speech. The byways will speak with one another, saying, "Have you heard today the voice of a man who walks who has not come to the judgement of the Son of YAHWEH."

13 The sins of each one will stand against him in the place where they were committed, whether those of the day or of the night. Those who belong to the righteous and ... will see the sinners and those who persecuted them and those who handed them over to death in their torments.

14 Then the sinners [in torment] will see the place of the righteous. And thus grace will occur. In those days, that which the righteous will ask for many times will be given to them.

15 On that day, Yahweh will judge the heaven and the earth. He will judge those who transgressed in heaven, and those who did so on earth. He will judge the shepherds of the people. He will ask about the flock of sheep, and they will be given to Him, without any deadly guile existing in them.

16 After these things, Elijah and Enoch will come down. They will lay down the flesh of the world, and they will receive their spiritual flesh. They will pursue the son of lawlessness and kill him since he is not able to speak.

16 On that day, he will dissolve in their presence like ice which was dissolved by a fire. He will perish like a serpent which has no breath in it. They will say to him, "Your time has passed by for you. Now therefore you wand those who believe you will perish."

17 They will be cast into the bottom of the abyss and it will be closed for them. On that day, the Christ, the King and all His saints will come forth from heaven.

He will burn the earth. He will spend a thousand years upon it.

18 Because the sinners prevailed over it, He will create a new heaven and a new earth. No deadly devil will exist in them. He will rule with His saints, ascending and descending, while they are always with the angels and they are with the Christ for a thousand years.

THE APOCALYPSE OF ADAM

The Nag Hammadi Library

Translated by George W. MacRae

Estimated range of dating: 150-400 AD

(The Apocalypse of Adam, discovered at Nag Hammadi in Upper Egypt in 1945, is a Gnostic [Sethian] tractate of Apocalyptic literature dating to the first-to-second centuries AD.

The Sethians were one of the main currents of Gnosticism during the 2nd and 3rd century AD, along with Valentinianism and Basilideanism. It originated in the 2nd-century AD as a fusion of two distinct Greek-Judaic philosophies and was influenced by Platonism, Stoicism and Christianity. This tractate is one of five contained within Codex 5 of the Nag Hammadi library.

Adam in his 700th year tells Seth how he learned a word of knowledge of the eternal God from Eve and that he and Eve were indeed more powerful than their supposed creator. [* Seth was the 3rd son of Adam and Eve; Set or Seth in Greek which derived from Egyptian: SwtKh(a), Sutekh or Swth, the Egyptian "god of foreigners" (referring to Canaanites in most cases), of deserts, storms, disorder, and violence in the ancient Egyptian religion.] But that knowledge was lost in the fall when the subcreator or maintainer - the demiurge - separated Adam and Eve. Adam relates how three mysterious strangers brought about Seth's begetting and so a preservation of this knowledge. Adam then prophesies at length attempts of the subcreator god to destroy mankind, including the prophecy of the great Deluge and of attempted destruction by fire but an Illuminator will come in the end. When the Illuminator comes, thirteen kingdoms proclaim thirteen different standard but conflicting birth legends about the Illuminator; only the "generation without a king," however, proclaims the truth.*

The title Illuminator [explainer, teacher, prophet] comes from the Roman verb illuminare, meaning "lighten", "light up", and here in particular "enlighten" in the sense of teach or explain religious and legal details. It is a title used in Egypt and Armenia to denote a high ranking teacher, bishop, or prophet.

The term "thirteen kingdoms" is unknown anywhere else but in Egypt, and there it stands for "dynasty". And when we look up for the 13th Dynasty, we can find that Canaanite migrants [who were coming in during the 12th Dynasty] in the northeast of Egypt began to take power in and around the city of Avaris. When we know that, it would not be a surprise if the "Illuminator" were Abraham or members of his tribe.

The division of Egyptian rule into distinct "Dynasties" and their numbering was invented by the Greek-Egyptian historian Manetho in the 3rd century BC to depict the order of succession before Alexander the Great. It was published in his now-lost work Aegyptiaca [search: Papyrus Baden 4-59, 5th century AD on Persian kings in Egypt 27th Dyn].

Roughly between 2000 and 1900 BC, Egypt experienced a stream of migrants coming in. They were from Canaan [and perhaps even under the leadership of "Abraham" [probably the synonym of a tribe from Sumer], who left Canaan due to famine. As the Apocalypse of Adam was most likely written by an Egyptian we can assume that he knew Manetho's work or at least the most famous entries, about the Hyksos, and about the dynasties of Egypt and their number sequence.

A shout outline of the events: As direct heirs to the kings of the 12th Dynasty, pharaohs of the 13th Dynasty reigned from Memphis over Middle and Upper Egypt, all the way to the second cataract to the south. The rulers of the 12th Dynasty [c. 1991-1802 BC] and the 13th Dynasty [c. 1803-1649 BC] might have been compelled to move their capital to Ijtawy, about 50 km south of the ancient capital Memphis. The creation of Ijtawy as capital might have been a strategic move and it most likely was more fort than a real capital. The site for Ijtawy may have been chosen for its proximity to the source of Canaanite incursions into Egypt, in order to help prevent further attacks. The power of the 13th Dynasty waned progressively over its 150 years of existence and it finally came to an end with the conquest of Memphis by the Hyksos rulers of the 15th Dynasty, c. 1650 BC.

The 14th Dynasty [c. 1725-1600 BC] was a "Canaanite Kingdom" that ruled over northern Egypt [the eastern part of the Nile Delta] from their capital Avaris. The 15th Dynasty [1650-1550 BC] also was a "Canaanite Kingdom" that ruled over northern Egypt from their capital Avaris. As the Phoenician Canaanites gained more power than ever before over Egypt the Egyptians began to call them "Hyksos" [rulers from a foreign land]. The 16th Dynasty [c. 1649-1582 BC] was the "surviving Egyptian Kingdom" ruled from Thebes in the south of Egypt at the same time as the Canaanite Kingdom in the north. The same applies to the 17th Dynasty [1580-1550 BC].

In the meantime, the Egyptian dynasties gathered strength. It is generally believed that Ahmose I defeated the Hyksos king by his 18th or 19th regnal year. This is suggested by "a graffiti in the quarry at Tura whereby 'oxen from Canaan' were used at the opening of the quarry in Ahmose's regnal year 22." Since the cattle could only have been brought after Ahmose's 3 to 6 years long siege of the South Canaanite town of Sharuhin which followed after the fall of Avaris, this means the reign of Khamudi must have terminated by Year 18 or 19 of Ahmose's 25-year reign at the very latest. What followed was the expulsion of the Phoenician Canaanite Hyksos from Egyptian soil, and this story might have entered the Bible as the "Exodus of Moses" from Egypt.)

The revelation which Adam taught his son Seth in the seven hundredth year, saying:

1 Listen to my words, my son Seth. When God had created me out of the earth, along with Eve, your mother, I went about with her in a glory which she had seen in the aeon from which we had come forth. She taught me a word of knowledge of the eternal God. And we resembled the great eternal angels, for we were higher than the god who had created us and the powers with him, whom we did not know.

2 Then God, the ruler of the aeons and the powers, divided us in wrath. Then we became two aeons. And the glory in our heart(s) left us, me and your mother Eve, along with the first knowledge that breathed within us. And it (glory) fled from us; it entered into [...] great [...], which had come forth, not from this aeon from which we had come forth, I and Eve your mother. But it (knowledge) entered into the seed of great aeons. For this reason I myself have called you by the name of that man who is the seed of the great generation or from whom (it comes). After those days, the eternal knowledge of the God of truth withdrew from me and your mother Eve. Since that time, we learned about dead things, like men. Then we recognised the God who had created us. For we were not strangers to his powers. And we served him in fear and slavery. And after these things, we became darkened in our heart(s). Now I slept in the thought of my heart.

3 And I saw three men before me whose likeness I was unable to recognise, since they were not the powers of the God who had created us. They surpassed [...] glory, and [...] men [...] saying to me, "Arise, Adam, from the sleep of death, and hear about the aeon and the seed of that man to whom life has come, who came from you and from Eve, your wife."

4 When I had heard these words from the great men who were standing before me, then we sighed, I and Eve, in our heart(s). And the Lord, the God who had created us, stood before us. He said to us, "Adam, why were you (both) sighing in your hearts? Do you not know that I am the God who created you? And I breathed into you a spirit of life as a living soul." Then darkness came upon our eyes.

5 Then the God who created us, created a son from himself and Eve, your mother. I knew sweet desire for your mother, for [...] in the thought of my [...] I knew a sweet desire for your mother. Then the vigor of our eternal knowledge was destroyed in us, and weakness pursued us. Therefore the days of our life became few. For I knew that I had come under the authority of death.

6 Now then, my son Seth, I will reveal to you the things which those men whom I saw before me at first revealed to me: after I have completed the times of this generation and the years of the generation have been accomplished, then [...] slave [...]. (p.68 blank)

7 For rain-showers of God the almighty will be poured forth, so that he might destroy all flesh [of God the almighty, so that he might destroy all flesh] from the earth on account of the things that it seeks after, along with those from the seed of the men to whom passed the life of the knowledge which came from me and Eve, your mother. For they were strangers to him. Afterwards, great angels will come on high clouds, who will bring those men into the place where the spirit of life dwells [...] glory [...] there, [...] come from heaven to earth.

Then the whole multitude of flesh will be left behind in the waters.

8 Then God will rest from his wrath. And he will cast his power upon the waters, and he will give power to his sons and their wives by means of the ark along with the animals, whichever he pleased, and the birds of heaven, which he called and released upon the earth. And God will say to Noah - whom the generations will call 'Deucalion' - "Behold, I have protected <you> in the ark, along with your wife and your sons and their wives and their animals and the birds of heaven, which you called and released upon the earth. Therefore I will give the earth to you - you and your sons. In kingly fashion you will rule over it - you and your sons. And no seed will come from you of the men who will not stand in my presence in another glory."

9 Then they will become as the cloud of the great light. Those men will come who have been cast forth from the knowledge of the great aeons and the angels. They will stand before Noah and the aeons. And God will say to Noah, "Why have you departed from what I told you? You have created another generation so that you might scorn my power." Then Noah will say, "I shall testify before your might that the generation of these men did not come from me nor from my sons. [...] knowledge."

10 And he will [...] those men and bring them into their proper land, and build them a holy dwelling place. And they will be called by that name and dwell there six hundred years in a knowledge of imperishability. And the angels of the great Light will dwell with them. No foul deed will dwell in their heart(s), but only the knowledge of God.

11 Then Noah will divide the whole earth among his sons, Ham and Japheth and Shem. He will say to them, "My sons, listen to my words. Behold, I have divided the earth among you. But serve him in fear and slavery all the days of your life. Let not your seed depart from the face of God the Almighty. [...] I and your [...] son of Noah, "My seed will be pleasing before you and before your power. Seal it by your strong hand, with fear and commandment, so that the whole seed which came forth from me may not be inclined away from you and God the Almighty, but it will serve in humility and fear of its knowledge."

12 Then others from the seed of Ham and Japheth will come, four hundred thousand men, and enter into another land and sojourn with those men who came forth from the great eternal knowledge. For the shadow of their power will protect those who have sojourned with them from every evil thing and every unclean desire. Then the seed of Ham and Japheth will form twelve kingdoms, and their seed also will enter into the kingdom of another people.

13 Then [...] will take counsel [...] who are dead, of the great aeons of imperishability. And they will go to Sakla, their God. They will go in to the powers, accusing the great men who are in their glory.

14 They will say to Sakla, "What is the power of these men who stood in your presence, who were taken from the seed of Ham and Japheth, who will number four hundred <thousand> men? They have been received into another aeon from which they had come forth, and they have overturned all the glory of your power and the dominion of your hand. For the seed of Noah through his sons has done all your will, and (so have) all the powers in the aeons over which your might rules, while both those men and the ones who are sojourners in their glory have not done your will. But they have turned (aside) your whole throng."

15 Then the god of the aeons will give them (some) of those who serve him [...]. They will come upon that land where the great men will be who have not been defiled, nor will be defiled, by any desire. For their soul did not come from a defiled hand, but it came from a great commandment of an eternal angel. Then fire and sulphur and asphalt will be cast upon those men, and fire and (blinding) mist will come over those aeons, and the eyes of the powers of the illuminators will be darkened, and the aeons will not see them in those days. And great clouds of light will descend, and other clouds of light will come down upon them from the great aeons.

16 Abrasax and Sablo and Gamaliel will descend and bring those men out of the fire and the wrath, and take them above the aeons and the rulers of the powers, and take them away [...] of life [...] and take them away [...] aeons [...] dwelling place of the great [...] there, with the holy angels and the aeons. The men will be like those angels, for they are not strangers to them. But they work in the imperishable seed.

17 Once again, for the third time, the illuminator of knowledge will pass by in great glory, in order to leave (something) of the seed of Noah and the sons of Ham and Japheth - to leave for himself fruit-bearing trees. And he will redeem their souls from the day of death. For the whole creation that came from the dead earth will be under the authority of death. But those who reflect upon the knowledge of the eternal God in their heart(s) will not perish. For they have not received spirit from this kingdom alone, but they have received (it) from a [...] eternal angel. [...] illuminator [...] will come upon [...] that is dead [...] of Seth. And he will perform signs and wonders in order to scorn the powers and their ruler.

18 Then the god of the powers will be disturbed, saying, "What is the power of this man who is higher than we?" Then he will arouse a great wrath against that man. And the glory will withdraw and dwell in holy houses which it has chosen for itself. And the powers will not see it with their eyes, nor will they see the illuminator either. Then they will punish the flesh of the man upon whom the holy spirit came.

19 Then the angels and all the generations of the powers will use the name in error, asking, "Where did it (the error) come from?" or "Where did the words of deception, which all the powers have failed to discover, come from?"

20 Now the first kingdom says of him that he came from [...]. A spirit [...] to heaven. He was nourished in the heavens. He received the glory of that one and the power. He came to the bosom of his mother. And thus he came to the water.

21 And the second kingdom says about him that he came from a great prophet. And a bird came, took the child who was born, and brought him onto a high mountain. And he was nourished by the bird of heaven. An angel came forth there. He said to him "Arise! God has given glory to you." He received glory and strength. And thus he came to the water.

22 The third kingdom says of him that he came from a virgin womb. He was cast out of his city, he and his mother. He was brought to a desert place. He was nourished there. He came and received glory and strength. And thus he came to the water.

23 The fourth kingdom says of him that he came from a virgin. [...] Solomon sought her, he and Phersalo and Sael and his armies, which had been sent out. Solomon himself sent his army of demons to seek out the virgin. And they did not find the one whom they sought, but the virgin who was given them. It was she whom they fetched. Solomon took her. The virgin became pregnant and gave birth to the child there. She nourished him on a border of the desert. When he had been nourished, he received glory and power from the seed from which he was begotten. And thus he came to the water.

24 And the fifth kingdom says of him that he came from a drop from heaven. He was thrown into the sea. The abyss received him, gave birth to him, and brought him to heaven. He received glory and power. And thus he came to the water.

25 And the sixth kingdom says that [...] down to the aeon which is below, in order to gather flowers. She became pregnant from the desire of the flowers. She gave birth to him in that place. The angels of the flower garden nourished him. He received glory there, and power. And thus he came to the water.

26 And the seventh kingdom says of him that he is a drop. It came from heaven to earth. Dragons brought him down to caves. He became a child. A spirit came upon him and brought him on high to the place where the drop had come forth. He received glory and power there. And thus he came to the water.

27 And the eighth kingdom says of him that a cloud came upon the earth and enveloped a rock. He came from it. The angels who were above the cloud nourished him. He received glory and power there. And thus he came to the water.

28 And the ninth kingdom says of him that from the nine Muses one separated away. She came to a high mountain and spent (some) time seated there, so that she desired herself alone in order to become androgynous. She fulfilled her desire and became pregnant from her desire. He was born. The angels who were over the desire nourished him. And he received glory there, and power. And thus he came to the water.

29 The tenth kingdom says of him that his god loved a cloud of desire. He begot him in his hand and cast upon the cloud above him (some) of the drop, and he was born. He received glory and power there. And thus he came to the water.

30 And the eleventh kingdom says that the father desired his own daughter. She herself became pregnant from her father. She cast [...] tomb out in the desert. The angel nourished him there. And thus he came to the water.

31 The twelfth kingdom says of him that he came from two illuminators. He was nourished there. He received glory and power. And thus he came to the water.

32 And the thirteenth kingdom says of him that every birth of their ruler is a word. And this word received a mandate there. He received glory and power. And thus he came to the water, in order that the desire of those powers might be satisfied.

33 But the generation without a king over it says that God chose him from all the aeons. He caused a knowledge of the undefiled one of truth to come to be in him. He said, "Out of a foreign air, from a great aeon, the great illuminator came forth. And he made the generation of those men whom he had chosen for himself shine, so that they could shine upon the whole aeon"

34 Then the seed, those who will receive his name upon the water and (that) of them all, will fight against the power. And a cloud of darkness will come upon them.

35 Then the peoples will cry out with a great voice, saying, "Blessed is the soul of those men because they have known God with a knowledge of the truth! They shall live forever, because they have not been corrupted by their desire, along with the angels, nor have they accomplished the works of the powers, but they have stood in his presence in a knowledge of God like light that has come forth from fire and blood."

36 "But we have done every deed of the powers senselessly. We have boasted in the transgression of all our works. We have cried against the God of truth because all his works [...] is eternal. These are against our spirits. For now we have known that our souls will die the death."

37 Then a voice came to them, saying "Micheu and Michar and Mnesinous, who are over the holy baptism and the living water, why were you crying out against the living God with lawless voices and tongues without law over them, and souls full of blood and foul deeds? You are full of works that are not of the truth, but your ways are full of joy and rejoicing. Having defiled the water of life, you have drawn it within the will of the powers to whom you have been given to serve them."

38 "And your thought is not like that of those men whom you persecute [...] desire [...]. Their fruit does not wither. But they will be known up to the great aeons, because the words they have kept, of the God of the aeons, were not committed to the book, nor were they written. But angelic (beings) will bring them, whom all the generations of men will not know. For they will be on a high mountain, upon a rock of truth. Therefore they will be named "The Words of Imperishability and Truth," for those who know the eternal God in wisdom of knowledge and teaching of angels forever, for he knows all things."

39 These are the revelations which Adam made known to Seth, his son, and his son taught his seed about them. This is the hidden knowledge of Adam, which he gave to Seth, which is the holy baptism of those who know the eternal knowledge through those born of the word and the imperishable illuminators, who came from the holy seed: Yesseus, Mazareus, Yessedekus, the Living Water.

THE APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM
or The Book of the Revelation of Abraham
Translation: G. H. Box, 1918
Estimated range of dating: 70-150 AD.

(The Apocalypse of Abraham is a pseudepigraphic work (a text whose claimed authorship is uncertain) based on the Old Testament. Probably composed between about 70-150 AD from earlier writings and tradition possibly kept from the time of Abraham, it is of Jewish origin and is usually considered to be part of the Apocalyptic literature. It has survived only in Old Slavonic recensions and it is not regarded as authoritative scripture by Jews or any Christians, though it likely held some prominence up into the first century A.D.)

The text of the Apocalypse of Abraham has been preserved only in Slavonic; it occurs in the Tolkovaja Paleja (or Explanatory Paleja, a Medieval compendium of various Old Testament texts and comments). The original language of this text was almost surely Hebrew: it was translated into Slavonic either directly from Hebrew or from a lost intermediate Greek translation. The first English translation was produced by E. H. Anderson and R. T. Haag, and appeared in 1898 in the Latter-day Saint magazine Improvement Era, under the title The Book of the Revelation of Abraham. Another notable English translation was produced by G. H. Box and J. I. Landsman in 1918. Speculations of the time this ancient work was written vary greatly. Currently, only Old Slavonic language texts of the original have been discovered. So how far back in time the earlier Hebrew texts went is only conjectured. The relative age of these works can be determined by comparing the legend of Abraham as contained in the Apocalypse with those in the Talmud and in the Book of Jubilees.)

APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM, PART I
THE LEGEND (Chapters 1-8)

The Book of the Revelation of Abraham, the son of Terah, the son of Nahor, the son of Serug, the son of Roog (Reu), the son of Arphaxad, the son of Shem, the son of Noah, the son of Lamech, the son of Methuselah, the son of Enoch, the son of Jared (Arad).

Abraham's Conversion From Idolatry (Chapters 1—8).

1 On the day when I planed the gods of my father Terah and the gods of Nahor his brother, when I was searching as to who the Mighty God in truth is—I, Abraham, at the time when it fell to my lot, when I fulfilled the services (the sacrifices) of my father Terah to his gods of wood and stone, gold and silver, brass and iron; having entered into their temple for service, I found the god whose name was Merumath (which was) hewn out of stone, fallen forward at the feet of the iron god Nahon. And it came to pass, when I saw it, my heart was perplexed, and I considered in my mind that I should not be able to bring him back to his place, I, Abraham, alone, because he was heavy, being of a large stone, and I went forth and made it known to my father. And he entered with me, and when both of us moved him (the god) forward, so that we might bring him back to his place, his head fell from him while I was still holding him by the head. And it came to pass, when my father saw that the head of Merumath had fallen from him, he said to me: "Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I." And he said to me: "Bring me an axe, of the small ones, from the house." And I brought it to him. And he hewed aright another Merumath out of another stone, without head, and the head which had been thrown down from Merumath he placed upon it, and the rest of Merumath he shattered.

2 And he made five other gods, and gave them to me [and] commanded me to sell them outside in the street of the town. And I saddled my father's ass, and placed them upon it, and went towards the inn to sell them. And lo! merchants from Fandana in Syria were travelling with camels going to Egypt, to trade. And I spoke with them. And one of their camels uttered a groan, and the ass took fright and sprang away and upset the gods; and three of them were smashed, and two were preserved. And it came to pass, when the Syrians saw that I had gods, they said to me: "Why didst thou not tell us [that thou hadst gods? Then we would have bought t them] before the ass heard the sound of the camel, and they would not have been lost. Give us, at any rate, the gods that remain, and we will give thee the proper price for the broken gods, also for the gods that have been preserved." For I was concerned in my heart as to how I could bring to my father the purchase-price; and the three broken ones I cast into the water of the river Gur, which was at that place, and they sank into the depths, and there was nothing more of them.

3 When I was still going on the way, my heart was perplexed within me, and my mind was distracted. And I said in my heart: ["What evil deed is this that my father is doing? Is not he, rather, the god of his gods, since they come in to existence through his chisels and lathes, and his wisdom, and is it not rather fitting that they should worship my father, since they are his work? What is this delusion of my father in his works?] Behold, Merumath fell and could not rise in his own temple, nor could I, by myself, move him until my father came, and the two of us moved him; and as we were thus too weak, his head fell from him, and he (i.e. my father) set it upon another stone of another god, which he had made without head. And the other five gods were broken in pieces down from the ass, which were able-neither to help themselves, nor to hurt the ass, because it had broken them to pieces; nor did their broken fragments come up out of the river." And I said in my heart: "If this be so, how can Merumath, my father's god, having the head of another stone, and himself being made of another stone, rescue a man, or hear a man's prayer and reward him?"

4 And while I cogitated thus, I reached my father's house; and having watered the ass, and set out hay for it, I brought the silver and gave it into the hand of my father Terah. When he saw it he was glad, [and] he said: "Blessed art thou, Abraham, of my gods, because thou hast brought the price of the gods, so that my work was not in vain." And I answered and said to him: "Hear, O my father, Terah! Blessed are the gods of thee, for thou art their god, since thou hast made them; for their blessing is ruination, and their power is vain; they who did not help themselves, how shall they, then, help thee or bless me? I have been kind to thee in this affair, because by (using) my intelligence, I have brought thee the money for the broken gods." And when he heard my word, he became furiously angry with me, because I had spoken hard words against his gods.

5 I, however, having thought over my father's anger, went out; [and after I had gone out] my father cried, saying: "Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I." And he said: "Take and collect the splinters of the wood out of which I made gods of pine-wood before thou camest; and make ready for me the food of the mid-day meal." And it came to pass, when I collected the splinters of wood, I found under them a little god which had been lying among the brush-wood on my left, and on his forehead was written: GOD BARISAT. And I did not inform my father that I had found the wooden god Barisat under the chips.

And it came to pass, when I had laid the splinters in the fire, in order that I might make ready food for my father—on going out to ask a question regarding the food, I placed Barisat before the kindled fire, saying threateningly to him: "Pay careful attention, Barisat, [that] the fire do not die down until I come; if, however, it dieth down, blow on it that it may burn up again." And I went out and accomplished my purpose. And on returning I found Barisat fallen backwards, and his feet surrounded by fire and horribly burnt. I burst into a fit of laughter, and I said to myself: "Truly, O Barisat, thou canst kindle the fire and cook food!" And it came to pass, while I spake (thus) in my laughter he (i.e. Barisat) was gradually burnt up by the fire and reduced to ashes. And I brought the food to my father, and he did eat. And I gave him wine and milk, and he was gladdened and blessed his god

Merumath. And I said to him: "O father Terah, bless not thy god Merumath, and praise him not, but rather praise thy god Barisat because, loving thee more, he hath cast himself into the fire to cook thy food!" And he said to me: "And where is he now?" [And I said:] "He is burnt to ashes in the violence of the fire and is reduced to dust." And he said: "Great is the power of Barisat! I (will) make another to-day, and tomorrow he will prepare my food."

6 When I, Abraham, however, heard such words from my father, I laughed in my mind and sighed in the grief and in the anger of my soul, and said: "How then can that which is made by him—manufactured statues—be a helper of my father? Or shall the body then be subject to its soul, and the soul to the spirit, and the spirit to folly and ignorance!" And I said: "It is fitting once to endure evil. So I will direct my mind to what is pure and lay my thoughts open before him." [And] I answered and said: "O father Terah, whichever of these thou praisest as a god, thou art foolish in thy mind. Behold the gods of thy brother Ora, which stand in the holy temple, are more worthy of honour than [these of] thine. For behold Zucheus, the god of thy brother Oron, is more worthy of honour than thy god Merumath, because he is made of gold which is highly valued by people, and when he groweth old in years he will be remodelled; but if your god Merumath is changed or broken, he will not be renewed, because he is a stone; the which is also the case with the god Joavon [who standeth with Zucheus over the other gods—how much more worthy of honour is he than the god Barisat, who is made of wood, while he is forged of silver! How is he made, by adaptation of man, valuable to outward appearance! But thy god Barisat, while he was still, before he had been prepared, rooted up (?) upon the earth and was great and wonderful with the glory of branches and blossom, thou didst hew out with the axe, and by means of thy art he hath been made into a god. And lo! his fatness is already withered and perished, he is fallen from the height to the ground, he hath come from great estate to littleness, and the appearance of his countenance hath vanished, and he] Barisat himself is burnt up by fire and reduced to ashes and is no more; and thou sayest: "To-day I will make another which tomorrow shall make ready my food!" "He hath perished to utter destruction!"

7 "Behold, the fire is more worthy of honour than all things formed because even that which is not subjected is subjected unto it, and things easily perishable are mocked by its flames. But even more worthy of honour is the water, because it conquereth the fire and satisfieth the earth. But even it I do not call God, because it is subjected to the earth under which the water inclineth. But I call the earth much more worthy of honour, because it overpowereth the nature (and the fulness) of the water. Even it (viz. the earth), however, I do not call god, [because] it, too, is dried up by the sun, [and] is apportioned to man to be tilled. [I call the sun more worthy of honour than the earth.] because it with its rays illumineth the whole world and the different atmospheres. [But] even it I do not call god, because at night and by clouds its course is obscured. Nor, again, do I call the moon or the stars god, because they also in their season obscure [their] light at night. [But] hear [this], Terah my father; for I will make known to thee the God who hath made everything, not these we consider as gods. Who then is He? Or what is He? Who hath crimsoned the heavens, and made the sun golden, and the moon lustrous, and with it the stars; And hath made the earth dry in the midst of many waters, And set thee in . . . [and tested me in the confusion of my thoughts] "Yet may God reveal Himself to us through Himself!"

8 And it came to pass while I spake thus to my father Terah in the court of my house, there cometh down the voice of a Mighty One from heaven in a fiery cloud-burst, saying and crying: "Abraham, Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I." And He said: "Thou art seeking in the understanding of thine heart the God of Gods and the Creator; I am He: Go out from thy father Terah, and get thee out from the house, that thou also be not slain in the sins of thy father's house." And I went out. And it came to pass when I went out, that before I succeeded in getting out in front of the door of the court, there came a sound of a [great] thunder and burnt him and his house, and everything whatsoever in his house, down to the ground, forty cubits.

APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM, PART 2
THE APOCALYPSE (Chapters 9-32)

Abraham Receives A Divine Command To Offer Sacrifice After Forty Days As A Preparation For A Divine Revelation (Chapter 9-15).

9 Then a voice came to me speaking twice: "Abraham, Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I!" And He said: "Behold, it is I; fear not, for I am before the worlds, and a mighty God who hath created the light of the world. I am a shield over thee, and I am thy helper. Go, take me a young heifer of three years old, and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old, and a turtledove and a pigeon, and bring me a pure sacrifice. And in this sacrifice I will lay before thee the ages (to come), and make known to thee what is reserved, and thou shalt see great things which thou hast not seen (hitherto); because thou hast loved to search me out, and I have named thee my Friend. But abstain from every form of food that proceedeth out of the fire, and from the drinking of wine, and from anointing (thyself) with oil, forty days," and then set forth for me the sacrifice which I have commanded thee, in the place which I will shew thee, on a high mountain, and there I will shew thee the ages which have been created and established, made and renewed, by my Word, and I will make known to thee what shall come to pass in them on those who have done evil and (practised) righteousness in the generation of men.

Abraham, Under The Direction Of The Angel Jael, Proceeds To Mount Horeb, A Journey Of Forty Days, To Offer The Sacrifice (Chapters 10-12).

10 And it came to pass, when I heard the voice of Him who spake such words to me, (and) I looked hither and thither and lo! there was no breath of a man, and my spirit was affrighted, and my soul fled from me, and I became like a stone, and fell down upon the earth, for I had no more strength to stand on the earth. And while I was still lying with my face upon the earth, I heard the voice of the Holy One speaking: "Go, Jael, and by means of my ineffable Name raise me yonder man, and strengthen him (so that he recover) from his trembling." And the angel came, whom He had sent to me, in the likeness of a man, and grasped me by my right hand, and set me up upon my feet, and said to me: "Stand up, [Abraham.] Friend of God who loveth thee; let not the trembling of man seize thee! For, lo! I have been sent to thee to strengthen thee and bless thee in the name of God—who loveth thee—the Creator of the celestial and terrestrial. Be fearless and hasten to Him. I am called Jael by Him who moveth that which existeth with me on the seventh expanse upon the firmament, a power in virtue of the ineffable Name that is dwelling in me. I am the one who hath been given to restrain, according to His commandment, the threatening attack of the living creatures of the Cherubim against one another, and teach those who carry Him the song of the seventh hour of the night of man. I am ordained to restrain the Leviathan, for unto me are subject the attack and menace of every single reptile. [I am he who hath been commissioned to loosen Hades, to destroy him who stareth at the dead.] I am the one who was commissioned to set on fire thy father's house together with him, because he displayed reverence for dead (idols). I have been sent to bless thee now, and the land which the Eternal One, whom thou hast invoked, hath prepared for thee, and for thy sake have I wended my way upon the earth. Stand up, Abraham! Go without fear; be right glad and rejoice; and I am with thee! For eternal honour hath been prepared for thee by the Eternal One. Go, fulfil the sacrifices commanded. For lo! I have been appointed to be with thee and with the generation prepared (to spring) from thee; and with me Michael blesseth thee for ever. Be of good cheer, go!"

11 And I rose up and saw him who had grasped me by my right hand and set me up upon my feet; and the appearance of his body was like sapphire, and the look of his countenance like chrysolite, and the hair of his head like snow, and the turban upon his head like the appearance of the rainbow, and the clothing of his garments like purple; and a golden sceptre was in his right hand. And he said to me: "Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I, thy servant." And he said: "Let not my look affright thee, nor my speech, that thy soul be not perturbed. Come with me and I will go with thee, until the sacrifice, visible, but after the sacrifice, invisible for ever. Be of good cheer, and come!"

12 And we went, the two of us together, forty days and nights, and I ate no bread, and drank no water, because my food was to see the angel who was with me, and his speech—that was my drink. And we came to the Mount of God, the glorious Horeb. And I said to the angel: "Singer of the Eternal One! Lo! I have no sacrifice with me, nor am I aware of a place of an altar on the mountain: how can I bring a sacrifice?" And he said to me: "Look round!" And I looked round, and lo! there were following us all the prescribed sacrificial (animals)—the young heifer, and the she-goat, and the ram, and the turtle-dove, and the pigeon. And the angel said to me: "Abraham!" I said: "Here am I." And he said to me: "All these slaughter, and divide the animals into halves, one against the other, but the birds do not sever; and ("but") give to the men, whom I will shew thee, standing by thee, for these are the altar upon the Mountain, to offer a sacrifice to the Eternal; but the turtledove and the pigeon give to me, for I will ascend upon the wings of the bird, in order to shew thee in heaven, and on the earth, and in the sea, and in the abyss, and in the under-world, and in the Garden of Eden, and in its rivers and in the fulness of the whole world and its circle—thou shalt gaze in (them) all."

Abraham Accomplishes The Sacrifice, Under The Guidance Of The Angel, And Refuses To Be Diverted From His Purpose By Azazel (Chapters 13-14).

13 And I did everything according to the commandment of the angel, and gave the angels, who had come to us, the divided animals, but the angel took the birds. And I waited for the evening sacrifice. And there flew an unclean bird down upon the carcasses, and I drove it away. And the unclean bird spake to me, and said: "What doest thou, Abraham, upon the holy Heights, where no man eateth or drinketh, neither is there upon them (any) food of man, but these consume everything with fire, and (will) burn thee up. Forsake the man, who is with thee, and flee; for if thou ascendest to the Heights they will make an end of thee. And it came to pass, when I saw the bird speak, I said to the angel: "What is this, my lord?" And he said: "This is ungodliness, this is Azazel." And he said to it: "Disgrace upon thee, Azazel!"

For Abraham's lot is in heaven, but thine upon the earth. Because thou hast chosen and loved this for the dwelling- (place) of thine uncleanness, therefore the eternal mighty Lord made thee a dweller upon the earth and through thee every evil spirit of lies, and through thee wrath and trials for the generations of ungodly men; for God, the Eternal, Mighty One, hath not permitted that the bodies of the righteous should be in thy hand, in order that thereby the life of the righteous and the destruction of the unclean may be assured. Hear, friend, begone with shame from me. For it hath not been given to thee to play the tempter in regard to all the righteous. Depart from this man! Thou canst not lead him astray, because he is an enemy to thee, and of those who follow thee and love what thou wilt. For, behold, the vesture which in heaven was formerly thine hath been set aside for him, and the mortality which was his hath been transferred to thee."

15 The angel said to me: ["Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I, thy servant." And he said: "Know from henceforth that the Eternal One hath chosen thee, (He) whom thou lovest; be of good courage and use this authority, so far as I bid thee, against him who slandereth truth; should I not be able to put him to shame who hath scattered over the earth the secrets of heaven and hath rebelled against the Mighty One?"] Say to him: "Be thou the burning coal of the Furnace of the earth; go, Azazel, into the inaccessible parts of the earth; [for thy heritage is (to be) over those existing with thee being born with the stars and clouds, with the men whose portion thou art, and (who) through thy being exist; and thine enmity is justification. On this account by thy perdition disappear from me." And I uttered the words which the angel had taught me. And he said: "Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I, thy servant."]

And the angel said to me: "Answer him not; for God hath given him power (lit. will) over those who do answer him." [And the angel spake to me a second time and said: "Now rather, however much he speak to thee, answer him not, that his will may have no free course in thee, because the Eternal and Mighty One hath given him weight and will; answer him not." I did what was commanded me by the angel;] and however much he spake to me, I answered him nothing whatsoever.

Abraham And The Angel Ascend On The Wings Of The Birds To Heaven (Chapters 15-16)

15 And it came to pass when the sun went down, and lo! a smoke as of a furnace. And the angels who had the portions of the sacrifice ascended from the top of the smoking furnace. And the Angel took me with the right hand and set me on the right wing of the pigeon, and set himself on the left wing of the turtle dove, which (birds) had neither been slaughtered nor divided. And he bore me to the borders of the flaming fire [and we ascended as with many winds to the heaven which was fixed upon the surface. And I saw on the air] on the height, to which we ascended a strong light, which it was impossible to describe, and lo! in this light a fiercely burning fire for people, many people of male appearance, all (constantly) changing in aspect and form, running and being transformed, and worshipping and crying with a sound of words which I knew not.

16 And I said to the Angel: "Why hast thou brought me up here now, because I cannot now see, for I am already grown weak, and my spirit departeth from me?" And he said to me: "Remain by me; fear not! And He whom thou seest come straight towards us with great voice of holiness—that is the Eternal One who Loveth thee; but Himself thou canst not see. But let not thy spirit grow faint [on account of the loud crying], for I am with thee, strengthening thee."

Abraham, Taught By The Angel, Utters The Celestial Song And Prays For Enlightenment (Chapter 17)

17 And while he yet spake (and) lo! fire came against us round about, and a voice was in the fire like a voice of many waters, like the sound of the sea in its uproar. And the angel bent his head with me and worshipped. And I desired to fall down upon the earth, and the high place, on which we stood, [at one moment rose upright,] but at another rolled downwards.

And he said: "Only worship, Abraham, and utter the song which I have taught thee;" because there was no earth to fall upon. And I worshipped only, and uttered the song which he had taught me. And he said: "Recite without ceasing." And I recited, and he also himself with me recited the song:

Eternal, mighty, Holy, El,
God only—Supreme!
Thou who art self-originated, incorruptible, spotless,
Uncreate, immaculate, immortal,
Self-complete, self-illuminating;
Without father, without mother, unbegotten,
Exalted, fiery One!
Lover of men, benevolent, bountiful, jealous over me and very compassionate;
Eli, that is, My God—
Eternal, mighty holy Sabaoth, very glorious El, El, El, El, Jael!

Thou art He whom my soul hath loved!
Eternal Protector, shining like fire,
Whose voice is like the thunder,
Whose look is like the lightning, all-seeing,
Who receiveth the prayers of such as honour Thee!
[And turneth away from the requests of such as embarrass with the embarrassment of their provocations,
Who dissolve the confusion of the world which arise from the ungodly and righteous in the corruptible age, renewing the age of the righteous!]

Thou, O Light, shinest before the light of the morning upon Thy creatures, [so that it becometh day upon the earth.]

And in Thy heavenly dwelling places there is no need of any other light than (that) of the unspeakable splendour from the lights of Thy countenance.

Accept my prayer [and be well-pleased with it], likewise also the sacrifice which Thou hast prepared Thee through me who sought Thee!
Accept me favourably, and shew me, and teach me,
And make known to Thy servant as thou hast promised me!

Abraham's Vision Of The Divine Throne (Chapter 18)

18 And while I still recited the song, the mouth of the fire which was on the surface rose up on high. And I heard a voice like the roaring of the sea; nor did it cease on account of the rich abundance of the fire. And as the fire raised itself up, ascending into the height, I saw under the fire a throne of fire, and round about it all-seeing ones, reciting the song, and under the throne four fiery living creatures singing, and their appearance was one, each one of them with four faces. And such was the appearance of their countenances, of a lion, of a man, of an ox, of an eagle: four heads [were upon their bodies] [so that the four creatures had sixteen faces;] and each had six wings; from their shoulders, [and their sides] and their loins. And with the (two) wings from their shoulders they covered their faces, and with the (two) wings which (sprang) from their loins they covered their feet, while the (two) middle wings they spread out for flying straightforward. And when they had ended the singing, they looked at one another and threatened one another. And it came to pass when the angel who was with me saw that they were threatening each other, he left me and went running to them and turned the countenance of each living creature from the countenance immediately confronting him, in order that they might not see their countenances threatening each other. And he taught them the song of peace which hath its origin [in the Eternal One].

And as I stood alone and looked, I saw behind the living creatures a chariot with fiery wheels, each wheel full of eyes round about; and over the wheels was a throne; which I saw, and this was covered with fire, and fire encircled it round about, and lo! an indescribable fire environed a fiery host. And I heard its holy voice like the voice of a man.

God Discloses To Abraham The Powers Of Heaven (Chapter 19)

19 And a voice came to me out of the midst of the fire, saying: "Abraham, Abraham!" I said: "Here am I!" And He said: "Consider the expanses which are under the firmament on which thou art (now) placed, and see how on no single expanse is there any other but He whom thou hast sought, or who hath loved thee." And while He was yet speaking (and) lo! the expanses opened, and beneath me the heavens. And I saw upon the seventh firmament upon which I stood a fire widely extended, and light, and dew, and a multitude of angels, and a power of invisible glory over the living creatures which I saw; but no other being did I see there.

And I looked from the mountain in which I stood [downwards] to the sixth firmament, and saw there a multitude of angels, of (pure) spirit, without bodies, who carried out the commands of the fiery angels who were upon the eighth firmament, as I was standing suspended over them. And behold, upon this firmament there were no other powers of (any) other form, but only angels of (pure) spirit, like the power which I saw on the seventh firmament. And He commanded that the sixth firmament should be taken away. And I saw there, on the fifth firmament, the powers of the stars which carry out the commands laid upon them, and the elements of the earth obeyed them.

The Promise Of A Seed (Chapter 20)

20 And the Eternal Mighty One said to me: "Abraham, Abraham!" And I said: "Here am I." [And He said:] "Consider from above the stars which are beneath thee, and number, them [for me], and make known [to me] their number." And I said: "When can I? For I am but a man [of dust and ashes]. And he said to me: "As the number of the stars and their power, (so will) I make thy seed a nation and a people, set apart for me in my heritage with Azazel."

And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Let thy servant speak before Thee, and let not Thine anger kindle against Thy chosen one! Lo, before Thou leddest me up Azazel inveighed against me. How, then, while he is not now before Thee, hast Thou constituted Thyself with him?"

A Vision Of Sin And Paradise: The Mirror Of The World (Chapter 21.)

21 And He said to me: "Look, now, beneath thy feet at the firmaments and understand the creation foreshadowed in this expanse, the creatures existing on it, and the age prepared according to it." And I saw beneath [the surfaces of the feet, and I saw beneath] the sixth heaven and what was therein, and then the earth and its fruits, and what moved upon it and its animate beings; and the power of its men, and the ungodliness of their souls, and their righteous deeds [and the beginnings of their works], and the lower regions and the perdition therein, the Abyss and its torments. I saw there the sea and its islands, and its monsters and its fishes, and Leviathan and his dominion, and his camping-ground, and his caves, and the world which lay upon him, and his movements, and the destructions of the world on his account. I saw there streams and the rising of their waters, and their windings. And I saw there the Garden of Eden and its fruits, the source of the stream issuing from it, and its trees and their bloom, and those who behaved righteously. And I saw therein their foods and blessedness. And I saw there a great multitude—men and women and children [half of them on the right side of the picture] and half of them on the left side of the picture.

The Fall Of Man And Its Sequel (Chapters 22-25)

22 And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! What is this picture of the creatures?" And He said to me: "This is my will with regard to those who exist in the (divine) world-counsel, and it seemed well-pleasing before my sight, and then afterwards I gave commandment to them through my Word. And it came to pass whatever I had determined to be, was already planned beforehand in this (picture), and it stood before me ere it was created, as thou hast seen."

And I said: "O Lord, mighty and eternal! Who are the people in this picture on this side and on that?" And He said to me: "These which are on the left side are the multitude of the peoples which have formerly been in existence and which are after thee destined, some for judgement and restoration, and others for vengeance and destruction at the end of the world. But these which are on the right side of the picture—they are the people set apart for me of the peoples with Azazel. These are they whom I have ordained to be born of thee and to be called My People.

23 "Now look again in the picture, who it is who seduced Eve and what is the fruit of the tree, [and] thou wilt know what there shall be, and how it shall be to thy seed among the people at the end of the days of the age, and so far as thou canst not understand I will make known to thee, for thou art well-pleasing in my sight, and I will tell thee what is kept in my heart."

And I looked into the picture, and mine eyes ran to the side of the Garden of Eden. And I saw there a man very great in height and fearful in breadth, incomparable in aspect, embracing a woman, who likewise approximated to the aspect and shape of the man. And they were standing under a tree of (the Garden of) Eden, and the fruit of this tree was like the appearance of a bunch of grapes of the vine, and behind the tree was standing as it were a serpent in form, having hands and feet like a man's, and wings on its shoulders, six on the right side and six on the left, and they were holding the grapes of the tree in their hands, and both were eating it whom I had seen embracing.

And I said: "Who are these mutually embracing, or who is this who is between them, or what is the fruit which they are eating, O Mighty Eternal One?"

And He said: "This is the human world, this is Adam, and this is their desire upon the earth, this is Eve; but he who is between them representeth ungodliness, their beginning (on the way) to perdition, even Azazel."

And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Why hast Thou given to such power to destroy the generation of men in their works upon the earth?"

And He said to me: "They who will (to do) evil—and how much I hated (it) in those who do it!—over them I gave him power, and to be beloved of them."

And I answered and said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Wherefore hast Thou willed to effect that evil should be desired in the hearts of men, since Thou indeed art angered over that which was willed by Thee, at him who is doing what is unprofitable in thy counsel?"

24 And He said to me: "Being angered at the nations on thy account, and on account of the people of thy family who are (to be) separated after thee, as thou seest in the picture the burden (of destiny) that (is laid) upon them—and I will tell thee what shall be, and how much shall be, in the last days. Look now at everything in the picture."

And I looked and saw there what was before me in creation; I saw Adam, and Eve existing with him, and with them the cunning Adversary, and Cain who acted lawlessly through the Adversary, and the slaughtered Abel, (and) the destruction brought and caused upon him through the lawless one. I saw there also Impurity, and those who lust after it, and its pollution, and their jealousy, and the fire of their corruption in the lowest parts of the earth.

I saw there Theft, and those who hasten after it, and the arrangement [of their retribution, the judgement of the Great Assize]. I saw there naked men, the foreheads against each other, and their disgrace, and their passion which (they had) against each other, and their retribution. I saw there Desire, and in her hand the head of every kind of lawlessness [and her scorn and her waste assigned to perdition].

25 I saw there the likeness of the idol of jealousy, having the likeness of woodwork such as my father was wont to make, and its statue was of glittering bronze; and before it a man, and he worshipped it; and in front of him an altar, and upon it a boy slain in the presence of the idol.

But I said to Him: "What is this idol, or what is the altar, or who are they that are sacrificed, or who is the sacrificer? Or what is the Temple which I see that is beautiful in art, and its beauty (being like) the glory that lieth beneath Thy throne?"

And He said: "Hear, Abraham. This which thou seest, the Temple and altar and beauty, is my idea of the priesthood of my glorious Name, in which dwelleth every single prayer of man, and the rise of kings and prophets, and whatever sacrifice I ordain to be offered to me among my people who are to come out of thy generation. But the statue which thou sawest is mine anger wherewith the people anger me who are to proceed for me from thee. But the man whom thou sawest slaughtering—that is he who inciteth murderous sacrifices, of (sic) which are a witness to me of the final judgement, even at the beginning of creation."

Why Sin Is Permitted (Chapter 26)

26 And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Wherefore hast Thou established that it should be so, and then proclaim the knowledge thereof?"

And He said to me: "Hear, Abraham; understand what I say to thee, and answer me as I question thee. Why did thy father Terah not listen to thy voice, and (why) did he not cease from the devilish idolatry until he perished [and] his whole household with him?"

And I said: "O Eternal, [Mighty One]! (It was) entirely because he did not choose to listen to me; but I, too, did not follow his works."

And He said [to me]: "Hear, Abraham. As the counsel of thy father is in him, and as thy counsel is in thee, so also is the counsel of my will in me ready for the coming days, before thou hast knowledge of these, or (canst) see with thine eyes what is future in them. How those of thy seed will be, look in the picture."

A Vision Of Judgement And Salvation (Chapter 27)

27 And I looked and saw: lo! the picture swayed and [from it] emerged, on its left side, a heathen people, and they pillaged those who were on the right side, men and women and children: [some they slaughtered,] others they retained with themselves. Lo! I saw them run towards them through four entrances, and they burnt the Temple with fire, and the holy things that were therein they plundered.

And I said: "O Eternal One! Lo! the people (that spring) from me, whom Thou hast accepted, the hordes of the heathen do plunder, and some they kill, while others they hold fast as aliens, and the Temple they have burnt with fire, and the beautiful things therein they do rob [and destroy]. O Eternal, Mighty One! If this be so, wherefore hast Thou now lacerated my heart, and why should this be so?"

And He said to me: "Hear, Abraham. What thou hast seen shall happen on account of thy seed who anger me by reason of the statue which thou sawest, and on account of the human slaughter in the picture, through zeal in the Temple; and as thou sawest so shall it be."

And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! May the works of evil (wrought) in ungodliness now pass by, but (show me) rather those who fulfilled the commandments, even the works of his (?) righteousness. For thou canst do this."

And He said to me: "The time of the righteous meeteth [them] first through the holiness (flowing) from kings and righteous-dealing rulers whom I at first created in order from such to rule among them. But from these issue men who care for their interests, as I have made known to thee and thou hast seen."

How Long? (Chapters 28-29)

29 And I answered and said: "O Mighty, [Eternal One], hallowed by Thy power!

Be favourable to my petition, [for for this hast Thou brought me up here—and shew me]. As Thou hast brought me up to Thy height, so make [this] known to me, Thy beloved one, as much as I ask—whether what I saw shall happen to them for long?"

And He showed me a multitude of His people, and said to me: "On their account through four issues, as thou sawest, I shall be provoked by them, and in these my retribution for their deeds shall be (accomplished). But in the fourth outgoing of a hundred years and one hour of the age—the same is a hundred years—it shall be in misfortune among the heathen [but one hour in mercy and contumely, as among the heathen]."

29 And I said: "O Eternal [Mighty One]! And how long a time is an hour of the Age?" And He said: "Twelve years have I ordained of this ungodly Age to rule among the heathen and in thy seed; and until the end of the times it shall be as thou sawest. And do thou reckon and understand and look into the picture."

And I [looked and] saw a man going out from the left side of the heathen; and there went out men and women and children, from the side of the heathen, many hosts, and worshipped him. And while I still looked there came out from the right side (many), and some insulted that man, while some struck him; others, however, worshipped him. [And] I saw how these worshipped him, and Azazel ran and worshipped him, and having kissed his face he turned and stood behind him. And I said: "O Eternal, Mighty One! Who is the man insulted and beaten, who is worshipped by the heathen with Azazel?"

And He answered and said: "Hear, Abraham! The man whom thou sawest insulted and beaten and again worshipped—that is the relief (granted) by the heathen to the people who proceed from thee, in the last days, in this twelfth hour of the Age of ungodliness. But in the twelfth year of my final Age I will set up this man from thy generation, whom thou sawest (issue) from my people; this one all will follow, and such as are called by me (will) join, (even) those who change in their counsels. And those whom thou sawest emerge from the left side of the picture—the meaning is: There shall be many from the heathen who set their hopes upon him; and as for those whom thou sawest from thy seed on the right side, some insulting and striking, others worshipping him—many of them shall be offended at him. He, however, is testing those who have worshipped him of thy seed, in that twelfth hour of the End, with a view to shortening the Age of ungodliness."

"Before the Age of the righteous beginneth to grow, my judgement shall come upon the lawless heathen through the people of thy seed who have been separated for me. In those days I will bring upon all creatures of the earth ten plagues, through misfortune and disease and sighing of the grief of their soul. Thus much will I bring upon the generations of men that be upon it on account of the provocation and the corruption of its creatures, whereby they provoke me. And then shall righteous men of thy seed be left in the number which is kept secret by me, hastening in the glory of My Name to the place prepared beforehand for them, which thou sawest devastated in the picture; and they shall live and be established through sacrifices and gifts of righteousness and truth in the Age of the righteous, and shall rejoice in Me continually; and they shall destroy those who have destroyed them, and shall insult those who have insulted them, "And of those who defamed them they shall spit in the face, scorned by Me, while they (the righteous) shall behold Me full of joy, rejoicing with My people, and receiving those who return to Me [in repentance]."

See, Abraham, what thou hast seen,

And [hear] what thou hast heard,

And [take full knowledge of] what thou hast come to know.

Go to thy heritage,

And lo! I am with you for ever."

The Punishment Of The Heathen And The Ingathering Of Israel (Chapters 30-31)

30 But while He was still speaking, I found myself upon the earth. And I said: "O Eternal, [Mighty One], I am no longer in the glory in which I was (while) on high, and what my soul longed to understand in mine heart I do not understand."

And He said to me: "What is desired in thine heart I will tell thee, because thou hast sought to see the ten plagues which I have prepared for the heathen, and have prepared beforehand at the passing over of the twelfth hour of the earth. Hear what I divulge to thee, so shall it come to pass: the first (is) pain of great distress; the second, conflagration of many cities; the third, destruction and pestilence of animals; the fourth, hunger of the whole world and of its people; the fifth by destruction among its rulers, destruction by earthquake and the sword; the sixth, multiplication of hail and snow; the seventh, the wild beasts will be their grave; the eighth, hunger and pestilence will alternate with their destruction; the ninth, punishment by the sword and flight in distress; the tenth, thunder and voices and destructive earthquake."

31 "And then I will sound the trumpet out of the air, and will send mine Elect One, having in him all my power, one measure; and this one shall summon my despised people from the nations, and I will burn with fire those who have insulted them and who have ruled among them in (this) Age."

"And I will give those who have covered me with mockery to the scorn of the coming Age; and I have prepared them to be food for the fire of Hades and for ceaseless flight to and fro through the air in the underworld beneath the earth the body filled with worms. For on them shall they see the righteousness of the Creator—those, namely, who have chosen to do my will, and those who have openly kept my commandments, (and) they shall rejoice with joy over the downfall of the men who still remain, who have followed the idols and their murders. For they shall putrefy in the body of the evil worm Azazel, and be burnt with the fire of Azazel's tongue; for I hoped that they would come to me, and not have loved and praised the strange (god), and not have adhered to him for whom they were not allotted, but (instead) they have forsaken the mighty Lord."

Conclusion (Chapter 32)

32 "Therefore hear, O Abraham, and see; lo! thy seventh generation (shall) go with thee, and they shall go out into a strange land, and they shall enslave them, and evil-entreat them as it were an hour of the Age of ungodliness but the nation whom they shall serve I will judge."

THE APOCALYPSE OF ABRAHAM

First to Second Century A.D.

Translation: Eddle's Translation, 1986

Estimated range of dating: 70-150 A.D.

(Here is the text (and notes) of an ancient work which was known in the early church, was much valued literature, was originally written in Hebrew, then translated into Greek, and found its way into many diverse cultures. Of more recent years it has been found in Coptic and Slavonic translations, and it is to these that we now have to turn, for they are the earliest - available manuscripts. The Slavonic manuscript, the oldest known, has the title of "Codex Sylvester", which belongs to the Library of the Printing Dept. of the Holy Synod in Moscow. Sylvester was a prominent priest in the reign of Ivan the Terrible, and who made a collection of early Christian books. The manuscript dates from the first half of the 14th Century, and was written on parchment, with two columns on each page, 216 leaves in all, with the Apocalypse occupying leaves 164-182. The other leaves being descriptions of the lives of other saints.

There were two portions to this Apocalypse. The first portion was clearly not part of the original, but was added to it at an early date presumably because the material of both parts concerned the Patriarch Abraham. In this presentation, we shall omit the first portion, which gave an account of Abraham's early life with his father Terah, and how he overcame the idolatry that surrounded him.

The Apocalypse proper is the account of what happened to Abraham at the time recorded in Genesis 15, when the Lord requested him to offer a sacrifice, and when he was subsequently shown visions of the future of his people. However, no one suggests that it was written in the days of Abraham. In fact it is one of a number of works that have been given the title of Pseudepigrapha. This Greek word means pseud- (false) + epi-(upon) + grapha- (writing,) in other words it was a writing that purported to have come from the pen of someone else, and usually someone important, so as to give the writing a form of importance and authority which might have been denied to the actual author. Modern scholars have thus invented this word to describe a process that was quite common in ancient days, both in Israel and in the early church.

But the scholars have not necessarily ascertained the real PURPOSE behind the writings. Although certain glosses, additions, and omissions have to some extent spoiled the original productions, there is no doubt about the fact that such writings were highly valued, and the very fact that they are even today available to us is in itself a most remarkable fact of preservation. But the fact that they are hardly ever read, and amongst Christians almost completely unknown, must surely be due to the manner in which the church views its own origins. There is a vast library of ancient literature just waiting to be printed and made available to earnest seeking enquirers, literature that deserves to be read, and which grants the careful reader an insight into the understanding of both Testaments of the Bible. An example of this is "The Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs" which is so uplifting in its reading that it led Bishop Grosseteste of Lincoln (Bishop from 1235 to his death in 1253) to say that they were of equal inspiration to the Scriptures.

However, to return to the present writing, The Apocalypse of Abraham was one of a number of writings that were similarly referred back to the ancient worthies, the patriarchal men of faith, of the Old Testament. What was the real principle behind such writings? It is our present belief that holy men of God, who may have spent nearly all their lives hidden away from the idolatrous practices that surrounded them, gave themselves to prayer and fasting, and as a result were visited by the Lord and by angelic messengers with prophetic and visionary material which naturally they greatly desired to make available to a wider body of people, rather than just keep it to themselves. However, the great difficulty lay in its acceptance. If they merely recorded it in the fashion of the O.T. prophets, they would find themselves grossly abused by their own nationals. But we do not think that they would have flinched from this as such. They were men of faith and courage.

One other factor was dominant in their minds, and it could be very similar to that which obtains today, in other words, the spiritual authorities of the day would have made mince-meat of all that they published, saying that the Scriptures were complete, and no further inspired writings could be entertained as authentic. The result was that they used admissible cunning, whilst being (as our Lord said) as harmless as doves! They interwove their revelations into accounts that appeared to derive from much earlier times, and published them anonymously. The Apostle Jude in the N.T. quoted one such writing, known as the First Book of Enoch. Quotations from other 'pseudepigraphal' writings can be found throughout the N.T., especially from the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs.

For this reason, the present authors have invented a new name for this type of literature, a name that accords with the revelation and intentions of the authors. We shall use the term Retroprophetic Material, because we are quite certain that God has given visions and understandings of the PAST, just as much as He has given visions of the FUTURE. We ourselves have had occasion to be thus exercised by the Lord over the last twenty years, and because of this it has made it all that much easier for us to appreciate how it could have come about in centuries gone by.

As to the text and content of the Apocalypse before us; the 'heavenly informant' of the writing is an angel of name Jael, who must have been of very high rank, though not found mentioned by name very much elsewhere. He could have been the same being as say Raphael or Gabriel, but we have no way of knowing. The name Jael consists of two parts, Jah and El both names of God in the O.T. Abraham is taken up in the spirit to the uppermost (seventh) heaven and shown mighty and wonderful things, but all the time there is the clear testimony of the duality of the universe, the 'right handed' principle and the 'left handed' principle. The Lord Himself used this principle when speaking of the 'sheep and the goats' in Matt.25. There is God and Satan, who in this writing assumes the name of Azazel, a name that appears a great deal in the Books of Enoch, and is used in the O.T. in the account of the Day of Atonement, where one goat is slain in the Tabernacle, whilst the other is set free, and the Hebrew original here says it is 'for Azazel.'

Although it is neither the time nor the place for further exposition of this intriguing entry in the O.T., no doubt those who read these notes will start a process of investigation of their own, which we believe will lead to some very enlightening conclusions. Not only God and Satan, but the polarisation appears with the People of God and the People of Azazel, of righteousness and idolatry, and so on. These are not Gnostic principles, as some churchmen have inferred, not 'Dualism', but strict spiritual principles to be found throughout the Scriptures. In fact we believe it would be right to say that the Bible is the greatest Book in the world as a POLARISING INFLUENCE, and we are living in a day and age when forces of darkness have striven to MIX everything together, so that no man can any longer see black from white, evil from good, till the Lord says about this wretched lukewarmness, "I will spew you out of my mouth." We trust that this presentation of a valuable little gem from the past will serve its purpose to add to the great Biblical tradition of separating wheat from chaff, sheep from goats, good from evil, and God from Satan, for God has made it clear that HIS EYES ARE TOO HOLY TO LOOK UPON INIQUITY.)

1 Then a voice came to me speaking twice, "Abraham! Abraham!" and I said, "Here I am!" And He said, "Behold it is I, fear not for I am with you, for I AM before the ages, even the Mighty God who created the first light of the world. I am your shield and your helper."

2 "Go, take me a young heifer of three years, and a she-goat of three years, and a ram of three years, a turtledove and a pigeon, and bring me a pure sacrifice. And in this sacrifice I will lay before you the ages to come, and make known to you what is reserved, and you shall see great things that you have not hitherto seen:

3 because you have loved to search me out, and I have named you 'my friend.' (The text here in fact says 'my lover'.) But abstain from every form of food that comes forth out of the fire, and from the drinking of wine, and from anointing yourself with oil, for forty days, and then set forth for me the sacrifice which I have commanded you, in a place which I will show you on a high mountain, and there I will show you the ages which have been created and established by my word, and I will make known to you what shall come to pass in them on those who have done evil and righteousness in the generations of men."

4 And it came to pass when I heard the voice of Him who spoke such words to me, and I looked here and there, I found no breath in me, and my spirit was frightened, and my soul seemed as departed from me, for I fell down as a stone, as a dead man upon the earth, and had no more strength to stand. And while I was thus lying with my face towards the earth, I heard the voice of the Holy One speaking, "Go, Jael, and by means of my ineffable Name raise up yonder man and strengthen him, so that he recovers from his trembling.

5 And the angel whom He had sent came to me in the likeness of a man and grasped me by my right hand and set me up upon my feet and said to me, "Stand up Abraham, O friend of God who loves you; let not the trembling of man seize you! For lo! I have been sent to you to strengthen you and bless you in the name of God, who loves you, the Creator of the celestial and the terrestrial. Be fearless and hasten to Him. I am called Jael by Him who moves those who exist with me on the seventh expanse over the heavens, a power in virtue of the ineffable Name that is dwelling in me. I am the one who has been given to restrain, according to His commandment, the threatening attacks of the Living Ones of the Cherubim against one another, and to teach those who carry Him, the song of the seventh hour of the night of man. (These 'attacks' may be seen as the rivalry of praise in heaven, a thing that God occasionally has to restrain, but which should not be thought to be in any way a 'fallen' action.

6 I am ordered to restrain the Leviathan, for every single attack and menace of every single reptile are subject unto me. I am he who has been commissioned to loosen Hades, and destroy him who stares at the dead. (This 'staring' is an attitude of Satan, whereby he paralyses and victimises the dead.) I have been sent to bless you now, and the land which the Eternal One, whom you have invoked, has prepared for you, and for your sake I have wended my way upon earth.

7 Stand up, Abraham! Go without fear; be right glad and rejoice, and I am with you! For age-lasting honour has been prepared for you by the Eternal One. Go, fulfil the sacrifices commanded. For lo! I have been appointed to be with you, and with the generations that will spring from you, and with me Michael blesses you forever. Be of good cheer and go!" (This reference to Michael seems to destroy the scholars' contention that Jael might be Michael under another name.)

8 And I rose up and saw him who had grasped me by the right hand and set me upon my feet, and the appearance of his body was like sapphire, and the look of his countenance like chrysolite, and the hair of his head like snow, and the turban on his head like the appearance of the rainbow, and the clothing of his garments like purple, and a golden sceptre was in his right hand,

9 And he said to me, "Abraham!" And I said, "Here I am, your servant." And he said, "Let not my appearance frighten you, nor my speech, that your soul be not troubled. Come with me, and I will be with you, visible, until the sacrifice, but after the sacrifice always invisible. Be of good cheer, and come!"

10 And we went, the two of us together for forty days and nights, and I ate no bread and drank no water, because my food and my drink was to see the angel who was with me, and to hear his speech. And we came to the Mount of God, Mount Horeb, and I said to the angel, "Singer of the Eternal One! I have no sacrifice with me, nor am I aware of the place of an altar on the mountain; how can I bring a sacrifice?" And he said to me, "Look around you." And when I looked around, there following us were all the prescribed animals, the young heifer, the she goat, the ram, the turtledove and the pigeon.

11 And the angel said to me, "Abraham!" And I said, "Here I am." And he said, "Slaughter all these animals, and divide them into halves, the one against the other, but do not sever the birds. And give these to the men (i.e. angels) whom I will show you, standing by you, for these are the altar upon the Mountain, to offer a sacrifice to the Eternal but the turtledove and the pigeon give to me, for I will ascend upon the wings of the bird, so that you may be able to see in heaven, and upon earth, and in the sea, and in the abyss, and in the under-world, and in the Garden of Eden, and in its rivers, and in the fullness of the whole world and its circle - you shall gaze into them all."

12 And I did everything according to the command of the angel, and gave the angels who had come to us, the divided animals, but the angel Jael took the birds. And I waited until the evening sacrifice. And there flew an unclean bird down upon the carcasses, and I drove it away. And the unclean bird spoke to me and said, "Abraham, what are you doing upon these holy heights, where no man eats or drinks, nor is there upon them the food of man, but these heavenly beings consume everything with fire, and will burn you up. Forsake the man who is with you and flee, for if you ascend into the heights they will make an end of "

13 And it came to pass, when I saw the bird speak, I said to the angel, "What is this, my lord?" And he said, "This is ungodliness; this is Azazel." And he said to it, "Disgrace upon you, Azazel! For Abraham's lot is in heaven, but yours is upon the earth. Because you have chosen and loved this for the dwelling place of your uncleanness therefore the Eternal Mighty Lord made you to be a dweller upon the earth, and through you every evil spirit of lies, and through you wrath and trials for the generations of ungodly men; for God, the Eternal Mighty One, has not permitted that the bodies of the righteous should be in your hand, in order that thereby the life of the righteous and the destruction of the unclean may be assured. Hear this my friend, and be gone with shame from me. For it has not been given to you to play the tempter in regard to all the righteous. Depart from this man! You cannot lead him astray. He is an enemy to you, and to those who follow you and love what you desire. For, behold, the vesture which in heaven was formerly yours has been set aside for him, and the mortality which was his has been transferred to you."

14 And the angel said to me, "Know that from henceforth the Eternal One has chosen you. Be of good courage and use this authority so far as I bid you, against him who slanders the truth. Should I not be able to put him to shame that has scattered over the earth the secrets of heaven, and has rebelled against the Mighty One? Say to him, 'Become the burning coal of the furnace of the earth! Go, Azazel, into the inaccessible parts of the earth, for your heritage is to be over those who are with you, the ones brought forth with the stars and clouds, and with the men whose portion you are, even those who exist on account of your being. Justification shall be your enemy. Now depart from me by your perdition!

15 And I uttered the words that the angel taught me. And then the angel said to me, "Answer him not! For God has given him power over those who answer him." And the angel spoke to me again saying, "However much he speak to you, answer him not, in order that he may have no free access to you, because the Eternal One has given him 'weight and will' in this respect." And I did that which was commanded me by the angel, and no matter how much he spoke to me, I answered him nothing whatsoever.

16 And it came to pass when the sun went down, behold there was the smoke as of a furnace. And the angels who had the portions of the sacrifice ascended from the top of the smoking furnace. And the angel took me with his right hand and set me upon the right wing of the pigeon, and set himself on the left wing of the turtle dove, neither of which birds had been slaughtered, and he bore me to the borders of the flaming fire, and we ascended upon many winds to the heavens which were above the firmament. And I saw in the air on the heights to which we ascended, a strong light impossible to describe, and within the light a fiercely burning fire of people, many people, of male appearance, all constantly changing in aspect and form, running and being transformed, and worshipping and crying with a sound of words that I could not recognise.

17 And I said to the angel, "Why have you now brought me up here, because my eyes cannot now see distinctly, and I am growing weak, and my spirit is departing from me?" And he said to me, "Remain close by me and do not fear, for the One whom you cannot see is now coming towards us with a great voice of holiness, even the Eternal One who loves you. But you yourself cannot see Him. But you must not allow your spirit to grow faint on account of the choirs of those who cry out, for I am with you to strengthen you."

18 And while he was thus speaking fire came all about us, and there was a voice within the fire like the sound of many waters, like the sound of the sea in violent motion. And I desired to fall down there and worship, and I saw that the angel who was with me bowed his head and worshipped, but the surface of the high place where I seemed to be standing changed its inclination constantly, rolling as the great waves on the surface of the sea.

19 And the angel said, "Worship, Abraham, and utter the song which I shall now teach you. Utter it without ceasing, that is, without pause, in one continuous strain from beginning to end. And the song which he taught me to sing had words appropriate to that sphere in which we then stood, for each sphere in heaven has its own song of praise, and only those who dwell there know how to utter it, and those upon earth cannot know or utter it except they be taught by the messengers of heaven. And the words of that song were of this import and signification -

'Eternal, Mighty, Holy El, God only-supreme'
You who are the Self-originated, the Beginningless One,
Incarnate,
Spotless, Uncreated, Immaculate, Immortal, Self-complete,
Self-illuminating,
Without father, without mother, unbegotten,
Exalted, Fiery One! Lover of men, Benevolent One, Bountiful One,
Jealous over me, and very compassionate, Eli, My God,
Eternal, Jehovah Zebaoth, Very Glorious El, El, El, El, Jah El!

THE GRAND BIBLE

You are the One whom my soul has loved!
Eternal Protector, Shining like Fire, Whose voice is like the thunder, Whose look is like the lightning,
You are the All-seeing One, Who receives the prayers of all such as honour You,
And turn away the requests of those who embarrass You with their provocations
Who dissolves the confusions of the world, which arise from the ungodly and the righteous mixed up in the confusion of the corruptible age,
And renewing the age of the righteous, Shine O Lord, shine as a light, even as that light with which you clothed Yourself on the first day of Creation, Shine as the Light of the Morning on Your creatures
And let it be Day upon Earth,
For in these heavenly dwelling places there is no need of any other light
Than the unspeakable splendour from the light of Your Countenance,
O answer my prayer, O be well-pleased with it,
O accept my sacrifice which You have prepared for me to offer,
Accept me favourably, and show me, teach me, all that You have promised!

20 And while I was still reciting the song, the mouth of the fire that was on the surface rose up on high. And I heard a voice like the roaring of the sea, nor did it cease on account of the rich abundance of the fire. And as the fire raised itself up, ascending into the heights, I saw under the fire a throne of fire, and round about it the watchfulness of many eyes, even the all-seeing ones reciting their song, and under the throne four fiery Living Ones singing, and their appearance was one, and each one had four faces. And such was the appearance of their countenance, that each one had the face of a lion, a man, an ox and an eagle, and because of their four heads upon their bodies, they had sixteen faces, and each one had three pairs of wings, from their shoulders, from their sides, and from their loins. And with the wings from the shoulders they covered their faces, and with the wings from their loins they covered their feet, while the two middle wings were spread out for flying straight forward.

21 And it came to pass that when they had ended their singing they looked at one another and threatened one another. (Another mention of this 'praise-rivalry', which may seem strange to us, as indeed the Cherubim are altogether very strange and wonderful beings, and which we must accept as part of the vision as it was seen.)

22 And it came to pass that when the angel who was with me saw that they were threatening each other, he left me and went running to them and turned the countenance of each one away from the countenance immediately facing him, in order that they might not look upon each other. And he began to teach them the song of peace that has its origin in the Eternal One.

23 And as I stood alone and looked, I saw behind the Living Ones a chariot with fiery wheels, each wheel full of eyes round about, (In Hebrew, the Living Ones are Chayyim, whose other names are Cherubim, and Seraphim, depending upon which function they are fulfilling at any time, and the wheels are called Ophanim.) and over the wheels was the throne which I had seen, and which was covered with fire, and the fire encircled it round about, and behold, an indescribable fire contained a mighty fiery host, and I heard its holy voice like the voice of a man.

24 And a voice came to me out of the midst of the fire, saying, "Abraham! Abraham!" and I answered saying "Here am I!" And he said, "Consider the expanses which are under the firmament on which you are now placed (i.e. the 7th heavenly sphere) and see how on no single expanse is there any other than the One whom you have sought, even the One who loves you!"

25 And while he was yet speaking, the expanses opened, and there below me were the heavens, and I saw upon the seventh firmament upon which I stood a fire widely extended, and the light which is the treasury of life, and the dew with which God will awaken the dead, and the spirits of the departed righteous, and the spirits of those souls who have yet to be born, and judgement and righteousness, peace and blessing, and an innumerable company of angels, and the Living Ones, and the Power of the Invisible Glory that sat above the Living Ones.

26 And I looked downwards from the mountain on which I stood to the sixth firmament, and there I saw a multitude of angels of pure spirit, without bodies, whose duty was to carry out the commands of the fiery angels who were upon the seventh firmament, as I was standing suspended over them.
And behold, upon this sixth firmament there were no other powers of any form, save only the angels of pure spirit.

27 And He commanded that the sixth firmament should be removed from my sight, and I saw there on the fifth firmament the powers of the stars that carry out the commands laid upon them, and the elements of the earth obeyed them.

28 And the Eternal Mighty One said to me, "Abraham!
Abraham!" And I said, "Here am I!" And He said to me, "Consider from above the stars which are beneath you, and number them for me, and make known to me their number."
And I said, "How can I? For I am but a man of the dust of the earth." And He said to me, "As the number of the stars and their power, so will I make your seed a nation and a people set apart for me as my own inheritance, as distinct from that of Azazel. And yet I include Azazel in my house."

29 And I said, "O Eternal Mighty One! Let your servant speak before You, and let not your anger be kindled against your chosen one! For lo! before I came up hither, Azazel invighed against me. How then, while he is not now before you, can you constitute yourself with him?"

30 And He said to me, "Look now beneath your feet at the firmaments and understand the creation represented and foreshadowed in this expanse, the creatures who exist upon it, and the ages prepared for it."

31 And I saw beneath the surface of my feet, even beneath the sixth heaven and what was therein, and then the earth and its fruits, and what moved upon it and its animate beings, and the power of its men, and the ungodliness of some of its souls and the righteous deeds of other souls, and I saw the lower regions and the perdition therein, the abyss and its torments.
And I saw the sea and its islands, its monsters and its fishes, and Leviathan and his dominion, his camping-ground and his caves, and the world that lay above him, his movements and the destructions of the world on his account. And I saw there the streams and the rivers, and the rising of their waters, and their windings in their courses. And I saw there the Garden of Eden and its fruits, the source of the river that issues from it, the trees and their blossoms, and the ones who behaved righteously. And I saw therein their foods and their blessedness. And I saw there a great multitude, men and women and children, half of them on the right side of the vision, and half of them on the left side of the vision.

32 And I said, "O Eternal, Mighty One! What is this vision and picture of the creatures?" And He said to me, "This is my will for those who exist in the divine world-counsel, for thus it seemed well-pleasing in my sight, and so afterwards I gave commandment to them through my word. And so it came to pass that whatever I had determined to be, was already planned beforehand in this picture-vision before you, and it has stood before me before it was created, as you have seen." (Notice the clear explanation of the predestination of the righteous, and God's action towards them based upon what He knows of their actions. Here is the teaching of Paul in Romans 8, 'predestination and foreknowledge'.)

33 And I said, "O Lord, Mighty and Eternal! Who are the people in this picture on this side and that?" And He said to me, "Those who are on the left side are all those, born before your day and afterwards, some destined for judgement and restoration, and others for vengeance and cutting off at the end of the age. But those on the right side of the picture, they are the people who have been set apart for me, and whom I have ordained to be born of your line and called my people, even some of those who derive from Azazel.

34 Now look again in the picture, and see who it is who seduced Eve, and what is the fruit of the Tree, and you will know what is to be, and how it shall be with your seed among the people at the end of the days of the age, and all that you cannot understand I will make known to you for you are well-pleasing in my sight, and I will tell you of those things which are kept in my heart.

35 And I looked into the picture, and my eyes ran to the side of the Garden of Eden, and I saw there a man of imposing height and mighty in stature, incomparable in aspect, and he was embracing a woman, who likewise approximated to the aspect of his size and stature. And they were standing under a tree of the Garden of Eden, and the fruit of this tree was like a bunch of grapes of the vine. And standing behind the tree was one who had the aspect of a Serpent (Hebrew Nachash = shining, bright eyes) having hands and feet like those of a man, and wings on its shoulders, six pairs of wings, so that there were six wings on the right and six on the left. And as I continued looking, I saw the man and the woman eating the fruit from the tree.

36 And I said, "Who are these who are embracing, and who is the one between them who is behind the tree, and what is the fruit that they are eating?" And He said, "This is the council of the world, this one is Adam, and this one, who is their desire upon the earth, is Eve. But he who is between them represents ungodliness and their beginnings on the way to perdition, even Azazel."

37 And I said, "O Eternal Mighty One! Why have you given such as him the power to destroy the generations of men in their works upon the earth?" And He said to me, "Those who will to do evil (and how much I hate it in those who do it) over them I gave him power, even to be beloved of them."

38 And I answered and said, "O Eternal Mighty One!
Wherefore is it your will that evil should be desired in the hearts of men, since you are indeed endangered over that which you see? It is your will, and you are angry with him who is doing what is unprofitable in your counsel?"

39 And He said to me, "I am angered by mankind on your account, and on account of those who shall be of your family hereafter, for as you can see in the picture, the burden of destiny is placed upon them, and I shall tell you what shall be, and how much shall be in the last days. Look now at everything in the picture." (The purport of these remarks is to show the interaction between those who are of the 'seed' and those who persecute the seed. And Paul understood the seed to mean those who, by faith, are of their father Abraham. God is therefore angry with those who maltreat His own faithful children.)

40 And I looked and saw what was before me in creation; I saw Adam and Eve with him, and I saw the cunning adversary, and Cain who acted lawlessly through the promptings of the adversary, and I saw the slaughtered Abel, and the destruction brought about and caused upon him through the lawless one.
And I saw Impurity and those who lust after it, (Items here given capital letters indicate the names of unclean spirits, as was the custom in such writings) and its pollution and their jealousies, and the fire of their corruption in the lowest parts of the earth.

41 And I saw Theft, and those who hasten after it, and the arrangement of their retribution, at the judgement of the Great Assize. And I saw there naked men with their foreheads against each other, and their disgrace, and the passions which they had for each other, and their retribution. And I saw Desire, and in her hand the head of every kind of lawlessness, and her scorn and contempt and waste assigned to perdition.

42 And I saw there the likeness of the idol of jealousy, carved in woodwork such as my father was wont to make, and its body was of glittering bronze that covered the wood. And before it I saw a man who was worshipping the idol, and in front of him there was an altar, and upon the altar a boy slain in the presence of the idol.

43 And I said to Him, "What is this idol and this altar, and who is he who is sacrificed? And what is this great building which I see, beautiful in art and design, even with a beauty like that which lies beneath Your throne?"

44 And He said, "Hear Abraham, for that which you see is the Temple, a copy of that which is in the heavens, glorious in its aspect and beauty, even as I shall give it to the sons of men to ordain a priesthood for my glorious name, and in which the prayers of man shall be uttered, and sacrifices offered as I ordain to your people, even those who shall arise out of your generation. But the idol that you saw is the image of jealousy, (i.e. the idol which causes the jealousy of God, and His anger to arise because of it) set up by some of those who shall come forth from your own loins in later days. And the man who sacrifices in murder is he who pollutes my Temple and such are witnesses to the final judgement, and their lot has been set from the beginning of creation."

45 And I said, "O Eternal Mighty One! Why have you established that it should be so, and then proclaimed the knowledge thereof?" And He said to me, "Hear Abraham, and understand what I say to you, and answer my question. Why did your father Terah not listen to your voice, and why did he not cease from his idolatrous practices, together with his whole house?"

46 And I said, "O Eternal One! It was entirely because he did not choose to listen to my voice, and likewise I did not choose to listen to his counsel." And He said to me, "The will of your father is within him, and your own will is within you, and so also the counsel of my own will is within me, and is ready for the coming days, even before you have any knowledge of them or can see with your eyes what is the future of them. Now look again into the picture, and see how it will be with your seed."

47 And I looked and saw, and behold the picture swayed and from it emerged, on the left side an ungodly people and they pillaged those who were on the right side, men, women, and children, and some they murdered, and others they kept as slaves. And I saw them run towards them through four 'entrances' (a word which does not mean actual gates, but contains the idea of four 'descents' or 'generations' as given to Abraham concerning the trials of his seed for the four generations till they came out of Egypt, but which in this context is seen to prefigure a much greater vision, that of which Daniel saw in later days, with four great world powers who would oppress the people of God.) and they burned the Temple with fire, and the holy things that were therein were all plundered.

48 And I said, "O Eternal One! Behold, the people who shall spring from me, and whom you have accepted, are plundered by these ungodly men, and some are killed, whilst others they hold captives as slaves, and the Temple they have burned with fire, and the beautiful things therein they have robbed and destroyed. If this to be, why have you so torn my heart?"

49 And He said to me, "What you have seen shall happen on account of your seed, even those who anger me by reason of the idol statue which you saw, and on account of the human sacrifice in the picture, through their evil zeal and schemes in the Temple, and as you saw it, so shall it be."

50 And I said, "O Eternal, Mighty One! May these works of evil wrought in ungodliness now pass by, and rather show me those who fulfilled the commandments, even the works of righteousness. For of a truth you can do this."

51 And He said to me, "The days of the righteous are seen in type by the lives of those righteous rulers who shall arise, and whom I have created to rule at the times appointed, but know this, that out of them shall arise others who care only for their own interests, even of the type that I have already shown you."

52 And I answered and said, "O Mighty One! Hallowed be your power! Be favourable to my petition and show me, because for this reason you have brought me up here, whether what I saw shall happen to them for a long time?"

53 And He showed me a multitude of His people and said to me, "On their account, through four 'entrances' (i.e. descents, as in 47 above) as you saw, I shall be provoked by them, and in these (four descents) shall my retribution for their deeds be accomplished. But in the fourth descent of one hundred years, even one hour of the age, the same is a hundred years, there shall be misfortune among the nations, but also for one hour there shall be mercy and honour among those nations."

54 And I said, "O Eternal One! How long are the hours of the age?" And He said, "Twelve hours have I ordained for this present age of ungodliness to rule among the nations and within your seed, and until the end of the times it shall be even as you saw. And now reckon and understand and look again into the picture."

55 And I looked and saw a Man going out from the left side of the nations (clearly the Messiah is here intended) and there went out men and women and children, from the side of nations, many hosts, and worshipped Him. And while I still looked, there came many from the right side, and some of these insulted Him, and some of them even struck Him, but others however worshipped Him. And as I watched, I saw Azazel approach Him and he kissed Him on the face and then stood behind Him.

56 And I said, "O Eternal One! Who is the Man insulted and beaten, who is worshipped by the nations and kissed by the Azazel?" And He answered and said, "Hear Abraham! The Man you saw insulted and beaten and yet worshipped by many, He is the 'Relief' granted by the nations to the people who proceed from you, in the last days, in the twelfth hour of the age of ungodliness. But in the twelfth hour of my final age will I set up this Man from your generation, whom you saw issue from among my people, and all who follow will become like this Man, and such as are called by me will join the others, even those who will to change within themselves. (A neat definition of repentance!) And as for those who emerge from the left side of the picture, the meaning is this - there shall be many from the nations who shall set their hopes upon Him, but as for those whom you saw from your seed on the right of the picture who insulted Him and struck Him, many shall be offended in Him, but some shall worship Him. And He shall test those of your seed who have worshipped Him in the twelfth hour at the end, with a view to shortening the age of ungodliness."

57 Before the age of the righteous begins to grow, my judgement shall come upon the lawless peoples through the people of your seed who have been separated unto me. And in those days I will bring upon all creatures of the earth ten plagues, through misfortune and disease and the sighing of their grief. And this shall be brought upon the generations of men on account of the provocation and the corruption of mankind, whereby they provoke me. And then shall righteous men of your seed survive in the number which is kept secret by me, and will hasten the coming of the glory of My Name to that place prepared beforehand for them, which you saw devastated in the picture. (This presumably means Jerusalem, and like many other pictures, it has echelons of progressive meaning, starting, as always, with the physical, and ending with the spiritual. In this manner, the physical Jerusalem of the Bible days is replaced in the Book of Revelation by the great spiritual city that descends from God.) And they shall live and be established by sacrifices of righteousness (There is no need to imply blood sacrifice in this expression. It is used in the Psalms 4:5, 51:19, and like many other texts, may be spiritualised in the days in which we now live.) in the age of the righteous, and they shall rejoice in me continually, and receive those who return to me in repentance, for great shall be the inner torment of those who have despitely used them in this world, as they observe the honour placed upon my own in the day of glory.

58 See, Abraham, what you have seen and hear what you have heard, and take knowledge of all that you have come to know. Go to your heritage, and behold, I am with you unto the age."

59 But while He was still speaking to me, I found myself once again upon the earth, and I said, "O Eternal One! I am no longer in the glory that is on high, and there is one matter that my soul longed to know and understand which has not been revealed to me."

60 And He said to me, "What your heart desired I will tell you, because you have sought to see the ten plagues which I have prepared for the goddess nations, and which have been pre-determined at the passing over of the twelfth hour of the age of the earth. Hear therefore what I divulge, and so shall it come to pass. The first is the distressing pain of sickness; the second, conflagration of many cities; the third, the destruction and pestilence of animals; the fourth, hunger of the whole world and its people; the fifth, by destruction among its rulers, by earthquake and the sword; the sixth, the multiplication of hail and snow; the seventh, wild beasts will be their grave; the eighth, hunger and pestilence will alternate with destruction; the ninth, punishment by the sword and flight in distress; the tenth, thunder and voices and destructive earthquake."

61 And then I will sound the trumpet out of the air, and will send my Elect One, having in Him all my power in one measure, and He shall summon my despised people from all nations, and I will send fire upon those who have insulted them and who have ruled over them in this age. And I will give those who have covered me with mockery to the scorn of the coming age, and I have prepared them to be food for the fires of Hades, and perpetual flight through the air in the underworld, for they shall see the righteousness of the Creator, and those whom He now honours, and they shall be ashamed, for I had hoped that they would come to me in repentance, rather than loving strange gods, but they forsook the Mighty Lord, and went the way that they willed to go."

62 Hear therefore, Abraham, and see, for behold, in the seventh generation from you shall they leave the land of their slavery, after they have been ill-treated as it were for an hour of the age of ungodliness, and the nation whom they shall serve I will judge." (These seven generations may thus be enumerated: Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Levi, Kohath, Amram, and Moses.)

THE APOCALYPSE OF SEDRACH

The Word of Sedrach

Source: Bodleian Library (Cod. Misc. Gr. 56, ff. 92-100) (Apocrypha Anecdota [T&S 2.3] Cambridge: CUP, 1893)

Translation: A. Rutherford / M. R. James, 1893

Estimated Range of Dating: 2nd to 5th centuries A.D..

(This pseudepigraphon is extant only in a fifteenth-century Greek manuscript preserved in the Bodleian. The biblical name Sedrach or Hadrach is of obscure origin denoting a place, a deity, a king or other person. It can refer to the boundaries of Damascus as well as to the North of Lebanon. In Zechariah 9:1-9:1 we read: The word of the Lord is against the land of Hadrach and will rest upon Damascus. For to the Lord belongs the capital of Aram, as do all the tribes of Israel; Sedrach / Hadrach has been identified with the Assyrian place-name Hatarikka, or Aramean Hazrik, (the capital of Luhuti) possibly located at Tell Afis.

The Apocalypse of Sedrach, also known as the Word of Sedrach, is an ancient apocryphal text. As the text mentions a Saviour, the text may well be Christian. The name of the titular figure, Sedrach may simply be the Greek form of Shadrach, the name of one of the three individuals put into the fiery furnace in the Book of Daniel. It may however simply be a corruption of Esdras, the Greek form of Ezra, particularly since the text has much similarity with other apocryphal texts attributed to Ezra, such as the Apocalypse of Ezra.

Like much other apocalyptic literature, the text narrates how Sedrach was given a vision of heaven, first describing someone being sent by God take him there. In the Apocalypse of Sedrach, it is Jesus himself who comes to take Sedrach, but while the text seems superficially Christian, it appears to be a corruption of an earlier Jewish text, with Jesus simply having been substituted in place of the name of an archangel.

Unlike other apocalyptic texts, however, the Apocalypse of Sedrach heavily discusses ethical issues, particularly repentance, and God being merciful. In a marked contrast to the bitter attitude often expressed in the genre, God is depicted as patient, keen to help people make the right choices, and keen to allow them repentance at every opportunity, and free will is seen as something kindly given, not a vicious trick.)

The Word of the holy and blessed Sedrach concerning love and concerning repentance and Orthodox Christians, and concerning the Second Coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Lord give thy blessing.

1 Beloved, let us prefer nothing in honour except sincere love: for in many things we stumble every day and night and hour. And for this cause let us gain love, for it covereth a multitude of sins: for what is the profit, my children, if we have all things, and have not saving love . . . O blessed love, supplier of all good things. Blessed is the man who has gained the true faith and sincere love, according as the Master said, there is no greater love than this that a man should lay down his life for his friend. [Cf. John xv. 13.]

2 And invisibly he received a voice in his ears: Come hither, Sedrach, since thou wishest and desirest to converse with God and ask of him that he may reveal unto thee whatever thou wishest to ask. And Sedrach said: What, Sir? And the voice said to him: I was sent to thee to raise thee here into heaven. And he said: I desired to speak mouth to mouth with God: I am not fit, Sir, to come into heaven. And stretching out his wings he took him up and he came into heaven to the very flame, and he set him as high as the third heaven, and in it stood the flame of the divinity.

3 And the Lord saith to him: Welcome, my beloved Sedrach: What suit hast thou against God who created thee, that thou shouldst, I desired to speak face to face with God? Sedrach saith to him: Yea, verily, the son hath a suit with the Father: my Lord, why didst thou make the earth? The Lord saith to him: For man's sake. Sedrach saith: And why didst Thou make the sea? Why didst Thou scatter every good thing on the earth? The Lord saith to him: For man's sake. Sedrach saith to him: If thou didst these things, why wilt Thou destroy him? And the Lord said: Man is my work and the creature of my hands, and I discipline him as I find good.

4 Sedrach saith to him: Chastisement and fire are thy discipline: they are bitter, my Lord: it were well for man if he had not been born: why then didst thou make him, my Lord? Why didst thou weary thine undefiled hands and create man, since thou didst not intend to have mercy on him? God saith to him: I made Adam the first creature and placed him in Paradise in the midst of the tree of life and said to him: Eat of all the fruits, but beware of the tree of life: for if thou eat of it, thou shalt die the death. But he transgressed my commandment, and being beguiled by the devil ate of the tree.

5 Sedrach saith to him: Of thy will Adam was beguiled, my Lord: Thou commandest thine 3981 angels to make approach to Adam, and the first of the angels himself transgressed thy commandment and did not make approach to him, and Thou didst banish him, because he transgressed thy commandment and did not make any approach to the work of thine hands: if thou lovedst man, why didst Thou not slay the devil, the worker of unrighteousness? Who is able to fight an invisible spirit? And he as a smoke enters into the hearts of men and teaches them every sin: he fights against thee, the immortal God, and what can wretched man then do to him? But have mercy, O Lord, and stop the chastisements: but if not, count me also with the sinners: if thou wilt have no mercy on the sinners, where are thy mercies, where is thy compassion, O Lord?

6 God saith to him: Be it known unto thee that I ordered all things to be placable to him: I gave him understanding and made him the heir of heaven and earth, and I subjected all things to him, and every living thing flees from him and from before his face: but he, having received of mine, became alien, adulterous, and sinful: tell me, what father, having given his son his portion, when he takes his substance and leaves his father and goes away and becomes an alien and serves an alien, when the father sees that the son has deserted him, does not darken his heart, and does not the father go and take his substance and banish him from his glory because he deserted his father? And how have I, the wonderful and jealous God, given him everything, and he having received these things has become an adulterer and a sinner?

7 Sedrach saith to him: Thou, O Lord, didst create man. Thou knewest of what sort of mind he was and of what sort of knowledge we are, and thou makest it a cause for chastisement: but cast him forth; for shall not I alone fill up the heavenly places? But if that is not to be so save man too, O Lord. He failed by thy will, wretched man. Why dost thou waste words on me, Sedrach? I created Adam and his wife and the sun and said: Behold each other how bright he is, and the wife of Adam is brighter in the beauty of the moon and he was the giver of her life. Sedrach saith: but of what profit are beauties if they die away into the earth? How didst thou say, O Lord, Thou shalt not return evil for evil? How is it, O Lord? the word of Thy divinity never lies, and why dost Thou retaliate on man? or dost thou not in so doing render evil for evil? I know that among the quadrupeds there is no other so wily and unreasonable as the mule. But we strike it with the bridle when we wish: and thou hast angels: send them forth to guard them, and when man inclines towards sin, to take hold of his foot and not let him go whither he would.

8 God saith to him: If I catch him by the foot, he will say, Thou hast given me no joy in the world. But I have left him to his own will because I loved him. Wherefore I sent forth my righteous angels to guard him night and day. Sedrach saith: I know, O Lord, that of all thy creatures Thou chiefly lovedst man, of the quadrupeds the sheep, of woods the olive, of fruits the vine, of flying things the bee, of rivers the Jordan, of cities Jerusalem. And all these man also loves, my Lord. God saith to Sedrach: I will ask thee one thing, Sedrach: if thou answerest me, then I may fitly help thee, even though thou hast tempted thy creator. Sedrach saith: Speak. The Lord God saith: Since I made all things, how many men were born and how many died, and how many are to die and how many hairs have they? Tell me, Sedrach, since the heaven was created and the earth, how many trees grew in the world, and how many fell, and how many are to fall, and how many are to arise, and how many leaves have they? Tell me, Sedrach, since I made the sea, how many waves arose and how many fell, and how many are to arise, and how many winds blow along the margin of the sea? Tell me, Sedrach, from the creation of the world of the aëons, when the air rained, how many drops fell upon the world, and how many are to fall? And Sedrach said: Thou alone knowest all these things, O Lord; thou only understandest all these things: only, I pray thee, deliver man from chastisement, and I shall not be separated from our race.

9 And God said to his only begotten Son: Go, take the soul of Sedrach my beloved, and place it in Paradise. The only begotten Son saith to Sedrach: Give me the trust which our Father deposited in the womb of thy mother in the holy tabernacle of thy body from a child. Sedrach saith: I will not give thee my soul. God saith to him: And wherefore was I sent to come hither, and thou pleadest against me? For I was commanded by my Father not to take thy soul with violence; but if not, (then) give me thy most greatly desired soul.

10 And Sedrach saith to God: And whence dost Thou intend to take my soul, and from which limb? And God saith to him: Dost thou not know that it is placed in the midst of thy lungs and thy heart and is dispersed into all thy limbs? It is brought up through the throat and gullet and the mouth and at whatever hour it is predestined to come forth, it is scattered, and brought together from the points of the nails and from all the limbs, and there is a great necessity that it should be separated from the body and parted from the heart. When Sedrach had heard all these things and had considered the memory of death he was greatly astounded, and Sedrach said to God: O Lord, give me a little respite that I may weep, for I have heard that tears are able to do much and much remedy comes to the lowly body of thy creature.

11 And weeping and bewailing he began to say: O marvellous head of heavenly adornment: O radiant as the sun which shines on heaven and earth: thy hairs are known from Teman, thine eyes from Bosor, thine ears from thunder, thy tongue from a trumpet, and thy brain is a small creation, thy head the energy of the whole body: O friendly and most fair beloved by all, and now falling into the earth it must become forgotten. O hands, mild, fair-fingered, worn with toil by which the body is nourished: O hands, deftest of all, heaping up from all quarters ye made ready houses. O fingers adorned and decked with gold and silver (rings): and great worlds are led by the fingers: the three joints enfold the palms, and heap up beautiful things: and now ye must become aliens to the world. O feet, skillfully walking about, self-running, most swift, unconquerable: O knees, fitted together, because without you the body does not move: the feet run along with the sun and the moon in the night and in the day, heaping up all things, foods and drinks, and nourishing the body: O feet, most swift and fair runners, moving on the face of the earth, getting ready the house with every good thing: O feet which bear up the whole body, that run up to the temples, making repentance and calling on the saints, and now ye are to remain motionless. O head and hands and feet, until now I have kept you. O soul, what sent thee into the humble and wretched body? and now being separated from it, thou art going up where the Lord calleth thee, and the wretched body goes away to judgement. O body well-adorned, hair clothed with stars, head of heavenly adornment and dress: O face well-anointed, light-bringing eyes, voice trumpet-like, tongue placable, chin fairly adorned, hairs like the stars, head high as heaven, body decked out, light-bringing eyes that know all things—and now you shall fall into the earth and under the earth your beauty shall disappear.

12 Christ saith to him: Stay, Sedrach; how long dost thou weep and groan? Paradise is opened to thee, and, dying, thou shalt live. Sedrach saith to him: Once more I will speak unto thee, O Lord: How long shall I live before I die? and do not disregard my prayer. The Lord saith to him: Speak, O Sedrach. Sedrach saith: If a man shall live eighty or ninety or an hundred years, and live these years in sin, and again shall turn, and the man live in repentance, in how many days dost thou forgive him his sins? God saith to him: If he shall live an hundred or eighty years and shall turn and repent for three years and do the fruit of righteousness, and death shall overtake him, I will not remember all his sins.

13 Sedrach saith to him: The three years are a long time, my Lord, lest death overtake him and he fulfil not his repentance: have mercy, Lord, on thine image and have compassion, for the three years are many. God saith to him: If a man live an hundred years and remember his death and confess before men and I find him, after a time I will forgive all his sins. Sedrach saith again: I will again beseech thy compassion for thy creature. The time is long lest death overtake him and snatch him suddenly. The Saviour saith to him: I will ask thee one word, Sedrach, my beloved, then thou shalt ask me in turn: if the man shall repent for forty days I will not remember all his sins which he did.

14 And Sedrach saith to the archangel Michael: Hearken to me, O powerful chief, and help thou me and be my envy that God may have mercy on the world. And falling on their faces, they besought the Lord and said: O Lord, teach us how and by what sort of repentance and by what labour man shall be saved. God saith: By repentances, by intercessions, by liturgies, by tears in streams, in hot groanings. Dost thou not know that my prophet David was saved by tears, and the rest were saved in one moment? Thou knowest, Sedrach, that there are nations which have not the law and which do the works of the law: for if they are unbaptized and my divine spirit come unto them and they turn to my baptism, I also receive them with my righteous ones into Abraham's bosom. And there are some who have been baptized with my baptism and who have shared in my divine part and become reprobate in complete reprobation and will not repent: and I suffer them with much compassion and much pity and wealth in order that they may repent, but they do the things which my divinity hates, and did not hearken to the wise man asking (them), saying, we by no means justify a sinner. Dost thou not most certainly know that it is written: And those who repent never see chastisement? And they did not hearken to the Apostles or to my word in the Gospels, and they grieve my angels, and verily they do not attend to my messenger in the assemblies (for communion) and in my services, and they do not stand in my holy churches, but they stand and do not fall down and worship in fear and trembling, but boast things which I do not accept, or my holy angels.

15 Sedrach saith to God: O Lord, Thou alone art sinless and very compassionate, having compassion and pity for sinners, but thy divinity said: I am not come to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. And the Lord said to Sedrach: Dost thou not know, Sedrach, that the thief was saved in one moment to repent? Dost thou not know that my apostle and evangelist was saved in one moment? "Peccatores enim non salvantur," for their hearts are like rotten stone: these are they who walk in impious ways and who shall be destroyed with Antichrist. Sedrach saith: O my Lord, Thou also saidst: My divine spirit entered into the nations which, not having the law, do the things of the law. So also the thief and the apostle and evangelist and the rest of those who have already got into thy Kingdom. O my Lord; so likewise do Thou pardon those who have sinned to the last: for life is very toilsome and there is no time for repentance.

16 The Lord saith to Sedrach: I made man in three stages: when he is young, I overlooked his stumblings as he was young: and again when he was a man I considered his purpose: and again when he grows old, I watch him till he repent. Sedrach saith: O Lord, Thou knowest and understandest all these things: but have sympathy for sinners. The Lord saith to him: Sedrach, my beloved, I promise to have sympathy and bring down the forty days to twenty: and whosoever shall remember thy name shall not see the place of chastisement, but shall be with the just in a place of refreshment and rest: and if anyone shall record this wonderful word his sins shall not be reckoned against him for ever and ever. And Sedrach saith: O Lord, and if anyone shall bring enlightenment to thy servant, save him, O Lord, from all evil. And Sedrach, the servant of the Lord, saith: Now take my soul, O Lord. And God took him and placed him in Paradise with all the saints. To whom be the glory and the power for ever and ever. Amen.

THE APOCALYPSE OF THE VIRGIN

The Apocalypse of Paul, Apocalypsis Pauli,
Visio Pauli, Visio sancti Pauli
From Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. 9.

Edited by Allan Menzies.

Translation: Andrew Rutherford, 1896
Estimated Range of Dating: 388-400 A.D.

(The Apocalypse of Paul (Apocalypsis Pauli, more commonly known in the Latin tradition as the Visio Pauli or Visio sancti Pauli) is a fourth-century non-canonical apocalypse considered part of the New Testament apocrypha. The original Greek version of the Apocalypse is lost, although heavily redacted versions still exist. Using later versions and translations, the text has been reconstructed. The text is not to be confused with the gnostic Coptic Apocalypse of Paul, which is unlikely to be related.)

The Apocalypse of Paul was composed at a communal Pachomian monastery in Egypt between 388-400 AD. The text, which is pseudepigraphal, purports to present a detailed account of a vision of Heaven and Hell experienced by Paul the Apostle; "its chief importance lies in the way it helped to shape the beliefs of ordinary Christians concerning the afterlife".

Content: The text is primarily focused on a detailed account of Heaven and Hell. It appears to be an elaborate expansion and rearrangement of the Apocalypse of Peter, although it differs in some ways. It contains a prologue describing all of creation appealing to God against the sin of man, which is not present in the Apocalypse of Peter. At the end of the text, Paul or the Virgin Mary (depending on the manuscript) manages to persuade God to give everyone in Hell a day off every Sunday.

The text expands upon the Apocalypse of Peter by framing the reasons for the visits to heaven and hell as the witnessing of the death and judgement of one wicked man and one righteous man. The text is heavily moralistic.

The text structure:

- 1–2. Discovery of the revelation.
- 3–6. Appeal of creation to God against man
- 7–10. The report of the angels to God about men.

• 11–18. Deaths and judgements of the righteous and the wicked.

• 19–30. First vision of Paradise, including lake Acherusa.

• 31–44. Hell. Paul obtains rest on Sunday for the lost.

• 45–51. Second vision of Paradise.

Versions: Greek copies of the texts are rare; those that exist contain many omissions. Of the Eastern versions – Syriac, Coptic, Amharic, Georgian – the Syriac are considered to be the most reliable. There is an Ethiopic version of the apocalypse which features the Virgin Mary in the place of Paul the Apostle, as the receiver of the vision, known as the Apocalypse of the Virgin.

The lost Greek original was translated into Latin as the Visio Pauli, and was widely copied, with extensive variation coming into the tradition as the text was adapted to suit different historical and cultural contexts; by the eleventh century, there were perhaps three main independent editions of the text. The Visio Pauli also influenced a range of other texts again, particularly Dante's Inferno (2.28), the description of Grendel's home in the Old English poem Beowulf.)

1 The all-holy mother of God was about to proceed to the Mount of Olives to pray; and praying to the Lord our God she said: In the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit; let the archangel Gabriel descend, that he may tell me concerning the chastisements and concerning things in heaven and on the earth and under the earth. And as she said the word the archangel Michael descended with the angels of the East and the West and angels of the South and the North, and they saluted the highly favoured one and said to her: Hail, reflection of the Father, hail dwelling of the Son, hail command of the Holy Spirit, hail firmament of the seven heavens, hail firmament of the eleven strongholds, hail worship of the angels, hail loftier than the prophets unto the throne of God. And the holy mother of God said to the angel: Hail Michael, commander-in-chief, the minister of the invisible Father, hail Michael, commander-in-chief, associate of my Son, hail Michael, commander-in-chief, most dread of the six-winged, hail Michael, commander-in-chief, who rules through all things and art worthy to stand beside the throne of the Lord, hail Michael, commander-in-chief, who art about to sound the trumpet and awaken those who have been asleep for ages: hail Michael, commander-in-chief, first of all unto the throne of God.

2 And having greeted all the angels in like manner, the highly favoured one prayed the commander-in-chief regarding the chastisements, saying: Tell to me all things on the earth. And the commander-in-chief said to her: If you ask me, highly favoured one, I will tell you. And the highly favoured one said to him: How many are the chastisements with which the race of man is chastised? And the archangel said to her: The chastisements are innumerable. And the highly favoured one said to him: Tell me the things in heaven and on the earth.

3 Then the commander-in-chief, Michael, commanded the Western angels that revelation should be made, and Hades opened, and she saw those who were chastised in Hades: and there lay there a multitude of men and women, and there was a great lamentation. And the highly favoured one asked the commander-in-chief: Who are these and what is their sin? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy, are those who did not worship the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit and for this cause they are thus chastised here.

4 And she saw in another place a great darkness: and the all holy said: What is this darkness and who are they who are being chastised? And the commander-in-chief said: Many souls are lying in this darkness. And the all holy one said: Let this darkness be taken away in order that I may see this chastisement also. And the commander-in-chief said to the highly favoured one: It is not possible, all holy, that you should see this chastisement also. And the angels guarding them answered and said: We have a command from the invisible Father that they shall not see the light till your blessed Son shall shine forth. And plunged in grief the all holy lifted up her eyes to the angels touching the undefiled word of the Father, and said: In the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit let the darkness be taken away, that I may see this chastisement also. And straightway that darkness was lifted up and covered the seven heavens: and there lay a great multitude of both men and women, and there arose a great lamentation and a great cry began. And seeing them the all holy wept and said to them: What are you doing, wretched ones? Who are you? And how are you found there? And there was no voice or hearkening. And the angels guarding them said: Why do you not speak to the highly favoured one? And those who were under chastisement said to her: O highly favoured one, from eternity we see not the light, and we are not able to keep off that up there. And splashing pitch flowed down upon them: and seeing them the all holy wept. And again those who were being chastised said to her: How do you ask concerning us, holy lady, Mother of God? Your blessed Son came to The earth and did not make enquiry concerning us, neither Abraham the patriarch, nor John the Baptist, nor Moses the great prophet, nor the Apostle Paul, and unto us their light shone not: and now, all holy Mother of God, the armour of the Christians, the bringer of great comfort on account of the Christians, how do you ask concerning us? Then the all holy Mother of God said to Michael, the commander-in-chief: What is their sin? And Michael, the commander-in-chief, said: These are they who did not believe in the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, and did not confess you to be the Mother of God, and that the Lord Jesus Christ was born of you and took flesh, and for this cause they are chastised there. And again weeping, the all holy Mother of God said to them: Why did ye so greatly err, wretched ones? Did ye not hear that the whole creation names my name? And having said these words the darkness fell over them as it was from the beginning.

5 And the commander-in-chief said: Whither would you go, highly favoured one? To the West or to the South? And the highly favoured answered: Let us go to the South. And immediately there appeared the cherubim and the seraphim and four hundred angels, and led out the highly favoured one to the South, where came out the river of fire, and there there lay a multitude of men and women, some up to the girdle, others up to the neck, and others up to the crown of the head: and seeing them the all holy Mother of God cried out with a loud voice to the commander-in-chief and said: Who are these, and what is their sin who stand in the fire up to the girdle? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy one, are they who inherited the curse of father and mother, and for this cause they are thus chastised here as accursed.

6 And the all holy one said: And who are these standing in the fire up to the breasts? And the commander-in-chief said: These are whosoever cast off their wives and defiled them in adultery, and for this cause they are thus chastised here.

7 And the all holy one said to the commander-in-chief: Who are these standing up to the neck in the flame of the fire? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy one, are whosoever ate of the flesh of men. And the all holy one said: And how is it possible for one man to eat of the flesh of another? And the commander-in-chief said: Listen, all holy one, and I will tell you: These are they whosoever brought down their own children out of their own wombs and cast them out as food for dogs, and whosoever gave up their brothers in the presence of kings and governors, these ate the flesh of man, and for this cause they are thus chastised.

8 And the all holy one said: Who are these set in the fire up to the crown? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy one, are whosoever lay hold of the precious cross and swear to a lie: by the power of the cross of the Lord. The angels tremble and worship with fear, and men lay hold of it and swear to a lie and do not know what they testify: and for this cause they are thus chastised here.

9 And in another place the all holy one saw a man hung by the feet, and worms devoured him. And she asked the commander-in-chief: Who is this and what is his sin? And the commander-in-chief said: This is he who took usury for his gold, and for this cause he is thus chastised here.

10 And she saw a woman hanging by her two ears, and all the beasts came out of her mouth and gnawed her in pieces: and the highly favoured one asked the commander-in-chief: Who is she, and what is her sin? And the commander-in-chief said: She is she who turned aside into strange houses and those of her neighbours and spoke evil words to make strife, and for that cause she is thus chastised here.

11 And seeing these things the all holy Mother of God wept and said to the commander-in-chief: It were well for man that he had not been born. And the commander-in-chief said: Verily, all holy one, you have not seen the great chastisements. And the all holy one said to the commander-in-chief: Come, Michael, great commander-in-chief, and lead me that I may see all the chastisements. And the commander-in-chief said: Where do you wish, all holy one, that we should go? And the highly favoured one answered: To the West: and straightway the cherubim appeared and led the highly favoured to the West.

12 And she saw a cloud full of fire and in it there was a multitude of men and women. And the all holy one said: What was their sin? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy one, are they who on the morning of the Lord's day sleep like the dead, and for that reason they are thus chastised here. And the all holy one said: If anyone cannot rise, what shall he do? And the commander-in-chief said: Listen, all holy one: if anyone's house is fastened on the four (sides?) and surrounds him and he cannot come out, he has forgiveness.

13 And she saw in another place burning benches of fire and on them sat a multitude of men and women and burned on them. And the all holy one asked: Who are these and what is their sin? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy one, are they who do not rise up to the presbyter when they enter into the church of God, and for this cause they are thus chastised here.

14 And the all holy one saw in another place an iron tree and it had branches of iron, and on it there hung a multitude of men and women by their tongues. And seeing them the all holy one wept, and asked the commander-in-chief saying:

Who are these and what was their sin? And the commander-in-chief said: These are perjurers, blasphemers, slanderers, whosoever divided brothers from brothers. And the all holy one said: How is it possible to divide brothers from brothers? And the commander-in-chief said: Listen, all holy one, and I will tell you about this: When some from among the nations desired to be blasphemed, he shall receive ceaseless retribution.

15 And in another place the all holy one saw a man hanging from his four extremities, and from his nails blood gushed vehemently, and his tongue was tied in a flame of fire, and he was unable to groan and say the Kyrie eleison me. And when she had seen him the all holy one wept and herself said the Kyrie eleison thrice: and after the saying of the prayer, came the angel who had authority over the scourge and loosed the man's tongue: and the all holy one asked the commander-in-chief: Who is this wretched one who has this chastisement? And the commander-in-chief said: This, all holy one, is the steward who did not the will of God, but ate the things of the church and said: "He who ministers to the altar shall be nourished from the altar": and for this cause he is thus chastised here. And the all holy one said: Let it be unto him according to his faith. And again he tied his tongue.

16 And Michael, the commander-in-chief said: Come hither, all holy one, and I will show unto you where the priests are chastised. And the all holy one came out and saw presbyters hanging by their twenty nails, and fire came out of their heads. And seeing them the all holy one asked the commander-in-chief: Who are these and what is their sin? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy one, are they who stand beside the throne of God, and when they sang of the body of our Lord Jesus Christ, the pearls fell out, and the awful throne of heaven shook and the footstool of our Lord Jesus Christ trembled, and they did not perceive it: and for this cause they are thus chastised here.

17 And the all holy one saw a man and a winged beast having three heads like flames of fire: the two heads were towards his eyes and the third head towards his mouth. And seeing him the all holy one asked the commander-in-chief: Who is this, that he cannot save himself from the mouth of the dragon? And the commander-in-chief said to her: This, all holy one, is the reader who does not practise in his own habits according to what is worthy of the holy Gospel: and for this cause he is thus chastised here.

18 And the commander-in-chief said: Come hither, all holy one, and I will show you where the angelic and archangelic form is chastised. She proceeded and saw them lying in the fire and the sleepless worm gnawed them: and the all holy one said: Who are these, and what is their sin? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy one, are they who possessed the archangelic and apostolic form: hearken, all holy one, concerning this: on earth they were called patriarchs and bishops, and they were not worthy of their name: on earth they heard 'Bless (the Lord) ye saints,' and in heaven they were not called saints, because they did not act as bearers of the archangelic form: and for this cause they are thus chastised here.

19 And she saw women hanging by their nails, and a flame of fire came out of their mouth and burned them: and all the beasts coming out of the fire gnawed them to pieces, and groaning they cried out: Have pity on us, have pity, for we are chastised worse than all those who are under chastisement. And seeing them the all holy one wept, and asked the commander-in-chief, Michael: Who are these and what is their sin? And the commander-in-chief said: These are the wives of presbyters who did not honour the presbyters, but after the death of the presbyter took husbands, and for this cause they are thus chastised here.

20 And the all holy one saw after the same manner also a deaconess hanging from a crag and a beast with two heads devoured her breasts. And the all holy one asked: What is her sin? And the commander-in-chief said: She, all holy one, is an archdeaconess who defiled her body in fornication, and for this cause she is thus chastised here.

21 And she saw other women hanging over the fire, and all the beasts devoured them. And the all holy one asked the commander-in-chief: Who are these and what is their sin? And he said: These are they who did not do the will of God, lovers of money and those who took interest on accounts, and the immodest.

22 And when she had heard these things the all holy one wept and said: Woe unto sinners. And the commander-in-chief said: Why do you lament, all holy one? Now verily you have not seen the great chastisements. And the highly favoured one said: Come, Michael, the great commander-in-chief of the powers above, tell me how I may see all the chastisements. And the commander-in-chief said: Where do you wish that we should go, all holy one? To the East or towards the left parts of Paradise? And the all holy one said: To the left parts of Paradise.

23 And immediately when she had spoken, the cherubim and seraphim stood beside her and led the highly favoured one out to the left parts of Paradise. And behold, there was a great river, and the appearance of the river was blacker than pitch, and in it there were a multitude of men and women: it boiled like a furnace of forges, and its waves were like a wild sea over the sinners: and when the waves rose, they sank the sinners ten thousand cubits and they were unable to keep it off and say: Have mercy on us, you just judge: for the sleepless worm devoured them, and there was no reckoning of the number of those who devoured them. And seeing the all holy Mother of God the angels who chastised them cried out with one voice: Holy is God who has compassion on account of the Mother of God: we give you thanks, O Son of God, that from eternity we did not see the light, and today through the Mother of God we have seen the light: and again they shouted with one voice, saying: Hail, highly favoured Mother of God: Hail, lamp of the inaccessible light: Hail to you also, Michael, the commander-in-chief, you that are ambassador from the whole creation: for we, seeing the chastisement of sinners are greatly grieved. And the all holy one, when she saw the angels humbled on account of the sinners, lamented and said: Woe to sinners and their neighbours. And the all holy one said: Let us see the sinners. And the highly favoured one, coming with the archangel Michael and all the armies of the angels lifted up one voice saying: Lord have mercy. And after the making of the prayer earnestly, the wave of the river rested and the fiery waves grew calm, and the sinners appeared as a grain of mustard-seed: and seeing them the all holy one lamented and said: What is this river, and what are its waves? And the commander-in-chief said: This river is the outer fire, and those who are being tortured are the Jews who crucified our Lord Jesus Christ the Son of God, and who refused holy baptism, and those who commit fornication and sin against the sweet and passionless perfume of marriage, and he who debauches mother and daughter, and the poisoners and those who slay with the sword, and the women who strangle their offspring. And the all holy one said: According to their faith so be it unto them. And straightway the waves rose over the sinners and the darkness covered them. And the commander-in-chief said: Hearken, you highly favoured one: if anyone shall be cast into this darkness, his remembrance shall never be in the sight of God. And the all holy Mother of God said: Woe to sinners, because the flame of the fire is everlasting.

24 And the commander-in-chief said: Come hither, all holy one, and I will show unto you the lake of fire: and see where the race of the Christians is chastised. And the all holy one proceeded and saw: and some she heard, but others she did not see: and she asked the commander-in-chief: Who are these, and what is their sin? And the commander-in-chief said: These, all holy one, are those who were Christ, but worked the works of the devil and wasted the time of their repentance: and for this cause they are thus chastised here.

25 And she said: I pray, one request will I make of you, let me also be chastised with the Christians, because they are the children of my son. And the commander-in-chief said: Rest in Paradise, holy lady, Mother of God. And the all holy one said: I pray you, move the fourteen firmaments and the seven heavens, and let us pray for the Christians that the Lord our God may hearken unto us and have mercy on them. And the commander-in-chief said: As the Lord God lives, the great name, seven times a day and seven times a night, when we lead up the hymn of the Lord, we make remembrance for the sake of sinners, and the Lord accounts us as naught.

26 And the all holy one said: I pray you, commander-in-chief, command the armies of the angels and let them place me on the height of heaven and let me into the presence of the invisible Father. And immediately the commander-in-chief commanded, and the chariot of the cherubim and seraphim appeared, and they exalted the highly favoured one to the height of heaven and placed her in the presence of the invisible Father: And she stretched forth her hands to the undefiled throne of the Father and said: Have mercy, O Lord, on the Christian sinners, for I saw them being chastised and I cannot bear their complaint. Let me go forth and be chastised myself for the Christians. I do not pray, O Lord, for the unbelieving Jews, but for the Christians I entreat your compassion. And there came a second voice from the invisible Father saying: How can I have mercy on them, when they did not have mercy on their own brothers? And the all holy one said: Lord, have mercy on the sinners: behold the chastisements, for every creature on the earth calls upon my name: and when the soul comes forth out of the body, it cries saying, "Holy Lady, Mother of God." Then the Lord said to her: Hearken, all holy Mother of God, if anyone names and calls upon your name, I will not forsake him, either in heaven or on earth.

27 And the all holy one said: Where is Moses? Where are all the prophets and fathers who never sinned? Where are you, holy Paul of God? Where is the holy Lord's Day, the boast of the Christians? Where is the power of the precious and life-giving cross, which delivered Adam and Eve from the ancient curse? Then Michael and all the angels raised one voice saying: Lord, have mercy on the sinners. Then Moses also cried: Have mercy, Lord, on those to whom I gave your law. Then John also called: Have mercy, Lord, on those to whom I gave your Gospel. Then Paul cried: Have mercy, Lord, on those to whom I brought your epistles in the Church. And the Lord God said: Hearken, all you righteous: if according to the law which Moses gave, and according to the Gospel which John gave, and according to the epistles which Paul carried, they thus were judged. And they had nothing to say except, Have mercy, O just judge.

28 And the all holy Mother of God said: Have mercy, Lord, on the Christians, because they kept your law and gave heed to your gospel, but they were simple ones. Then the Lord said to her: Hearken, all holy one: if anyone did evil to them and they did not requite him the evil, you say well that they attended to both my law and my gospel, but if he did not do them wrong and they requited him evil, how may I say that these are holy men? Now they shall be rewarded according to their wrongdoing. Then all hearing the voice of the Lord had nothing to answer; and the all holy one, when she saw that the saints were at a loss, and their Lord did not hear, and his mercy was hidden from them, then the all holy one said: Where is Gabriel, who announced unto me the "Hail, you that from eternity shall conceive him who is without beginning like the Father," and now does not look upon sinners? Where is the great commander-in-chief? Come hither, all you saints whom God justified, and let us fall down in the presence of the invisible Father, in order that the Lord God may hear us, and have mercy on sinners. Then Michael, the commander-in-chief, and all the saints fell on their faces in the presence of the invisible Father, saying: Have mercy, Lord, on the Christian sinners.

29 Then the Lord, seeing the prayer of the saints, had compassion and said: Go down, my beloved son, and because of the prayer of the saints let your face shine on earth to sinners. Then the Lord came down from his undefiled throne: and when they saw Him, those who were under chastisement raised one voice saying: Have mercy on us, King of ages. Then the Lord of all things said: Hearken, all you sinners and righteous men: I made paradise and made man after my image: but he transgressed, and for his own sins was delivered to death: but I did not suffer the works of my hands to be tyrannized over by the serpent: wherefore I bowed the heavens and came down and was born of Mary, the holy undefiled Mother of God, that I might set you free: I was sin: I was nailed to the cross to free you from the ancient curse: I asked for water and you gave me vinegar mingled with gall: I was laid in the grave: I trampled on the enemy: I raised up mine elect, and even thus ye would not hear me. But now, because of the prayer of my mother Mary, because she has wept much for your sake, and because of Michael my archangel, and because of the multitude of my saints, I grant you to have rest on the day of Pentecost to glorify the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit.

30 Then all the angels and archangels, thrones, lordships, authorities, governments, powers, and the many-eyed cherubim and the six-winged seraphim and all the apostles and prophets and martyrs and all the saints raised one voice, saying: Glory to you, O Lord: glory to you, lover of men: glory to you, King of ages: glory be to your compassion: glory be to your long suffering: glory be to your unspeakable justice of judgement, because you have been long-suffering with sinners and impious men: Yours is it to pity and to save. To him be the glory and the power to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Spirit for ever and ever. Amen.

THE APOCALYPSE OF STEPHEN

The Revelation of Stephen
From The Apocryphal New Testament
Translation: Montague Rhodes James, 1924
Estimated Range of Dating: 2nd - 4th century A.D.

[The Apocalypse or Revelation of Stephen is one of the New Testament apocrypha's texts and was condemned as such by the Roman Church in a Decree by Gelasius, like the Apocalypse of Thomas. The Stephen in question is one of the Seven Deacons to the Apostles. The text describes a conflict at the very beginnings of Christianity about the nature of Jesus of Nazareth. Stephen appears on the scene and recounts Revelation as a literal truth, to which the crowd declare blasphemy, and Caiaphas has him arrested and beaten. The text then has Stephen appear before Pilate whom he tells to not speak, and orders him to recognize Jesus. The tale is set before Paul of Tarsus' conversion, and so proceeds to describe how Paul persecutes Stephen by having him crucified. However, an angel rescues Stephen, so Saul / Paul has molten lead poured into his mouth and ears, and nails into his heart and feet, but an angel heals him again.

The next day, the text proclaims that Stephen was led out to be judged before the crowd, but instead Stephen recounts a supposed prophecy by Nathan of Jesus' coming, which annoys the guards to the extent that they bind him and take him to the head of the guard. The Sanhedrin decide that Stephen should be stoned, but Nicodemus and Gamaliel (the Jewish scholar) try to defend him with their bodies, dying in the process. After ten hours, Stephen eventually dies, and is buried in a silver coffin by Pilate, against Stephen's wishes. An angel moves the body to where Stephen wished to be buried, making Pilate shocked by the loss of the bodies. Pilate then receives a vision of Stephen, and converts. Likewise the memory of Stephen is said by the text to have made Paul convert.

Many scholars think that Pilate was a later addition to the text, the involvement of Pilate in the story looking somewhat clumsy, and the text being primarily an attempt to explain Paul's motives for conversion, but also his prior villainy. The text also highlights Stephen as the first ever Christian martyr. The substance of the story is this:)

Two years after the Ascension there was a contest about Jesus. Many learned men had assembled at Jerusalem from Ethiopia, the Thebaid, Alexandria, Jerusalem, Asia, Mauretania and Babylon. There was a great clamour among them like thunder, lasting till the fourth hour.

Stephen, a learned man of the tribe of Benjamin, stood on a high place and addressed the assembly. Why this tumult? said he. Blessed is he who has not doubted concerning Jesus. Born of a pure virgin he filled the world with light. By Satan's contrivances Herod slew 14,000 (144,000) children. He spoke of the miracles of Jesus. Woe to the unbelievers when he shall come as judge, with angels, a fiery chariot, a mighty wind: the stars shall fall, the heavens open, the books be brought forward. The twelve angels who are set over every soul shall unveil the deeds of men. The sea shall move and give up what is in it. The mountains fall, all the surface of the earth becomes smooth. Great winged thrones are set. The Lord, and Christ, and the Holy Spirit take their seats. The Father bids Jesus sit on his right hand.

At this point the crowd cried out: Blasphemy! and took Stephen before Pilate.

Pilate stood on the steps and reproached them: You compelled me to crucify the Innocent; why rage against this man? Why gnash your teeth? Are ye yet foolish?

They led Stephen away. Caiaphas ordered him to be beaten till the blood ran. And he prayed: Lay not this sin to their charge. We saw how angels ministered to him.

In the morning Pilate called his wife and two children: they baptised themselves and praised God.

Three thousand men now assembled and disputed with Stephen for three days and three nights. On the fourth day they took counsel and sent to Caesarea of Palestine for Saul of Tarsus, who had a commission to seize upon Christians. He took his place on the judgement seat and said: I wonder that thou, a wise man, and my kinsman, believest all this. None of the Sanhedrin have given up the Law. I have been through all Judaea, Galilee, Peraea, Damascus, and the city of the Jesuites to seek out believers.

Stephen lifted up his hands and said: Silence, persecutor! Recognize the Son of God. Thou makest me doubt of my own descent. But I see that thou shalt ere long drink of the same cup as I. What thou doest, do quickly. Saul rent his clothes and beat Stephen. Gamaliel, Saul's teacher, sprang forth and gave Saul a buffet, saying: Did I teach thee such conduct? know that what this man saith is acceptable and good.

Saul was yet more enraged, and looked fiercely on him, saying: I spare thine old age, but thou shalt reap a due reward for this. Gamaliel answered: I ask nothing better than to suffer with Christ. The elders rent their clothes, cast dust on their heads, and cried: Crucify the blasphemers.

Saul said: Guard them until the morrow. Next day he sat on the judgement seat and had them brought before him, and they were led away to be crucified. An angel came and cast away the cross, and Stephen's wounds were healed. Seven men came and poured molten lead into his mouth and pitch into his ears. They drove nails into his breast and feet, and he prayed for their forgiveness. Again an angel came down and healed him, and a great multitude believed.

Next day all assembled and took him out of the city to judge him. He mounted upon a stone and addressed them: How long will ye harden your hearts? The Law and the Prophets spake of Christ. In the first Law, and the second, and the other books it is written: When the year of the covenant cometh I will send my beloved angel, the good spirit of sonship, from a pure maiden, the fruit of truth, without ploughshare and without seed, and an image of sowing (?), and the fruit shall grow after the . . . of planting for ever from the word of my covenant, and signs shall come to pass. And Isaiah saith: Unto us a child is born, &c. And again: Behold, a virgin shall conceive, &c. And the prophet Nathan said: I saw one, a maiden and without touch of man, and a man child in her arms, and that was the Lord of the earth unto the end of the earth. And again the prophet Baruch saith: Christ the eternal appeareth as a stone from the mountain and breaketh in pieces the idol temples of the . . . David also said: Arise, O Lord, unto thy resting place, &c. Understand then, O foolish ones, what the prophet saith: In this word shalt thou judge.

And he looked up to heaven and said: I see the heaven opened and the Son of man standing at the right hand of God.

Then they laid hands on him, saying: He blasphemeth! Gamaliel said: Wherein? This righteous man hath seen the Son saying to the Father: Lo, the Jews rage against me and cease not to ill-treat them that confess my name. And the Father said: Sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool.

Then they bound Stephen and took him away to Alexander, the reader, who was a chief of the people, and of the troop in Tiberias.

In the fourth watch of the night, a light as of lightning shone round about him, and a voice said: Be strong. Thou art my first martyr, and thine hour is nigh. I will write the record of thee in the book of everlasting life.

The Jews took counsel and decreed that he should be stoned. There were with him Abibas, Nicodemus, Gamaliel, Pilate, his wife and two children, and a multitude of believers. Saul stood forth and beckoned, and said: It would have been better that this man should not be slain, because of his great wisdom: but forasmuch as he is an apostate, I condemn Stephen to be stoned. The people said: He shall be stoned: but those who stood in the front rank with staves looked on each other and durst not lay hands on him: for he was renowned among the people.

Saul was wroth, and stripped those servants of their garments and laid them on the table; and commanded the men to stone Stephen.

Stephen looked round and said: Saul, Saul, that which thou doest unto me to-day, that same will the Jews do unto thee tomorrow. And when thou sufferest, thou shalt think on me.

The people cast stones upon him so thickly that the light of the sun was darkened. Nicodemus and Gamaliel put their arms about him and shielded him, and were slain, and gave up their souls to Christ.

Stephen prayed, saying: Forgive them that stone us, for by their means we trust to enter into thy kingdom. And at the tenth hour he gave up the ghost. Then beautiful youths appeared, and fell upon the bodies and wept aloud: and the people beheld the souls borne up by angels into heaven, and saw the heavens open and the hosts coming to meet the souls. And the people mourned for three days and three nights.

Pilate took the bodies and put each one into a silver coffin with his name upon it: but Stephen's coffin was gilt: and he laid them in his secret sepulchre. But Stephen prayed: Let my body be buried in my land of Serasima in Kapogemala (Caphargamala) until the revealing, when the martyrs that follow me shall be gathered together. And an angel came and removed the bodies thither.

But Pilate rose early to burn incense before the bodies, and found them not; and rent his clothes, saying: Was I then not worthy to be thy servant? On the night following, Stephen appeared and said to him: Weep not. I prayed God to hide our bodies. In the time of our revealing one of thy seed shall find us after a vision, and thy desire shall be fulfilled. But build a house of prayer and celebrate our feast in the month of April. After seven months thou shalt rest. And Pilate did so: and he died, and was buried at Kapartasala: and his wife also died in peace. But the holy martyrs appeared thrice to venerable and believing men, speaking to them, and revealing divine words: for after their death many believed.

[One of Franko's two manuscripts omits all mention of Pilate, who is indeed not necessary to the story. The statements about him are quite irreconcilable with other legends, even those of the Eastern Church which take the favourable view of him.

Franko is clearly right in saying that this romance implies a continuation, and most likely right in holding that the Lucian-narrative implies a previous story. But the extravagance of the Slavonic text is such that one cannot but think it has been improved by the translator: and if Pilate could be gratuitously inserted -as I think he has been- by one redactor, others may equally well have been at work.]

REVELATION OF JOHN THE THEOLOGIAN

or The Revelation of John of Patmos
From Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. 8
Edited by Alexander Roberts, James Donaldson.
Translation: Alexander Walker, 1886
Estimated Range of Dating: 2nd - 4th century A.D

[The Revelation of St. John the theologian is a manuscript which is preserved in the anti-Nicene fathers volume 8. It is a companion book to the last book of our Bible the Revelation of John. However where as the revelation in the Bible is shared in parable form and difficult to understand especially for those that are dedicated scholars of Scripture. The Revelation of St. John the theologian explains in great detail and without having to decipher riddle, the timeline of what will happen at the end of days.

The author of the canonical Book of Revelation identifies himself only as "John". Traditionally, this was often believed to be the same person as John, son of Zebedee, one of the apostles of Jesus, to whom the Gospel of John was also attributed. The early-2nd-century writer, Justin Martyr, was the first to equate the author of Revelation with John the Evangelist. Other early Christian writers, however, such as Dionysius of Alexandria and Eusebius of Caesarea, noting the differences in language and theological outlook between this work and the Gospel, discounted this possibility, and argued for the exclusion of the Book of Revelation from the canon as a result. The early Christian writer Papias appeared in his writings to distinguish between John the Evangelist and John the Elder, and many biblical scholars now contend that the latter was the author of Revelation.

John of Patmos (also called John the Revelator, John the Divine, John the Theologian, and possibly John the Apostle.) could be the author named as John in the Book of Revelation, the apocalyptic text forming the final book of the New Testament. The text of Revelation states that John was on Patmos, a Greek island where, by most biblical historians, he is considered to have been exiled as a result of persecution of members of the ancient Messianic Movement under the Roman emperor Titus Flavius Domitianus. The story of the persecution is pretty much in the dark. Sure is only that the different Christian groups condemned each other as heretics and were persecuting one another.

Since the Roman era, Christians and historians have considered the Book of Revelation's writer to be the Apostle John (John the Evangelist), author of the Gospel of John. However, a minority of senior clerics and scholars, such as Eusebius (d. 339/340), recognise at least one further John as a companion of Jesus Christ, John the Presbyter "after an interval, placing him among others outside of the number of the apostles". Some Christian scholars since medieval times separate the disciple(s) from Revelation's writer, John of Patmos/the Divine.)

1 After the taking up of our Lord Jesus Christ, I John was alone upon Mount Tabor, (1) where also He showed us His undefiled Godhead; and as I was not able to stand, I fell upon the ground, and prayed to the Lord, and said: O Lord my God, who hast deemed me worthy to be Thy servant, hear my voice, and teach me about Thy coming. When Thou shalt come to the earth, what will happen? The heaven and the earth, and the sun and the moon, what will happen to them in those times? Reveal to me all; for I am emboldened, because Thou listenest to Thy servant.

2 And I spent seven days praying; and after this a cloud of light caught me up from the mountain, and set me before the face of the heaven. And I heard a voice saying to me: Look up, John, servant of God, and know. And having looked up, I saw the heaven opened, and there came forth from within the heaven a smell of perfumes of much sweet odour; and I saw an exceeding great flood of light, more resplendent than the sun. And again I heard a voice saying to me: Behold, righteous John. And I directed my sight, and saw a book lying, of the thickness, methought, of seven mountains; (2) and the length of it the mind of man cannot comprehend, having seven seals. And I said: O Lord my God, reveal to me what is written in this book. And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. In this book which thou seest there have been written the things in the heaven, and the things in the earth, and the things in the abyss, and the judgements and righteousness of all the human race. (3) And I said: Lord, when shall these things come to pass? and what do those times bring? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. (4) There shall be in that time abundance of corn and wine, such as there hath never been upon the earth, nor shall ever be until those times come. Then the ear of corn shall produce a half choenix, (5) and the bend of the branch shall produce a thousand clusters, and the cluster shall produce a half jar of wine; and in the following year there shall not be found upon the face of all the earth a half choenix of corn or a half jar of wine.

3 And again I said: Lord, thereafter what wilt Thou do? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Then shall appear the denier, and he who is set apart in the darkness, who is called Antichrist. And again I said: Lord, reveal to me what he is like. And I heard a voice saying to me: The appearance of his face is dusky; (6) the hairs of his head are sharp, like darts; his eyebrows like a wild beast's; his right eye like the star which rises in the morning, and the other like a lion's; his mouth about one cubit; his teeth span long; his fingers like scythes; the print of his feet of two spans; and on his face an inscription, Antichrist; he shall be exalted even to heaven, and shall be cast down even to Hades, making false displays. (7) And then will I make the heaven brazen, so that it shall not give moisture (8) upon the earth; and I will hide the clouds in secret places, so that they shall not bring moisture upon the earth; and I will command the horns of the wind, so that the wind shall not blow upon the earth. (9)

4 And again I said: Lord, and how many years will he do this upon the earth? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Three years shall those times be; and I will make the three years like three months, and the three months like three weeks, and the three weeks like three days, and the three days like three hours, and the three hours like three seconds, as said the prophet David, His throne hast Thou broken down to the ground; Thou hast shortened the days of his time; Thou hast poured shame upon him. (1) And then I shall send forth Enoch and Elias to convict him; and they shall show him to be a liar and a deceiver; and he shall kill them at the altar, as said the prophet, Then shall they offer calves upon Thine altar. (2)

5 And again I said: Lord, and after that what will come to pass? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Then all the human race shall die, and there shall not be a living man upon all the earth. And again I said: Lord, after that what wilt Thou do? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Then will I send forth mine angels, and they shall take the ram's horns that lie upon the cloud; and Michael and Gabriel shall go forth out of the heaven and sound with those horns, as the prophet David foretold, With the voice of a trumpet of horn. (3) And the voice of the trumpet shall be heard from the one quarter of the world to the other; (4) and from the voice of that trumpet all the earth shall be shaken, as the prophet foretold, And at the voice of the bird every plant shall arise; (5) that is, at the voice of the archangel all the human race shall arise. (6)

6 And again I said: Lord, those who are dead froth Adam even to this day, and who dwell in Hades from the beginning of the world, and who die at the last ages, what like shall they arise? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. All the human race shall arise thirty years old.

7 And again I said: Lord, they die male and female, and some old, and some young, and some infants. In the resurrection what like shall they arise? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Just as the bees are, and differ not one from another, but are all of one appearance and one size, so also shall every man be in the resurrection. There is neither fair, nor ruddy, nor black, neither Ethiopian nor different countenances; but they shall all arise of one appearance and one stature. All the human race shall arise without bodies, as I told you that in the resurrection

8 And again I said: Lord, is it possible in that world to recognise each other, a brother his brother, or a friend his friend, or a father his own children, or the children their own parents? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, John. To the righteous there is recognition, but to the sinners not at all; they cannot in the resurrection recognise each other. And again I John said: Lord, is there there recollection of the things that are here, either fields or vineyards, or other things here? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. The prophet David speaks, saying, I remembered that we are dust: as for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so he shall flourish: for a wind hath passed over it, and it shall be no more, and it shall not any longer know its place. (8) And again the same said: His spirit (9) shall go forth, and he returns to his earth; in that day all his thoughts shall perish. (10)

9 And again I said: Lord, and after that what wilt Thou do? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Then will I send forth mine angels over the face of all the earth, and they shall lift off the earth everything honourable, and everything precious, and the venerable and holy images, and the glorious and precious crosses, and the sacred vessels of the churches, and the divine and sacred books; and all the precious and holy things shall be lifted up by clouds into the air. And then will I order to be lifted up the great and venerable sceptre, (11) on which I stretched forth my hands, and all the orders of my angels shall do reverence to it. And then shall be lifted up all the race of men upon clouds, as the Apostle Paul foretold. (12) Along with them we shall be snatched up in (13) clouds to meet the Lord in the air. And then shall come forth every evil spirit, both in the earth and in the abyss, wherever they are on the face of all the earth, from the rising of the sun even to the setting, and they shall be united to him that is served by the devil, that is, Antichrist, and they shall be lifted up upon the clouds.

10 And again I said: Lord, and after that what wilt Thou do? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Then shall I send forth mine angels over the face of all the earth, and they shall burn up the earth eight thousand five hundred (1) cubits, and the great mountains shall be burnt up, and all the rocks shall be melted and shall become as dust, and every tree shall be burnt up, and every beast, and every creeping thing creeping upon the earth, and every thing moving upon the face of the earth, and every flying thing flying in the air; and there shall no longer be upon the face of all the earth anything moving, and the earth shall be without motion.

11 And again I said: Lord, and after that what wilt Thou do? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Then shall I uncover the four parts of the east, and there shall come forth four great winds, and they shall sweep (2) all the face of the earth from the one end of the earth to the other; and the Lord shall sweep sin from off the earth, and the earth shall be made white like snow, and it shall become as a leaf of paper, without cave, or mountain, or hill, or rock; but the face of the earth from the rising even to the setting of the sun shall be like a table, and white as snow; and the reins of the earth shall be consumed by fire, and it shall cry unto me, saying, I am a virgin before thee, O Lord, and there is no sin in me; as the prophet David said aforetime, Thou shall sprinkle me with hyssop, and I shall be made pure; Thou shalt wash me, and I shall be made whiter than snow. (3) And again he (4) said: Every chasm shall be filled up, and every mountain and hill brought low, and the crooked places shall be made straight, and the rough ways into smooth; and all flesh shall see the salvation of God. (5)

12 And again I said: Lord, and after that what wilt Thou do? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. Then shall the earth be cleansed from sin, and all the earth shall be filled with a sweet smell, because I am about to come down upon the earth; and then shall come forth the great and venerable sceptre, with thousands of angels worshipping it, as I said before; and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man from the heaven with power and great glory. (6) And then the worker of iniquity with his servants shall behold it, and gnash his teeth exceedingly, and all the unclean spirits shall be turned to flight. And then, seized by invisible power, having no means of flight, they shall gnash their teeth against him, saying to him: Where is thy power? How hast thou led us astray? and we have fled away, and have fallen away from the glory which we had beside Him who is coming to judge us, and the whole human race. Woe to us! because He banishes us into outer darkness.

13 And again I said: Lord, and after that what wilt Thou do? And I heard a voice saying to me: Then will I send an angel out of heaven, and he shall cry with a loud voice, saying, Hear, O earth, and be strong, saith the Lord; for I am coming down to thee. And the voice of the angel shall be heard from the one end of the world even to the other, and even to the remotest part of the abyss. And then shall be shaken all the power of the angels and of the many-eyed ones, and there shall be a great noise in the heavens, and the nine regions of the heaven shall be shaken, and there shall be fear and astonishment upon all the angels. And then the heavens shall be rent from the rising of the sun even to the setting, and an innumerable multitude of angels shall come down to the earth; and then the treasures of the heavens shall be opened, and they shall bring down every precious thing, and the perfume of incense, and they shall bring down to the earth Jerusalem robed like a bride. (7) And then there shall go before me myriads of angels and archangels, bearing my throne, crying out, Holy, holy, holy, Lord of Sabaoth; heaven and earth are full of Thy glory. (8) And then will I come forth with power and great glory, and every eye in (9) the clouds shall see me; and then every knee shall bend, of things in heaven, and things on earth, and things under the earth. (10) And then the heaven shall remain empty; and I will come down upon the earth, and all that is in the air shall be brought down upon the earth, and all the human race and every evil spirit along with Antichrist, and they shall all be set before me naked, and chained by the neck.

14 And again I said: Lord, what will become of the heavens, and the sun, and the moon, along with the stars? And I heard a voice saying to me: Behold, righteous John. And I looked, and saw a Lamb having seven eyes and seven horns. (11) And again I heard a voice saying to me: I will bid the Lamb come before me, and will say, Who will open this book? And all the multitudes of the angels will answer, Give this book to the Lamb to open it. And then will I order the book to be opened. And when He shall open the first seal, the stars of the heaven shall fall, from the one end of it to the other. And when He shall open the second seal, the moon shall be hidden, and there shall be no light in her. And when He shall open the third seal, the light of the sun shall be withheld, and there shall not be light upon the earth. And when He shall open the fourth seal, the heavens shall be dissolved, and the air shall be thrown into utter confusion, as saith the prophet: And the heavens are the works of Thy hands; they shall perish, but Thou endurest, and they shall all wax old as a garment. (1) And when He shall open the fifth seal, the earth shall be rent, and all the tribunals upon the face of all the earth shall be revealed. And when He shall open the sixth seal, the half of the sea shall disappear. And when He shall open the seventh seal, Hades shall be uncovered.

15 And I said: Lord, who will be the first to be questioned, and to receive judgement? And I heard a voice saying to me, The unclean spirits, along with the adversary. I bid them go into outer darkness, where the depths (2) are. And I said: Lord, and in what place does it lie? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. As big a stone as a man of thirty years old can roll, and let go down into the depth, even falling down for twenty years will not arrive at the bottom of Hades; as the prophet David said before, And He made darkness His secret place. (3)

16 And I said: Lord, and after them what nation (4) will be questioned? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. There will be questioned of Adam's race those nations, both the Greek and those who have believed in idols, and in the sun, and in the stars, and those who have defiled the faith by heresy, and who have not believed the holy resurrection, and who have not confessed the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost: then will I send them away into Hades, as the prophet David foretold, Let the sinners be turned into Hades, and all the nations that forget God. (6) And again he said: They were put in Hades like sheep; death shall be their shepherd. (7)

17 And again I said: Lord, and after them whom wilt Thou judge? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John.

THE GRAND BIBLE

Then the race of the Hebrews shall be examined, who nailed me to the tree like a malefactor. And I said: And what punishment will these get, and in what place, seeing that they did such things to Thee? And I heard a voice saying to me: They shall go away into Tartarus, as the prophet David foretold, They cried out, and there was none to save; to the Lord, and He did not hearken to them. (8) And again the Apostle Paul said: As many as have sinned without law shall also perish without law, and as many as have sinned in law shall be judged by means of law. (9)

18 And again I said: Lord, and what of those who have received baptism? And I heard a voice saying to me: Then the race of the Christians shall be examined, who have received baptism; and then the righteous shall come at my command, and the angels shall go and collect (10) them from among the sinners, as the prophet David foretold: The Lord will not suffer the rod of the sinners in the lot of the righteous; (11) and all the righteous shall be placed on my right hand, (12) and shall shine like the sun. (13) As thou seest, John, the stars of heaven, that they were all made together, but differ in light, (14) so shall it be with the righteous and the sinners; for the righteous shall shine as lights and as the sun, but the sinners shall stand in darkness.

19 And again I said: Lord, and do all the Christians go into one punishment?--kings, high priests, priests, patriarchs, rich and poor, bond and free? And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. As the prophet David foretold, The expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever. (15) Now about kings: they shall be driven like slaves, and shall weep like infants; and about patriarchs, and priests, and Levites, of those that have sinned, they shall be separated in their punishments, according to the nature (16) of the peculiar transgression of each--some in the river of fire, and some to the worm that dieth not, and others in the seven-mouthed pit of punishment. To these punishments the . . .

20 And again I said: Lord, and where will the righteous dwell? And I heard a voice saying to me: Then shall paradise be revealed; and the whole world and paradise shall be made one, and the righteous shall be on the face of all the earth with my angels, as the Holy Spirit foretold through the prophet David: The righteous shall inherit the earth, and dwell therein for ever and ever. (17)

21 And again I said: Lord, how great is the multitude of the angels? and which is the greater, that of angels or of men? And I heard a voice saying to me: As great as is the multitude of the angels, so great is the race of men, as the prophet has said, He set bounds to the nations according to the number of the angels of God. (18) And again I said: Lord, and after that what wilt Thou do? and what is to become of the world? Reveal to me all. And I heard a voice saying to me: Hear, righteous John. After that there is no pain, there is no grief, there is no groaning; there is no recollection of evils, there are no tears, there is no envy, there is no hatred of brethren, there is no unrighteousness, there is no arrogance, there is no slander, there is no bitterness, there are none of the cares of life, there is no pain from parents or children, there is no pain from gold, there are no wicked thoughts, there is no devil, there is no death, there is no night, but all is day. (1) As I said before, And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold, that is, men who have been made like the angels through their excellent course of life; there also must I bring, and they will hear my voice, and there shall be one fold, one shepherd. (2)

22 And again I heard a voice saying to me: Behold, thou hast heard all these things, righteous John; deliver them to faithful men, that they also may teach others, and not think lightly of them, (3) nor cast our pearls before swine, lest perchance they should trample them with their feet. (4)

23 And while I was still hearing this voice, the cloud brought me down, and put me on Mount Thabor. And there came a voice to me, saying: Blessed are those who keep judgement and do righteousness in all time. (5) And blessed is the house where this description lies, as the Lord said, He that loveth me keepeth my sayings (6) in Christ Jesus our Lord; to Him be glory for ever. Amen. (7)

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 1

1 The revelation of Jesus Christ by means of which (or whom) God gave to shew to his servants whatever is about to come to be shortly, and signified, sending by means of his angel to John his servant.

2 Who witnessed of the word of God, and the witness of Jesus Christ, what he saw and what was, and what was to be after this.

3 Blessed he who shall read out or listen to the word of the prophecy, and shall keep what therein is written. For the time is near.

4 From John to the seven churches which are in Asia, Grace with you and peace from the existent and from him which is and which is to come, and from the seven powers of the spirit, which is before his throne;

5 And from Jesus Christ, the faithful witness, who is eldest among the dead, and ruler of kingdoms of earth, who loved us and loosed the bonds of our sins by his blood.

6 And made us worthy of his kingdom, and priests unto God and his father, to him glory and might unto aeons of aeons, Amen.

7 Behold, he about to come with the clouds of heaven, and they shall see, all eyes and they who pierced him, and there shall see all extremes of earth. Yea, Amen.

8 And he saith, I am Ayb* and I am Qe*, saith the Lord who is unto aeons, and who is about to come, Lord almighty. [* Ayb is 1st letter of the Armenian alphabet, Qe is here the last; meaning Alpha to Omega, "from the beginning to the end".]

9 I John, your brother and participator in tribulation and kingdom and patience unto Christ Jesus with much boldness do write unto you. I was in the island which is called by name Patmos, because of the word of God and because of the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10 And there was in me the spirit holy on the day dominical, and I heard a great voice behind me, as the voice of a trumpet

11 Which said to me, what thou beholdest, write in a book and send it to the seven churches which are in Ephesus and in Smyrna and in Pergonia and in Thyatria and in Serdis and in Phrygia and in Laulodika.

12 And I was coming to see him who he is which speaks with me; and in my turning I saw seven candlesticks of gold and 13 In the midst of the candlesticks like to a son of man, clothed in a garment down to the feet and girt about the breasts with a girdle of gold.

14 And on his head and hair as wool white, and his eyes as flame of fire.

15 And his feet likened to brass of Libanon refined amidst a furnace fiery; and his voice as voice of waters many.

16 And he had in his right hand stars seven; and from his mouth proceeded a sword two-mouthed sharp, and his countenance like the sun flashing appeared.

17 And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as if dead; and he laid upon me his right, and saith to me, Fear not, I am beginning and I am end.

18 I am life, and I am who died, and behold, I am alive to aeons of aeons. And I have the keys of death and hell.

19 Write what thou seest, what is, and what hereafter is about to come to pass after this.

20 The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and of the seven[-branched] candlesticks* of gold; and the seven stars, of the seven churches are the angels; and the seven candlesticks are the seven churches.

* The Menorah from the "Second Temple" was carried to Rome after the fall of Jerusalem in 70 AD during the Roman Jewish War 66-73 AD. The historian Titus Flavius Josephus states that it was brought to Rome during the triumph of Vespasian and Titus. The bas relief on the Arch of Titus in Rome depicts a scene of Roman soldiers carrying away the seven-branched candelabrum. For centuries, the Menorah was displayed as a war trophy at the Temple of Peace in Rome, a Roman temple paid for with spoils taken from the conquered city of Jerusalem. After the 455 Sack of Rome, the Menorah was taken by the Vandals to their capital, Carthage. The Eastern Roman army under General Flavius Belisarius might have removed it in 533 and brought it to Constantinople. According to the historian Procopius of Caesarea (c. 500-565), it was carried through the streets of Constantinople during Belisarius' triumphal procession. Procopius adds that the Menorah was later sent back to Jerusalem where there is no record of it. It could have been destroyed when Jerusalem was pillaged by the Persians in 614 AD.]

1 Therefore to the angels of the Ephesians' church write, Thus saith he who holdeth stars seven in his right hand, and walketh in the midst of the seven[-branched] candlesticks of gold,

2 I know thy works and thy toils and patience. And I know that thou bearest not the evil ones whom thou didst test: them who called themselves apostles, and were not, and thou foundest them false and horest them.

3 And thou wast patient and in tribulation for my name's sake, and hast toiled.

4 But I say unto thee and unto thy love, the first thou didst leave me.

5 Remember whence thou art fallen and repent* and thy first works do. But if not, I come, and will move thy candlestick out of its place, if thou repent not. [Anti-Jewish propaganda implying the Jews be guilty of something. The entire Christian and Islamic literature is full of this kind of hate-mongering "Anti-Semitism" which led to countless programmes and the Holocaust committed by Hitler's German Empire.]

6 But this I will do, that thou mayest hate the work of Nicolaus, which (or whom) I hate.

7 He that hath ears of hearing, let him hear what the spirit holy saith to the churches. They that shall be found conquerors, and having acquitted themselves bravely, I will give him to eat of the tree of life, which is in the garden of my God.

8 And to the angels of the Smyranean's church write thus: Thus saith he that is without beginning and without end, who became dead for our sake and for the church's sake.

9 I know thy works and tribulation and labours, thy poverty shall be for riches and not unto trials, and the blasphemies which the Jews wrought against thee, do I know. For (or that) they reckon themselves that they may be something, but they are a synagogue of Satan.

10 Fear thou not, for although they are about to torment thee, behold Satan wills to cast some of you into prison, and into trials, and into straits of tribulation for ten days. Stand thou firm and be faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life.

11 He that hath ears of hearing, let him hear what the holy spirit saith to the churches. They that shall be found victorious, shall not be afraid of the second death.

12 And to the angels of the Pergameans' church write: Thus saith he that hath the sword two-mouthed sharp:

13 I know thy works and where thou dwellest, where is set the throne of Satan. But they hold my name, and thou hast not denied my faith in these days, all who are witnesses faithful, who for my sake died among you: unto temptation and unto the dwelling of Satan among some of you.

14 But I say to thee because there abides with thee the teaching of Balam who taught Balak to place a stumblingblock in front of the children of Israel, for them to eat the things sacrificed* and to fornicate with the daughters of the gentiles. [* Quotation of a hidden letter of James the Just, the brother of Jesus, that we can read in the Book of Acts 15:13-20 in which he reminds his Jewish-Christian movement to obey the Laws of Moses, to live a life of righteousness, that is to abstain from things sacrificed to idols and from blood and from things strangled (carion) and from fornication. The words of James in Acts are also in the Qumran MMT document, in which James, the Teacher of Righteousness, repeats the same passage twice: 4Q394 3-7 i conflated with 4Q395 as well as 4Q396 1-2 i conflated with 4Q397 6-13.]

15 Thus also thou hast the teaching of Nicolaus.

16 Do thou therefore repent. But if not, I come quickly, and will make war against them with the sword of my mouth.

17 He that hath ears of hearing let him hear what the spirit holy saith to the churches. They that be found victorious, I will give him food from the tree of life; and I will give him the writing of holiness, and will mingle his name in the numbers of the saints who hold my name.

18 And to the angels of the Thivatireans write: Thus saith the Son of God, whose eyes are as a flame of fire, and his feet likened unto brass of Libanon:

19 I know thy love and thy works and thy patience and the faith of thy holiness, that thy last works have become more than the first.

20 But I say unto thee much, that thou hast abandoned thy wife Zezabel, who declared herself a prophetess, and taught unto my servants error, to fornicate and eat the thing sacrificed.

21 Vouchsafed her time of repentance, and she hath not repented of her fornication.

22 Behold I cast her into a furnace, and her fornicators into great tribulation, unless they shall repent of their evil works.

23 And their children I will slay with death, and all the churches shall know that I am he who do search hearts and reins. And I requite unto each his works.

24 And unto you I say, that do believe of the Thivatireans, ye who have not learned this teaching; they who have not known the secrets of Satan, which they say; I will not cast upon you a burden, 25 More than that ye have and is with you until the goal.

26 He that shall conquer shall keep the works until the end. And I will give them authority over the nations.

27 And they shall shepherd them with a rod of iron, and as vessels of a potter shall they shatter them. As I received from my father.

28 And I will give them the morning star.

29 He that hath ears of hearing let him hear what the holy spirit saith unto the churches.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 3

1 And to the angels of the Sardicans' church, write: Thus saith he which hath grace of the Spirit of God, and the seven stars. I know thy works, that a name alone is thine, that thou art alive, but thou art dead.

THE GRAND BIBLE

2 Be thou watchful, and fill up that which lacks, which was set down in thy mind, the transgressing. For I have not found thy works completed before God.

3 Remember as thou receivedst, keep, and repent. But if thou art not watchful, I come unto thee as a robber, as to which thou knowest not the hour in which I come unto thee; thou art outside as the man robbed, and one shall not know when the robber will come upon him.

4 But thou hast a few names of Sardicans, who defiled not their garments, and were walking with me in whites. Because they became worthy.

5 To be found victors, who shall put on garments of white; and there shall not be effaced their name from the book of life. And I will remember their name before my Father that is in heaven, and before his angels.

6 Who ever hath ears of hearing let him hear what the holy spirit saith to the churches.

7 And to the angels of the lovers of the brethren's church write; Thus saith the holy one and the true, who hath the keys of Hades, who openeth and no one is able to shut it, and who shutteth and no one is able to open.

8 I know thy works. Behold, I have given before thee a door opened, which none can shut, because a little thou hast of power of grace, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

9 Behold I give you a synagogue of Satan, who call themselves Judeans. And they are not Judeans, but affirm a lie. Behold I will make them that they shall come and shall worship before thy feet. For I have loved thee.

10 Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, and I will keep thee in the hour of trial, when I shall come upon the whole world, to try all dwellers upon earth.

11 Behold, I come quickly. Be strong and hold fast what thou hast, let not any one snatch from thee thy crown.

12 And whosoever be found conquering, I will make him a pillar of the temple of my God, and without he shall no more go forth; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and will give to them my house, the new Jerusalem, which shall come down out of heaven from my God, and I will give them a name new.

13 Whoever hath ears of hearing, let him hear what the holy spirit saith to the churches.

14 And to the angels of the Phrygians' church, write; Thus saith the Amen; the witness faithful and true, and the beginning of the creations of God:

15 I know thy works, that thou art not hot neither cold, but thou art lukewarm.

16 Judge thee I will out of thy mouth.

17 Because thou sayest, rich am I, and have become rich, and in no way am I lacking. And thou art wretched and miserable and weak and poor, and blind, and naked.

18 And now hear thou me and I will advise about thee. Take, buy of me gold refined by fire, that thou mayest become rich; and garments precious that thou mayest clothe thyself, that there be not revealed the shame of thy body, and lay salve on thine eyes, that thou mayest see.

19 Because I love thee, and I reprove and chasten thee: take zeal and repent.

20 Behold I stand at thy door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will go in to him and will dwell with him, and he with me in my kingdom.

21 As I have overcome and sat down on the right hand of my Father on the throne of glory.

22 Whoever hath ears of hearing, let him hear what the holy spirit saith to the churches.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 4

1 And after all this I saw, and behold the dome of heaven was opened; and a voice of the trumpet which I heard the first, which spake ivith me and said to me, Come up hither, and I will shew thee what is to come to pass in the future time.

2 And in that hour there was in me the spirit holy, and I beheld a throne that it stood in heaven, and on the throne he sat

3 Like to a vision of stones jasper and sardius.

4 And priests round about the throne like to a vision of emerald. And round about the throne thrones twenty and four, and on the thrones were sitting elders twenty-four arrayed in garments white, and on their heads they had crowns of gold.

5 And out of the throne went forth lightnings and voices and thunders. And seven lamps of fire flaming before the throne, which are seven powers of the spirit holy.

6 And there was before the throne a sea of glass, in the likeness of the whiteness of crystal, and in the midst of the throne four beasts; and they were full of eyes behind and before.

7 And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had the face of a man, and the fourth beast like an eagle flying.

8 And of the four beasts there were for one by one of them six upon six wings and round about and within they were full of eyes. And they rested not, not by day and not by night, and said, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of hosts, who is and liveth unto aeons, and who is to come.

9 And when the beasts gave glory and honour and praises to him that sat on the throne, to the living unto aeons of aeons.

10 There fell down the twenty and four elders before the throne, and they worshipped the alive of aeons. and they laid down their crowns before the throne and said,

11 Worthy art thou, Lord God, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou didst fashion all, and at thy willing they were fashioned and stand sure.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 5

1 And I saw on the right hand (of him) who sat upon the throne, that he had a book written within and without, and sealed with seven seals.

2 And I saw an angel strong, that he proclaimed with a great voice and said, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

3 And no one was found who was able, not in heaven, and not on earth, nor underneath the earth, to open the book and to look into it.

4 And I wept violently, because no one was found worthy to open the book and loose its seal and to look into it.

5 And one of the elders there saith unto me. Weep thou not: behold he hath overcome, the lion from the tribe of Judah, from the root of David; and he is worthy to open the book and to loose the seals thereof.

6 And I saw in the midst of the throne, and in the midst of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elder's, like unto a lamb slain; and it had horns seven, and eyes seven, which are the seven powers of the Spirit, which are sent forth unto all the ends.

7 And he came and received from the right hand of him which sat upon the throne.

8 And when he took the book, the fourfold-shaped beasts and the twenty and four elders fell down before the lamb. And they had each a harp, and a censer of gold full of incense, which were the prayers of the saints.

9 And they were hymning a hymn new and saying, Worthy is the lamb to take the book and open the seals thereof. Because thou wast slain, and hast bought us unto adoption with thy blood, out of all tribes and tongues and peoples and gentiles.

10 And hast made us priests of our God, and we shall reign upon earth.

11 I was hearing and seeing round the throne voices of angels many and around the four beasts and the elders. And the number of them was ten thousand ten thousand and thousands of thousands.

12 Who were crying out and saying with voice great, Worthy is the lamb slain to receive praise and riches and honour and glory.

13 And all creatures which are in the heaven and on earth and in the sea, and all powers which are in them, heard I saying, He which sitteth on the throne, and the lamb, blessed, exalted and glorified unto the aeons of aeons.

14 And the four beasts said, Amen. And the elders fell down before him and worshipped him.

1 And I saw that the lamb opened one of the seven seals; and I heard in the midst of the four beasts as it were a voice of thunder which said, I come.

2 And I saw, and behold, a horse white, and he that was mounted thereon had a bow; and there was given to him a crown, and he came to conquer that he might conquer.

3 And when he opened seal the second, I heard from the second beast that he said, I come.

4 And there went forth another horse light-blue; and he that was mounted thereon, there was given to him to take peace from earth: and there was given unto him to take a great sword, wherewith he shall slay all habitants of earth.

5 And when he opened seal the third, I heard from the third beast that it said, I come. And I saw, and behold another horse black; and he that was mounted thereon, had a balance in his hand.

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts which were saying, A measure of wheat for one penny, and three measures of barley for one penny. And the oil and wine shall not be hurt.

7 And when he opened seal the fourth, I heard from the fourth beast, that it said, I come.

8 And I saw and behold, another horse, reddish, and he that was sitting upon him had death, and Hell "followed" with (or after) him. And there was given him authority to destroy the fourth part of the earth with famine and sword and death, and by the wild beasts of the earth.

9 And when he opened seal the fifth, I saw underneath the altar the souls, Tain sealed because of Gob and because of the word of God, and because of testimony thereof, who said with a great voice,

10 How long. Lord holy and true, dost thou not judge and exact vengeance of our blood from the dwellers of earth.

11 And there were given them robes white: and it was said unto them that they should rest a little time, until there be fulfilled their fellow-servants and brethren who are about to die even as they. And then shall be judged the earth and vengeance be exacted of their blood.

12 And I saw when he opened seal the sixth, there was an earthquake great; and the sun was turned to darkness, and became night darkling; and the moon wholly became blood.

13 And the stars from heaven were shaken down to earth as leaves of a fig tree, in case it shall be violently stirred by the wind and shall shake down her leaves.

14 And the heaven like a parchment hook was rolled up, and was removed from the midst. And all islands and mountains from their places were moved.

15 And kings of the earth and rulers, and captains of thousands and magnates and mighty ones, and all bondsmen and freemen, hid themselves in caves and in hollows of rocks.

16 And they said to mountains and rocks, Fall upon us, and to the little hills, Shelter us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the lamb.

17 For there is come the day great of his wrath, and who is able to stand before him?

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 7

1 After this I saw four angels that they stood at four corners of the earth. And they held the four winds of the earth, that there should not blow a wind upon the earth, neither on sea, nor upon trees.

2 And I saw another angel, that he was ascending from the sunrising, and he had the seal of God living; and he cried with a voice great to the four angels who had received authority to destroy earth and sea.

3 And he saith, Hurt ye not earth, neither sea nor trees, till I shall have sealed the forehead of the servants of my God.

4 And I heard the number of the sealed ones that they were a hundred and forty and four thousand sealed out of tribe of the children of Israel.

5 Of the tribe of Judah twelve thousand sealed.

Of the tribe of Keuben twelve thousand sealed.

Of the tribe of Dan twelve thousand sealed.

6 Of the tribe of Aser twelve thousand sealed.

Of the tribe of Nephthalim twelve thousand sealed.

Of the sons of Joseph twelve thousand sealed.

Of the tribe of Manasseh twelve thousand sealed.

7 Of the tribe of Shmavon twelve thousand sealed.

Of the tribe of Levi twelve thousand sealed.

Of the house of Issachar twelve thousand sealed,

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon twelve thousand sealed.

Of the stock of Benjamin twelve thousand sealed.

9 And I saw after all this, and behold, a multitude numerous which was not a number, and out of all tribes and all stocks and all tongues, and out of all peoples which stood before the throne and before the lamb, arrayed in robes white, and in their hands palms.

10 And with voice great they were saying, Salvation unto our God who sitteth on the throne of the lamb.

11 And all the angels were standing round about the throne, and about the elders and about the four beasts: and they were falling down on their faces before the lamb and were worshipping God, and said, 12 Amen. Blessing or praise and glory and wisdom and thanksgiving and honour and power and grace to our Lord for aeons of aeons, Amen.

13 And saith to me one of the elders, These which are arrayed in robes of white, who are they, and whence come they?

14 And I say unto him, my Lord, thou knowest. And he saith to me, These are they which come from great tribulation; and they washed their robes, and made him white in the blood of the lamb.

15 And therefore are they before the throne of God: and they serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth upon the throne is dwelling in them.

16 And any more they shall not hunger, nor shall they thirst; nor shall there harm them cold and heat.

17 And the lamb in the midst of his throne shall shepherd them, and shall lead them unto fountains of waters of life; and God shall remove all tears from their eyes.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 8

1 And when he opened seal the seventh, there was silence in heaven about half an hour.

2 And I saw angels seven which stood before God; and there was given unto them seven trumpets.

3 And there came another angel and stood before the altar, and he had a censer of gold; and there was given unto him incense much, that he should offer the prayers of all saints, upon the altar of gold before the throne.

4 And there went up smoke of the incense, which are prayers of all saints, from the hands of the archangel before God.

5 And the angel of God filled full the censer from fire of the altar, and cast it upon the earth; and there was thunder great, arid voices and lightnings and earthquake great.

THE GRAND BIBLE

6 And seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound the trumpets.

7 And the first angel sounded the trumpet, and there was hail and fire and blood mingled. And it fell on earth and the second part of earth it burned up and the third part of the trees it burned up, and all green grass it, burned up.

8 And the second angel trumpeted, and as it were a mountain great with fire burning fell into the sea. And the third part of the sea became blood;

9 And there were destroyed the third part of the things swimming, and things which had breath riviingi were destroyed.

10 And the third angel trumpeted, and there fell from heaven a star great, flaming like a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers and fountains.

11 And the name of the star was bitterness, and the third part of the ivaters became hitter, and many of men died from the bitterness of the waters.

12 And the fourth angel sounded the trumpet, and wounded the third part of the sun and of the moon and stars. And there was darkened the third part of them; and the day appeared not, and the third part of the night likewise.

13 And I saw and heard the voice of an eagle flying in mid heaven, that it said with a great voice, Woe, Woe, Woe, that are dwelling upon earth, when there shall come to be a voice of yet three trumpets, which the angels shall will to sound hereafter in the future.

1 And the fifth angel sounded trumpet, and I saw a star from heaven to earth fallen ; and there was given to him a key of the pit of the abyss.

2 And he opened the depths of the abyss. And there went up a smoke from the pit, like the smoke of a furnace great, and there was darkened sun and air.

3 And out of the pit went forth locusts on earth, and there was given them authority, and their stings like the stings of a scorpion.

4 And it was said to them that they should not injure grass of earth, nor tree; but only men who have not the seal of Christ upon their forehead.

5 And there was given to them a command that they should not slay them, but should torment them months five: and their torments as the smart of a scorpion that striketh a man.

6 And in that day men shall seek death and shall not find; and they shall desire to die from the strokes of the locusts, and there shall flee from them death.

7 And the likeness of the locusts is the likeness of a horse prepared for war; and on their heads, as it were, a crown like to gold; and their faces like the faces of man.

8 And their hair like the hair of a woman, and their teeth like a lion's.

9 And their breastplates like breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings as the sound of horses many which rush into war.

10 And they had tails like unto a scorpion, and the stings of their tails had authority to torment men months five.

11 And they shall bring unto them the king of angels of the abyss: and his name in Hebrew is Albagos, who is called destruction in Armenian.

12 Behold woe the first is past, and woe the second is to come after it quickly.

13 And the sixth angel sounded the trumpet; and I heard a voice from the four horns of the altar of gold, which was before the throne of God, 14 That it said to angel the sixth, which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound upon the river Euphrates.

15 And there were loosed the four angels prepared for the hour and the day and the month and the year, that they might slay the third part of men.

16 And the number of the hosts of the mounted ten thousands of ten thousands. I heard the number of them.

17 And I saw the horses in the vision, and those mounted on them who had breastplates of fire, and tails aflame with brimstone, <aiul the heads of the horses like the heads of lions; and out of their mouth fire went forth and smoke and brimstone.

18 And by these strokes or plagues were dieing the third part of men, by the fire and the smoke and the brimstone which went forth out of their mouth.

19 For the authority of the horses was in their mouths and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and they had heads wherewith they shall destroy the many.

20 And the others who were no longer dieing of men because of these strokes, who repented not, nor turned from the works of their hands, and from the worship of devils ajid their idols, made of gold and of silver and of wood and of brass and of stone; which can neither see nor walk nor hear:

21 And they repented not of their slaying of men, and of their sorcery, and of fornication, and of their thieving.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 10

And I saw another angel strong that he came down out of heaven, veiling himself with clouds; and the rainbow upon his head; and his face as the sun, and his feet like a pillar of fire;

I And he had in his hand a book: he opened, and set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot upon the dry land.

3 And he cried with a voice great, and roared as a lion; and when he cried out there uttered seven thunders with their voices

4 And the utterances of seven thunders, I ivished to writye the things which henceforth are to come: And I heard a voice from heaven saying, Seal up that which spake the seven thunders, and write them not.

5 And the angel whom I saw, which set his foot upon the sea, and his other upon dry land, and raised his right hand to heaven,

6 And sware by him that liveth from seons, who established the heaven and whctt is therein imd the earth, and what is therein, the sea and all that is in them, that no longer there abideth time;

7 But in the day of the voice of the seventh angel, whenever he shall sound the trumpet, shall be finished the mystery of God, which was gospelled to his servants the prophets.

8 And the voice which I heard from heaven, again it spake and said, Come and take the book which the angel hath open in his hand, and he standeth upon sea and dry land.

9 And I, having come unto the angel, asked [for the book] of him. And he saith to me, Take, and swallow it; and it shall be made bitter in thy belly, but in thy mouth sweet as honey.

10 And I took the book out of the hand of the angel, and swallowed it, and it was in my mouth as honey, and when I ate it my belly was filled with bitterness.

11 And he saith to me, It shall befall thee again to prophesy unto gentiles and^ unto peoples and unto tongues and kings many.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 11

1 And there was given me a reed like unto a rod. And there stood the angel, and saith to me, Arise and measure the temple of God and the altar and the worshippings which are therein.

2 And the courts without the temple, leave it out and measure it not. For it hath been given to the nations; and the holy city, that they shall trample under foot months forty and two.

3 And I will give to my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy for days 1265, clothed in sackcloth.

4 These are the two olive trees and the two candlesticks, standing before the Lord God of all earth.

5 And they that shall desire to hurt them, fire shall go forth from their mouth and shall devour their enemies; and whoever shall desire to sin against them, thus shall be destroyed.

6 They have authority to shut the heavens, that they rain not during the days of their prophecy. And they have authority over earth of all plagues; and they have authority over the waters to turn them into blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues as often as they may desire.

7 And when they shall have finished all the days of their testimony, then the beast that goeth up out of the abyss shall make war with them, and shall overcome them, and shall slay them.

8 And their carcasses shall remain lying in the midst of their street, in the city great which is called by name after the Spirit Segor and Egyptos and Babylon, where also their Lord was crucified.

9 And there shall see them all the tribes and peoples and all tongues and gentiles their corpse, that they remain lying three days; and they shall not suffer to be buried in a tomb their bones.

10 And they that are dwelling on earth are glad and rejoice over them, so as to bring gifts and offerings one to another; because these two prophets shall torment the dwellers of earth.

11 And after three days and a half a Spirit of the living God shall enter into them, and they shall Trise up, stand erect on their feet; and awe and fear shall fall on dwellers of earth.

12 And I heard a voice great from heaven which said unto them. Rise ye up and come up hither. And they rose and went up into heaven on clouds, and all their enemies beheld their rising up.

13 And^ in that hour an earthquake great there was, and the tenth part of the city was swallowed up. And there died of the earthquake men seven thousand. And after that fear great was in all; and they gave glory to God heavenly.

14 Lo, woe the second is past, and woe the third is about to come quickly.

15 And when the seven angels sounded trumpets, there was a voice great from heaven which said: There hath come to be all the kingdom of the world of our Lord and of his Jesus Christ; and he shall reign upon earth unto aeons of aeons.

16 And the twenty and four elders which sat on a throne before God, fell on their faces and worshippjed the Lord God and said, 17 We thank thee, Lord God Almighty, which is unto aeons, who hast clothed thyself with power great, and art become king.

18 And the peoples were wroth, and there is come wrath of the enemy and season of judgement, that it may be condemned, and thou givest rewards to thy servants the prophets and to saints fearers of thy name, to small and great, and to destroy the destroyers of the earth.

19 And there was opened the temple of God which (is) in heaven, and there appeared the ark of his covenant which is in his temple; and there was lightnings and voices and thunder and earthquakes, and hail very great.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 12

1 And a sign great appeared in heaven; a woman arrayed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of stars twelve.

2 And she was with child, and she shrieked in travailling, and in many pains she was nigh unto being delivered.

3 And there appeared another sign in heaven; and lo, a dragon fiery great exceedingly, whose were heads seven and horns ten, and upon his head seven diadems.

4 And his tail swept away even unto the seventh part of the stars of heaven, and cast them upon earth: And the dragon stood before the woman who wished to be delivered, that when the woman should be delivered of her child, he might devour him, he the dragon.

5 And the woman was delivered of a child male, who shall shepherd his people with a rod of iron. And there was caught up her child unto God, and unto his throne.

6 And the woman fled into a wilderness, where was her place prepared of God, that she may be fed there days 1265.

7 And there was war in heaven, Michael and his angels were fighting with the dragon, and the dragon together with his angels was fighting against them;

8 But they were not able to withstand, and place there was not found for them in heaven.

9 And there fell the dragon great, the serpent primal, who is called by name Beelzebul and Satan. He that led astray the whole world, the lion fell to earth and his angels fell with him.

10 And I heard a voice great from heaven which said. Now hath become salvation and power and kingdom of heaven of our God, and authority of his anointed: for there hath fallen the accuser of our brethren who accused them before God and the Lord Jesus Christ day and night.

11 And they overcame him through the blood of the lamb of God, and through the word of his testimony. And they acquiesced not in the dragon even unto death.

12 Therefore let the heavens be glad, and all who are dwelling in them. Woe to earth and sea: because the dragon is fallen unto you, who hath wrath a little time.

13 And when the dragon saw that he fell to earth, he pursued the woman which bore the male child.

14 And there was given to the woman two wings of an eagle great, that she might fly into a desert place, where she shall be fed there for times and a time and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

15 And the serpent poured forth from his mouth after the woman waters many as a river that he might engulf her.

16 And earth helped the woman, and earth opened her mouth, and swallowed the water which the dragon poured out from his mouth.

17 And the dragon waxed wroth with the woman, and went away to war with the woman and with her seed and who keep the commandment of God, in whom is the testimony of Jesus Christ.

18 And he stood upon the sand of the sea.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 13

1 And I saw that there went up out of the sea a beast great, and he had heads seven, and horns ten; and upon his horns ten mitres, and upon his head a name of blasphemy.

2 And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet as of a bear; and his mouth as of a lion. And the dragon gave him his power and his throne and authority great.

3 And one of his heads was wounded unto death; and his death-wound was being healed; and the whole earth wondered at the beast.

4 And they worshipped the beast, because the dragon gave him his authority. And they worshipped the beast, and said, No one is like unto the beast, or is able to war with him.

5 And there was given to him a mouth to utter very great things and blasphemies; and there was given him authority to work, to war against the saints and overcome them. And there was given him victory months forty two.

6 And he opened his mouth in blasphemy unto God, and blasphemed his name and his temple holy which is in heaven.

7 And there was given him authority over all souls and tongues and peoples,

8 That they might worship him, and all dwellers upon earth, whose names are not written in the book of life of the lamb slain from the beginning of the world.

9 They that have ears of hearing, let them hear.

THE GRAND BIBLE

10 For there are some who shall be led into captivity, and there are some who died by the sword, and there are some who of themselves shall destroy themselves. But patience and faith shall be vouchsafed to the saints of God.

11 And I saw another beast that he came up out of the earth; and he had horns twain like unto a lamb, and he spake as the dragon.

12 And all the authority of the first beast he did exercise before him; and he made the earth and all dwellers thereof that they should worship the first beast, until there shall be healed his wound of death.

13 And he wrought signs many, and he caused fire from heaven to come down upon earth in sight of men.

14 And to lead astray the dwellers of earth with the signs which it was given into his hands to do in the sight of the beast. And there say unto him the dwellers of the earth, Make an image of the beast which shall have the wounds of the sword, and shall live.

15 And there was given him authority that he should give spirit to the image of the beast, and in order that the image may speak, and that there may worship him all inhabitants of earth, and that those who shall not worship the image of the beast, he may slay them.

16 And he shall make all, small and great, and rich and poor, freemen and bond, that he may give them his sign on the right hand and on their foreheads.

17 And no one is able to buy or to sell, if he have not the sign of the beast and number of his name.

18 He who hath wisdom, shall reckon the number of the name of the beast. For the number of the name is of the man. And the number is such as this, 151.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 14

1 And I saw and Lo, a lamb stood upon the mount Zion, and with him 144,000, who had his name and the name of his father was written upon their foreheads.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, as it were voice of waters many, as it were a voice of thunder great, and I heard as it were voice of harpers, that they struck their harps,

3 And were singing a song new before the throne of God, and before the four animals and before the elders, and no one was able to learn their songs, save only the 144,000 who were standing around the lamb on Mount Zion, who were virgins, and liberated from earth.

4 These are they who with women were not defiled, and are virgins; and in every hour they shall follow after the lamb, whosoever he shall go. These wrote of men upon their foreheads the name of the father and of the lamb.

5 And in their mouth was not found falsehood, for they were without blemish.

6 And I saw another angel flying from heaven, and he had a gospel eternal; and being come was gospelling to all races, and tongues.

7 And with voice great he said, Fear ye God and give to him glory. For there is come a time of his judgement. And ye shall worship before him who made heavens and earth, sea and all which is in them.

8 And another second angel came after rhimi and said, It is fallen, it is fallen, it is fallen, the great Babylon, from wine of drunkenness, and from wrath and from her fornication, who made drunk all the gentiles.

9 And another third angel came after him and said with voice great, Whoever worships the beast and his image, and hath received his writing on his forehead, or upon his right hand,

10 Such a one shall drink from the cup of wrath of God poured out from the unmixed cup of ire [anger]; and shall be tormented with fire and sulphur, before God and the lamb and before his holy angels.

11 And the smoke of them shall ascend to aeons of aeons, and there is not faculty for them to rest day and night, who worshipped the beast and his image and who received the writing of number in his name.

12 But those who endure and have not in themselves his seal, they are those who have kept the law of God and the faith of Jesus Christ.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven which said to me, Write, Blessing is to the dead who in the Lord have died heretofore (or henceforth), and have not attained to this hour. Yea, saith the Spirit holy, that they are at rest from their many trials and labours, but alone their works have gone after them.

14 And I saw, and, behold, a cloud white, and on the cloud was sitting one like unto a son of man, and on his head he had a crown of gold, and in his hand he had a sickle made sharp.

15 And another angel went forth from the temple, cried out with voice great before him, and saith, Thou who sittest on the cloud, Send thy sickle and reap. For there is arrived the time of harvest, and there is fully ripe (lit. arrived) the harvest of earth.

16 However he who was sitting upon the cloud, cast his sickle to earth, and reaped the dwellers of earth.

17 And another angel went forth from the temple which is in heaven, and he also had a sickle made sharp.

18 And there went forth another angel from the altar, which had authority over the altar's fire, and cried out in voice great unto the angel, which had the sickle made sharp and saith, Gather the clusters from the vineyard of the earth, for fully ripe is her grape.

19 And the angel cast his sickle on the earth, and gathered the grape thereof, and cast it into the winepress of God.

20 And he trod in the winepress outside the city, and there went forth from the winepress blood exceeding much, and it reached even to the bridle of the horse, the length of it 1600 furlongs (lit. parasangs; circa 700-800 metres.).

1 And I saw another sign great in heaven and marvellous, that angels seven which had wounds seven betokened the end, since through them shall be ended wrath of God.

2 And I saw a sea of glass, mingled with fire, and they that have conquered of the beast and of his image and of the number of his name, were standing upon the sea of glass. And they had the harp of God:

3 And were singing the song of Moses before God and before the lamb, and were saying, How great and wonderful are thy works, Lord God almighty; just and true are thy works, Lord king of aeons and king of all Gentiles.

4 Who shall not fear and glorify thy name holy, for thou alone art holy and worthy (or sacred) of worship since all Gentiles shall come and worship before thee, that (or since) thy righteousness shall be manifested to all the world.

5 And after this I saw that there was opened a temple of the tabernacle [tent] of testimony in heaven:

6 And there went forth the seven angels who had authority of the seven plagues. And they were clothed in linen pure and glistening; and they were girt about their chests with girdles of gold.

7 And by [one of] the four animals it was given to the seven angels, seven bowls of gold full of the fury of God, the living to aeons of aeons.

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God and from his powers; and none was able to enter into the temple, until there shall be ended the seven plagues of the seven angels.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 16

1 And I heard a voice great in the temple, that it said to the seven angels, Go ye and pour out the seven bowls of the fury of God upon earth.

2 And there went the first angel, and poured out bowl the first on to earth; and there came to pass plagues grievous upon men which have the writing of the beast, and worshipped his image.

3 And a second angel poured out from his bowl upon the sea, and the water was turned to blood dead, and all souls (or breaths) which were in the sea were destroyed.

4 And the third angel poured out from his bowl into the rivers and fountains of waters; and it became blood.

5 And I heard from the angel of the waters that he said, Righteous is he which exists and holy. For thus he hath judged.

6 Because the blood of saints and the blood of prophets they did pour out, the impious ones, therefore the holy one hath given them blood to drink according to their deserts.

7 And I heard from out of the altar that it said, Yea, Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy works.

8 And the fourth angel poured out from his bowl upon the sun, and it was given to him to scorch men with fire.

9 And men were burned up with the great heat (lit. burning), and they blasphemed the name of God, who hath authority over these plagues. And they repented not, nor gave glory to God.

10 And the fifth angel poured out from his bowl upon the throne of the beast, and his kingdom became darkened; and they gnawed their tongues for pain of anguish;

11 And they blasphemed the God of heaven in their anguish, and in pain of bitterness, and they repented not of their works.

12 And the sixth fangell poured out from his bowl upon the river great Euphrates: and there was dried up his water that there might be prepared a path of the king of the rising of the sun.

13 And I saw that there went forth out of the mouth of the dragon and out of the mouth of the beast and out of the mouth of the false prophet spirits three unclean, as it were frogs.

14 For they were spirits devilish, which worked signs, and they came to the kings of all earth, to gather them together unto war on a day great of the Lord Almighty.

15 For thus spake the Lord, Behold, I come as a thief of night; blessed are they that shall be watchful and shall keep their raiments, that they may not walk about naked, and their shame appear.

16 And he will gather them into a place which is called in Hebrew Karmagedon.

17 And the seventh angel poured out from his bowl upon the air;

[Chapters 16:17-19:18 - Text translated from 4 with collation of a and 2. Codex 3 as far as chapter 19. 11 inclusive, agrees with a save where its variants are specially noted. Codex 1 is deficient.]

17 And there went forth a voice great from heaven from the throne, saying, It is come to pass.

18 And there were lightnings voices and thunders, and an earthquake was there great, as there has not been from the beginning, from when forth there have been men upon earth, such an earthquake great.

19 The city great was made into three parts and the cities of the nations fell; and the great Babylon was remembered before God, to give her the cup of wine of his fury.

20 And all islands fled, and mountains were not found.

21 And hail great as if a talent descended from heaven upon men. And men blasphemed God in heaven, because of the hail, since great were the strokes thereof.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 17

1 And there came a certain one of the seven angels, which had the seven cups, and he spake with me, saying: Come, and I will shew thee the judgement of the great harlot, who sitteth upon the waters many,

2 with whom fornicated kings of earth, and were made drunk dwellers of earth from wine of her fornication.

3 And he carried me away into a desert in spirit. And I saw a woman, that she sat upon a scarlet beast, and full was he of names of blasphemy, he had heads seven and horns ten.

4 And the woman was clothed in purple and scarlet, and bedecked with gold and pearl, and with precious stones, having a cup of gold in her hand, and full was it of abomination and impure fornication.

5 And upon her forehead written a name: mystery, the great Babylon, the mother of abominations and of harlots of earth.

6 And I saw the woman drunk with blood of saints and with blood of the witnesses of Jesus, and I wondered having seen her, with wonder great.

7 And saith to me the angel, Wherefore didst thou wonder? I will tell thee a mystery of the woman and of the beast, which shall carry her, which hath seven heads and ten horns.

8 The beast which thou sawest, which was, and is not, and is about to go up from the abyss, and to proceed to perdition. And they shall wonder all who are dwelling upon earth, of whom is not written name in book of life, from beginning of the world, seeing the beast, that it was and is not, and shall be close by.

9 Here is intelligence, he who hath wisdom. The seven heads, seven mountains are, where the woman sits upon them.

10 And kings seven are there. The five have fallen, and the one hath stood, and the other is not as yet come; and when he shall come, it behoves him a little to abide.

11 And the beast which was and no more is, even he is eighth, and is of the seven, and unto perdition proceedeth.

12 And the ten horns which thou sawest, ten kings are, which the kingdom as yet have not received. Authority as kings unto one hour they receive together with the beast.

13 These one mind have, and their power to the beast they give.

14 These with the lamb shall war, and the lamb shall conquer them, since lord is he of lords and king of kings, and who with him are, called are they and chosen and faithful.

15 And he said to me, Waters, which thou sawest, where sitteth the harlot, the people and multitudes are, and nations and tongues.

16 And the ten horns, which thou sawest, they shall judge the strumpet, and desolate and naked they shall make her; and her flesh they shall eat, and her shall they burn with fire.

17 For God gave unto their hearts, to do his will, and to do one will, and to give their kingdoms to the beast, until there shall be fulfilled the word of God.

18 And the woman whom thou sawest, is a city great, which hath kingdom over earth.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 18

1 After this I saw an angel come down from heaven, having authority great and earth was lit up with his glory.

2 And he cried out with voice mighty, saying, She is fallen, She is fallen, Babylon great, and she is become a dwelling place of devils, and a prison of every ghoul abominable and hated, and guardhouse of every spirit impure and hated.

3 Since from wrath of wine of her fornication have fallen all nations, and kings of earth with her have fornicated, and merchants of earth with her have fornicated, by might of her wantonings have been enriched.

4 And I heard a voice from heaven saying, Go forth from her, my peoples, that ye may not participate of her sins, and of her plagues that ye may not receive.

5 For her sin hath been joined even unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

6 Requite ye her as she requited you, and double ye unto her twofold according to her deeds, with the cup wherewith she mingled, ye shall mingle to her twofold.

THE GRAND BIBLE

7 As much as she glorified herself and waxed wanton, so much ye shall requite to her torments and sorrow. For in her heart she hath said, I sit a queen for ever, and widow I no more am, and sorrow I will not see.

8 Therefore in one day shall come torments of her, death and sorrow and famine, and fire shall burn her. For mighty is the Lord God, who hath judged her.

9 And there shall mourn and wail kings of the earth over her, who with her fornicated and wantonly sported, when they shall see smoke of her burning.

10 And I fell down before his feet and worshipped him. And he saith, See, Nay. Fellow-servant of thee am I, and of thy brethren, who have the testimony of Jesus. God do thou worship, for by the certainty of Jesus is prophecy.

11 And I saw heaven opened, and beheld a horse white, and he that was mounted thereon, is called faithful and true, and in righteousness he judgeth and wars.

12 And his eyes as torches fiery, and upon his head many a crown, having names written, which no one can know save himself alone.

13 And clad in a garment fallen in blood, who is called as to his name, the Word of God.

14 And captains of heaven and forces of heaven came after him upon horses white, robed in byssus white pure.

15 And from his mouth went forth a sword sharpened, that with it he may smite the Gentiles. And he shall shepherd them with rod of iron [meaning: by force]; and he shall tread them out as a press of wine of fury of God Almighty.

16 And there was upon his raiment and upon his thighs and upon his right hip, king of kings and lord of lords.

17 And I saw another angel which stood upon the sun, he cried out in a voice great, saying to all birds flying in midst of heaven, Come ye, gather ye together unto the great supper of God,

18 And eat flesh of kings, and flesh of chiliarchs [Greek: "commander of a thousand", later used as "commander of an army or government".], and flesh of mighty ones, and flesh of steeds and of those mounted upon them, and flesh of all free men and bond, and of great and small;

19 and I saw the beast and all the kings of the earth, and their forces gathered together to make war against him who was mounted on a horse white and against his forces.

20 And there was taken the beast and they that were with him, the false prophets, who wrought the signs before him, whom he led astray, and caused to receive the writing of the beast, and the worshippers of the image of him, of the Alive: they cast them into the lake of fire burning with sulphur;

21 and the rest died by the sword of him mounted on the horse, which went forth from his mouth; and all the birds were surfeited [fed to excess] upon their flesh.

22 And he shall expunge all tears from their eyes; and death any longer shall not more have rule over them, not mourning and not crying, not pain and not care. For it is removed and has fled from their presence.

23 And he said to me that sat upon the throne. Behold, I make everything new. And he saith to me, Write, for this is words faithful and true.

24 And he saith, Become am I Ayb* [and Qe], from the beginning, and for the future, and unto feons. And now I am. [* Alpha to Omega.] And they who are thirsty, I will give them from springs of water of life to drink gratuitously.

25 And they that be found victors, shall inherit all this. And I will be unto them God, and they shall be unto me a people.

26 And again as touching the faithless and the abominable, and the murderers, and fornicators and wizards, and sorcerers and idolaters, and all liars and all impious ones, whose portion of theirs is in the lake burning with fire and sulphur; which is the death second.

27 And there came unto me one of the seven angels, which had the seven bowls filled with the seven ends, with the fulfillments: and he spake unto me and said, I will shew unto thee the bride and the wife of the Lamb.

28 And he took and carried me into a mountain lofty and great and in the spirit holy; and he shewed unto me the city holy the Upper Jerusalem, and the mountain of peace, that it came down out of heaven from God Almighty:

29 Which had the glory of God. And there was in her a sheen of stones precious and of the stones jasper* and sardion* and crystal-gleaming and luminous. [* gemstones. A range of gemstones are mentioned in the Book of Revelation, perhaps the reason why this book also is called "revelation".]

30 And her walls were very great, and her towers lofty. And she had in her self portals twelve, and names several upon the portals were written according to the twelve tribes of Israel.

31 On the east side portals three: and on the west side portals three: and on the North side portals three: on the South side portals three.

32 And the walls of the City foundations twelve according to the names of the apostles of the Lamb.

33 And he that spake with me had a measure of gold in his hand, that he might measure the city and her portals and her walls.

34 For the lie of the city was four square, and as was the length of her, of the same measure also her breadth. And he measured the city with the measure, and the measure of her length was twelve thousand furlongs*; and her breadth and height the same measure.

35 [* The furlong was historically viewed as being equivalent to the Roman stade (stadium), or one eighth of a mile, circa 200 metres. Either the translation furlong is wrong or the given number 12,000, because then the city would have been 2,000 kilometres long! In context with 12,000, only the ancient units digitus, uncia pollex, and palmus minor could fit: digitus (finger width) = 18.5 mm (0.728 in); uncia pollex (thumb width or inch) = 24.6 mm (0.971 in); palmus minor (palm width) = 74 mm (c. 3 in).]

36 And he measured the wall thereof 144 cubits [one cubitum is circa one and a half feet or 444 mm or 44.4 cm long.], according to the measure of men, which is of an angel.

37 And the building of those walls of stones precious, of jasper [a red gemstone]. And the city of gold pure, like unto pure and white glass. And the foundations of the city of all stones precious.

38 And the first foundation of the wall, jasper. And the second, apphire. And the third, turquoise. And the fourth, emerald. And the fifth, sardonyx.

39 And the sixth, sardion. And the seventh, chrysolite. And the eighth, beryl. And the ninth, topaz. And the tenth, chrysopease. And the eleventh, jacinth. And the twelfth, chalcedony.

40 And there were twelve portals of twelve pearls, uniform and several the portals were. And one by one a portal, each of a single pearl. And the centre of the city of gold pure; and close unto the gates sheenlike as it were beryl.

41 And temple I saw not in her, for the Lord God Almighty was the Temple in her, and the Lamb, the only begotten Son of God is altar of holiness.

10 And I fell down before his feet and worshipped him. And he saith, See, Nay. Fellow-servant of thee am I, and of thy brethren, who have the testimony of Jesus. God do thou worship, for by the certainty of Jesus is prophecy.

11 And I saw heaven opened, and beheld a horse white, and he that was mounted thereon, is called faithful and true, and in righteousness he judgeth and wars.

19 and I saw the beast and all the kings of the earth, and their forces gathered together to make war against him who was mounted on a horse white and against his forces.

20 And there was taken the beast and they that were with him, the false prophets, who wrought the signs before him, whom he led astray, and caused to receive the writing of the beast, and the worshippers of the image of him, of the Alive: they cast them into the lake of fire burning with sulphur;

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 20

1 And I saw another angel coming down out of heaven, and he had the bolts of hell and a great chain in his hand.

2 And he was holding the dragon, the serpent primal, who is Beelzebub himself and Satan. And he bound him for a thousand years,

3 and cast him into the abyss of Hades, and shut and sealed, that he should not any more lead men astray, until there be fulfilled the thousandth year; and after this he will loose him for a little time.

4 And I saw thrones, and them that sat on them; and judgement was given to them to choose the souls of the better ones for saJce of testimony of Jesus and of the word of God. They are those who worshipped not the beast, nor his image, and received not the writing of his emblem upon their forehead, nor upon their right hand. These are they who shall live and shall reign with Christ unto a thousand years.

5 And after that from the dead shall no one live until the completion of the thousandth year. This is the first resurrection.

6 Blessed are the holy who have a portion in the first resurrection. Over them the second death hath not authority, but they are priests of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ and they shall reign with him a thousand years.

7 And after the thousandth year, he will loose Satan, and expel him from prison.

8 And he shall go forth to lead astray the races all unto the four regions of earth, and Gog and Magog he shall take in hand, to muster through them all the forces unto war: of which the number of them is as sand of the sea innumerable.

9 And they shall go forth over the breadth of the earth, and shall encompass the camps of the saints, and of the city beloved; and there shall come down fire out of heaven, from God; and shall devour them and their captain,

10 Satan who led them astray. And he shall cast them into a sea of fire and sulphur, where was the beast and the false prophets. And they shall be tortured day and night unto aeons of aeons.

11 And I saw a throne great and white, and upon the throne one sitting from whom, from awe of his face, were afraid and fled heaven and earth. And place was not found for them.

12 And I saw thrones mighty and the dead who were standing at the throne. And books were opened of their several works; and another book was opened, of those whose names are written in the book of life.

But there was also a judgement made of the dead in the books according to the works of each.

13 And the sea gave up her dead: and death and Hell their dead, and they were judged each according to their works.

14 And unto death and unto hell were they delivered, and into the lake of fire.

15 And whoever shall not be found written in the book of life, shall be cast into the lake of fire.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 21

1 And I saw heaven new and earth new, for the first heaven and earth passed away, and the sea was no more.

2 And I saw the city new holy Jerusalem, that she came down out of heaven, from God, the bride, adorned and decorated, and she was given to her spouse.

3 And I heard a voice from heaven that it said, Behold the tabernacle of God among men. And he shall dwell in common with them; And they are for a people of him with him, and he God of them.

4 And he shall expunge all tears from their eyes; and death any longer shall not more have rule over them, not mourning and not crying, not pain and not care. For it is removed and has fled from their presence.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 19

1 And after this I heard voice of a multitude in heaven great, saying, Alleluiah, Salvation and glory to our God.

2 For true and just are his judgements, since he hath judged the harlot great which ruined earth in her harlotry, and hath sought vengeance of blood of his servants at her hands.

3 And a second time they said, Alleluiah, and smoke of her went up to aeons of aeons.

4 And there fell down the twenty and four elders [meaning 24], and the four animals, and they adored God, who sitteth upon the throne, saying, Amen, Alleluiah.

5 Praise ye, praise ye God, all servants of him, and ye who fear him, both small and great.

6 And I heard a voice as of a multitude great, and as voice of waters many, as voice of mighty thunders: Alleluiah, and He hath reigned among us Lord God Almighty.

7 And we rejoice and exult, and will give glory to him, because a second time is come unto his marriage of the lamb, and the wife, the bride of him, hath made ready herself.

8 And it was given to her, to array her in byssus white gleaming pure. For the byssus, righteousnesses of the saints are.

9 And he saith to me, Write, blessed are they who are called to the supper of the lamb. And he saith to me. These words, true are they of God.

THE GRAND BIBLE

23 And the city had no need of sun and moon, that they should illumine her. For the glory of God illumined her in every hour; and her lamp was the Lamb of God.

24 And the heathen walked in her light, and the kings of the earth were clad with light from Her glory.

25 And her portals were not shut, but were standing open continually.

And night there was no more in her;

26 but only illumination and glorifying, and costliness transcending all stones precious.

27 And there shall not enter there any one (lit. all) of evil will, lest he pollute her with his falsehood; but there shall enter into her those whose names of them are written in the book of Life of the Son of God.

ARMENIAN REVELATION CHAPTER 22

[Text from Codex I with collation of a 4.]

1 And he showed me the river of the waters of Life bright as crystal, which came forth from the Throne of God,

2 and proceeded amidst her streets. And along the bank of the river she had the tree of life, which had fruit twelve times; one by one month it gave its fruit, and leaves of the tree were for the healing of all the heathen. And from all trees of which they ate they were blessed,

3 and curses were no more in them, because the throne of God and of the Lamb was in her. And the servants of God ministered unto him.

4 And I beheld his face, and his name was upon their foreheads.

5 And there was night no more; and there was not any need of the light of torch, and of light of sun. Because the Lord God illumined all, and they were reigning unto aeons of aeons.

6 And he saith unto me, This is the Word of God faithful and true. And the Lord God who through the holy spirit showed unto his prophets whatsoever is to be hereafter.

7 Behold he is come quickly: Blessed are they that shall listen and keep the words of this writing.

8 For I, John heard and saw all this. And when I saw and heard, I fell down and worshipped the angel which showed me all this.

9 And he saith unto me, Thou man, fall not down before me, and worship; for I am a fellow-servant and brother of thee, and of those who prophesied and kept the word of this writing. Do thou worship God.

10 And he saith unto me again, Bind not up, neither seal, the word of this prophecy; for the time thereof is at hand.

11 He that is about to do iniquity, let him work iniquity, and he that is about to be filthy, let him be made filthy; and he that is about to be made righteous, let him be made righteous, and he that is about to be holy, let him be made holy.

12 Behold I will pay thee reward, and the reward of each is according to his works. I am Aya and I am Qe [I am Alpha and I am Omega],

13 I am beginning and I am end, first and last, saith the Lord Almighty. [Which is similar to teachings of Hinduism, Jainism, and Buddhism when they refer to the divine universe.]

14 Blessed are they who shall call upon or read his law. They have authority of the Tree of Life; and they enter by the portals of the City of God.

15 But there shall stay without dogs, and sorcerers, murderers, and idolaters, adulterers, and all who walk and converse in falsehood.

16 I Jesus have sent my angel to bear witness to all this in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of Adam, and the star of dawn.

17 and spirit holy, and the Bridegroom who am to come, Whosoever shall be thirsty and shall desire to come unto me, shall come and drink the water living free.

18 I am witness to every man who heareth the word of the prophecy of this book, that no one may add aught therein, and that no one shall take away therefrom. If any one shall add aught therein, God shall add and multiply upon him the plagues all, which is written in this book:

19 and if any one shall take away A word, and withdraw it from the words of this prophecy, God shall withdraw his portion from the Tree of Life and from the City of the Saints, which is written in this book.

20 He spake which witnessed all this. Yea: I come quickly I come. Amen, there is come the Lord Jesus Christ.

21 The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ upon all saints. Amen.

THE APOCALYPSE OF JOHN

or The Book Of Revelation, or Revelation to John or Revelation of Jesus Christ, or just Revelation

Translation: King James Version

Estimated Range of Dating: 90-95 A.D.

(The Book of Revelation (also called the Apocalypse of John, Revelation to John or Revelation from Jesus Christ) is the final book of the New Testament, and consequently is also the final book of the Christian Bible. Its title is derived from the first word of the Koine Greek text: apokalypsis, meaning "unveiling" or "revelation." The Book of Revelation is the only apocalyptic book in the New Testament canon. Thus, it occupies a central place in Christian eschatology.

The author names himself as "John" in the text, but his precise identity remains a point of academic debate. Second-century Christian writers such as Justin Martyr, Irenaeus, Melito (the bishop of Sardis), Clement of Alexandria, and the author of the Muratorian fragment identify John the Apostle as the "John" of Revelation. Modern scholarship generally takes a different view, with many considering that nothing can be known about the author except that he was a Christian prophet. Some modern scholars characterize Revelation's author as a putative figure whom they call "John of Patmos". The bulk of traditional sources date the book to the reign of the Roman emperor Titus Flavius Domitianus (81–96 AD), which evidence tends to confirm.

The book spans three literary genres: the epistolary, the apocalyptic, and the prophetic. It begins with John, on the island of Patmos in the Aegean Sea, addressing a letter to the "Seven Churches of Asia". He then describes a series of prophetic visions, including figures such as the Seven-Headed Dragon, the Serpent, and the Beast, which culminate in the Second Coming of Jesus.

The obscure and extravagant imagery has led to a wide variety of Christian interpretations. Historicist interpretations see Revelation as containing a broad view of history, whilst preterist interpretations treat Revelation as mostly referring to the events of the Apostolic Age (1st century AD), or, at the latest, the fall of the Roman Empire. Futurists, meanwhile, believe that Revelation describes future events, with the seven churches growing into the body/believers throughout the age, and a reemergence or continuous rule of a Greek-Roman system with modern capabilities described by John in ways familiar to him, and idealist or symbolic interpretations consider that Revelation does not refer to actual people or events, but is an allegory of the spiritual path and the ongoing struggle between good and evil.

The name Revelation comes from the first word of the book in Koine Greek: apokalypsis, which means "unveiling" or "revelation". The author names himself as "John", but modern scholars consider it unlikely that the author of Revelation also wrote the Gospel of John. He was a Jewish Christian prophet, probably belonging to a group of such prophets, and was accepted by the congregations to whom he addresses his letter. The beast with seven heads and the number 666 seem to allude directly to the emperor Nero (reigned 54–68 AD), but this does not require that Revelation was written in the 60s, as there was a widespread belief in later decades that Nero would return.)

REVELATION CHAPTER 1

1 The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to shew unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John:

2 Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw.

3 Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

4 John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne;

5 And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood,

6 And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

7 Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen.

8 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty.

9 I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ.

10 I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, 11 Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea.

12 And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks;

13 And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle.

14 His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire;

15 And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters.

16 And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp twoedged sword: and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength.

17 And when I saw him, I fell at his feet as dead. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last:

18 I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death.

19 Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter;

20 The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches.

1 Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus write: These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks;

2 I know thy works, and thy labour, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars:

3 And hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast laboured, and hast not fainting.

4 Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love.

5 Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent.

6 But this thou hast, that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitanes, which I also hate.

7 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God.

8 And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write: These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive;

9 I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty, (but thou art rich) and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan.

10 Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.

11 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches; He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.

12 And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write: These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges;

13 I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where Satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where Satan dwelleth.

14 But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balac to cast a stumblingblock before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication.

15 So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate.

16 Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth.

17 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it.

18 And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write: These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like fine brass;

19 I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first.

20 Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee, because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and to seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols.

21 And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not.

22 Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds.

23 And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searcheth the reins and hearts: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works.

24 But unto you I say, and unto the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of Satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden.

25 But that which ye have already hold fast till I come.

26 And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations:

27 And he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father.

28 And I will give him the morning star.

29 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

REVELATION CHAPTER 3

1 And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write; These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.

2 Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.

3 Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.

4 Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.

5 He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.

6 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

7 And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write; These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and he that shutteth, and no man openeth;

8 I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name.

9 Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of Satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee.

10 Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth.

11 Behold, I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown.

12 Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name.

13 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

14 And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write; These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God;

15 I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot.

16 So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth.

17 Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked:

18 I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see.

19 As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent.

20 Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

21 To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

22 He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

REVELATION CHAPTER 4

1 After this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said, Come up hither, and I will shew thee things which must be hereafter.

2 And immediately I was in the spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne.

3 And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald.

4 And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold.

5 And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.

6 And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind.

7 And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle.

8 And the four beasts had each of them six wings about him; and they were full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, LORD God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come.

9 And when those beasts give glory and honour and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever,

10 The four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne, and worship him that liveth for ever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying,

11 Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honour and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

REVELATION CHAPTER 5

1 And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a book written within and on the backside, sealed with seven seals.

2 And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof?

3 And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon.

4 And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon.

5 And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the Lion of the tribe of Juda, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

6 And I beheld, and, lo, in the midst of the throne and of the four beasts, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God sent forth into all the earth.

7 And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne.

8 And when he had taken the book, the four beasts and four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of saints.

9 And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

10 And hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth.

11 And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the beasts and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands;

12 Saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing.

13 And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever.

14 And the four beasts said, Amen. And the four and twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth for ever and ever.

REVELATION CHAPTER 6

1 And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four beasts saying, Come and see.

2 And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer.

3 And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second beast say, Come and see.

4 And there went out another horse that was red: and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another: and there was given unto him a great sword.

5 And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.

6 And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine.

7 And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see.

8 And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth.

9 And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held:

10 And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?

11 And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellowservants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled.

12 And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood;

13 And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind.

14 And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places.

15 And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains;

16 And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb:

17 For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?

REVELATION CHAPTER 7

1 And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree.

2 And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea,

3 Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

4 And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel.

5 Of the tribe of Juda were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Reuben were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Gad were sealed twelve thousand.

6 Of the tribe of Aser were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Nephthali were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Manasses were sealed twelve thousand.

7 Of the tribe of Simeon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Levi were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Issachar were sealed twelve thousand.

8 Of the tribe of Zabulon were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Joseph were sealed twelve thousand. Of the tribe of Benjamin were sealed twelve thousand.

9 After this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands;

10 And cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb.

11 And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, 12 Saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honour, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?

14 And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

15 Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them.

16 They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat.

17 For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

REVELATION CHAPTER 8

1 And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour.

2 And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets.

3 And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne.

THE GRAND BIBLE

4 And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand.

5 And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into the earth: and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake.

6 And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound.

7 The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.

8 And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: and the third part of the sea became blood;

9 And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.

10 And the third angel sounded, and there fell a great star from heaven, burning as it were a lamp, and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of waters;

11 And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became wormwood; and many men died of the waters, because they were made bitter.

12 And the fourth angel sounded, and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; so as the third part of them was darkened, and the day shone not for a third part of it, and the night likewise.

13 And I beheld, and heard an angel flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which are yet to sound!

1 And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit.

2 And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit.

3 And there came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power.

4 And it was commanded them that they should not hurt the grass of the earth, neither any green thing, neither any tree; but only those men which have not the seal of God in their foreheads.

5 And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should be tormented five months: and their torment was as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh a man.

6 And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find it; and shall desire to die, and death shall flee from them.

7 And the shapes of the locusts were like unto horses prepared unto battle; and on their heads were as it were crowns like gold, and their faces were as the faces of men.

8 And they had hair as the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions.

9 And they had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron; and the sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.

10 And they had tails like unto scorpions, and there were stings in their tails: and their power was to hurt men five months.

11 And they had a king over them, which is the angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon.

12 One woe is past; and, behold, there come two woes more hereafter.

13 And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God,

14 Saying to the sixth angel which had the trumpet, Loose the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates.

15 And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to slay the third part of men.

16 And the number of the army of the horsemen were two hundred thousand thousand: and I heard the number of them.

17 And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that sat on them, having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, and brimstone: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued fire and smoke and brimstone.

18 By these three was the third part of men killed, by the fire, and by the smoke, and by the brimstone, which issued out of their mouths.

19 For their power is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were like unto serpents, and had heads, and with them they do hurt.

20 And the rest of the men which were not killed by these plagues yet repented not of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils, and idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood: which neither can see, nor hear, nor walk:

21 Neither repented they of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

REVELATION CHAPTER 10

1 And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a rainbow was upon his head, and his face was as it were the sun, and his feet as pillars of fire:

2 And he had in his hand a little book open: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth,

3 And cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth: and when he had cried, seven thunders uttered their voices.

4 And when the seven thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write: and I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered, and write them not.

5 And the angel which I saw stand upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his hand to heaven,

6 And swore by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the things that therein are, and the earth, and the things that therein are, and the sea, and the things which are therein, that there should be time no longer:

7 But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

8 And the voice which I heard from heaven spake unto me again, and said, Go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which standeth upon the sea and upon the earth.

9 And I went unto the angel, and said unto him, Give me the little book. And he said unto me, Take it, and eat it up; and it shall make thy belly bitter, but it shall be in thy mouth sweet as honey.

10 And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet as honey: and as soon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter.

11 And he said unto me, Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

REVELATION CHAPTER 11

1 And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: and the angel stood, saying, Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein.

2 But the court which is without the temple leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months.

3 And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth.

4 These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth.

5 And if any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed.

6 These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy: and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues, as often as they will.

7 And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them.

8 And their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt, where also our Lord was crucified.

9 And they of the people and kindreds and tongues and nations shall see their dead bodies three days and an half, and shall not suffer their dead bodies to be put in graves.

10 And they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, and make merry, and shall send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwell on the earth.

11 And after three days and an half the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw them.

12 And they heard a great voice from heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud; and their enemies beheld them.

13 And the same hour was there a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain of men seven thousand: and the remnant were affrighted, and gave glory to the God of heaven.

14 The second woe is past; and, behold, the third woe cometh quickly.

15 And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever.

16 And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, 17 Saying, We give thee thanks, O LORD God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because thou hast taken to thee thy great power, and hast reigned.

18 And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth.

19 And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail.

REVELATION CHAPTER 12

1 And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars:

2 And she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered.

3 And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads.

4 And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and did cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born.

5 And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne.

6 And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days.

7 And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels,

8 And prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in heaven.

9 And the great dragon was cast out, that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: he was cast out into the earth, and his angels were cast out with him.

10 And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.

11 And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives unto the death.

12 Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea! for the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time.

13 And when the dragon saw that he was cast unto the earth, he persecuted the woman which brought forth the man child.

14 And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.

15 And the serpent cast out of his mouth water as a flood after the woman, that he might cause her to be carried away of the flood.

16 And the earth helped the woman, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood which the dragon cast out of his mouth.

17 And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

REVELATION CHAPTER 13

1 And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy.

2 And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority.

3 And I saw one of his heads as it were wounded to death; and his deadly wound was healed: and all the world wondered after the beast.

4 And they worshipped the dragon which gave power unto the beast: and they worshipped the beast, saying, Who is like unto the beast? who is able to make war with him?

5 And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; and power was given unto him to continue forty and two months.

6 And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven.

7 And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them: and power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations.

8 And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

9 If any man have an ear, let him hear.

THE GRAND BIBLE

10 He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity: he that killeth with the sword must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints.

11 And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.

12 And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

13 And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men,

14 And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword, and did live.

15 And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed.

16 And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads:

17 And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.

18 Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore and six.

REVELATION CHAPTER 14

1 And I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads.

2 And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps:

3 And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders: and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth.

4 These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the firstfruits unto God and to the Lamb.

5 And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God.

6 And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people,

7 Saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgement is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.

8 And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

9 And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand,

10 The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:

11 And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name.

12 Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

13 And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them.

14 And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle.

15 And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle, and reap: for the time is come for thee to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe.

16 And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped.

17 And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle.

18 And another angel came out from the altar, which had power over fire; and cried with a loud cry to him that had the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe.

19 And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great winepress of the wrath of God.

20 And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the winepress, even unto the horse bridles, by the space of a thousand and six hundred furlongs.

REVELATION CHAPTER 15

1 And I saw another sign in heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God.

2 And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God.

3 And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints.

4 Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for thou only art holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgements are made manifest.

5 And after that I looked, and, behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened:

6 And the seven angels came out of the temple, having the seven plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, and having their breasts girded with golden girdles.

7 And one of the four beasts gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever.

8 And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man was able to enter into the temple, till the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled.

REVELATION CHAPTER 16

1 And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth.

2 And the first went, and poured out his vial upon the earth; and there fell a noisome and grievous sore upon the men which had the mark of the beast, and upon them which worshipped his image.

3 And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea; and it became as the blood of a dead man: and every living soul died in the sea.

4 And the third angel poured out his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters; and they became blood.

5 And I heard the angel of the waters say, Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be, because thou hast judged thus.

6 For they have shed the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for they are worthy.

7 And I heard another out of the altar say, Even so, Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgements.

8 And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the sun; and power was given unto him to scorch men with fire.

9 And men were scorched with great heat, and blasphemed the name of God, which hath power over these plagues: and they repented not to give him glory.

10 And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast; and his kingdom was full of darkness; and they gnawed their tongues for pain,

11 And blasphemed the God of heaven because of their pains and their sores, and repented not of their deeds.

12 And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared.

13 And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.

14 For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty.

15 Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame.

16 And he gathered them together into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon.

17 And the seventh angel poured out his vial into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done.

18 And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake, and so great.

19 And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great Babylon came in remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath.

20 And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.

21 And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent: and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great.

REVELATION CHAPTER 17

1 And there came one of the seven angels which had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me, Come hither; I will shew unto thee the judgement of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters:

2 With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication.

3 So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet coloured beast, full of names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns.

4 And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet colour, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication:

5 And upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH.

6 And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration.

7 And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, which hath the seven heads and ten horns.

8 The beast that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition: and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is.

9 And here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth.

10 And there are seven kings: five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh, he must continue a short space.

11 And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition.

12 And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast.

13 These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast.

14 These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful.

15 And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues.

16 And the ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast, these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

17 For God hath put in their hearts to fulfil his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled.

18 And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth.

REVELATION CHAPTER 18

1 And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory.

2 And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird.

3 For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies.

4 And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.

5 For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.

6 Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double.

7 How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow.

8 Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her.

9 And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning.

10 Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas, alas that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgement come.

11 And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more:

12 The merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, 13 And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men.

14 And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all.

15 The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing,

16 And saying, Alas, alas that great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls!

17 For in one hour so great riches is come to nought. And every shipmaster, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea, stood afar off, 18 And cried when they saw the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is like unto this great city!

19 And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing, saying, Alas, alas that great city, wherein were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is she made desolate.

20 Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets; for God hath avenged you on her.

21 And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all.

22 And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee;

23 And the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived.

24 And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth.

REVELATION CHAPTER 19

1 And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, unto the Lord our God:

2 For true and righteous are his judgements: for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand.

3 And again they said, Alleluia And her smoke rose up for ever and ever.

4 And the four and twenty elders and the four beasts fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia.

5 And a voice came out of the throne, saying, Praise our God, all ye his servants, and ye that fear him, both small and great.

6 And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

7 Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honour to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready.

8 And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

9 And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb. And he saith unto me, These are the true sayings of God.

10 And I fell at his feet to worship him. And he said unto me, See thou do it not: I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy.

11 And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war.

12 His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on his head were many crowns; and he had a name written, that no man knew, but he himself.

13 And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is called The Word of God.

14 And the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean.

15 And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God.

16 And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

17 And I saw an angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven, Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God;

18 That ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains, and the flesh of mighty men, and the flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the flesh of all men, both free and bond, both small and great.

19 And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army.

20 And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone.

21 And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, which sword proceeded out of his mouth: and all the fowls were filled with their flesh.

1 And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand.

2 And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years,

3 And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season.

4 And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgement was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.

5 But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection.

6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

7 And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison,

8 And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog, and Magog, to gather them together to battle: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

9 And they went up on the breadth of the earth, and compassed the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city: and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

10 And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever.

11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them.

12 And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God; and the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.

13 And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works.

14 And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death.

15 And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

REVELATION CHAPTER 21

1 And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea.

2 And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

3 And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

4 And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

5 And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful.

6 And he said unto me, It is done. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst of the fountain of the water of life freely.

7 He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son.

8 But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death.

9 And there came unto me one of the seven angels which had the seven vials full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife.

10 And he carried me away in the spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God.

11 Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal;

12 And had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel:

13 On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates.

14 And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb.

15 And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof.

16 And the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal.

17 And he measured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel.

18 And the building of the wall of it was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass.

19 And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a chalcedony; the fourth, an emerald;

20 The fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a topaz; the tenth, a chrysopterus; the eleventh, a jacinth; the twelfth, an amethyst.

21 And the twelve gates were twelve pearls: every several gate was of one pearl: and the street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass.

22 And I saw no temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.

23 And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.

24 And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it.

25 And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there.

26 And they shall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.

27 And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life.

REVELATION CHAPTER 22

1 And he shewed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb.

2 In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations.

3 And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him:

4 And they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads.

5 And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign for ever and ever.

6 And he said unto me, These sayings are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the things which must shortly be done.

7 Behold, I come quickly; blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book.

8 And I John saw these things, and heard them. And when I had heard and seen, I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which shewed me these things.

9 Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not: for I am thy fellowservant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God.

10 And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book: for the time is at hand.

11 He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still.

12 And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be.

13 I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last.

14 Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

THE GRAND BIBLE

15 For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie.

16 I Jesus have sent mine angel to testify unto you these things in the churches. I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star.

17 And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.

18 For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book:

19 And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book.

20 He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

21 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

THE ZOROASTRIAN
SCRIPTURE

(Zoroastrianism or Mazdayasna is one of the world's oldest continuously practiced religions and it is based on the teachings of the Iranian-speaking prophet Zoroaster (also known as Zarathustra in Avestan or Zarthost in modern Persian). It is a multi-faceted faith centered on a dualistic cosmology of good and evil and an eschatology predicting the ultimate conquest of evil with theological elements of henotheism, monotheism / monism, and polytheism. Zoroastrianism exalts an uncreated and benevolent deity of wisdom, Ahura Mazda (Wise Lord), as its supreme being. Historical features of Zoroastrianism, such as messianism, judgement after death, heaven and hell, and free will may have influenced other religious and philosophical systems, including Jainism, Buddhism, Greek philosophy, Second Temple Judaism, Christianity, Gnosticism, Islam, Baha'i Faith, and Sikhism.

Ahura Mazda (Avestan language, also known as Oromasdes, Ohrmazd, Ahuramazda, Hourmazd, Hormazd, and Hurmuz; see Straits of Hormuz) is the creator deity and highest deity of Zoroastrianism. Ahura Mazda is the first and most frequently invoked spirit in the Yasna. The literal meaning of the word Ahura is "lord," and that of Mazda is "wisdom."

Ahura Mazda, the Lord of Wisdom, is one of the oldest deities mentioned in the Gathas. The Gathas are 17 Avestan hymns believed to have been composed by Zarathushtra (Zoroaster) himself between c. 1500 BC and 1000 BC. They form the core of the Zoroastrian liturgy (the Yasna). They are arranged in five different modes or metres. The Avestan term gāōā ("hymn", but also "mode, metre") is cognate with Sanskrit gātha from "to sing". Aspects of Zoroastrian philosophy are distributed over the entire collection of Gathas. There is no systematic arrangement of doctrine in the texts.

Ahura Mazda appeared officially first in Darius I's Behistun Inscription. The Behistun Inscription (also Bisuton, Bistun or Bisutun; Old Persian: Bagastana, meaning "the place of god") is a multilingual inscription and large rock relief on a cliff at Mount Behistun in the Kermanshah Province of Iran, near the city of Kermanshah in western Iran, commissioned by Darius the Great (r. 522–486 BC). The inscription is to cuneiform script what the Rosetta Stone is to Egyptian hieroglyphs: It has been crucial to the decipherment of cuneiform script as the inscription includes three versions of the same text, written in the three different cuneiform script languages Old Persian, Elamite, and Babylonian (a variety of the Semitic language Akkadian).

There is a high likelihood that the Semitic Hebrews influenced the Persians by their advanced biblical scholarship. Darius freed the Israelites from Babylonian captivity and created by this act an alliance between Jews and Persians that lasted for many centuries. And it was probably also Darius who first commissioned a kind of canonisation of each and every text that was known about Zoroaster and his teachings. He is also the most likely candidate who decided Ahura Mazda to be the sole and real god turning the polytheistic Zoroastrian religion into a monotheistic one. In return, the Zoroastrian purity precepts might have been the model for Jewish purity commandments.

Until Artaxerxes II of Persia (405–04 to 359–58 BC), Ahura Mazda was worshipped and invoked alone in all extant royal inscriptions. With Artaxerxes II, Ahura Mazda was invoked in a triad or trinity, with Mithra and Anahita as a kind of angels who accompanied Ahura Mazda.

Mithra (Avestan: Miθra, Old Persian: Miça / Misa) commonly known as Mehr [an alternative name for Mithra living in Meh], a synonym in Sikhism for Guru, scholar, prophet, teacher, is the Zoroastrian angelic divinity (yazata) of covenant, light, and oath. In addition to being the divinity of contracts, Mithra is also a judicial figure, an all-seeing protector of Truth, and the guardian of cattle, the harvest, and of the Waters. The Romans attributed their Mithra [usually depicted as sun god with a halo round his head which later became also an attribute to Christ] to "Persian" (i.e., Zoroastrian) sources relating to Mithra. To the Romans, Mithra was a very attractive god as he promised salvation through an afterlife. These ideas, including the liturgy like the Eucharist and the typical appearance of Christ, went straight into the new Pauline Christianity.

With possible roots dating back to the second millennium BC, Zoroastrianism enters recorded history in the 5th century BC. It served as the state religion of the ancient Iranian empires for more than a millennium, from around 600 BC to 650 AD, but declined from the 7th century AD onwards following the Muslim conquest of Persia of 633–654 AD and subsequent persecution of Zoroastrians. Estimates place the current number of Zoroastrians between 100,000–200,000 at most, with the majority living in India, Iran, and North America; their number has been thought to be declining. Zoroastrian face extinction if they do not change their retrictions. Like Judaism, Zoroastrianism suffers from the self-inflicted aversion to welcome converts from outside of the religious community.

The most important texts of the religion are those of the Avesta, which includes as central the writings of Zoroaster known as the Gathas, enigmatic ritual poems that define the religion's precepts, which is within Yasna, the main worship service of modern Zoroastrianism.

The surviving texts of the Avesta, as they exist today, derive from a single master copy produced by collation and recension in the Sassanid Empire (224–651 AD). That master copy, now lost, is known as the 'Sassanid archetype'. The oldest surviving manuscript (K1*) of an Avestan language text is dated 1323 AD. [*K1 represents 248 leaves of a 340-leaf Vendidad Sade manuscript, i.e. a variant of a Yasna text into which sections of the Visperad and Vendidad are interleaved. The colophon of K1 (K = Copenhagen) identifies its place and year of completion to Cambay, 692Y (= 1323–1324 AD). The date of K1 is occasionally mistakenly given as 1184. This mistake is due to a 19th-century confusion of the date of K1 with the date of K1's source: in the postscript to K1, the copyist – a certain Mehrban Kai Khusrrow of Navsari – gives the date of his source as 552Y (= 1184 AD). That text from 1184 has not survived.]

Summaries of the various Avesta texts found in the 9th/10th century texts of Zoroastrian tradition suggest that a significant portion of the literature in the Avestan language has been lost. Only about one-quarter [25%] of the Avestan sentences or verses referred to by the 9th / 10th century commentators can be found in the surviving texts. This suggests that three-quarters [75%] of Avestan material, including an indeterminate number of juridical, historical and legendary texts, have been lost since then. On the other hand, it appears that the most valuable portions of the canon, including all of the oldest texts, have survived. The likely reason for this is that the surviving materials represent those portions of the Avesta that were in regular liturgical use, and therefore known by heart by the priests and not dependent for their preservation on the survival of particular manuscripts.

A pre-Sassanid history of the Avesta, if it had one, is in the realm of legend and myth. The oldest surviving versions of these tales are found in the ninth to 11th century AD texts of Zoroastrian tradition (i.e. in the so-called "Pahlavi books"). The legends run as follows: The twenty-one nasks ("books") of the Avesta were created by Ahura Mazda and brought by Zoroaster to his patron Vishvaspa (Denkard 4A, 3A; Denkard is a Zoroastrian Encyclopaedia). Supposedly, Vishvaspa (Dk 3A) or another Kayanian, Daray (Dk 4B), then had two copies made, one of which was stored in the treasury, and the other in the royal archives (Dk 4B, 5). Following Alexander's conquest, the Avesta was then supposedly destroyed or dispersed by the Greeks after they translated the scientific passages that they could make use of (AVN 7–9, Dk 3B, 8). Several centuries later, one of the Parthian emperors named Valaksh (one of the Vologases) supposedly then had the fragments collected, not only of those that had previously been written down, but also of those that had only been orally transmitted (Dk 4C).

The loss of the document did not come as unrelated coincidence. Between 1370 and 1405 AD, the Islamic conqueror Timur committed genocide on a scale not yet seen before: Between 7 million and 20 million people. During his rampage he executed hundreds of thousands by beheading. The chopped-off heads were heaped up higher than a man on horseback. He destroyed hundreds of towns and cities of his victims and he did not forget to destroy their books. Today, Zoroastrian communities survive mainly in India and the United States. All this has origins which can be found in the Islamic scripture, the Koran, the Sira, and the Hadith, and their in them implemented doctrine commonly known as "Jahiliyya"*.

[* It is often translated as the "Age of Ignorance". The term jahiliyyah is derived from the verbal root jahala "to be ignorant or stupid, to act stupidly". The age of ignorance is an Islamic concept referring to the period of time and state of affairs in Arabia before the advent of Islam in 610 AD. In Islam the term is used to what Muslims see as the un-Islamic nature of public and private life in the Muslim world. It is like the rule of abrogation in the Koran in which the later verses overrule any older one: Anything from earlier times are not worthwhile to keep, maintain, or promote, therefore can be destroyed. It is part of the Sharia and the Jihad prescribed in the Koran, the Sira, and the Hadith. This notion of Jahiliyyah is also promoted by mainstream Islam scholars such as Abul A'la Maududi and Sayyid Qutb. They view jahiliyyah as a state of domination of Muslims over Kafirs (non-Muslims) and the entire World, and any Islamic activity is justified by the Islamic scripture.

Islamic doctrine divides the world into two distinct territories: 1st:

Dar al-harb (lit. territory of war) in Islamic law, is the major divisions are dar al-islam (lit. territory of Islam / the submission to Allah), denoting regions where Islamic Sharia law prevails and anyone is subjugated under it. Islam means "submission". As Islam rules here, Islam is at peace; 2nd: Dar al-Islam (Arabic: literally house of Islam is a term used by Muslims to refer to those countries where Muslims can practice their religion as the ruling sect. It is the area of the world under the rule of the Islamic Sharia law. As Islam does not rule here [yet], Islam is here at war. And so is humanity in Islam divided into two humanities: 1st: Muslims; 2nd: Kafirs, the vile non-Muslims, subhumans who still resist Islam and in particular the Islamic legal, political and ideological system. Once the Sharia is firmly implemented in the host nation, the host is subjugated from inside. This system was in the last 1400 years successful to a rate of 100%.]

The origin of Zoroastrianism dates back to a prophet known as Zoroaster, also known as Zarathustra, Zarathushtra Spitama or Ashu Zarathushtra. Zarathustra and Zoroaster are the Greek transcriptions. Other Greek forms of that name are: Zoroastriemos, Zostrianos, Zoroastres, Zoroastris, Zarathoustra, Zarathoustra, Zartost, Zoroastriemou. The Greek form of the name appears to be based on a phonetic transliteration or semantic substitution of Avestan zarad- with the Greek zoros (literally "undiluted" or "pure") and the Avestan -ushtra with the Greek astrā ("star"). They derive from Zartosht, Old Persian: Zardusht or Zarducht, Parthian: Zarhušt, meaning: "Pure Star", a word which brings us to the speculation whether the Hebrew Star Prophecy may origin in Zoroastrianism.

Zoroaster's teachings challenged the existing traditions of the Indo-Iranian religion and inaugurated a movement that eventually became the dominant religion in Ancient Persia. He was a native speaker of Old Avestan and lived in the eastern part of the Iranian Plateau, probably in the region of modern Pakistan or northwest India, but his exact birthplace is uncertain.

There is no scholarly consensus on when Zoroaster lived. Some scholars, using linguistic and socio-cultural evidence, suggest a dating to somewhere in the second millennium BC. Most scholars date him in the 7th and 6th century BC as a near-contemporary of Cyrus the Great and Darius I. Zoroastrianism eventually became the official religion of Ancient Persia and its distant subdivisions from the 6th century BC to the 7th century AD. Zoroaster is credited with authorship of the Gathas as well as the Yasna Haptanghaiti, hymns composed in his native dialect, Old Avestan and which comprise the core of Zoroastrian thinking. Most of his life is known from these texts. By any modern standard of historiography, no evidence can place him into a fixed period and the historicization surrounding him may be a part of a trend from before the 10th century AD that historicises legends and myth.)

(The Avesta is the holy book of Zoroastrianism. It is written in the Avestan language. The Avesta has also been translated into other languages including Farsi and English. The oldest portion, the Gathas, are the religious songs composed by Zarathustra himself. Other parts of Avesta are named Yasna, Yashts, Visperad, Vendidad and Khordeh Avesta.

The Avestan language, also known historically as Zend, refers to two languages Old Avestan (spoken in the 2nd millennium BC) and Younger Avestan (spoken in the 1st millennium BC). Both are early Iranian languages, a branch of the Indo-Iranian languages within the Indo-European family. As such, Old Avestan is quite close in grammar and lexicon with India's Vedic Sanskrit. Avestan is the ancestor of modern Persian (also called Parsi, Farsi, or Iranian) Avestan known from its use in the Zoroastrian Bible, which is therefore called The Avesta or the Zend Avesta.

Zend or Zand is a Zoroastrian technical term for exegetical glosses, paraphrases, commentaries and translations of the Avesta's texts. The term zand is a contraction of the Avestan language word zanti, meaning "interpretation", or "as understood".

There are two other religious texts in Zoroastrianism which are named Ardaviraf Namak and The Denkard, which is an encyclopedia on Zoroastrianism.

Structure and content

In its present form, the Avesta is a compilation from various sources, and its different parts date from different periods and vary widely in character. Only texts in the Avestan language are considered part of the Avesta.

According to the Denkard (the dictionary and encyclopedia of Zoroastrianism and their Avesta scriptures), the 21 nasks (books) mirror the structure of the 21-word-long Ahuna Vairya prayer: each of the three lines of the prayer consists of seven words. Correspondingly, the nasks are divided into three groups, of seven volumes per group. Originally, each volume had a word of the prayer as its name, which so marked a volume's position relative to the other volumes. Only about a quarter of the text from the nasks has survived until today.

The contents of the Avesta are divided topically (even though the organisation of the nasks is not), but these are not fixed or canonical. Some scholars prefer to place the categories in two groups, the one liturgical, and the other general. The following categorisation is as described by Jean Kellens (see bibliography, below).

The Yasna (The Lithurgy)

The Yasna (from yazšn "worship, oblations", cognate with Sanskrit yajña), is the primary liturgical collection, named after the ceremony at which it is recited. It consists of 72 sections called the Ha-iti or Ha. The 72 threads of lamb's wool in the Kushti, the sacred thread worn by Zoroastrians, represent these sections. The central portion of the Yasna is the Gathas, the oldest and most sacred portion of the Avesta, believed to have been composed by Zarathushtra (Zoroaster) himself. The Gathas are structurally interrupted by the Yasna Haptanhaiti ("seven-chapter Yasna"), which makes up chapters 35–42 of the Yasna and is almost as old as the Gathas, consists of prayers and hymns in honour of the Supreme Deity, Ahura Mazda, the Angels, Fire, Water, and Earth. The younger Yasna, though handed down in prose, may once have been metrical, as the Gathas still are.

The Visperad

The Visperad (from vispe ratavo, "(prayer to) all patrons") is a collection of supplements to the Yasna. The Visperad is subdivided into 23 or 24 kardo (sections) that are interleaved into the Yasna during a Visperad service (which is an extended Yasna service).

The Visperad collection has no unity of its own, and is never recited separately from the Yasna.

The Vendidad

The Vendidad (or Vidēvdāt, a corruption of Avestan Vī-Daēvō-Dāta, "Given Against the Demons") is an enumeration of various manifestations of evil spirits, and ways to confound them. The Vendidad includes all of the 19th nask, which is the only nask that has survived in its entirety. The text consists of 22 Fargards, fragments arranged as discussions between Ahura Mazda and Zoroaster. The first fargard is a dualistic creation myth, followed by the description of a destructive winter on the lines of the Flood myth.

The second fargard recounts the legend of Yima. The remaining fargards deal primarily with hygiene (care of the dead in particular) [fargard 3, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 16, 17, 19] as well as disease and spells to fight it. Fargards 4 and 15 discuss the dignity of wealth and charity, of marriage and of physical effort, and the indignity of unacceptable social behaviour such as assault and breach of contract, and specify the penances required to atone for violations thereof. The Vendidad is an ecclesiastical code, not a liturgical manual, and there is a degree of moral relativism apparent in the codes of conduct. The Vendidad's different parts vary widely in character and in age. Some parts may be comparatively recent in origin although the greater part is very old.

The Vendidad, unlike the Yasna and the Visperad, is a book of moral laws rather than the record of a liturgical ceremony. However, there is a ceremony called the Vendidad, in which the Yasna is recited with all the chapters of both the Visperad and the Vendidad inserted at appropriate points. This ceremony is only performed at night.

The Yashts

The Yashts (from yešti, "worship by praise") are a collection of 21 hymns, each dedicated to a particular divinity or divine concept. Three hymns of the Yasna liturgy that "worship by praise" are—in tradition—also nominally called yashts, but are not counted among the Yasht collection since the three are a part of the primary liturgy. The Yashts vary greatly in style, quality and extent. In their present form, they are all in prose but analysis suggests that they may at one time have been in verse.

The Siroza

The Siroza ("thirty days") is an enumeration and invocation of the 30 divinities presiding over the days of the month. (cf. Zoroastrian calendar). The Siroza exists in two forms, the shorter ("little Siroza") is a brief enumeration of the divinities with their epithets in the genitive. The longer ("great Siroza") has complete sentences and sections, with the yazats being addressed in the accusative.

The Siroza is never recited as a whole, but is a source for individual sentences devoted to particular divinities, to be inserted at appropriate points in the liturgy depending on the day and the month.

The Nyayeshes

The five Nyayeshes, abbreviated Ny., are prayers for regular recitation by both priests and laity. They are addressed to the Sun and Mithra (recited together thrice a day), to the Moon (recited thrice a month), and to the Waters and to Fire. The Nyayeshes are composite texts containing selections from the Gathas and the Yashts, as well as later material.

The Gāhs

The five gāhs are invocations to the five divinities that watch over the five divisions (gāhs) of the day. Gāhs are similar in structure and content to the five Nyayeshes.

The Afrinagans

The Afrinagans are four "blessing" texts recited on a particular occasion: the first in honour of the dead, the second on the five epagomenal days that end the year, the third is recited at the six seasonal feasts, and the fourth at the beginning and end of summer.

Fragments

All material in the Avesta that is not already present in one of the other categories falls into a "fragments" category, which – as the name suggests – includes incomplete texts. There are altogether more than 20 fragment collections, many of which have no name (and are then named after their owner/collator) or only a Middle Persian name. The more important of the fragment collections are the Nirangistan fragments (18 of which constitute the Ehrbadistan); the Pursishniha "questions," also known as "Fragments Tahmuras"; and the Hadokht Nask "volume of the scriptures" with two fragments of eschatological significance.

THE VENDIDAD

or The 22 Fargards

(Introduction: The Vendidad or Videvdāt is a collection of texts within the greater compendium of the Avesta. However, unlike the other texts of the Avesta, the Vendidad is an ecclesiastical code, not a liturgical manual. The name of the texts is a contraction of the Avestan language Vī-Daēvō-Dāta, "Given Against the Dævas (Demons)", and as the name suggests, the Vendidad is an enumeration of various manifestations of evil spirits, and ways to confound them. According to the divisions of the Avesta as described in the Denkard, a 9th-century text, the Vendidad includes all of the 19th nask, which is then the only nask that has survived in its entirety. The Vendidad consists of 22 so-called "fargards" which are fragments of discussions, or more precisely dialogues, between Ahura Mazda and Zoroaster. The arrangement does not suggest it was composed by the prophet's contemporaries. Most of the Zoroastrians continue to use the Vendidad as a valued and fundamental cultural and ethical moral guide, viewing their teachings as essential to Zoroastrian tradition and see it as part of Zoroastrianism original perspectives about the truth of spiritual existence. They argue that it has origins on early oral tradition, being only later written.)

1. Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying:
2 I have made every land dear to its dwellers, even though it had no charms whatever in it: had I not made every land dear to its dwellers, even though it had no charms whatever in it, then the whole living world would have invaded the Airyana Vaëgō.

3 The first of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the Airyana Vaëgō, by the good river Dāitya. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the serpent in the river and winter, a work of the Daēvas.

4 There are ten winter months there, two summer months; and those are cold for the waters, cold for the earth, cold for the trees. Winter falls there, with the worst of its plagues.

5 The second of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the plains in Sughdha. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the fly Skaitiya, which brings death to the cattle.

6 The third of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the strong, holy Mōuru. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft sinful lusts.

7 The fourth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the beautiful Bākhddhi with high-lifted banners. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the Bravara.

8 The fifth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was Nisāya, that lies between Mōuru and Bākhddhi. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the sin of unbelief.

9 The sixth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was Harōyu with its lake. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the stained mosquito.

10 The seventh of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was Vaēkereta, of the evil shadows. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the Pairika Knāthaiti, who clave unto Keresāspa.

11 The eighth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was Urva of the rich pastures. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the sin of pride.

12 The ninth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was Khnenta in Vehrkāna. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft a sin for which there is no atonement, the unnatural sin.

13 The tenth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the beautiful Harahvaiti. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft a sin for which there is no atonement, the burying of the dead.

14 The eleventh of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the bright, glorious Haētumant. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the evil witchcraft of the Yātus.

15 And this is how the Yātu's nature shows itself: it shows itself by the look 4; and then, whenever the wizard goes and howls forth his spells, most deadly works of witchcraft go forth.

16 The twelfth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was Rāgha of the three races. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft the sin of utter unbelief.

17 The thirteenth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the strong, holy Kakhra. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft a sin for which there is no atonement, the burning of corpses.

18 The fourteenth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the four-cornered Varena, for which was born Thraētaona, who smote Azis Dahāka. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft abnormal issues in women and the oppression of foreign rulers.

19 The fifteenth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the Seven Rivers. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft abnormal issues in women and excessive heat.

20 The sixteenth of the good lands and countries which I, Ahura Mazda, created, was the land by the floods of the Rangha, where people live without a head. Thereupon came Angra Mainyu, who is all death, and he counter-created by his witchcraft winter, a work of the Daēvas.

21 There are still other lands and countries, beautiful and deep, desirable and bright, and thriving.

Myths Of Yima

1. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Who was the first mortal, before myself, Zarathustra, with whom thou, Ahura Mazda, didst converse I, whom thou didst teach the law of Ahura, the law of Zarathustra?

2 Ahura Mazda answered: The fair Yima, the great shepherd, O holy Zarathustra! he was the first mortal, before thee, Zarathustra, with whom I, Ahura Mazda, did converse, whom I taught the law of Ahura, the law of Zarathustra.

3 Unto him, O Zarathustra, I, Ahura Mazda, spake, saying: 'Well, fair Yima, son of Vivanghat, be thou the preacher and the bearer of my law! And the fair Yima, O Zarathustra, replied unto me, saying: 'I was not born, I was not taught to be the preacher and the bearer of thy law.'

4 Then I, Ahura Mazda, said thus unto him, O Zarathustra: 'Since thou wastest not to be the preacher and the bearer of my law, then make thou my worlds thrive, make my worlds increase: undertake thou to nourish, to rule, and to watch over my world.'

5 And the fair Yima replied unto me, O Zarathustra, saying: 'Yes! I will make thy worlds thrive, I will make thy worlds increase. Yes! I will nourish, and rule, and watch over thy world. There shall be, while I am king, neither cold wind nor hot wind, neither disease nor death.'

7 Then I, Ahura Mazda, brought two implements unto him: a golden ring and a poniard inlaid with gold. Behold, here Yima bears the royal sway!

8 Thus, under the sway of Yima, three hundred winters passed away, and the earth was replenished with flocks and herds, with men and dogs and birds and with red blazing fires, and there was no more room for flocks, herds, and men.

9 Then I warned the fair Yima, saying: 'O fair Yima, son of Vivanghat, the earth has become full of flocks and herds, of men and dogs and birds and of red blazing fires, and there is no more room for flocks, herds, and men.'

10 Then Yima stepped forward, towards the luminous space, southwards, to meet the sun, and (afterwards) he pressed the earth with the golden ring, and bored it with the poniard, speaking thus: 'O Spenta Armaiti, kindly open asunder and stretch thyself afar, to bear flocks and herds and men.'

11 And Yima made the earth grow larger by one-third than it was before, and there came flocks and herds and men, at his will and wish, as many as he wished.

12 Thus, under the sway of Yima, six hundred winters passed away, and the earth was replenished with flocks and herds, with men and dogs and birds and with red blazing fires, and there was no more room for flocks, herds, and men.

13 And I warned the fair Yima, saying: 'O fair Yima, son of Vivanghat, the earth has become full of flocks and herds, of men and dogs and birds and of red blazing fires, and there is no more room for flocks, herds, and men.'

14 Then Yima stepped forward, towards the luminous space, southwards, to meet the sun, and (afterwards) he pressed the earth with the golden ring, and bored it with the poniard, speaking thus: 'O Spenta Armaiti, kindly open asunder and stretch thyself afar, to bear flocks and herds and men.'

15 And Yima made the earth grow larger by two-thirds than it was before, and there came flocks and herds and men, at his will and wish, as many as he wished.

16 Thus, under the sway of Yima, nine hundred winters passed away, and the earth was replenished with flocks and herds, with men and dogs and birds and with red blazing fires, and there was no more room for flocks, herds, and men.

17 And I warned the fair Yima, saying: 'O fair Yima, son of Vivanghat, the earth has become full of flocks and herds, of men and dogs and birds and of red blazing fires, and there is no more room for flocks, herds, and men.'

18 Then Yima stepped forward, towards the luminous space, southwards, to meet the sun, and (afterwards) he pressed the earth with the golden ring, and bored it with the poniard, speaking thus: 'O Spenta Armaiti, kindly open asunder and stretch thyself afar, to bear flocks and herds and men.'

19 And Yima made the earth grow larger by three-thirds than it was before, and there came flocks and herds and men, at his will and wish, as many as he wished.

21 The Maker, Ahura Mazda, of high renown in the Airyana Vaëgō, by the good river Dāitya, called together a meeting of the celestial gods. The fair Yima, the good shepherd, of high renown in the Airyana Vaëgō, by the good river Dāitya, called together a meeting of the excellent mortals. To that meeting came Ahura Mazda, of high renown in the Airyana Vaëgō, by the good river Dāitya; he came together with the celestial gods. To that meeting came, the fair Yima, the good shepherd, of high renown in the Airyana Vaëgō, by the good river Dāitya; he came together with the excellent mortals.

22 And Ahura Mazda spake unto Yima, saying: 'O fair Yima, son of Vivanghat! Upon the material world the fatal winters are going to fall, that shall bring the fierce, foul frost; upon the material world the fatal winters are going to fall, that shall make snow-flakes fall thick, even an aredvī deep on the highest tops of mountains.'

23 And all the three sorts of beasts shall perish, those that live in the wilderness, and those that live on the tops of the mountains, and those that live in the bosom of the dale, under the shelter of stables.

24 Before that winter, those fields would bear plenty of grass for cattle: now with floods that stream, with snows that melt, it will seem a happy land in the world, the land wherein footprints even of sheep may still be seen.

25 Therefore make thee a Vara, long as a riding-ground on every side of the square 1, and thither bring the seeds of sheep and oxen, of men, of dogs, of birds, and of red blazing fires. Therefore make thee a Vara, long as a riding-ground on every side of the square, to be an abode for men; a Vara, long, as a riding-ground on every side of the square, to be a fold for flocks.

26 There thou shalt make waters flow in a bed a hāthra long; there thou shalt settle birds, by the ever-green banks that bear never-failing food. There thou shalt establish dwelling places, consisting of a house with a balcony, a courtyard, and a gallery.

27 Thither thou shalt bring the seeds of men and women, of the greatest, best, and finest kinds on this earth; thither thou shalt bring the seeds of every kind of cattle, of the greatest, best, and finest kinds on this earth.

28 Thither thou shalt bring the seeds of every kind of tree, of the greatest, best, and finest kinds on this earth; thither thou shalt bring the seeds of every kind of fruit, the fullest of food and sweetest of odour. All those seeds shalt thou bring, two of ever), kind, to be kept inexhaustible there, so long as those men shall stay in the Vara.

29 There shall be no humpbacked, none bulged forward there; no impotent, no lunatic; no poverty, no lying; no meanness, no jealousy; no decayed tooth, no leprous to be confined 1, nor any of the brands wherewith Angra Mainyu stamps the bodies of mortals.

30 In the largest part of the place thou shalt make nine streets, six in the middle part, three in the smallest. To the streets of the largest part thou shalt bring a thousand seeds of men and women; to the streets of the middle part, six hundred; to the streets of the smallest part, three hundred. That Vara thou shalt seal up with the golden ring, and thou shalt make a door, and a window self-shining within.

31 Then Yima said within himself: 'How shall I manage to make that Vara which Ahura Mazda has commanded me to make?' And Ahura Mazda said unto Yima: 'O fair Yima, son of Vivanghat! Crush the earth with a stamp of thy heel, and then knead it with thy hands, as the potter does when kneading the potter's clay.'

32 And Yima did as Ahura Mazda wished; he crushed the earth with a stamp of his heel, he kneaded it with his hands, as the potter does when kneading the potter's clay.

33 And Yima made a Vara, long as a riding-ground on every side of the square. There he brought the seeds of sheep and oxen, of men, of dogs, of birds, and of red blazing fires. He made Vara, long as a riding-ground on every side of the square, to be an abode for men; a Vara, long as a riding-ground on every side of the square, to be a fold for flocks.

34 There he made waters flow in a bed a hāthra long; there he settled birds, by the evergreen banks that bear never-failing food. There he established dwelling places, consisting of a house with a balcony, a courtyard, and a gallery.

35 There he brought the seeds of men and women, of the greatest, best, and finest kinds on this earth; there he brought the seeds of every kind of cattle, of the greatest, best, and finest kinds on this earth.

36 There he brought the seeds of every kind of tree, of the greatest, best, and finest kinds on this earth; there he brought the seeds of every kind of fruit, the fullest of food and sweetest of odour. All those seeds he brought, two of every kind, to be kept inexhaustible there, so long as those men shall stay in the Vara.

37 And there were no humpbacked, none bulged forward there; no impotent, no lunatic; no poverty, no lying; no meanness, no jealousy; no decayed tooth, no leprous to be confined, nor any of the brands wherewith Angra Mainyu stamps the bodies of mortals.

38 In the largest part of the place he made nine streets, six in the middle part, three in the smallest. To the streets of the largest part he brought a thousand seeds of men and women; to the streets of the middle part, six hundred; to the streets of the smallest part, three hundred. That Vara he sealed up with the golden ring, and he made a door, and a window self-shining within.

39 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What lights are there to give light in the Vara which Yima made?

40 Ahura Mazda answered: 'There are uncreated lights and created lights. There the stars, the moon, and the sun are only once (a year) seen to rise and set, and a year seems only as a day.'

41 'Every fortieth year, to every couple two are born, a male and a female 4. And thus it is for every sort of cattle. And the men in the Vara which Yima made live the happiest life.'

42 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Who is he who brought the law of Mazda into the Vara which Yima made? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It was the bird Karshipta, O holy Zarathustra!'

43 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Who is the lord and ruler there? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Urvatadnara, O Zarathustra! and thyself, Zarathustra.'

The Earth

1 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the first place where the Earth feels most happy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place whereon one of the faithful steps forward, O Spitama Zarathustra! with the holy wood in his hand, the baresma in his hand, the holy meat in his hand, the holy mortar in his hand, fulfilling the law with love, and beseeching aloud Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, and Rāma Hvāstra.'

2, 3 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the second place where the Earth feels most happy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place whereon one of the faithful erects a house with a priest within, with cattle, with a wife, with children, and good herds within; and wherein afterwards the cattle go on thriving, holiness is thriving, fodder is thriving, the dog is thriving, the wife is thriving, the child is thriving, the fire is thriving, and every blessing of life is thriving.'

4 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the third place where the Earth feels most happy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place where one of the faithful cultivates most corn, grass, and fruit, O Spitama Zarathustra! where he waters ground that is dry, or dries ground that is too wet.'

5 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the fourth place where the Earth feels most happy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place where there is most increase of flocks and herds.'

6 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the fifth place where the Earth feels most happy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place where flocks and herds yield most dung.'

7 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the first place where the Earth feels sorest grief? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the neck of Arezūra, whereon the hosts of fiends rush forth from the burrow of the Drug.'

8 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the second place where the Earth feels sorest grief? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place wherein most corpses of dogs and of men lie buried.'

9 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the third place where the Earth feels sorest grief? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place whereon stand most of those Dakmas on which corpses of men are deposited.'

10 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the fourth place where the Earth feels sorest grief? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place wherein are most burrows of the creatures of Angra Mainyu.'

11 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the fifth place where the Earth feels sorest grief? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the place whereon the wife and children of one of the faithful, O Spitama Zarathustra! are driven along the way of captivity, the dry, the dusty way, and lift up a voice of wailing.'

12 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Who is the first that rejoices the Earth with greatest joy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is he who digs out of it most corpses of dogs and men.'

13 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Who is the second that rejoices the Earth with greatest joy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is he who pulls down most of those Dakmas on which corpses of men are deposited.'

14 Let no man alone by himself carry a corpse. If a man alone by himself carry a corpse, the Nasu rushes upon him, to defile him, from the nose of the dead, from the eye, from the tongue, from the jaws, from the sexual organ, from the hinder parts. This Drug, this Nasu, falls upon him, stains him even to the end of the nails, and he is unclean, thenceforth, for ever and ever.

15 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What shall be the place of that man who has carried a corpse alone? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It shall be the place on this earth wherein is least water and fewest plants, whereof the ground is the cleanest and the driest and the least passed through by flocks and herds, by Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, by the consecrated bundles of baresma, and by the faithful.'

16 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How far from the fire? How far from the water? How far from the consecrated bundles of baresma? How far from the faithful?

18, 19 'There, on that place, shall the Worshipers of Mazda erect an enclosure, and therein shall they establish him with food, therein shall they establish him with clothes, with the coarsest food and with the most worn-out clothes. That food he shall live on, those clothes he shall wear, and thus shall they let him live, until he has grown to the age of a Hana, or of a Zaurura, or of a Pairista-khshudra.

20, 21 'And when he has grown to the age of a Hana, or of a Zaurura, or of a Pairista-khshudra, then the worshippers of Mazda shall order a man strong, vigorous, and skilful 3, to flay the skin off his body and cut the head off his neck, on the top of the mountain: and they shall deliver his corpse unto the greediest of the corpse-eating creatures made by Ahura Mazda, to the greedy ravens, with these words: "The man here has repented of all his evil thoughts, words, and deeds. If he has committed any other evil deed, it is remitted by his repentance: if he has committed no other evil deed, he is absolved by his repentance, for ever and ever."'

22 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Who is the third that rejoices the Earth with greatest joy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is he who fills up most burrows of the creatures of Angra Mainyu.'

23 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Who is the fourth that rejoices the Earth with greatest joy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is he who cultivates most corn, grass, and fruit, O Spitama Zarathustra! who waters ground that is dry, or dries ground that is too wet.'

24 'Unhappy is the land that has long lain unsown with the seed of the sower and wants a good husbandman, like a wellshapen maiden who has long gone childless and wants a good husband.

25 'He who would till the earth, O Spitama Zarathustra! with the left arm and the right, with the right arm and the left, unto him will she bring forth plenty, like a loving bride on her bed, unto her beloved; the bride will bring forth children, the earth will bring forth plenty of fruit.

30 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What is the food that fills the law of Mazda? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is sowing corn again and again, O Spitama Zarathustra!

31 'He who sows corn, sows holiness: he makes the law of Mazda grow higher and higher: he makes the law of Mazda as fat as he can with a hundred acts of adoration, a thousand oblations, ten thousand sacrifices.

32 'When barley is coming forth, the Daëvas start up; when the corn is growing rank, then faint the Daëvas hearts; when the corn is being ground, the Daëvas groan; when wheat is coming forth, the Daëvas are destroyed. In that house they can no longer stay, from that house they are beaten away, wherein wheat is thus coming forth. It is as though red hot iron were turned about in their throats, when there is plenty of corn.

33 'Then let (the priest) teach people this holy saying: "No one who does not eat, has strength to do works of holiness, strength to do works of husbandry, strength to beget children. By eating every material creature lives, by not eating it dies away."

34 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Who is the fifth that rejoices the Earth with greatest joy? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is he who tilling the earth, O Spitama Zarathustra! kindly and piously gives to one of the faithful.'

35 'He who tilling the earth, O Spitama Zarathustra! would not kindly and piously give to one of the faithful, he shall fall down into the darkness of Spenta Armaiti, down into the world of woe, the dismal realm, down into the house of hell.'

36 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall bury in the earth either the corpse of a dog or the corpse of a man, and if he shall not disinter it within half a year, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Five hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, five hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

37 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall bury in the earth either the corpse of a dog or the corpse of a man, and if he shall not disinter it within a year, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'A thousand stripes with the Aspahê-astara, a thousand stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

38 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall bury in the earth either the corpse of a dog or the corpse of a man, and if he shall not disinter it within the second year, what is the penalty for it? What is the atonement for it? What is the cleansing from it?

39 Ahura Mazda answered: 'For that deed there is nothing that can pay, nothing that can atone, nothing that can cleanse from it; it is a trespass for which there is no atonement, for ever and ever.'

40 When is it so? 'It is so, if the sinner be a professor of the law of Mazda, or one who has been taught in it. But if he be not a professor of the law of Mazda, nor one who has been taught in it, then this law of Mazda takes his sin from him, if he confesses it and resolves never to commit again such forbidden deeds.

41 'The law of Mazda indeed, O Spitama Zarathustra! takes away from him who confesses it the bonds of his sin; it takes away (the sin of) breach of trust; it takes away (the sin of) murdering one of the faithful; it takes away (the sin of) burying a corpse; it takes away (the sin of) deeds for which, there is no atonement; it takes away the heaviest penalties of sin 1; it takes away any sin that may be sinned.

42 'In the same way the law of Mazda, O Spitama Zarathustra! cleanses the faithful from every evil thought, word, and deed, as a swift-rushing mighty wind cleanses the plain. 'So let all the deeds thou doest be henceforth good, O Zarathustra! a full atonement for thy sin is effected by means of the law of Mazda.'

Contracts and Outrages.

1 He that does not restore (a thing lent), when it is asked for back again, steals the thing; he robs the man. So he does every day, every night, as long as he keeps in his house his neighbour's property, as, though it were his own.

2 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How many in number are thy contracts, O Ahura Mazda? Ahura Mazda answered: 'They are six in number. The first is the word-contract 4; the second is the hand-contract; the third is the contract to the amount of a sheep; the fourth is the contract to the amount of an ox the fifth is the contract to the amount of a man the sixth is the contract to the amount of a field, a field in good land, a fruitful one, in good bearing.'

3 If a man make the word-contract a mere word, it shall be redeemed by the hand-contract; he shall give in pledge the amount of the hand-contract.

4 The hand-contract shall be redeemed by the sheep-contract; he shall give in pledge the amount of the sheep-contract. The sheep-contract shall be redeemed by the ox-contract; he shall give in pledge the amount of the ox-contract. The ox-contract shall be redeemed by the man-contract; he shall give in pledge the amount of the man-contract. The man-contract shall be redeemed by the field-contract; he shall give in pledge the amount of the field-contract.

5 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the word-contract, how many are involved in his sin 1? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His sin makes, his Nabânazdistas answerable for the three hundred-fold atonement.'

6 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the hand-contract, how many are involved in his sin? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His sin makes his Nabânazdistas answerable for the six hundred-fold atonement.'

7 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the sheep-contract, how many are involved in his sin? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His sin makes his Nabânazdistas answerable for the seven hundred-fold atonement!'

8 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the ox-contract, how many are involved in his sin? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His sin makes his Nabânazdistas answerable for the eight hundred-fold atonement.'

10 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the field-contract, how many are involved in his sin? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His sin makes his Nabânazdistas answerable for the thousand-fold atonement.'

11 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the word-contract, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Three hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, three hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

12 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the hand-contract, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Six hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, six hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

13 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the sheep-contract, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Seven hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seven hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

14 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the ox-contract, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Eight hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, eight hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

15 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the man-contract, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Nine hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, nine hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

16 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man break the field-contract, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'A thousand stripes with the Aspahê-astara, a thousand stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

17 If a man rise up to smite a man, it is an Âgerepta. If a man come upon a man to smite him, it is an Avaoirista. If a man actually smite a man with evil aforethought, it is an Aredus. Upon the fifth Aredus he becomes a Peshôtanu.

18 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! He that committeth an Âgerepta, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Five stripes with the Aspahê-astara, five stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the second Âgerepta, ten stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ten stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the third, fifteen stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifteen stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

19 'On the fourth, thirty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, thirty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the fifth, fifty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the sixth, sixty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, sixty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the seventh, ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

20 If a man commit an Âgerepta for the eighth time, without having atoned for the preceding, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

21 If a man commit an Âgerepta and refuse to atone for it, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

22 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man commit an Avaoirista, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Ten stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ten stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the second Avaoirista, fifteen stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifteen stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

23 'On the third, thirty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, thirty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the fourth, fifty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the fifth, seventy stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seventy stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the sixth, ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

24 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man commit an Avaoirista for the seventh time, without having atoned for the preceding, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

25 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man commit an Avaoirista, and refuse to atone for it, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

26 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man commit an Aredus, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Fifteen stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifteen stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

27 'On the second Aredus, thirty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, thirty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the third, fifty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the fourth, seventy stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seventy stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; on the fifth, ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

28 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man commit an Aredus for the sixth time, without having atoned for the preceding, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

29 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man commit an Aredus, and refuse to atone for it, what penalty shall he pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

30 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man smite another and hurt him sorely, what is the penalty that he shall pay?

31 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thirty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, thirty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; the second time, fifty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; the third time, seventy stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seventy stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; the fourth time, ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

32 If a man commit that deed for the fifth time, without having atoned for the preceding, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

33 If a man commit that deed and refuse to atone for it, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

34 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man smite another so that the blood comes, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Fifty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; the second time, seventy stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seventy stripes with the Sraoshô-karana; the third time, ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

35 If he commit that deed for the fourth time, without having atoned for the preceding, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

36 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man smite another so that the blood comes, and if he refuse to atone for it, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

37 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man smite another so that he breaks a bone, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Seventy stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seventy stripes with the Sraoshôkarana; the second time, ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astira, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

38 If he commit that deed for the third time, without having atoned for the preceding, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astira, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

39 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man smite another so that he breaks a bone, and if he refuse to atone for it, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astira, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

40 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man smite another so that he gives up the ghost, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astira, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

41 If he commit that deed again, without having atoned for the preceding, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astira, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

42 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man smite another so that he gives up the ghost, and if he refuse to atone for it, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astira, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

43 And they shall thenceforth in their doings walk after the way of holiness, after the word of holiness, after the ordinance of holiness.

44 If men of the same faith, either friends or brothers, come to an agreement together, that one may obtain from the other, either goods, or a wife, or knowledge, let him who wants to have goods have them delivered to him; let him who wants to have a wife receive and wed her; let him who wants to have knowledge be taught the holy word.

45 He shall learn on, during the first part of the day and the last, during the first part of the night and the last, that his mind may be increased in knowledge and wax strong in holiness: so shall he sit up, giving thanks and praying to the gods, that he may be increased in knowledge: he shall rest during the middle part of the day, during the middle part of the night, and thus shall he continue until he can say all the words which former Aêthrapaitis has said.

46 Before the water and the blazing fire, O Spitama Zarathustra! let no one make bold to deny having received from his neighbour the ox or the garment (he has received from him).

47 . . . Verily I say it unto thee, O Spitama Zarathustra! the man who has a wife is far above him who begets no sons; he who keeps a house is far above him who has none; he who has children is far above the childless man; he who has riches is far above him who has none.

48 And of two men, he who fills himself with meat is filled with the good spirit much more than he who does not do so; the latter is all but dead; the former is above him by the worth of an Asperena, by the worth of a sheep, by the worth of an ox, by the worth of a man.

49 It is this man that can strive against the onsets of Astô-vidhôtû; that can strive against the self-moving arrow; that can strive against the winter fiend, with thinnest garment on; that can strive against the wicked tyrant and smite him on the head; it is this man that can strive against the ungodly Ashemaogha who does not eat.

49 . . . The very first time when that deed has been done, without waiting until it is done again.

50 Down there the pain for that deed shall be as hard as any in this world: should one cut off the limbs from his perishable body with knives of brass, yet still worse shall it be.

51 Down there the pain for that deed shall be as hard as any in this world: should one nail his perishable body with nails of brass, yet still worse shall it be.

52 Down there the pain for that deed shall be as hard as any in this world: should one by force throw his perishable body headlong down a precipice a hundred times the height of a man, yet still worse shall it be.

53 Down there the pain or that deed shall be as hard as any in this world: should one by force impale his perishable body, yet still worse shall it be.

54 Down there the pain for that deed shall be as hard as any in this world: to wit, that deed which is done, when a man, knowingly lying, confronts the brimstoned, golden, truth-knowing water with an appeal unto Rashnu and a lie unto Mithra.

55 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! He who, knowingly lying, confronts the brimstoned, golden, truth-knowing water with an appeal unto Rashnu and a lie unto Mithra, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Seven hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astira, seven hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

1 There dies a man in the depths of the vale: a bird takes flight from the top of the mountain down into the depths of the vale, and it eats up the corpse of the dead man there: then, up it flies from the depths of the vale to the top of the mountain: it flies to some one of the trees there, of the hardwood or the soft-wooded, and upon that tree it vomits, it deposits dung, it drops pieces from the corpse.

2 Now, lo! here is a man coming up from the depths of the vale to the top of the mountain; he comes to the tree whereon the bird is sitting; from that tree he wants to take wood for the fire. He fells the tree, he hews the tree, he splits it into logs, and then he lights it in the fire, the son of Ahura Mazda. What is the penalty that he shall pay?

3 Ahura Mazda answered: 'There is no sin upon a man for any dead matter that has been brought by dogs, by birds, by wolves, by winds, or by flies.'

4 'For were there sin upon a man for any dead matter that might have been brought by dogs, by birds, by wolves, by winds, or by flies, how soon this material world of mine would have in it only Peshôtanus, shut out from the way of holiness, whose souls will cry and wail! so numberless are the beings that die upon the face of the earth.'

5 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Here is a man watering a corn field. The water streams down the field; it streams again; it streams a third time; and the fourth time, a dog, a fox, or a wolf carries a corpse into the bed of the stream: what is the penalty that the man shall pay?

6 Ahura Mazda answered: 'There is no sin upon a man for any dead matter that has been brought by dogs, by birds, by wolves, by winds, or by flies.'

7 'For were there sin upon a man for any dead matter that might have been brought by dogs, by birds, by wolves, by winds, or by flies, how soon this material world of mine would have in it only Peshôtanus, shut out from the way of holiness, whose souls will cry and wail! so numberless are the beings that die upon the face of the earth.'

8 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Does water kill? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Water kills no man: Astô-vidhôtû I ties the noose around his neck, and, thus tied, Vaya carries him off: then the flood takes him up, the flood takes him down, the flood throws him ashore; then birds feed upon him, and chance brings him here, or brings him there.'

9 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Does fire kill? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Fire kills no man: Astô-vidhôtû ties the noose around his neck, and, thus tied, Vaya carries him off. The fire burns up life and limb, and then chance brings him here, or brings him there.'

10 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If the summer is past and the winter has come, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do? Ahura Mazda answered: 'In every house? in every borough, they shall raise three small houses for the dead.'

11 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How large shall be those houses for the dead? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Large enough not to strike the skull, or the feet, or the hands of the man, if he should stand erect, and hold out his feet, and stretch out his hands: such shall be, according to the law, the houses for the dead.'

12 'And they shall let the lifeless body lie there, for two nights, or for three nights, or a month long, until the birds begin to fly, the plants to grow, the floods to flow, and the wind to dry up the waters from off the earth.'

13 'And as soon as the birds begin to fly, the plants to grow, the floods to flow, and the wind to dry up the waters from off the earth, then the worshippers of Mazda shall lay down the dead (on the Dakhma) his eyes towards the sun.'

14 'If the worshippers of Mazda have not, within a year, laid down the dead (on the Dakhma), his eyes towards the sun, thou shalt prescribe for that trespass the same penalty as for the murder of one of the faithful. And there shall it lie until the corpse has been rained on, until the Dakhma has been rained on, until the unclean remains have been rained on, until the birds have eaten up the corpse.'

15 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Is it true that thou, Ahura Mazda, sendest the waters from the sea Vouru-kasha I down with the wind and with the clouds?

16 That thou, Ahura Mazda, makest them flow down to the corpses? that thou, Ahura Mazda, makest them flow down to the Dakhmas? that thou, Ahura Mazda, makest them flow down to the unclean remains? that thou, Ahura Mazda, makest them flow down to the bones? and that then thou, Ahura Mazda, makest them flow back unseen? that thou, Ahura Mazda, makest them flow back to the sea Pütika?

17 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is even so as thou hast said, O righteous Zarathustra! I, Ahura Mazda, send the waters from the sea Vouru-kasha down with the wind and with the clouds.'

18 'I, Ahura Mazda, make them stream down to the corpses; I, Ahura Mazda, make them stream down to the Dakhmas; I, Ahura Mazda, make them stream down to the unclean remains; I, Ahura Mazda, make them stream down to the bones; then I, Ahura Mazda, make them flow back unseen; I, Ahura Mazda, make them flow back to the sea Pütika.'

19 'The waters stand there boiling, boiling up in the heart of the sea Pütika, and, when cleansed there, they run back again from the sea Pütika to the sea Vouru-kasha, towards the well-watered tree, whereon grow the seeds of my plants of every kind by hundreds, by thousands, by hundreds of thousands.'

20 'Those plants, I, Ahura Mazda, rain down upon the earth, to bring food to the faithful, and fodder to the beneficent cow; to bring food to my people that they may live on it, and fodder to the beneficent cow.'

21 'This I is the best of all things, this is the fairest of all things, even as thou hast said, O righteous Zarathustra! With these words the holy Ahura Mazda rejoiced the holy Zarathustra: 'Purity is for man, next to life, the greatest good 3, that purity that is procured by the law of Mazda to him who cleanses his own self with good thoughts, words, and deeds.'

22 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! This law, this fiend-destroying law of Zarathustra, by what greatness, goodness, and fairness is it great, good, and fair above all other utterances?

23 (69). Ahura Mazda answered: 'As much above all other floods as is the sea Vouru-kasha, so much above all other utterances in greatness, goodness, and fairness is this law, this fiend-destroying law of Zarathustra.'

24 (70). 'As much as a great stream flows swifter than a slender rivulet, so much above all other utterances in greatness, goodness, and fairness is this law, this fiend-destroying law of Zarathustra. 'As high as the great tree stands above the small plants it overshadows, so high above all other utterances in greatness, goodness, and fairness is this law, this fiend-destroying law of Zarathustra.'

25, 26 'As high as heaven is above the earth that it compasses around, so high above all other utterances is this law, this fiend-destroying law of Mazda. 'Therefore, when the Ratu has been applied to when the Sraoshâ-varez has been applied to; whether for a draona-service that has been undertaken, or for one that has not been undertaken; whether for a draona that has been offered up, or for one that has not been offered up; whether for a draona that has been shared, or for one that has not been shared; the Ratu has power to remit him one-third of the penalty he had to pay: if he has committed any other evil deed, it is remitted by his repentance; if he has committed, no other evil deed, he is absolved by his repentance for ever and ever.'

27 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If there be a number of men resting in the same place, on adjoining carpets, on adjoining pillows, be there two men near one another, or five, or fifty, or a hundred, close by one another; and of those people one happens to die; how many of them does the Drug Nasu envelope with infection, pollution, and uncleanness?

28 Ahura Mazda answered: 'If the dead one be a priest, the Drug-Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the eleventh and defiles the ten. 'If the dead one be a warrior, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the tenth and defiles the nine. 'If the dead one be a husbandman, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the ninth and defiles the eight.'

29 'If it be a shepherd's dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the eighth and defiles the seven. 'If it be a house dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the seventh and defiles the six.'

30 'If it be a Vohunazga dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the sixth and defiles the five. 'If it be a young dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the fifth and defiles the four.'

31 'If it be a Sukuruna dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the fourth and defiles the three. 'If it be a Gazu dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the third and defiles the two.'

32 'If it be an Aiwizu dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the second and defiles the next. 'If it be a Vizu dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the next, she defiles the next.'

33 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If it be an Urupi dog, how many of the creatures of the good spirit does it directly defile, how many does it indirectly defile in dying?

34 Ahura Mazda answered: 'An Urupi dog does neither directly nor indirectly defile any of the creatures of the good spirit, but him who smites and kills it; to him the uncleanness clings for ever and ever.'

35 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If the dead one be a wicked, two-footed ruffian, an ungodly Ashemaogha how many of the creatures of the good spirit does he directly defile, how many does he indirectly defile in dying?

36 Ahura Mazda answered: 'No more than a frog does whose venom is dried up, and that has been dead more than a year. Whilst alive, indeed, O Spitama Zarathustra! that wicked, two-legged ruffian, that ungodly Ashemaogha, directly defiles the creatures of the good spirit, and indirectly defiles them.

37 'Whilst alive he smites the water; whilst alive he blows out the fire; whilst alive he carries off the cow; whilst alive he smites the faithful man with a deadly blow, that parts the soul from the body; not so will he do when dead.'

38 'Whilst alive, indeed, O Spitama Zarathustra! that wicked, two-legged ruffian, that ungodly Ashemaogha, never ceases depriving the faithful man of his food, of his clothing, of his house, of his bed, of his vessels; not so will he do when dead.'

39 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When into our houses here below we have brought the fire, the baresma, the cups, the Haoma, and the mortar, O holy Ahura Mazda! if it come to pass that either a dog or a man dies there, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do?

40 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Out of the house, O Spitama Zarathustra! shall they take the fire, the baresma, the cups, the Haoma, and the mortar; they shall take the dead one out to the proper place whereto, according to the law, corpses must be brought, to be devoured there.'

41 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When shall they bring back the fire into the house wherein the man has died?

42 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall wait for nine nights in winter, for a month in summer, and then they shall bring back the fire to the house wherein the man has died.'

43 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! And if they shall bring back the fire to the house wherein the man has died, within the nine nights, or within the month, what penalty shall they pay?

44 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall be Peshôtanus: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

45 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If in the house of a worshipper of Mazda there be a woman with child, and if being a month gone, or two, or three, or four, or five, or six, or seven, or eight, or nine, or ten months gone, she bring forth a still-born child, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do?

46 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The place in that Mazdean house whereof the ground is the cleanest and the driest, and the least passed through by flocks and herds, by Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, by the consecrated bundles of baresma, and by the faithful;'-

47 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How far from the fire? How far from the water? How far from the consecrated bundles of baresma? How far from the faithful?

48 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thirty paces from the fire; thirty paces from the water; thirty paces from the consecrated bundles of baresma; three paces from the faithful;'-

49 'On that place shall the worshippers of Mazda erect an enclosure, and therein shall they establish her with food, therein shall they establish her with clothes.'

50 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What is the food that the woman shall first take?

51 Ahura Mazda answered: 'She shall drink gômêz mixed with ashes, three cups of it, or six, or nine, to wash over the grave within her womb.'

52 'Afterwards she may drink boiling milk of mares, cows, sheep, or goats, with pap or without pap; she may take cooked meat without water, bread without wafer, and wine without water.'

53 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How long shall she remain so? How long shall she live only on that sort of meat, bread, and wine?

54 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Three nights long shall she remain so; three nights long shall she live on that sort of meat, bread, and wine. Then, when three nights have passed, she shall wash her body, she shall wash her clothes, with gômêz and water, by the nine holes, and thus shall she be clean.'

55 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How long shall she remain so? How long, after the three nights have gone, shall she sit confined, and live separated from the rest of the worshippers of Mazda, as to her seat, her food, and her clothing?

56 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Nine nights long shall she remain so: nine nights long, after the three nights have gone, shall she sit confined, and live separated from the rest of the worshippers of Mazda, as to her seat, her food, and her clothing. Then, when the nine nights have gone, she shall wash her body, and cleanse her clothes with gômêz and water.'

57 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can those clothes, when once washed and cleansed, ever be used either by a Zaoatar, or by a Hâvanan, or by an Âtare-vakhsha, or by a Frabaretar, or by an Âbered, or by an Âsnâtar, or by a Rathwiskar, or by a Sraoshâ-varez, or by any priest, warrior, or husbandman?

58 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Never can those clothes, even when washed and cleansed, be used either by a Zaoatar, or by a Hâvanan, or by an Âtare-vakhsha, or by a Frabaretar, or by an Âbered, or by an Âsnâtar, or by a Rathwiskar, or by a Sraoshâ-varez, or by any priest, warrior, or husbandman.'

59 'But if there be in a Mazdean house a woman who is in her sickness, or a man who has become unfit for work, and who must sit in the place of infirmity, those clothes shall serve for their coverings and for their sheets, until they can withdraw and move their hands.'

60 'Ahura Mazda, indeed, does not allow us to waste anything of value that we may have, not even so much as an Asperena's weight of thread, not even so much as a maid lets fall in spinning.'

61 'Whosoever throws any clothing on a dead body, even so much as a maid lets fall in spinning, is not a pious man whilst alive, nor shall he, when dead, have a place in the happy realm.'

62 'He shall go away into the world of the fiends, into that dark world, made of darkness, the offspring of darkness. To that world, to the dismal realm, you are delivered by your own doings, by your own souls, O sinners!'

1. How long shall the ground lie fallow whereon dogs or men have died? Ahura Mazda answered: 'A year long shall the ground lie fallow whereon dogs or men have died, O holy Zarathustra!'

2 'A year long shall no worshipper of Mazda sow or water that part of the ground whereon dogs or men have died; he may sow as he likes the rest of the ground; he may water it as he likes.'

3 'If within the year they shall sow or water the ground whereon dogs or men have died, the sin is the same as if they had brought dead matter to the water, to the earth, and to the plants.'

4 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If worshippers of Mazda shall sow or water, within the year, the ground whereon dogs or men have died, what is the penalty that they shall pay?

5 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They are Peshôtanus: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

6 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If worshippers of Mazda want to make the ground fit to be tilled again, that they may water it, sow it, and plough it, what shall they do?

7 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall look on the ground for any bones, hair, flesh, dung, or blood that may be there.'

8 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If they shall not look on the ground for any bones, hair, flesh, dung, or blood that may be there, what is the penalty that they shall pay?

9 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They are Peshôtanus: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

10 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw on the ground a bone of a dead dog, or of a dead man, as large as the top joint of the little finger, and if grease or marrow flow from it on to the ground, what penalty shall he pay?

11 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thirty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, thirty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

12 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw on the ground a bone of a dead dog, or of a dead man, as large as the top joint of the fore-finger, and if grease or marrow flow from it on to the ground, what penalty shall he pay?

13 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Fifty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

14 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw on the ground a bone of a dead dog, or of a dead man, as large as the top joint of the middle finger, and if grease or marrow flow from it on to the ground, what penalty shall he pay?

15 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Seventy stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seventy stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

16 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw on the ground a bone of a dead dog, or of a dead man, as large as a finger or as a rib, and if grease or marrow flow from it on to the ground, what penalty shall he pay?

17 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

18 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw on the ground a bone of a dead dog, or of a dead man, as large as two fingers or as two ribs, and if grease or marrow flow from it on to the ground, what penalty shall he pay?

19 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

20 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw on the ground a bone of a dead dog, or of a dead man, as large as an arm-bone or as a thigh-bone, and if grease or marrow flow from it on to the ground, what penalty shall he pay?

21 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Four hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, four hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

22 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw on the ground a bone of a dead dog, or of a dead man, as large as a man's skull, and if grease or marrow flow from it on to the ground, what penalty shall he pay?

23 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Six hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, six hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

24 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw on the ground the whole body of a dead dog, or of a dead man, and if grease or marrow flow from it on to the ground, what penalty shall he pay?

25 Ahura Mazda answered: 'A thousand stripes with the Aspahê-astara, a thousand stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

26 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a worshipper of Mazda, walking, or running, or riding, or driving, come upon a corpse in a stream of running water, what shall he do?

27 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Taking off his shoes, putting off his clothes, boldly, O Zarathustra! he shall enter the river, and take the dead out of the water; he shall go down into the water ankle-deep, knee-deep, waist-deep, or a man's full depth, till he can reach the dead body.'

28 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If, however, the body be already falling to pieces and rotting, what shall the worshipper of Mazda do?

29 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He shall draw out of the water as much of the corpse as he can grasp with both hands, and he shall lay it down on the dry ground; no sin attaches to him for any bone, hair, grease, flesh, dung, or blood that may drop back into the water.'

30 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What part of the water in a pond does the Drug Nasu defile with infection, pollution, and uncleanness?

31 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Six steps on each of the four sides. As long as the corpse has not been taken out of the water, so long shall that water be unclean and unfit to drink. They shall, therefore, take the corpse out of the pond, and lay it down on the dry ground.'

32 'And of the water they shall draw off the half, or the third, or the fourth, or the fifth part, according as they are able; and after the corpse has been taken out and the water has been drawn off, the rest of the water is clean, and both cattle and men may drink of it at their pleasure, as before.'

33 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What part of the water in a well does the Drug Nasu defile with infection, pollution, and uncleanness?

34 Ahura Mazda answered: 'As long as the corpse has not been taken out of the water, so long shall that water be unclean and unfit to drink. They shall, therefore, take the corpse out of the well, and lay it down on the dry ground.'

35 'And of the water in the well they shall draw off the half, or the third, or the fourth, or the fifth part, according as they are able; and after the corpse has been taken out and the water has been drawn off, the rest of the water is clean, and both cattle and men may drink of it at their pleasure, as before.'

36 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What part of a sheet of snow or hail does the Drug Nasu defile with infection, pollution, and uncleanness?

37 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Three steps on each of the four sides. As long as the corpse has not been taken out of the water, so long shall that water be unclean and unfit to drink. They shall, therefore, take the corpse out of the water, and lay it down on the dry ground.'

38 'After the corpse has been taken out, and the snow or the hail has melted, the water is clean, and both cattle and men may drink of it at their pleasure, as before.'

39 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What part of the water of a running does the Drug Nasu defile with infection, pollution, and uncleanness?

40 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Three steps down the stream, nine steps up the stream, six steps across. As long as the corpse has not been taken out of the water, so long shall the water be unclean and unfit to drink. They shall, therefore, take the corpse out of the water, and lay it down on the dry ground.'

41 'After the corpse has been taken out and the stream has flowed three times, the water is clean, and both cattle and men may drink of it at their pleasure, as before.'

42 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can the Haoma that has been touched by the corpse of a dead dog, or the corpse of a dead man, be made clean again?

43 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It can, O holy Zarathustra! If it has been strained for the Sacrifice, no corpse that has been brought unto it, makes corruption or death enter it. If it has not been strained for the sacrifice, the stem is defiled the length of four fingers. That length of stem shall be buried in the ground, in the middle of the house, for a year long. When the year is passed, the faithful may drink of its juice at their pleasure, as before.'

44 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Whither shall we bring, where shall we lay the bodies of the dead, O Ahura Mazda?

45 Ahura Mazda answered: 'On the highest summits, where they know there are always corpse-eating dogs and corpse-eating birds, O holy Zarathustra!'

46 'There shall the worshippers of Mazda fasten the corpse, by the feet and by the hair, with brass, stones, or lead, lest the corpse-eating dogs and the corpse-eating birds shall go and carry the bones to the water and to the trees.

47 'If they shall not fasten the corpse, so that the corpse-eating dogs and the corpse-eating birds may go and carry the bones to the water and to the trees, what is the penalty that they shall pay?'

48 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall be Peshōtanus: two hundred stripes with the Aspahē-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshō-karana.'

49 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy-one! Whither shall we bring, where shall we lay the bones of the dead, O Ahura Mazda?

50 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The worshippers of Mazda shall erect a building out of the reach of the dog, of the fox, and of the wolf, and wherein rain-water cannot stay.'

51 'Such a building shall they erect, if they can afford it, with stones, mortar, and earth; if they cannot afford it, they shall lay down the dead man on the ground, on his carpet and his pillow, clothed with the light of heaven, and beholding the sun.'

1 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When a man dies, at what moment does the Drug Nasu rush upon him?'

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Directly after death, as soon as the soul has left the body, O Spitama Zarathustra! the Drug Nasu comes and rushes upon him, from the regions of the north, in the shape of a raging fly, with knees and tail sticking out, all stained with stains, and like unto the foulest Khrāfstras.'

3 'On him she stays until the dog has seen the corpse or eaten it up, or until the flesh-eating birds have taken flight towards it. When the dog has seen it or eaten it up, or when the flesh-eating birds have taken flight towards it, then the Drug Nasu rushes away to the regions of the north in the shape of a raging fly, with knees and tail sticking out, all stained with stains, and like unto the foulest Khrāfstras.'

4 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If the man has been killed by a dog, or by a wolf, or by witchcraft, or by the artifices of hatred, or by falling down a precipice, or by the law, or by a murderer, or by the noose, how long after death does the Drug Nasu come and rush upon the dead?

5 Ahura Mazda answered: 'At the next watch after death 1, the Drug Nasu comes and rushes upon the dead, from the regions of the north, in the shape of a raging fly, with knees and tail sticking out, all stained with stains, and like unto the foulest Khrāfstras.'

6 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If there be a number of men resting in the same place, on adjoining carpets, on adjoining pillows, be there two men near one another, or five, or fifty, or a hundred, close by one another; and of those people one happens to die; how many of them does the Drug Nasu envelope with infection, pollution, and uncleanness?

7 Ahura Mazda answered: 'If the dead one be a priest, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the eleventh and defiles the ten. 'If the dead one be a warrior, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the tenth and defiles the nine. 'If the dead one be a husbandman, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the ninth and defiles the eight.'

8 'If it be a shepherd's dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the eighth and defiles the seven. 'If it be a house dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the seventh and defiles the six.'

9 'If it be a Vohunazga dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the sixth and defiles the five. 'If it be a young dog, the Drug Nasu rushes forth, O Spitama Zarathustra! she falls on the fifth and defiles the four.'

... 'those clothes shall serve for their coverings and for their sheets'...

10 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What part of his bedding and pillow does the Drug Nasu defile with infection, uncleanness, and pollution?

11 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The Drug Nasu defiles with infection, uncleanness, and pollution the upper sheet and the inner garment.'

12 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can that garment be made clean, O holy Ahura Mazda! that has been touched by the carcass of a dog or the corpse of a man?

13 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It can, O holy Zarathustra! How so? 'If, indeed, the garment has been defiled with seed, or sweat, or dirt, or vomit, the worshippers of Mazda shall send it to pieces, and bury it under the ground.'

14 'But if it has not been defiled with seed, or sweat, or dirt, or vomit, then the worshippers of Mazda shall wash it with gômêz.'

15 'If it be leather, they shall wash it with gômêz three times, they shall rub it with earth three times, they shall wash it with water three times, and afterwards they shall expose it to the air for three months at the window of the house. 'If it be woven cloth, they shall wash it with gômêz six times, they shall rub it with earth six times, they shall wash it with water six times, and afterwards they shall expose it to the air for six months at the window of the house.'

16 'The spring named Ardvī Sīra, O Spitama Zarathustra! that spring of mine, purifies the seed in man, the fruit in a woman's womb, the milk in a woman's breast.'

17 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can those clothes, when once washed and cleansed, ever be used either by a Zaoatar, or by a Hāvanan, or by an Ātare-vakhsha, or by a Frabaretar, or by an Ābered, or by an Āsnātar, or by a Rathwiskar, or by a Sraoshā-varez, or by any priest, warrior, or husbandman?

18 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Never can those clothes, even when washed and cleansed, be used either by a Zaoatar, or by a Hāvanan, or by an Ātare-vakhsha, or by a Frabaretar, or by an Ābered, or by an Āsnātar, or by a Rathwiskar, or by a Sraoshā-varez, or by any priest, warrior, or husbandman.'

19 'But if there be in a Mazdean house a woman who is in her sickness, or a man who has become unfit for work, and who must sit in the place of infirmity, those clothes shall serve for their coverings and for their sheets, until they can withdraw and move their hands.'

20 'Ahura Mazda, indeed, does not allow us to waste anything of value that we may have, not even so much as an Asperena's weight of thread, not even so much as a maid lets fall in spinning.'

21 'Whosoever throws any clothing on a dead body, even so much as a maid lets fall in spinning, is not a pious man whilst alive, nor shall he, when dead, have a place in the happy realm.'

22 'He shall go away into the world of the fiends, into that dark world, made of darkness, the offspring of darkness. To that world, to the dismal realm, you are delivered by your own doings, by your own souls, O sinners!'

23 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can he be clean again who has eaten of the carcass of a dog or of the carcass of a man?

24 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He cannot, O holy Zarathustra! His burrow shall be dug out, his life shall be torn out, his bright eyes shall be put out; the Drug Nasu falls upon him, takes hold of him even to the end of the nails, and he is unclean, thenceforth, for ever and ever.'

25 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can he be clean again, O holy Ahura Mazda! who has brought a corpse with filth into the waters, or unto the fire, and made either unclean?'

26 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He cannot, O holy Zarathustra! Those wicked ones it is, those men turned to Nasus, that most increase gnats and locusts; those wicked ones it is, those men turned to Nasus, that most increase the grass-destroying drought.'

27 'Those wicked ones it is, those men turned to Nasus, that increase most the power of the winter, produced by the fiends, the cattle-killing, thick-snowing, overflowing, the piercing, fierce, mischievous winter. Upon them comes and rushes the Drug Nasu, she takes hold of them even to the end of the nails, and they are unclean, thenceforth, for ever and ever.'

28 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can the wood be made clean, O holy Ahura Mazda! whereunto dead matter has been brought from a dead dog, or from a dead man?'

29 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It can, O holy Zarathustra! How so? 'If the Nasu has not yet been smitten by the corpse-eating dogs, or by the corpse-eating birds, they shall lay down, apart on the ground, the wood on the length of a Vitasti all around the dead matter, if the wood be dry; on the length of a Frārāthni all around, if it be wet; then they shall sprinkle it once over with water, and it shall be clean.'

30 'But if the Nasu has already been smitten by the corpse-eating dogs, or by the corpse-eating birds, they shall lay down, apart on the ground, the wood on the length of a Frārāthni all around the dead matter, if the wood be dry; on the length of a Frābāzu all around, if it be wet; then they shall sprinkle it once over with water, and it shall be clean.'

31 'This is the quantity of wood around the dead matter, that they shall lay down, apart on the ground, according as the wood is dry or wet; according as it is hard or soft; they shall sprinkle it once over with water, and it shall be clean.'

32 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can the corn or the fodder be made clean, O holy Ahura Mazda! whereunto dead matter has been brought from a dead dog, or from a dead man?'

33 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It can, O holy Zarathustra! How so? 'If the Nasu has not yet been smitten by the corpse-eating dogs, or by the corpse-eating birds, they shall lay down, apart on the ground, the corn on the length of a Frārāthni all around the dead matter, if the corn be dry; on the length of a Frābāzu all around if it be wet; then they shall sprinkle it once over with water, and it shall be clean.'

34 'But if the Nasu has already been smitten by the corpse-eating dogs, or by the corpse-eating birds, they shall lay down, apart on the ground, the corn on the length of a Frābāzu all around the dead matter, if the corn be dry; on the length of a Vībāzu all around, if it be wet; then they shall sprinkle it once over with water, and it shall be clean.'

35 'This is the quantity of corn around the dead matter, that they shall lay down, apart on the ground, according as the corn is dry or wet; according as it is sown or not sown; according as it is reaped or not reaped; according as it is ground or not ground 3; according as it is (kneaded) or not kneaded; they shall sprinkle it once over with water, And it shall be clean.'

36 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a worshipper of Mazda want to practice the art of healing, on whom shall he first his skill? on worshippers of Mazda or on worshippers of the Daēvas?'

37 Ahura Mazda answered: 'On worshippers of the Daēvas shall he first prove himself, rather than on worshippers of Mazda. If he treat with the knife a worshipper of the Daēvas and he die; if he treat with the knife a second worshipper of the Daēvas and he die; if he treat with the knife for the third time a worshipper of the Daēvas and he die, he is unfit to practise the art of healing for ever and ever.'

38 'Let him therefore never attend any worshipper of Mazda; let him never treat with the knife any worshipper of Mazda, nor wound him with the knife. If he shall ever attend any worshipper of Mazda, if he shall ever treat with the knife any worshipper of the Daēvas and he die, he shall pay for it the same penalty as is paid for wilful murder.'

39 'If he treat with the knife a worshipper of the Daēvas and he recover; if he treat with the knife a second worshipper of the Daēvas and he recover; if for the third time he treat with the knife a worshipper of the Daēvas and he recover; then he is fit to practise the art of healing for ever and ever.'

40 'He may henceforth at his will, attend worshippers of Mazda; he may at his will treat with the knife worshippers of Mazda, and heal them with the knife.'

41 'A healer shall heal a priest for a holy blessing; he shall heal the master of a house for the value of an ox of low value; he shall heal the lord of a borough for the value of an ox of average value; he shall heal the lord of a town for the value of an ox of high value; he shall heal the lord of a province for the value of a chariot and four.'

42 'He shall heal the wife of the master of a house for the value of a she-ass; he shall heal the wife of the lord of a borough for the value of a cow; he shall heal the wife of the lord of a town for the value of a mare; he shall heal the wife of the lord of a province for the value of a she-camel.'

43 'He shall heal the son of the lord of a borough for the value of an ox of high value; he shall heal an ox of high value for the value of an ox of average value; he shall heal an ox of average value for that of an ox of low value; he shall heal an ox of low value for the value of a sheep; he shall heal a sheep for the value of a meal of meat.'

44 'If several healers offer themselves together, O Spitama Zarathustra! namely, one who heals with the knife, one who heals with herbs, and one who heals with the holy word, it is this one who will best drive away sickness from the body of the faithful.'

45 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How long after the corpse of a dead man has been laid down on the ground, clothed with the light of heaven and beholding the sun, is the ground itself again?'

46 Ahura Mazda answered: 'When the corpse of a dead man has lain on the ground for a year, clothed with the light of heaven, and beholding the sun, then the ground is itself again, O holy Zarathustra!'

47 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How long after the corpse of a dead man has been buried in the earth, is the earth itself again?'

48 Ahura Mazda answered: 'When the corpse of a dead man has lain buried in the earth for fifty years, O Spitama Zarathustra! then the earth is itself again.'

49 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How long after the corpse of a dead man has been laid down on a Dakhma, is the ground, whereon the Dakhma stands, itself again?'

50 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Not until the dust of the corpse, O Spitama Zarathustra! has mingled with the dust of the earth. Urge every one in the material world, O Spitama Zarathustra! to pull down Dakhmas.'

51 'He who should pull down Dakhmas, even so much thereof as the size of his own body, his sins in thought, word, and deed are remitted as they would be by a Patet; his sins in thought, word, and deed are atoned for.'

52-54 'Not for his soul shall the two spirits wage war with one another; and when he enters the blissful world, the stars, the moon, and the sun shall rejoice in him; and I, Ahura Mazda, shall rejoice in him, saying: "Hail, O man! thou who hast just passed from the decaying world into the undecaying one!"'

55 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Where are the fiends? Where are the worshippers of the fiends? What is the place whereon the troops of fiends rush together? What is the place whereon the troops of fiends come rushing along? What is the place whereon they rush together to kill their fifties and their hundreds, their hundreds and their thousands, their thousands and their tens of thousands, their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads?'

56 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Those Dakhmas that are built upon the face of the earth, O Spitama Zarathustra! and whereon are laid the corpses Of dead men, that is the place where the fiends are, that is the place whereon the troops of fiends rush together, that is the place whereon the troops of fiends come rushing along, that is the place whereon they rush together to kill their fifties and their hundreds, their hundreds and their thousands, their thousands and their tens of thousands, their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads.'

57 'On those Dakhmas, O Spitama Zarathustra! those fiends take food and void filth, (eating up corpses) in the same way as you, men, in the material world, eat cooked meal and cooked meat. It is, as it were, the smell of their feeding that you smell there, O men!

58 'Thus the fiends revel on there, until that stench is rooted in the Dakhmas. Thus from the Dakhmas arise the infection of diseases, itch, hot fever, humours, cold fever, rickets, and hair untimely white. There death has most power on man, from the hour when the sun is down.

59 'And if there be people of evil spirit who do not seek for better spirit, the Gains make those diseases grow stronger by a third, on their thighs, on their hands, on their plaited hair.'

60 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If in the house of a worshipper of Mazda there be a woman with child, and if being a month gone, or two, or three, or four, or five, or six, or seven, or eight, or nine, or ten months gone, she bring forth a still-born child, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do?

61 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The place in that Mazdean house whereof the ground is the cleanest and the driest, and the least passed through by flocks and herds, by Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, by the consecrated bundles of baresma, and by the faithful!'

62 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How far from the fire? How far from the water? How far from the consecrated bundles of baresma? How far from the faithful?

63 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thirty paces from the fire; thirty paces from the water; thirty paces from the consecrated bundles of baresma three paces from the faithful!'

64 'On that place shall the worshippers of Mazda erect an enclosure, and therein shall they establish her with food, therein shall they establish her with clothes.'

65 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What is the food that the woman shall first take?

66 Ahura Mazda answered: 'She shall drink gômêz mixed with ashes, three cups of it, or six, or nine, to wash over the grave in her womb.'

67 'Afterwards she may drink boiling milk of mares, cows, sheep, or goats, with pap or without pap; she may take cooked meat without water, bread without water, and wine without water.'

68 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How long shall she remain so? How long shall she live only on that sort of meat, bread, and wine?

69 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Three nights long shall she remain so; three nights long shall she live on that sort of meat, bread, and wine. Then, when three nights have passed, she shall wash her body, she shall wash her clothes, with gômêz and water, by the nine holes, and thus shall she be clean.'

70 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! But if fever befall her unclean body, if that twofold plague, hunger and thirst, befall her, may she be allowed to drink water?

71 Ahura Mazda answered: 'She may; the first thing for her is to have her life saved. Having been allowed by one of the holy men, by a holy faithful man, who knows the holy knowledge, she shall drink of the strength-giving water. But you, worshippers of Mazda, fix ye the penalty for it. The Ratu being applied to, the Sraoshâ-varez being applied to, shall prescribe the penalty to be paid.'

72 What is the penalty to be paid? Ahura Mazda answered: 'The deed is that of a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astra, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

73 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can the eating vessels be made clean that have been touched by the carcass of a dog, or by the corpse of a man?

74 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They can, O holy Zarathustra! How so? If they be of gold, you shall wash them once with gômêz, you shall rub them once with earth, you shall wash them once with water, and they shall be clean. If they be of silver, you shall wash them twice with gômêz, you shall rub them twice with earth, you shall wash them twice with water, and they shall be clean.'

75 'If they be of brass, you shall wash them thrice with gômêz, you shall rub them thrice with earth, you shall wash them thrice with water, and they shall be clean. If they be of steel, you shall wash them four times with gômêz, you shall rub them four times with earth, you shall wash them four times with water, and they shall be clean. If they be of stone, you shall wash them six times with gômêz, you shall rub them six times with earth, you shall wash them six times with water, and they shall be clean. If they be of earth, of wood, or of clay, they are unclean for ever and ever.'

76 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can the cow be made clean that has eaten of the carcass of a dog, or of the corpse of a man?

77 Ahura Mazda answered: 'She can, O holy Zarathustra! The priest shall not, within a year, take from her to the baresma neither the milk and cheese that accompany the libation, nor the meat that accompanies the libation. When a year has passed, then the faithful may eat of her as before.'

78 Who is he, O holy Ahura Mazda! who, with a godly intent, with a godly wish, goes astray from the ways of God? Who is he who, with a godly intent, falls into the ways of the Drug?

79 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The one who, with a godly intent, with a godly wish, goes astray from the ways of God; the one who with a godly intent falls into the ways of the Drug, is he who offers up for libation water defiled by the dead; or who offers up libations in the dead of the night.'

1 If a dog or a man die under the timber-work of a house or the wattlings of a hut, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do?

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall look for a Dakhma, they shall look for a Dakhma all around. If they find it easier, to remove the dead than to remove the house, they shall take out the dead, they shall let the house stand, and shall perfume it with Urvâsni, or Vohu-gaona, or Vohu-kereti, or Hadhâ-naêpata, or any other sweet-smelling plant.'

3 'If they find it easier to remove the house than to remove the dead, they shall take away the house, they shall let the dead lie on the spot, and shall perfume the house with Urvâsni, or Vohu-gaona, or Vohu-kereti, or Hadhâ-naêpata, or any other sweet-smelling plant.'

4 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If in the house of a worshipper of Mazda a dog or a man happens to die, and it is raining, or snowing, or blowing, or the darkness is coming on, when flocks and men lose their way, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do?

5 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The place in that house whereof the ground is the cleanest and the driest, and the least passed through by flocks and herds, by Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, by the consecrated bundles of baresma, and by the faithful!'

6 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How far from the fire? How far from the water? How far from the consecrated bundles of baresma? How far from the faithful?

7 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thirty paces from the fire; thirty paces from the water; thirty paces from the consecrated bundles of baresma; three paces from the faithful!'

8 'On that place they shall dig a grave, half a foot deep if the earth be hard, half the height of a man if it be soft; [they shall cover the surface of the grave with ashes or cowdung]; they shall cover the surface of it with dust of bricks, of stones, or of dry earth.'

9 'And they shall let the lifeless body lie there, for two nights, or three nights, or a month long, until the birds begin to fly, the plants to grow, the floods to flow, and the wind to dry up the waters from off the earth.'

10 'And when the birds begin to fly, the plants to grow, the floods to flow, and the wind to dry up the waters from off the earth, then the worshippers of Mazda shall make a breach in the wall of the house, and they shall call for two men, strong and skilful, and those, having stripped their clothes off, shall take the body to the building of clay, stones, and mortar, raised on a place where they know there are always corpse-eating dogs and corpse-eating birds.'

11 'Afterwards the corpse-bearers shall sit down, three paces from the dead; then the Holy Ratu shall proclaim to the worshippers of Mazda thus: "Let the worshippers of Mazda here bring the urine wherewith the corpse-bearers there shall wash their hair and their bodies!"'

12 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the urine wherewith the corpse-bearers shall wash their hair and their bodies? Is it of sheep or of oxen? Is it of man or of woman?

13 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is of sheep or of oxen; not of man nor of woman, except these two: the nearest kinsman (of the dead) or his nearest kinswoman. The worshippers of Mazda shall therefore procure the urine wherewith the corpse-bearers shall wash their hair and their bodies.'

14 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can the way, whereon the carcasses of dogs or corpses of men have been carried, be passed through again by flocks and herds, by men and women, by Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, by the consecrated bundles of baresma, and by the faithful?

15 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It cannot be passed through again by flocks and herds, nor by men and women, nor by Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, nor by the consecrated bundles of baresma, nor by the faithful.'

16 'You shall therefore cause the yellow dog with four eyes, or the white dog with yellow ears, to go three times through that way. When either the yellow dog with four eyes, or the white dog with yellow ears, is brought there, then the Drug Nasu flies away to the regions of the north, in the shape of a raging fly, with knees and tail sticking out, all stained with stains, and like unto the foulest Khrafstras.

17 'If the dog goes unwillingly, they shall use the yellow dog with four eyes, or the white dog with yellow ears: to go six times I through that way. When either the yellow dog with four eyes, or the white dog with yellow ears, is brought there, then the Drug Nasu flies away to the regions of the north, in the shape of a raging fly, with knees and tail sticking out, all stained with stains, and like unto the foulest Khrafstras.'

18 'If the dog goes unwillingly, they shall cause the yellow dog with four eyes, or the white dog with yellow ears, to go nine times through that way. When either the yellow dog with four eyes, or the white dog with yellow ears, has been brought there, then the Drug Nasu flies away to the regions of the north, in the shape of a raging fly, with knees and tail sticking out, all stained with stains, and like unto the foulest Khrafstras.'

19 'An Athravan shall first go along the way and shall say aloud these fiend-smiting words: "Yathâ ahû vairyo:--the will of the Lord is the law of holiness; the riches of Vohu-manô shall be given to him who works in this world for Mazda, and yields according to the will of Ahura the power he gave to him to relieve the poor."

20 "'Kem nâ mazdâ:--whom hast thou placed to protect me, O Mazda! while the hate of the fiend is grasping me? Whom but thy Âtar and Vohu-manô, by whose work the holy world goes on? Reveal to me the rules of thy law! "Ke verethrem gâ:--who is he who will smite the fiend in order to maintain thy ordinances? Teach me clearly thy rules for this world and for the next, that Sraosha may come with Vohu-manô and help whomsoever thou pleasest."

21 "'Keep us from our hater, O Mazda and Ârmaiti Spenta! Perish, O fiendish Drug! Perish, O brood of the fiend! Perish, O world of the fiend! Perish away, O Drug! Rush away, O Drug! Perish away, O Drug! Perish away to the regions of the north, never more to give unto death the living world of the holy spirit!"'

22 'Then the worshippers of Mazda may at their will bring by those ways sheep and oxen, men and women, and Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, the consecrated bundles of baresma, and the faithful. The worshippers of Mazda may afterwards prepare meals with meat and wine in that house; it shall be clean, and there will be no sin, as before.'

23 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw clothes, either of skin or woven, upon a dead body, enough to cover the feet, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Four hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astra, four hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

24 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw clothes, either of skin or woven, upon a dead body, enough to cover both legs, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Six hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astra, six hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

25 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall throw clothes, either of skin or woven, upon a dead body, enough to cover the whole body, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'A thousand stripes with the Aspahê-astra, a thousand stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

26 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man involuntarily emits his seed, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Eight hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astra, eight hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

27 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man voluntarily emits his seed, what is the penalty for it? What is the atonement for it? What is the cleansing from it? Ahura Mazda answered: 'For that deed there is nothing that can pay, nothing that can atone, nothing that can cleanse from it; it is a trespass for which there is no atonement, for ever and ever.'

28 When is it so? It is so, if the sinner be a professor of the law of Mazda, or one who has been taught in it. But if he be not a professor of the law of Mazda, nor one who has been taught in it, then this law of Mazda takes his sin from him, if he confesses it and resolves never to commit again such forbidden deeds.'

29 'The law of Mazda indeed, O Spitama Zarathustra! takes away from him who confesses it the bonds of his sin; it takes away (the sin of) breach of trust; it takes away (the sin of) murdering one of the faithful; it takes away (the sin of) burying a corpse; it takes away (the sin of) deeds for which there is no atonement; it takes away the heaviest penalties of sin; it takes away any sin that may be sinned.'

30 'In the same way the law of Mazda, O Spitama Zarathustra! cleanses the faithful from every evil thought, word, and deed, as a swift-rushing mighty wind cleanses the plain. So let all the deeds thou doest be henceforth good, O Zarathustra! a full atonement for thy sin is effected by means of the law of Mazda.'

31 O Maker of the material world, thou only One! Who is the man that is a Daêva? Who is he that is a worshipper of the Daêva? that is a male paramour of the Daêvas? that is a female paramour of the Daêvas? that is a she-Daêva? that is in his inmost self a Daêva? that is in his whole being a Daêva? 1?

Who is he that is a Daēva before he dies, and becomes one of the unseen Daēvas after death?

32 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The man that lies with mankind as man lies with womankind, or as woman lies with mankind, is the man that is a Daēva; this one is the man that is a worshipper of the Daēvas, that is a male paramour of the Daēvas, that is a female paramour of the Daēva, that is a she-Daēva; this is the man that is in his inmost self a Daēva, that is in his whole being a Daēva; this is the man that is a Daēva before he dies, and becomes one of the unseen Daēvas after death: so is he, whether he has lain with mankind as mankind, or as womankind.'

33 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Shall the man be clean who has touched a corpse that has been dried up and dead more than a year?

34 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He shall. The dry mingles not with the dry. Should the dry mingle with the dry, how soon this material world of mine would have in it only Peshôtanus, shut out from the way of holiness, and whose souls will cry and wail! so numberless are the beings that die upon the face of the earth.'

35 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can the man be made clean that is touched the corpse of a dog or the corpse of a man?

36 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He can, O holy Zarathustra! How so? 'If the Nasu has already been smitten by the corpse-eating dogs, or by the corpse-eating birds, he shall cleanse his body with gômêz and water, and he shall be clean.'

37 'If the Nasu has not yet been smitten by the corpse-eating dogs, or by the corpse-eating birds, then the worshippers of Mazda shall dig three holes in the ground, and he shall thereupon wash his body with gômêz, not with water. They shall then lift and bring my dog, they shall bring him (thus shall it be done and not otherwise) in front of the man.'

38 'The worshippers of Mazda shall dig three other holes 6 in the ground, and he shall thereupon, wash his body with gômêz, not with water. They shall then lift and bring my dog, they shall bring him (thus shall it be done and not otherwise) in front of the man. Then they shall wait until he is dried even to the last hair on the top of his head.'

39 'They shall dig three more holes in the ground, and he shall thereupon wash his body with water, not with gômêz.'

40 'He shall first wash his hands; if his hands be not first washed, he makes the whole of his body unclean. When he has washed his hands three times, after his hands have been washed, thou shalt sprinkle with water the forepart of his skull.'

41 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the forepart of the skull, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'In front, between the brows, the Drug Nasu rushes.'

42 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach in front between the brows, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'On the back part of the skull the Drug Nasu rushes.'

43 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the back part of the skull, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'In front, on the jaws, the Drug Nasu rushes.'

44 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach in front, on the jaws, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right ear the Drug Nasu rushes.'

45 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the right ear, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the left ear the Drug Nasu rushes.'

48 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left shoulder, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right arm-pit the Drug Nasu rushes.'

49 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the right arm-pit, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the left arm-pit the Drug Nasu rushes.'

50 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left arm-pit, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'In front, upon the chest, the Drug Nasu rushes.'

51 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the chest in front, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the back the Drug Nasu rushes.'

52 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the back, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right nipple the Drug Nasu rushes.'

53 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the right nipple, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the left nipple the Drug Nasu rushes.'

54 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left nipple, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right rib the Drug Nasu rushes.'

57 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the right hip, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the left hip the Drug Nasu rushes.'

58 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left hip, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the sexual parts the Drug Nasu rushes. If the unclean one be a man, thou shalt sprinkle him first behind, then before; if the unclean one be a woman, thou shalt sprinkle her first before, then behind.'

59 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the sexual parts, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right thigh the Drug Nasu rushes.'

61 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left thigh, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right knee the Drug Nasu rushes.'

62 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the right knee, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the left knee the Drug Nasu rushes.'

63 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left knee, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right leg the Drug Nasu rushes.'

64 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the right leg, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the left leg the Drug Nasu rushes.'

65 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left leg, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right ankle the Drug Nasu rushes.'

66 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the right ankle, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the left ankle the Drug Nasu rushes.'

67 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left ankle, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the right instep the Drug Nasu rushes.'

68 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the right instep, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Upon the left instep the Drug Nasu rushes.'

69 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When the good waters reach the left instep, whereon does the Drug Nasu rush? Ahura Mazda answered: 'She is driven to the sole of the foot, where what is seen of her is like the wing of a fly.'

72 'And thou shalt say aloud these fiend-smiting and most-healing words: "'The will of the Lord is the law of holiness," &c. "'Whom hast thou placed to protect me," O Mazda! while the hate of the fiend is grasping me?" &c. "'Who is he who will smite the fiend in order to maintain thy ordinances?" &c. "'Keep us from our hater, O Mazda and Armaid! Spenta! Perish, O fiendish Drug! Perish, O brood of the fiend! Perish, O world of the fiend! Perish away, O Drug! Rush away, O Drug! Perish away, O Drug! Perish away to the regions of the north, never more to give unto death the living world of the holy spirit!'"

73 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If worshippers of Mazda, walking, or running, or riding, or driving, come upon a corpse-burning fire, whereon a corpse is being cooked or roasted, what shall they do?

74 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall kill the man that burns the corpse; surely they shall kill him. They shall take off the cauldron, they shall take off the tripod.'

75 'Then they shall kindle wood from that fire; either wood of those trees that have the seed of fire in them, or bundles of the very wood that was prepared for that fire; and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

76 'Thus they shall lay a first bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

77 'They shall lay down a second bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

'They shall lay down a third bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

'They shall lay down a fourth bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

'They shall lay down a fifth bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

'They shall lay down a sixth bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

'They shall lay down a seventh bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

'They shall lay down an eighth bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

'They shall lay down a ninth bundle on the ground, a Vitasti away from the corpse-burning fire, and they shall separate and disperse it, that it may die out the sooner.'

78 'If a man shall then piously bring unto the fire, O Spitama Zarathustra! wood of Urvâsna, or Vohu-gaona, or Vohu-kereti, or Hadhâ-naēpata, or any other sweet-smelling wood, whereover the wind shall bring the perfume of the fire, thereunto Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, shall go and kill thousands of unseen Daēvas, thousands of fiends, the brood of darkness, thousands of couples of Yâtus and Pairikas.'

81 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring a corpse-burning fire to the Dâityô-gātu, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought ten thousand fire-brands to the Dâityô-gātu.'

82 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Dâityô-gātu the fire wherein excrement has been burnt, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought a thousand fire-brands to the Dâityô-gātu.'

83 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Dâityô-gātu the fire wherein cowdung has been burnt, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought five hundred fire-brands to the Dâityô-gātu.'

84 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Dâityô-gātu the fire from the kiln of a brick-maker, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought four hundred fire-brands to the Dâityô-gātu.'

85 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Dâityô-gātu the fire from a potter's kiln, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought three hundred fire-brands to the Dâityô-gātu.'

86 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Dâityô-gātu the fire of the reapers, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought two hundred fire-brands to the Dâityô-gātu as many fire-brands as there were pots baked in that fire.'

87 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Dâityô-gātu the fire of the goldsmith, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought a hundred fire-brands to the Dâityô-gātu.'

88 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Dâityô-gātu the fire of a silversmith, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought ninety fire-brands to the Dâityô-gātu.'

89 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Däityō-gātu the fire of a worker in brass, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought eighty fire-brands to the Däityō-gātu.'

90 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Däityō-gātu the fire of a blacksmith, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought seventy fire-brands to the Däityō-gātu.'

91 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Däityō-gātu the fire of an oven, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted from his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought sixty fire-brands to the Däityō-gātu.'

92 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Däityō-gātu the fire from under a cauldron, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought fifty fire-brands to the Däityō-gātu.'

93 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Däityō-gātu the fire from an encampment, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought forty fire-brands to the Däityō-gātu.'

94 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring a herdsman's fire to the Däityō-gātu, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought thirty fire-brands to the Däityō-gātu.'

95 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Däityō-gātu the fire of the field, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought twenty fire-brands to the Däityō-gātu.'

96 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man bring to the Däityō-gātu the fire of his own hearth, what shall be his reward when his soul has parted with his body? Ahura Mazda answered: 'His reward shall be the same as if he had, here below, brought ten fire-brands to the Däityō-gātu.'

97 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Can a man be made clean, O holy Ahura Mazda! who has touched a corpse in a distant place in the fields?

98 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He can, O holy Zarathustra.' How so? 'If the Nasu has already been smitten by the corpse-eating dogs or the corpse-eating birds, he shall wash his body with gômêz; he shall wash it thirty times, he shall rub it dry with the hand thirty times, beginning every time with the head.'

99 'If the Nasu has not yet been smitten by the corpse-eating dogs or the corpse-eating birds, he shall wash his body with gômêz; he shall wash it fifteen times, he shall rub it dry with the hand fifteen times.'

100 'Then he shall run a distance of a Hâthra. He shall run until he meets some man on his way, then he shall cry out aloud: "Here am I, one who has touched the corpse of a man, without any wilful sin of mind, tongue, or hand, and who wishes to be made clean." Thus shall he run until he overtakes the man. If the man will not cleanse him, he takes upon his own head the third of his trespass.'

101 'Then he shall run another Hâthra, he shall run off again until he overtakes a man; if the man will not cleanse him, he takes upon his own head the half of his trespass.'

102 'Then he shall run a third Hâthra, he shall run off a third time until he overtakes a man; if the man will not cleanse him, he takes upon his own head the whole of his trespass.'

103 'Thus shall he run forwards until he comes near a house, a borough, a town, an inhabited district, and he shall cry out with a loud voice: "Here am I, one who has touched the corpse of a man, without any wilful sin of mind, tongue, or hand, and who wishes to be made clean." If they will not cleanse him, he shall cleanse his body with gômêz and water; thus shall he be clean.'

104 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If he found water on his way, the water requires an atonement; what is the penalty that he shall pay?

105 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Four hundred stripes with the Aspahê-âstra, four hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

106 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If he found trees on his way, the fire requires an atonement; what is the penalty he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Four hundred stripes with the Aspahê-âstra, four hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

107 'This is the penalty, this is the atonement, which saves him who submits to it; he who does not submit to it, shall surely be an inhabitant in the mansion of the Drug.'

FARGARD 9

The nine nights' Barashnûm.

1 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How shall they manage here below; who want to cleanse the body of one defiled by the dead?'

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'A godly man, O Spitama Zarathustra! who speaks truth, who learns the Holy Word, and who knows best the rites of cleansing according to the law of Mazda, such a man shall fell the trees off the surface of the ground on a space of nine Vibâzus square.'

3 'It should be the part of the ground where there is least water and where there are fewest trees, the part which is the cleanest and driest, and the least passed through by sheep and oxen, and by Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, by the consecrated bundles of baresma, and by the faithful.'

4 How far from the fire? How far from the water? How far from the consecrated bundles of baresma? How far from the faithful?

5 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thirty paces from the fire, thirty paces from the water, thirty paces from the consecrated bundles of baresma, three paces from the faithful.'

6 'Then thou shalt dig a hole, two fingers deep if the summer has come, four fingers deep if the winter and ice have come.'

7 'Thou shalt dig a second hole, two fingers deep if the summer has come, four fingers deep if the winter and ice have come. 'Thou shalt dig a third hole, two fingers deep if the summer has come, four fingers deep if the winter and ice have come. 'Thou shalt dig a fourth hole, two fingers deep if the summer has come, four fingers deep if the winter and ice have come. 'Thou shalt dig a fifth hole, two fingers deep if the summer has come, four fingers deep if the winter and ice have come. 'Thou shalt dig a sixth hole, two fingers deep if the summer has come, four fingers deep if the winter and ice have come.'

8 How far from one another? 'One pace.' How much is the pace? 'As much as three feet.'

9 'Then thou shalt dig three holes more, two fingers deep if the summer has come, four fingers deep if the winter and ice have come.' How far from the former six? 'Three paces.' What sort of paces? 'Such as are taken in walking.' How much are those (three) paces? 'As much as nine feet.'

10 'Then thou shalt draw a furrow all around with a metal knife.' How far from the holes? 'Three paces.' What sort of paces? 'Such as are taken in walking.' How much are those (three) paces? 'As much as nine feet.'

11 'Thou shalt draw twelve furrows; three of which thou shalt draw around (the first) three holes; three thou shalt draw around (the first) six holes; three thou shalt draw around the nine holes; three thou shalt draw around the three holes, outside the six holes. At each of the three times nine feet, thou shalt place stones as steps to the holes; or potsherds, or stumps, or clods, or any hard matter.'

12 'Then the unclean one shall walk to the holes; thou, O Zarathustra! shalt stand outside by the furrow, and thou shalt recite, Nemaskâ yâ ârmaitsî izâkâ 1; and the unclean one shall repeat, Nemaskâ yâ ârmaitsî izâkâ.'

13 'The Drug becomes weaker and weaker at every one of those words which are to smite the fiend Angra Mainyu, to smite Aêshma of the bloody spear, to smite the Mâzainya fiends, to smite all the fiends.'

14 'Then thou shalt sprinkle him with gômêz from a spoon of brass or of lead; thou shalt take a stick with nine knots, O Spitama Zarathustra! and thou shalt fasten the leaden spoon to the upper part of the stick.'

15 'They shall wash his hands first. If his hands be not washed first, he makes his whole body unclean. When he has washed his hands three times, after his hands have been washed, thou shalt sprinkle the forepart of his skull; then the Drug Nasu rushes in front, between his brows.'

16 'Thou shalt sprinkle him in front between the brows; then the Drug Nasu rushes upon the back part of the skull. 'Thou shalt sprinkle the back part of the skull; then the Drug Nasu rushes upon the jaws. 'Thou shalt sprinkle the jaws; then the Drug Nasu rushes upon the right ear.'

20 'Thou shalt sprinkle the right rib; then the Drug Nasu rushes upon the left rib. 'Thou shalt sprinkle the left rib; then the Drug Nasu rushes upon the right hip. 'Thou shalt sprinkle the right hip; then the Drug Nasu rushes upon the left hip.'

21 'Thou shalt sprinkle the left hip; then the Drug Nasu rushes upon the sexual parts. 'Thou shalt sprinkle the sexual parts. If the unclean one be a man, thou shalt sprinkle him first behind, then before; if the unclean one be a woman, thou shalt sprinkle her first before, then behind; then the Drug Nasu rushes upon the right thigh.'

27 'And thou shalt say those fiend-smiting and most-healing words:-- "Yathâ ahû vairyo:--The will of the Lord is the law of holiness; the riches of Vohu-manô shall be given to him who works in this world for Mazda, and yields according to the will of Ahura the power he gave to him to relieve the poor. "Kem nâ mazdâ:--Whom hast thou placed to protect me, O Mazda! while the hate of the fiend is grasping me? Whom, but thy Âtar and Vohu-manô, by whose work the holy world goes on? Reveal to me the rules of thy law! "Ke verethrem gâ:--Who is he who will smite the fiend in order to maintain thy ordinances.? Teach me clearly thy rules for this world and for the next, that Sraosha may come with Vohu-manô and help whomsoever thou pleasest. "Keep us from our hater, O Mazda and Armaitsî Spenta! Perish, O fiendish Drug! Perish, O brood of the fiend! Perish, O world of the fiend! Perish away, O Drug! Rush away, O Drug! Perish away, O Drug! Perish away to the regions of the north, never more to give unto death the living world of the holy spirit!'

28 'At the first hole the man becomes freer from the Nasu; then thou shalt say those fiend-smiting and most-healing words:--"Yathâ ahû vairyo," &c.'

'At the second hole he becomes freer from the Nasu; then thou shalt say those fiend-smiting and most-healing words:--"Yathâ ahû vairyo," &c.'

'At the third hole he becomes freer from the Nasu; then thou shalt say those fiend-smiting and most-healing words:--"Yathâ ahû vairyo," &c.'

'At the fourth hole he becomes freer from the Nasu; then thou shalt say those fiend-smiting and most-healing words:--"Yathâ ahû vairyo," &c.'

'At the fifth hole he becomes freer from the Nasu; then thou shalt say those fiend-smiting and most-healing words:--"Yathâ ahû vairyo," &c.'

'At the sixth hole he becomes freer from the Nasu; then thou shalt say those fiend-smiting and most-healing words:--"Yathâ ahû vairyo," &c.'

29 'Afterwards the unclean one shall sit down, inside the furrows 1, outside the furrows of the six holes, four fingers from those furrows. There he shall cleanse his body with thick handfuls of dust.'

30 'Fifteen times shall they take up dust from the ground for him to rub his body, and they shall wait there until he is dry even to the last hair on his head.'

31 'When his body is dry, then he shall step over the holes (containing water). At the first hole he shall wash his body once with water; at the second hole he shall wash his body twice with water; at the third hole he shall wash his body thrice with water.'

32 'Then he shall perfume (his body) with perfumes from Urvâsna, or Vohu-gaona, or Vohu-kereti, or Hadhâ-nâpata, or from any sweet-smelling plant; then he shall put on his clothes, and shall go back to his house.'

33 'He shall sit down there in the place of infirmity 1, inside the house, apart from the other worshippers of Mazda. He shall not go near the fire, nor near the water, nor near the earth, nor near the cow, nor near the trees, nor near the faithful, either man or woman. Thus shall he continue until three nights have passed. When three nights have passed, he shall wash his body, he shall wash his clothes with gômêz and water to make them clean.

34 'Then he shall sit down again in the place of infirmity, inside the house, apart from the other worshippers of Mazda. He shall not go near the fire, nor near the water, nor near the earth, nor near the cow, nor near the trees, nor near the faithful, either man or woman. Thus shall he continue until six nights have passed. When six nights have passed, he shall wash his body, he shall wash his clothes with gômêz and water to make them clean.

35 'Then he shall sit down again in the place of infirmity, inside the house, apart from the other worshippers of Mazda. He shall not go near the fire, nor near the water, nor near the earth, nor near the cow, nor near the trees, nor near the faithful, either man or woman. Thus shall he continue, until nine nights have passed. When nine nights have passed, he shall wash his body, he shall wash his clothes with gômêz and water to make them clean.

36 'He may thenceforth go near the fire, near the water, near the earth, near the cow, near the trees, and near the faithful, either man or woman.

37 'Thou shalt cleanse a priest for a holy blessing; thou shalt cleanse the lord of a province for the value of a camel of high value; thou shalt cleanse the lord of a town for the value of a stallion; thou shalt cleanse the lord of a borough for the value of a bull; thou shalt cleanse the master of a house for the value of a cow three years old.

38 'Thou shalt cleanse the wife of the master of a house for the value of a ploughing cow; thou shalt cleanse a menial for the value of a draught cow; thou shalt cleanse a young child for the value of a lamb.

39 'These are the different cattle that the worshippers of Mazda shall give to him who has cleansed them, if they can afford it; if they cannot afford it, they shall give him any other reward that may make him leave their houses well-pleased with them, and free from anger.

40 'For if the man who has cleansed them leave their houses displeased with them, and full of anger, then the Drug Nasu enters them by the nose, by the eyes, by the tongue, by the jaws, by the sexual organs, by the hinder parts.

41 'And the Drug Nasu rushes upon them even to the end of the nails, and they are unclean thenceforth for ever and ever. 'It grieves the sun indeed, O Spitama Zarathustra! to shine upon a man defiled by the dead; it grieves the moon, it grieves the stars.

42 'That man delights them, O Spitama Zarathustra! who cleanses from the Nasu those whom she has defiled; he delights the fire, he delights the water, he delights the earth, he delights the cow, he delights the trees, he delights the faithful, both men and women.'

43 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What shall be his reward, after his soul has parted from his body, who has cleansed from the Nasu any one defiled by her?'

44 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The welfare of the blessed abode thou canst promise to that man, for his reward in the other world.'

45 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How shall I fight against that Drug who from the dead rushes upon the living? How shall I fight against that Nasu who from the dead defiles the living?'

46 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Say aloud those words in the Gâthas that are to be said twice; say aloud those words in the Gâthas that are to be said thrice; say aloud those words in the Gâthas that are to be said four times; and the Drug shall fade away like the self-moving arrow, like the carpet of the earth when the year is over like its garment which lasts a season.'

47 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man who does not know the rites of cleansing according to the law of Mazda, offers to cleanse the unclean, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do? How shall I then fight against that Drug who from the dead rushes upon the living? How shall I fight against that Drug who from the dead defiles the living?'

48 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Then, O Spitama Zarathustra! the Drug Nasu waxes stronger than she was before. Stronger then are sickness and death and the working of the fiend than they were before.'

49 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'The worshippers of Mazda shall bind him; they shall bind his hands first; then they shall strip him of his clothes, they shall flay him alive, they shall cut off his head, and they shall give over his corpse unto the greediest of the birds of the beneficent spirit, unto the corpse-eating birds, unto the ravens, with these words I:-- "The man here has repented of all his evil thoughts, words, and deeds.

50 "If he has committed any other evil deed it is remitted by his repentance; if he has committed no other evil deed, he is absolved by his repentance for ever and ever."

51 Who is he, O Ahura Mazda! who threatens to take away fulness and increase from the world, and to bring in sickness and death?

52 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the ungodly Ashemaogha, O Spitama Zarathustra! who in this material world cleanses the unclean without knowing the rites of cleansing according to the law of Mazda.

53 'For until then, O Spitama Zarathustra! sweetness and fatness would flow out from that land and from those fields, with health and healing, with fulness and increase and growth, and a growing of corn and grass.'

54 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When are sweetness and fatness to come back again to that land and to those fields, with health and healing, with fulness and increase and growth, and a growing of corn and grass?

55, 56 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Sweetness and fatness will never come back again to that land and to those fields, with health and healing, with fulness and increase and growth, and a growing of corn and grass, until that ungodly Ashemaogha has been put to death, and the holy Sraosha has been in that place, offered up a sacrifice, for three days and three nights, with fire blazing, with baresma tied up, and with Haoma uplifted.

57 'Then sweetness and fatness will come back again to that land and to those fields, with health and healing, with fulness and increase and growth, and a growing of corn and grass.'

1 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda! most beneficent spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How shall I fight against that Drug who from the dead rushes upon the living? How shall I fight against that Drug who from the dead defiles the living?'

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Say aloud those words in the Gâthas that are to be said twice; say aloud those words in the Gâthas that are to be said thrice; say aloud those words in the Gâthas that are to be said four times.'

3 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which are those words in the Gâthas that are to be said twice?

4 Ahura Mazda answered: 'These are the words in the Gâthas that are to be said twice, and thou shalt twice say them aloud:-- ahya yâsâ . . . urvânem (Yasna 28, 2), humatenâm . . . mahî (Yas. 35, 2), ashahyâ âad sairê . . . ahubyâ (Yas. 35, 8), yathâ tû î . . . ahurâ (Yas. 39, 4), humâim thwâ . . . hudaustemâ (Yas. 41, 3), thwôî staotaraskâ . . . ahurâ (Yas. XLI, 5), ustâ ahmâi . . . mananghō (Yas. 43, 1), spentâ mainyû . . . ahurō (Yas. 47, 1), vohu kshathrem . . . vareshânê (Yas. LI, 1), vahistâ istis . . . skyaathanakâ (Yas. 53, 1).

5 'And after thou hast twice said those words, thou shalt say aloud these fiend-smiting and most-healing words:-- "I drive away Angra Mainyu from this house, from this borough, from this town, from this land; from the very body of the man defiled by the dead, from the very body of the woman defiled by the dead; from the master of house, from the lord of the borough, from the lord of the town, from the lord of the land; from the whole of the holy world.

6 "I drive away the Nasu, I drive away direct defilement, I drive away indirect defilement, from this house, from this borough, from this town, from this land; from the very body of the man defiled by the dead, from the very body of the woman defiled by the dead; from the master of the house, from the lord of the borough, from the lord of the town, from the lord of the land; from the whole of the holy world."

7 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which are those words in the Gâthas that are to be said thrice?

8 Ahura Mazda answered: 'These are the words in the Gâthas that are to be said thrice, and thou shalt thrice say them aloud:-- ashem vohu . . . (Yas. 27, 14), ye sevistō . . . paîtî (Yas. 33, 11), hukshathrōtemâi . . . vahistâi (Yas. 35, 5), duzvarênâis . . . vahyō (Yas. 53, 9).

9 'After thou hast thrice said those words, thou shalt say aloud these fiend-smiting and most-healing words:-- "I drive away Indra, I drive away Sauru 1, I drive away the daēva Naunghaithya 1, from this house, from this borough, from this town, from this land; from the very body of the man defiled by the dead, from the very body of the woman defiled by the dead; from the master of the house, from the lord of the borough, from the lord of the town, from the lord of the land; from the whole of the holy world.

10 "I drive away Tauru, I drive away Zairi, from this house, from this borough, from this town, from this land; from the very body of the man defiled by the dead, from the very body of the woman defiled by the dead; from the master of the house, from the lord of the borough, from the lord of the town, from the lord of the land; from the whole of the holy world."

11 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which are those words in the Gâthas that are to be said four times?

12 Ahura Mazda answered: 'These are the words in the Gâthas that are to be said four times, and thou shalt four times say them aloud:-- yathâ ahû vairyō . . . (Yas. 27, 13), mazdâ ad môi . . . dau ahûm (Yas. 34, 15), â airyamâ ishyō . . . masatâ mazdau (Yas. 54, 1).

13 'After thou hast said those words four times, thou shalt say aloud these fiend-smiting and most-healing words:-- "I drive away Aeshma, the fiend of the wounding spear, I drive away the daēva Akatasha, from this house, from this borough, from this town, from this land; from the very body of the man defiled by the dead, from the very body of the woman defiled by the dead; from the master of the house, from the lord of the borough, from the lord of the town, from the lord of the land; from the whole of the holy world.

14 "I drive away the Varena daēvas, I drive away the wind-daēva, from this house, from this borough, from this town, from this land; from the very body of the man defiled by the dead, from the very body of the woman defiled by the dead; from the master of the house, from the lord of the borough, from the lord of the town, from the lord of the land; from the whole of the holy world."

15 'These are the words in the Gâthas that are to be said twice; these are the words in the Gâthas that are to be said thrice; these are the words in the Gâthas that are to be said four times.

16 'These are the words that smite down Angra Mainyu; these are the words that smite down Aeshma, the fiend of the wounding spear; these are the words that smite down the Mâzainya daēvas; these are the words that smite down all the daēvas.

17 'These are the words that stand against that Drug, against that Nasu, who from the dead rushes upon the living, who from the dead defiles the living.

18 'Therefore, O Zarathustra! thou shalt dig nine holes in the part of the ground where there is least water and where there are fewest trees; where there is nothing that may be food either for man or beast; for purity, is for man, next to life, the greatest good; that purity that is procured by the law of Mazda for him who cleanses himself with good thoughts, words, and deeds.

19 'Make thyself pure, O righteous man! any one in the world here below can win purity for himself, namely, when he cleanses himself with good thoughts, words, and deeds.

20 'The will of the Lord is the law of holiness,' &c. 'Whom hast thou placed to protect me, O Mazda! while the hate of the fiend is grasping me?' &c. 'Who is he who will smite the fiend in order to maintain thy ordinances?' &c. 'Keep us from our hater, O Mazda and Ârmaiti Spenta! Perish, O fiendish Drug! . . . Perish away to the regions of the north, never more to give unto death the living world of the holy spirit!'

1 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda! most beneficent spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How shall I cleanse the house? how the fire? how the water? how the earth? how the cow? how the tree? how the faithful man and the faithful woman? how the stars? how the moon? how the sun? how the boundless light? how all good things, made by Mazda, the offspring of the holy principle?'

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thou shalt chant the cleansing words, and the house shall be clean; clean shall be the fire, clean the water, clean the earth, clean the cow, clean the tree, clean the faithful man, and the faithful woman, clean the stars, clean the moon, clean the sun, clean the boundless light, clean all good things, made by Mazda, the offspring of the holy principle.

3 'So thou shalt say these fiend-smiting and most-healing words; thou shalt chant the Ahuna-Vairya five times:-- "The will of the Lord is the law of holiness," &c. "The Ahuna-Vairya preserves the person of man: "The will of the Lord is the law of holiness," &c. "Whom hast thou placed to protect me, O Mazda! while the hate of the fiend is grasping me?" &c. "Who is he who will smite the fiend in order to maintain thy ordinances?" &c. "Keep us from our hater, O Mazda and Ârmaiti Spenta!" &c.

4 'If thou wantest to cleanse the house, say these words aloud: "He is my greatest support as long as lasts this dreary world." "If thou wantest to cleanse the fire, say these words aloud: "Thy fire, first of all, do we approach with worship, O Ahura Mazda!"

5 'If thou wantest to cleanse the water, say these words aloud: "Waters we worship, the waters in the tree, the waters in the stream, the waters in the rain." "If thou wantest to cleanse the earth, say these words aloud: "This earth we worship, this earth with the women, this earth which bears us and those women who are thine, O Ahura!"

6 'If thou wantest to cleanse the cow, say these words aloud: "For the cow we order thee to do these most excellent deeds, that she may have a resting place and fodder." "If thou wantest to cleanse the trees, say these words aloud: "Out of him, through his holiness Mazda made the plants grow up."

7 'If thou wantest to cleanse the faithful man or the faithful woman, say these words aloud: "May the beloved Airyaman come hither, for the men and women of Zarathustra to rejoice, for the faithful to rejoice; with the desirable reward that is won by means of the law, and with that boon for holiness that is vouchsafed by Ahura!"

8 'Then thou shalt say these fiend-smiting and most-healing words. Thou shalt chant the Ahuna-Vairya eight times:-- "The will of the Lord is the law of holiness," &c. "Whom hast thou placed to protect me, O Mazda?" &c. "Who is he who will smite the fiend?" &c. "Keep us from our hater, O Mazda!" &c.

9 'I drive away Aëshma, I drive away the Nasu, I drive away direct defilement, I drive away indirect defilement. [I drive away Khrû, I drive away Khrûighn; I drive away Bûidhi, I drive away Bûidhiza; I drive away Kundi, I drive away Kundiza. 'I drive away the yellow Bûshyâsta, I drive away the long-handed Bûshyâsta; [I drive away Mûidhi, I drive away Kapasti.] 'I drive away the Pairika that comes upon the fire, upon the water, upon the earth, upon the cow, upon the tree. I drive away the demon of uncleanness that comes upon the fire, upon the water, upon the earth, upon the cow, upon the tree.

10 'I drive thee away, O mischievous Angra Mainyu! from the fire, from the water, from the earth, from the cow, from the tree, from the faithful man and from the faithful woman, from the stars, from the moon, from the sun, from the boundless light, from all good things, made by Mazda, the offspring of the holy principle.

11 'Then thou shalt say these fiend-smiting and most-healing -words; thou shalt chant four Ahuna-Vairyas:-- "The will of the Lord is the law of holiness," &c. "Whom hast thou placed to protect me?" &c. "Who is he who will smite the fiend?" &c. "Keep us from our hater, O Mazda!" &c.

12 'Away is Aëshma driven; away is the Nasu driven; away is direct defilement; away is indirect defilement driven. 'Away is Khrû, away is Khrûighni driven; away is Bûidhi, away is Bûidhiza driven; away is Kundi, away is Kundiza driven. 'Away is Bûshyâsta driven, the yellow; away is Bûshyâsta driven, the long-handed; away is Mûidhi, away is Kapasti driven. 'Away is the Pairika driven that comes upon the fire, upon the water, upon the earth, upon the cow, upon the tree. Away is the demon of uncleanness driven that comes upon the fire, upon the water, upon the earth, upon the cow, upon the tree.

13 'Away art thou driven, O mischievous Angra Mainyu! from the fire, from the water, from the earth, from the cow, from the tree, from the faithful man and from the faithful woman, from the stars, from the moon, from the sun, from the boundless light, from all good things, made by Mazda, the offspring of the holy principle.

14 'Then thou shalt say these fiend-smiting and most-healing words; thou shalt chant "Mazdâ ad moi" four times: "O Mazda! teach me excellent words and excellent works, that through the good thought and the holiness of him who offers thee due praise, thou mayest, O Lord! make the world thrive for ever and ever, at thy will, under thy sovereign rule."

15 'I drive away Aëshma, I drive away the Nasu,' &c.

16 'I drive thee away, O mischievous Angra Mainyu! from the fire, from the water,' &c.

17 'Then thou shalt say these fiend-smiting and most-healing words; thou shalt chant the Airyama-isyô four times: "May the beloved Airyaman come hither!" &c.

18 'Away is Aëshma driven; away is the Nasu driven,' &c.

19 'Away art thou driven, O mischievous Angra Mainyu! from the fire, from the water,' &c.

20 'Then thou shalt say these fiend-smiting and most-healing words; thou shalt chant five Ahuna-Vairyas:-- "The will of the Lord is the law of holiness," &c. "Whom hast thou placed to protect me?" &c. "Who is he who will smite the fiend?" &c. "Keep us from our hater, O Mazda and Ârmaiti Spenta! Perish, O fiendish Drug! Perish, O brood of the fiend! Perish, O world of the fiend! Perish away, O Drug! Rush away, O Drug! Perish away, O Drug! Perish away to the regions of the north, never more to give unto death the living world of the holy spirit!"

1 If one's father or mother dies, how long shall they stay, the son for the father, the daughter for her mother? How long for the righteous? How long for the sinners? Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall stay thirty days for the righteous, sixty days for the sinners.'

2 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How shall I cleanse the house? How shall it be clean again? Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall wash their bodies three times, they shall wash their clothes three times, they shall chant the Gâthas three times; they shall offer up a sacrifice to my Fire, they shall offer up the bundles of baresma, they shall bring libations to the good waters; then the house shall be clean, and then the waters may enter, then the fire may enter, and then the Ameshas-Spentas may enter, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

libations to the good waters; then the house shall be clean, and then the waters may enter, then the fire may enter, and then the Ameshas-Spentas may enter, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

19 If the grandson of a cousin or the granddaughter of a cousin dies, how long shall they stay? How long for the righteous? How long for the sinners? Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall stay five days for the righteous, ten days for the sinners.'

20 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How shall I cleanse the house? How shall it be clean again? Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall wash their bodies three times, they shall wash their clothes three times, they shall chant the Gâthas three times; they shall offer up a sacrifice to my Fire, they shall offer up the bundles of baresma, they shall bring libations to the good waters; then the house shall be clean, and then the waters may enter, then the fire may enter, and then the Ameshas-Spentas may enter, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

21 If a stranger dies who does not profess the true faith, or the true law, what part of the creation of the good spirit does he directly defile (in dying)? What part does he indirectly defile?

22 Ahura Mazda answered: 'No more than a frog does whose venom is dried up, and that has been dead more than a year. Whilst alive, indeed, O Spitama Zarathustra! that wicked, two-legged ruffian, that ungodly Ashemaogha, directly defiles the creatures of the good spirit, and indirectly defiles them.'

23 'Whilst alive he smites the water; whilst alive he blows out the fire; whilst alive he carries off the cow; whilst alive he smites the faithful man with a deadly blow, that parts the soul from the body; not so will he do when dead.'

24 'Whilst alive, indeed, O Spitama Zarathustra! that wicked, two-legged ruffian, that ungodly Ashemaogha, never ceases depriving the faithful man of his food, of his clothing, of his house, of his bed, of his vessels; not so will he do when dead.'

The Dog.

1. Which is the good creature among the creatures of the good spirit that from midnight till the sun is up goes and kills thousands of the creatures of the evil spirit?

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The dog with the prickly back, with the long and thin muzzle, the dog Vanghâpara, which evil-speaking people call the Duzaka; this is the good creature among the creatures of the good spirit that from midnight till the sun is up goes and kills thousands of the creatures of the evil spirit.'

3 'And whosoever, O Zarathustra! shall kill, the dog with the prickly back, with the long and thin muzzle, the dog Vanghâpara, which evil-speaking people call the Duzaka, kills his own soul for nine generations, nor shall he find a way over the Kinvad bridge 3, unless he has, while alive, atoned for his sin by offering up a sacrifice to Sraosha.'

4 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man kill the dog with the prickly back, with the long and thin muzzle, the dog Vanghâpara, which evil-speaking people call the Duzaka, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'A thousand stripes with the Aspahê-astara, a thousand stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

5 Which is the evil creature among the creatures of the evil spirit that from midnight till the sun is up goes and kills thousands of the creatures of the good spirit?

6 Ahura Mazda answered: 'The daëva Zairimyangura, which evil-speaking people call the Zairimiyâka, this is the evil creature among the creatures of the evil spirit that from midnight till the sun is up goes and kills thousands of the creatures of the good spirit.'

7 'And whosoever, O Zarathustra! shall kill the daëva Zairimyangura, which evil-speaking people call the Zairimiyâka, his sins in thought, word, and deed are redeemed as they would be by a Patet; his sins in thought, word, and deed are atoned for.'

8 'Whosoever shall smite either a shepherd's dog, or a house dog, or a Vohunazga dog, or a trained dog, his soul when passing to the other world, shall fly amid louder howling and fiercer pursuing than the sheep does when the wolf rushes upon it in the lofty forest.'

9 'No soul will come and meet his departing soul and help it through the howls and pursuit in the other world; nor will the dogs that keep the Kinvad bridge help his departing soul through the howls and pursuit in the other world.'

10 'If a man shall smite a shepherd's dog so that it becomes unfit for work, if he shall cut off its ear or its paw, and thereupon a thief or a wolf break in and carry away sheep from the fold, without the dog giving any warning, the man shall pay for the lost sheep, and he shall pay for the wound of the dog as for wilful wounding.'

11 'If a man shall smite a house dog so that it becomes unfit for work, if he shall cut off its ear or its paw, and thereupon a thief or a wolf break in and carry away goods from the house, without the dog giving any warning, the man shall pay for the lost goods, and he shall pay for the wound of the dog as for wilful wounding.'

12 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall smite a shepherd's dog, so that it gives up the ghost and the soul parts from the body, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Eight hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, eight hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

13 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall smite a house dog so that it gives up the ghost and the soul parts from the body, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Seven hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seven hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

14 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall smite a Vohunazga dog so that it gives up the ghost and the soul parts from the body, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Six hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, six hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

15 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall smite a young dog so that it gives up the ghost and the soul parts from the body, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Five hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, five hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

16 'This is the penalty for the murder of a Gazu dog, of a Vizu dog, of a Sukuruna dog, of a sharp-toothed Urupi dog, of a swift-running Raopi dog; this is the penalty for the murder of any kind of dog but the water dog'

17 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the dog that must be called a shepherd's dog? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the dog who goes a Yugyêsti I round about the fold, watching for the thief and the wolf.'

18 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the dog that must be called a house dog? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the dog who goes a Hâthra round about the house, watching for the thief and the wolf.'

19 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the dog that must be called a Vohunazga dog? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the dog who claims none of those talents, and only seeks for his subsistence.'

20 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man give bad food to a shepherd's dog, of what sin is he guilty? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the same guilt as though he should serve bad food to a master of a house of the first rank.'

21 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man give bad food to a house dog, of what sin is he guilty? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the same guilt as though he should serve bad food to a master of a house of middle rank.'

22 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man give bad food to a Vohunazga dog, of what sin is he guilty? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the same guilt as though he should serve bad food to a holy man, in the character of a priest, who should come to his house.'

23 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man give bad food to a young dog, of what sin is he guilty? Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the same guilt as though he should serve bad food to a young man, born of pious parents, and who can answer for himself.'

24 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall give bad food to a shepherd's dog, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshôtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahê-astara, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

25 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall give bad food to a house dog, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Ninety stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ninety stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

26 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall give bad food to a Vohunazga dog, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Seventy stripes with the Aspahê-astara, seventy stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

27 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall give bad food to a young dog, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Fifty stripes with the Aspahê-astara, fifty stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

28 'For it is the dog, of all the creatures of the good spirit, that most quickly decays into age, while not eating near eating people, and watching goods none of which it receives. Bring ye unto him milk and fat with meat; this is the right food for the dog.'

29 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If there be in the house of a worshipper of Mazda a mad dog, or one that bites without barking, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do?

30 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall put a wooden collar around his neck, and they shall tie him to a post, an asti I thick if the wood be hard, two astis thick if it be soft. To that post they shall tie him; by the two sides of the collar they shall tie him.'

31 'If they shall not do so, and the mad dog, or the dog that bites without barking, smite a sheep or wound a man, the dog shall pay for it as for wilful murder.'

32 'If the dog shall smite a sheep or wound a man, they shall cut off his right ear. If he shall smite another sheep or wound another man, they shall cut off his left ear.'

33 'If he shall smite a third sheep or wound a third man, they shall cut off his right foot. If he shall smite a fourth sheep or wound a fourth man, they shall cut off his left foot.'

34 'If he shall for the fifth time smite a sheep or wound a man, they shall cut off his tail. Therefore they shall tie him to the post; by the two sides of the collar they shall tie him. If they shall not do so, and the mad dog, or the dog that bites without barking, smite a sheep or wound a man, he shall pay for it as for wilful murder.'

35 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If there be in the house of a worshipper of Mazda a scentless dog, or a mad dog, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do? Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall attend him to heal him, in the same manner as they would do for one of the faithful.'

36 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If they try to heal him and fail, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do?

37 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall put a wooden collar around his neck, and they shall tie him to a post, an asti thick if the wood be hard, two astis thick if it be soft. To that post they shall tie him; by the two sides of the collar they shall tie him.'

38 'If they shall not do so, and the scentless dog fall into a hole, or a well, or a precipice, or a river, or a canal, and he be wounded and die thereof, they shall be Peshôtanus.'

39 'The dog, O Spitama Zarathustra! I, Ahura Mazda, have made self-clothed and self-shod, watchful, wakeful, and sharp-toothed, born to take his food from man and to watch over man's goods. I, Ahura Mazda, have made the dog strong of body against the evil-doer, and watchful over your goods, when he is of sound mind.'

40 'And whosoever shall awake at his voice, neither shall the thief nor the wolf steal anything from his house, without his being warned, the wolf shall be smitten and torn to pieces; he is driven away, he flees away.'

41 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which, of the two wolves deserves more to be killed, the one that is born of a he-dog and of a she-wolf, or the one that is born of a she-dog and of a he-wolf? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Of these two wolves, the one that is born of a he-dog and of a she-wolf deserves more to be killed than the one that is born of a she-dog and of a he-wolf.'

42 'For there are born of a he-dog and of a she-wolf such dogs as fall on the shepherd's dog, on the house dog, on the Vohunazga dog, on the trained dog, and destroy the folds; such dogs are born as are more murderous, more mischievous, more destructive to the folds than any other dogs.'

43 'And there are born of a he-dog and of a she-wolf such wolves as fall on the shepherd's dog, on the house dog, on the Vohunazga dog, on the trained dog, and destroy the folds; such wolves are born as are more murderous, more mischievous, more destructive to the folds than any other wolves.'

44 'A dog has the characters of eight different sorts of people:-- 'He has the character of a priest, 'He has the character of a warrior, 'He has the character of a husbandman, 'He has the character of a strolling singer, 'He has the character of a thief, 'He has the character of a wild beast, 'He has the character of a courtizan, 'He has the character of a child.'

45 'He eats broken food, like a priest; he is grateful, like a priest; he is easily satisfied, like a priest; he wants only a small piece of bread, like a priest; in these things he is like unto a priest. 'He marches in front, like a warrior; he fights for the beneficent cow, like a warrior; he goes first out of the house, like a warrior; in these things he is like unto a warrior.'

46 'He is watchful and sleeps lightly, like a husbandman; he goes first out of the house, like a husbandman; he returns last into the house, like a husbandman; in these things he is like unto a husbandman. 'He sings like a strolling singer; he is intrusive, like a strolling singer; he is meagre, like a strolling singer; he is poor, like a strolling singer; in these things he is like unto a strolling singer.'

47 'He likes darkness, like a thief; he prowls about in darkness, like a thief; he is a shameless eater, like a thief; he is an unfaithful keeper, like a thief; in these things he is like unto a thief. 'He likes darkness, like a wild beast; he prowls about in darkness, like a wild beast; he is a shameless eater, like a wild beast; he is an unfaithful keeper, like a wild beast; in these things he is like unto a wild beast.'

48 'He sings, like a courtizan; he is intrusive, like a courtizan; he walks about the roads, like a courtizan; he is meagre, like a courtizan; he is poor, like a courtizan; in these things he is like unto a courtizan. 'He likes sleeping, like a child; he is apt to run away, like a child; he is full of tongue, like a child; he goes on all fours, like a child; in these things he is like unto a child.'

49 'If those two dogs of mine, the shepherd's dog and the house dog, pass by the house of any of my faithful people, let them never be kept away from it. 'For no house could subsist on the earth made by Ahura, but for those two dogs of mine, the shepherd's dog and the house dog.'

50 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When a dog dies, with marrow and seed dried up, whereto does his ghost go?

51 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It passes to the spring of the waters, O Spitama Zarathustra! and there out of every thousand dogs and every thousand she-dogs, two water dogs are formed, a water dog and a water she-dog.'

52 'He who kills a water dog brings about a drought that dries up pastures. Before that time, O Spitama Zarathustra! sweetness and fatness would flow out from that land and from those fields, with health and healing, with fulness and increase and growth, and a growing of corn and grass.'

53 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When are sweetness and fatness to come back again to that land and to those fields, with health and healing, with fulness and increase and growth, and a growing of corn and grass?

54, 55 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Sweetness and fatness will never come back again to that land and to those fields, with health and healing, with fulness and increase and growth, and a growing of corn and grass, until the murderer of the water dog has been smitten to death and the holy soul of the dog has been offered up a sacrifice, for three days and three nights with fire blazing, with baresma tied up, and with Haoma uplifted.'

56 'Then sweetness and fatness will come back again to the land and to those fields, with health and healing, with fulness and increase and growth, and a growing of corn and grass.'

1 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! He who smites one of those water dogs that are born one from a thousand dogs and one thousand she-dogs, so that he gives up the ghost and the soul parts from the body, what is the penalty that he shall pay?'

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He shall pay ten thousand stripes with the Aspahê-astara, ten thousand stripes with the Sraoshô-karana. 'He shall godly and piously bring unto the fire of Ahura Mazda 1 ten thousand loads of hard, well dried, well examined wood, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).'

3 'He shall godly and piously bring unto the fire of Ahura Mazda ten thousand loads of soft wood, of Urvâsna, Vohugaona, Vohu-kereti, Hadhâ-naêpata, or any sweet-scented plant, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).'

4 'He shall godly and piously tie and consecrate ten thousand bundles of baresma; he shall offer up to the good waters ten thousand Zaothra libations with the Haoma and the sacred meat, cleanly prepared and well strained, cleanly prepared and well strained by a pious man, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).'

5 'He shall kill ten thousand snakes of those that go upon the belly; he shall kill ten thousand snakes of those that have the shape of a dog; he shall kill ten thousand tortoises; he shall kill ten thousand land frogs; he shall kill ten thousand water frogs; he shall kill ten thousand corn-carrying ants; he shall kill ten thousand ants of those that bite and dig holes and work mischief.'

6 'He shall kill ten thousand earth worms; he shall kill ten thousand horrid flies. 'He shall fill up ten thousand holes for the unclean. 'He shall godly and piously give to godly men twice seven sets of implements for the fire, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog), namely:

7 'Two (loads of the) proper materials for fire; a broom; a pair of tongs; a pair of round bellows extended at the bottom, contracted at the top; an adze with a sharp edge and a sharp-pointed handle, a saw with sharp teeth and a sharp-pointed handle, by means of which the worshippers of Mazda procure wood for the fire of Ahura Mazda.'

8 'He shall godly and piously give to godly men a set of the priestly instruments of which the priests make use, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog), namely: The Astra, the meat-vessel, the Paitidâna, the Khrafstraghna 8, the Sraoshô-karana, the cup for the Myazda, the cups for the juice, the mortar made according to the rules, the Haoma cups, and the baresma.'

9 'He shall godly and piously give to godly men a set of all the war implements of which the warriors make use, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog); the first being a javelin, the second a knife, the third a club, the fourth a bow, the fifth a quiver with shoulder-belt and thirty brass-headed arrows, the sixth a sling with arm-string and with thirty sling stones, the seventh a cuirass, the eighth a hauberk, the ninth a tunic, the tenth a helmet, the eleventh a girdle, the twelfth a pair of greaves.'

10 'He shall godly and piously give to godly men a set of all the implements of which the husbandmen make use, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog), namely: A plough with share and yoke, an ox whip, a mortar of stone, a hand-mill for grinding corn,

11 'A spade for digging and tilling; one measure of silver and one measure of gold.' O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How much silver? Ahura Mazda answered: 'The price of a stallion.' O Maker of the material world, thou

Holy One! How much gold? Ahura Mazda answered: 'The price of a camel.'

12 'He shall godly and piously procure a rill of running water for godly husbandmen, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).' O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How large is the rill? Ahura Mazda answered: 'The depth of a dog, and the breadth of a dog.'

13 'He shall godly and piously give a piece of arable land to godly men, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).' O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How large is the piece of land? Ahura Mazda answered: 'As much as can be watered with such a rill on both sides.'

14 'He shall godly and piously procure for godly men a house with ox-stalls, with nine hâthras and nine nematas 1, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).' O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How large is the house? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Twelve Vitâras in the largest part of the house, nine Vitâras in the middle part, six Vitâras in the smallest part.' He shall godly and piously give to godly men godly beds with cushions, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).

15 'He shall godly and piously give to a godly man a virgin maid, whom no man has known, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).' O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What maid? Ahura Mazda answered: 'A sister or a daughter of his, at the age of puberty, with ear-rings in her ears, and past her fifteenth year.'

16 'He shall godly and piously give to holy men twice seven head of small cattle, as an atonement unto the soul (of the water dog).' He shall bring up twice seven whelps. 'He shall throw twice seven bridges over canals.'

17 'He shall put into repair twice nine stables that are out of repair. 'He shall cleanse twice nine dogs from skin humours, hair wax, vermin, and all the diseases that are produced on the body of a dog. 'He shall treat twice nine godly men to their fill of meat, bread, strong, drink, and wine.'

18 'This is the atonement, this is the penalty that he shall undergo to atone for the deed that he has done. 'If he shall undergo it, he shall enter the world of the holy ones: if he shall not undergo it, he shall fall down into the world of the wicked, into that dark world, made of darkness, the offspring of darkness.'

1 How many are the sins that men commit and that, being committed and not confessed, nor atoned for, make their committer a Peshôtanu?

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'There are five such sins, O holy Zarathustra! It is the first of these sins that men commit when a man teaches one of the faithful a foreign, wrong creed, a foreign wrong law, and he does so with a full knowledge and conscience of the sin: this is a sin that makes him a Peshôtanu.'

3 'It is the second of these sins that men commit when a man gives too hard bones or too hot food to a shepherd's dog or to a house dog:

4 'If the bones stick in the dog's teeth or stop in his throat, or if the hot food burn his mouth or his tongue, so that mischief follows therefrom, and the dog dies, this is a sin that makes the man a Peshôtanu.'

5 'It is the third of these sins that men commit when a man smites a bitch big with young or affrights her by running after her, with shouting or with clapping of hands;

6 'If the bitch fall into a hole, or a well, or a precipice, or a river, or a canal, so that mischief follows therefrom, and she dies, this is a sin that makes the man a Peshôtanu.'

7 'It is the fourth of these sins that men commit when a man has intercourse with a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period: this is a sin that makes him a Peshôtanu.'

8 'It is the fifth of these sins that men commit when a man has intercourse with a woman quick with child, whether the milk has already come to her breasts or has not yet come: if mischief follow therefrom, and she die, this is a sin that makes the man a Peshôtanu.'

9 'If a man come near unto a damsel, either dependent on the chief of the family or not dependent, either delivered unto a husband or not delivered, and she conceives by him, let her not, from dread of the people, produce in herself the menses, against the course of nature, by means of water and plants.'

10 'And if the damsel, from dread of the people, shall produce in herself the menses against the course of nature, by means of water and plants, there is a sin upon her head.'

11 'If a man come near unto a damsel, either dependent on the chief of the family or not dependent, either delivered unto a husband or not delivered, and she conceives by him, let her not, from dread of the people, destroy the fruit in her womb.'

12 'And if the damsel, from dread of the people, shall destroy the fruit in her womb, the sin is on both the father and herself, the murder is on both the father and herself; both the father and herself shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

13 'If a man come near unto a damsel, either dependent on the chief of the family or not dependent, either delivered unto a husband or not delivered, and she conceives by him, and she says, "I have conceived by thee;" and he replies, "Go then to the old woman and apply to her that she may procure thee miscarriage;"

14 'And the damsel goes to the old woman and applies to her that she may procure her miscarriage; and the old woman brings her some Banga, or Shaêta, or Ghnâna, or Fraspâta 3, or some other of the drugs that produce miscarriage and the man says, "Cause thy fruit to perish!" and she causes her fruit to perish; the sin is on the head of all three, the man, the damsel, and the old woman.'

15 'If a man come near unto a damsel, either dependent on the chief of the family or not dependent, either delivered unto a husband or not delivered, and she conceives by him, so long shall he support her, until the child is born.'

16 'If he shall not support her, so that the child comes to mischief 1, for want of proper support, he shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

17 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If she be near her time and be lying on the high road, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

18 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It a man come near unto a damsel, either dependent on the chief of the family or not dependent, either delivered unto a husband or not delivered, and she conceives by him, so long shall he support her, until the child is born 2.'

19 'If he shall not support her . . . It lies with the faithful to look in the same way after every pregnant female, either two-footed or four-footed, either woman or bitch.'

20 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If (a bitch) be near her time and be lying on the high road, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

21 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He whose house stands-nearest, the care of supporting her is his; so long shall he support her until the whelps are born.'

22 'If he shall not support her, so that the whelps come to mischief, for want of proper support, he shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

23 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a bitch be near her time and be lying in a camel-stall, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

24 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He who built the camel-stall or who holds it, the care of supporting her is his; so long shall he support her, until the whelps are born.'

25 'If he shall not support her, so that the whelps come to mischief, for want of proper support, he shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

26 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a bitch be near her time and be lying in a horse-stall, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

27 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He who built the horse-stall or who holds it, the care of supporting her is his; so long shall he support her, until the whelps are born.'

28 'If he shall not support her, so that the whelps come to mischief, for want of proper support, he shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

29 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a bitch be near her time and be lying in an ox-stall, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

30 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He who built the ox-stall or who holds it, the care of supporting her is his; so long shall he support her, until the whelps are born.'

31 'If he shall not support her, so that the whelps come to mischief, for want of proper support, he shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

32 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a bitch be near her time and be lying in a sheep-fold, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

33 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He who built the sheep-fold or who holds it, the care of supporting her is his; so long shall he support her, until the whelps are born.'

34 'If he shall not support her so that the whelps come to mischief, for want of proper support, he shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

35 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a bitch be near her time and be lying on the earth-wall, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

36 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He who erected the wall or who holds it, the care of supporting her is his; so long shall he support her, until the whelps are born.'

37 'If he shall not support her, so that the whelps come to mischief, for want of proper support, he shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

38 O Maker of the Material world, thou Holy One! If a bitch be near her time and be lying in the moat, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

39 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He who dug the moat or who holds it, the care of supporting her is his; so long shall he support her, until the whelps are born.'

40 'If he shall not support her, so that the whelps come to mischief, for want of proper support, he shall pay the penalty for wilful murder.'

41 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a bitch be near her time and be lying in the middle of a pasture-field, which is the worshipper of Mazda that shall support her?

42 Ahura Mazda answered: 'He who sowed the pasture-field or who holds it, the care of supporting her is his.'

41 'He shall with kind charity take her to rest upon a litter of any foliage fit for a litter; so long shall he support her, until the young dogs are capable of self-defence and self-subsistence.'

44 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When are the dogs capable of self-defence and self-subsistence?

45 Ahura Mazda answered: 'When they are able to run about in a circuit of twice seven houses around. Then they may be let loose, whether it be winter or summer. 'Young dogs ought to be supported for six months, children for seven years. 'Atar 1, the son of Ahura Mazda, watches as well (over a pregnant bitch) as he does over a woman.'

46 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If worshippers of Mazda want to have a bitch so covered that the offspring shall be one of a strong nature, what shall they do?

47 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall dig a hole in the earth, in the middle of the fold, half a foot deep if the earth be hard, half the height of a man if the earth be soft.'

48 'They shall first tie up the bitch there, far from children and from the Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, and they shall watch by her until a dog comes there from anywhere. They shall afterwards let another dog come near her, and then a third besides, each being kept apart from the former, lest they should assail one another.'

49 'The bitch being thus covered by three dogs, grows big with young, and the milk comes to her teats and she brings forth a young one that is born from (three) dogs.'

50 He who smites a bitch who has been covered by three dogs, and who has already milk, and who shall bring forth a young one born from (three) dogs, what is the penalty that he shall pay?

51 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Seven hundred stripes with the Aspahê-âstra, seven hundred stripes with the Sraoshô-karana.'

FARGARD 16

1 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If there be in the house of a worshipper of Mazda a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period, what shall the worshippers of Mazda do?

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They shall clear the way of the wood there, both in growing trees and in logs; they shall strew dry dust on the ground; and they shall erect a building there, higher than the house by a half, or a third, or a fourth, or a fifth part, lest her look should fall upon the fire.'

3 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How far from the fire? How far from the water? How far from the consecrated bundles of baresma? How far from the faithful?

4 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Fifteen paces from the fire, fifteen paces from the water, fifteen paces from the consecrated bundles of baresma, three paces from the faithful.'

5 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! How far from her shall he stay, who brings food to a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period?

6 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Three paces from her shall he stay, who brings food to a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period.' In what kind of vessels shall he bring the food? In what kind of vessels shall he bring the bread? 'In vessels of brass, or of lead, or of any common metal.'

7 How much food shall he bring to her? How much bread shall he bring? '(Only) two danares of long bread, and one danare of milk pap, lest she should gather strength. 'If a child has just touched her, they shall first wash his hands and then his body.'

8 'If she still see blood after three nights have passed, she shall sit in the place of infirmity until four nights have passed. 'If she still see blood after four nights have passed, she shall sit in the place of infirmity until five nights, have passed.'

9 'If she still see blood after five nights have passed, she shall sit in the place of infirmity until six nights have passed. 'If she still see blood after six nights have passed, she shall sit in the place of infirmity until seven nights have passed.'

10 'If she still see blood after seven nights have passed, she shall sit in the place of infirmity until eight nights have passed. 'If she still see, blood after, eight nights have passed, she shall sit in the place of infirmity until nine nights have passed.'

11 'If she still see blood after nine nights have passed, this is a work of the Daêvas which they have performed for the worship and glorification of the Daêvas.' 'The worshippers of Mazda shall clear the way of the wood there, both in growing trees and in logs;

12 'They shall dig three holes in the earth, and they shall wash the woman with gômêz by two of those holes and with water by the third. 'They shall kill Khrafstras, to wit: two hundred corn-carrying ants, if it be summer; two hundred of any other sort of the Khrafstras made by Angra Mainyu, if it be winter.'

13 If a worshipper of Mazda shall suppress the issue of a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period, what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'He is a Peshōtanu: two hundred stripes with the Aspahē-āstra, two hundred stripes with the Sraoshō-karana.'

14 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! If a man shall again and again willfully touch the body of a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period, so that the ordinary issue turns to the dye of the unusual one, or the unusual issue to the dye of the ordinary one, what is the penalty that he shall pay?

15 Ahura Mazda answered: 'For the first time he comes near unto her, for the first time he lies by her, thirty stripes with the Aspahē-āstra, thirty stripes with the Sraoshō-karana; for the second time he comes near unto her, for the second time he lies by her, fifty stripes with the Aspahē-āstra, fifty stripes with the Sraoshō-karana; for the third time he comes near unto her, for the third time he lies by her, seventy stripes with the Aspahē-āstra, seventy stripes with the Sraoshō-karana.'

16 For the fourth time he comes near unto her, for the fourth time he lies by her, if he shall press the body under her clothes, if he shall press the unclean thigh, but without sexual intercourse) what is the penalty that he shall pay? Ahura Mazda answered: 'Ninety stripes with the Aspahē-āstra, ninety stripes with the Sraoshō-karana.'

17 'Whoever shall lie in sexual intercourse with a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period, does no better deed than if he should burn the corpse of his own son, born of his own body and dead of naēza I, and drop its fat into the fire.

18 'All such sinners, embodiments of the Drug, are scornors of the law: all scornors of the law are rebels against the Lord; all rebels against the Lord are ungodly men; and any ungodly man shall pay for it with his life.'

Hair and Nails.

1. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Which is the most deadly deed whereby a man increases most the baleful strength of the Daēvas, as he would do by offering them a sacrifice?'

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is when a man here below combs his hair or shaving it off, or paring off his nails drops them in a hole or in a crack.

3 'Then for want of the lawful rites being observed, Daēvas are produced in the earth; for want of the lawful rites being observed, those Khrafstras are produced in the earth which men call lice, and which eat up the corn in the corn-field and the clothes in the wardrobe.

4 'Therefore, O Zarathustra! whenever here below thou shalt comb thy hair or shave it off, or pare off thy nails, thou shalt take them away ten paces from the faithful, twenty paces from the fire, thirty paces from the water, fifty paces from the consecrated bundles of baresma.

5 'Then thou shalt dig a hole, a disti deep if the earth be hard, a vīstasi deep if it be soft; thou shalt take the hair down there and thou shalt say aloud these fiend-smiting words: "Out of him by his piety Mazda made the plants grow up."

6 'Thereupon thou shalt draw three furrows with a knife of metal around the hole, or six furrows or nine, and thou shalt chant the Ahuna-Vairyā three times, or six, or nine.

7 'For the nails, thou shalt dig a hole, out of the house, as deep as the top joint of the little finger; thou shalt take the nails down there and thou shalt say aloud these fiend-smiting words: "The words that are heard from the pious in holiness and good thought."

8 'Then thou shalt draw three furrows with a knife of metal around the hole, or six furrows or nine, and thou shalt chant the Ahuna-Vairyā three times, or six, or nine.

9 'And then: "Look here, O Ashō-zusta bird! here are the nails for thee: look at the nails here! May they be for thee so many spears, knives, bows, falcon-winged arrows, and sling-stones against the Māzainya Daēvas!"

10 'If those nails have not been dedicated (to the bird), they shall be in the hands of the Māzainya Daēva so many spears, knives, bows, falcon-winged arrows, and sling stones (against the Māzainya Daēvas).

11 'All such sinners, embodiments of the Drug, are scornors of the law: all scornors of the law are rebels against the Lord; all rebels against the Lord are ungodly men; and any ungodly man shall pay for it with his life.'

FARGARD 18

1 'There is many a one, O holy Zarathustra!' said Ahura Mazda, 'who wears a Paitidāna but who has not girded his loins with the law 3; when such a man says, "I am an Athravan," he lies; do not call him an Athravan, O holy Zarathustra!' thus said Ahura Mazda.

2 'He holds a Khrafstraghna in his hand, but he has not girded his loins with the law; when he says, "I am an Athravan," he lies; do not call him an Athravan, O holy Zarathustra!' thus said Ahura Mazda.

3 'He holds a twig 1 in his hand, but he has not girded his loins with the law; when he says, "I am an Athravan," he lies; do not call him an Athravan, O holy Zarathustra!' thus said Ahura Mazda.

4 'He wields the Astra mairya, but he has not girded his loins with the law; when he says, "I am an Athravan," he lies; do not call him an Athravan, O holy Zarathustra!' thus said Ahura Mazda.

5 'He who sleeps on throughout the night, who does not perform the Yasna nor chant the hymns, who does not worship by word or by deed, who does neither learn nor teach, with a longing for (everlasting) life, he lies when he says, "I am an Athravan," do not call him an Athravan, O holy Zarathustra!' thus said Ahura Mazda.

6 'Him thou shalt call an Athravan, O holy Zarathustra! who throughout the night sits up and demands of the holy Wisdom 3, which makes man free from anxiety, with dilated heart, and cheerful at the head of the Kinvat bridge, and which makes him reach that world, that holy world, that excellent world, the world of paradise.

7 '(Therefore) demand of me, thou upright one! of me, who am the Maker, the best of all beings, the most knowing, the most pleased in answering what is asked of me; demand of me, that thou mayst be the better, that thou mayst be the happier.'

8 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What is it that makes the unseen power of Death increase?'

9 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the man that teaches a wrong law; it is the man who continues for three years without wearing the sacred girdle, without chanting the Gāthas, without worshipping the good waters.

10 'And he who should set that man at liberty, when bound in prison, does no better deed than if he should flay a man alive and cut off his head.

11 'The blessing uttered on a wicked, ungodly Ashemaogha does not go past the mouth (of the blessing); the blessing for two Ashemaoghas does not go past his tongue; the blessing for three is no word at all; the blessing for four is a curse against himself. 12. 'Whoever should give some Haoma juice to a wicked, ungodly Ashemaogha, or some Myazda consecrated with blessings, does no better deed than if he should lead a thousand horse against the cities of the worshippers of Mazda, and should slaughter the men thereof, and drive off the cattle as plunder.

13 'Demand of me, thou upright one! of me, who am the Maker, the best of all beings, the most knowing, the most pleased in answering what is asked of me; demand of me, that thou mayst be the better, that thou mayst be the happier.'

14 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Who is the Sraoshavarez of Sraosha? the holy, strong Sraosha, who is the incarnate Word, a mighty-speared and lordly god.'

15 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the bird named Parōdars, which ill-speaking people call Kahrkatās, O holy Zarathustra! the bird that lifts up his voice against the mighty dawn:

16 "Arise, O men! recite the Ashem yad vahistem that smites down the Daēvas. Lo! here is Būshyāsta, the long-handed, coming upon you, who lulls to sleep again the whole living world, as soon as it has awoke: 'Sleep!' she says, 'sleep on, O man! the time 5 is not yet come.'"

17 'For the three excellent things be never slack, namely, good thoughts, good words, and good deeds; for the three abominable things be ever slack, namely, bad thoughts, bad words, and bad deeds.'

18 'In the first part of the night, Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, calls the master of the house for help, saying:

19 "Up! arise, thou master of the house! put on thy girdle on thy clothes, wash thy hands, take wood, bring it unto me, and let me burn bright with the clean wood, carried by thy well-washed hands. Here comes Azi, made by the Daēvas, who is about to strive against me, and wants to put out my life."

20 'In the second part of the night, Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, calls the husbandman for help, saying:

21 "Up! arise, thou husbandman! Put on thy girdle on thy clothes, wash thy hands, take wood, bring it unto me, and let me burn bright with the clean wood, carried by thy well-washed hands. Here comes Azi, made by the Daēvas, who is about to strive against me, and wants to put out my life."

22 'In the third part of the night, Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, calls the holy Sraosha for help, saying: "Come thou, holy, tall-formed Sraosha, then he brings unto me some clean wood with his well-washed hands: here comes Azi, made by the Daēvas, who is about to strive against me, and wants to put out my life."

23 'And then the holy Sraosha wakes up the bird named Parōdars, which ill-speaking people call Kahrkatās, and the bird lifts up his voice against the mighty dawn:

24 "Arise, O men! recite the Ashem yad vahistem that smites down the Daēvas. Lo! here is Būshyāsta, the long-handed, coming upon you, who lulls to sleep again the whole living world as soon as it has awoke: 'Sleep!' she says, 'sleep on, O man! the time is not yet come.'"

25 "For the three excellent things be never slack, namely, good thoughts, good words, and good deeds; for the three abominable things be ever slack, namely, bad thoughts, bad words, and bad deeds."

26 'And then bed-fellows address one another: "Rise up, here is the cock calling me up." Whichever of the two first gets up shall first enter paradise: whichever of the two shall first, with well-washed hands, bring clean wood unto the Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, the Fire, well pleased with him and not angry, and fed as it required, will thus bless him:

27 "May herds of oxen grow for thee, and increase of sons: may thy mind be master of its vow, may thy soul be master of its vow, and mayst thou live on in the joy of the soul all the nights of thy life." "This is the blessing which the Fire speaks unto him who brings him dry wood, well examined by the light of the day, well cleansed with godly intent.

28 'And whosoever will kindly and piously present one of the faithful with a pair of these my Parōdars birds, a male and a female, it is as though he had given a house with a hundred columns, a thousand beams, ten thousand large windows, ten thousand small windows.

29 'And whosoever shall give to my Parōdars bird his fill of meat, I, Ahura Mazda, need not interrogate him any longer; he shall directly go to paradise.'

30 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug! Thou then, alone in the material world, dost bear offspring without any male coming unto thee?'

31 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! It is not so, nor do I, alone in the material world, bear offspring without any male coming unto me.

32 'There are four males who are mine. 'And they make me conceive progeny as other males make their females.'

33 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug! Who is the first of those males of thine?'

34 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! He is the first of my males who, being entreated by one of the faithful, does not give him anything, be it ever so little, of the riches he has treasured up.

35 'That man makes me conceive progeny as other males make their females.'

36 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug! What is the thing that can counteract that?'

37 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! This is the thing that counteracts it, namely, when a man unasked, kindly and piously, gives to one of the faithful something, be it ever so little, of the riches he has treasured up.

38 'He does thereby as thoroughly destroy the fruit of my womb as a four-footed wolf does, who tears the child out of a mother's womb.'

39 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug! Who is the second of those males of thine?'

40 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! He is the second of my males who, making water, lets it fall along the upper forepart of his foot.

41 'That man makes me conceive progeny as other males make their females.'

42 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug! What is the thing that can counteract that?'

43 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! This is the thing that counteracts it, namely, when the man rising up and stepping three steps further off, shall say three Ahuna-Vairyā, two humatanām, three hukhshathrōtemām, and then chant the Ahuna-Vairyā and offer up one Yēnhē hātām.

44 'He does thereby as thoroughly destroy the fruit of my womb as a four-footed wolf does, who tears the child out of a mother's womb.'

45 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug! Who is the third of those males of thine?'

46 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! He is the third of my males who during his sleep emits seed.

47 'That man makes me conceive progeny as other males make their females.'

48 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug! What is the thing that can counteract that?'

49 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! this is the thing that counteracts it, namely, if the man, when he has risen from sleep, shall say three Ahuna-Vairyā, two humatanām, three hukhshathrōtemām, and then chant the Ahuna-Vairyā and offer up one Yēnhē hātām.

50 'He does thereby as thoroughly destroy the fruit of my womb as a four-footed wolf does who tears the child out of a mother's womb.'

51 Then he shall speak unto Spenta Ārmaiti, saying: 'O Spenta Ārmaiti, this man do I deliver unto thee; this man deliver thou back unto me, against the mighty day of resurrection; deliver him back as one who knows the Gāthas, who knows the Yasna, and the revealed law, a wise and clever man, who is the Word incarnate.

52 'Then thou shalt call his name "Fire-creature, Fire-seed, Fire-offspring, Fire-land," or any name wherein is the word Fire.'

53 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug! Who is the fourth of those males of thine?'

54 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! This one is my fourth male who, either man or woman, being more than fifteen years of age, walks without wearing the sacred girdle and the sacred shirt.'

55 'At the fourth step we Daēvas, at once, wither him even to the tongue and the marrow, and he goes thenceforth with power to destroy the world of the holy spirit, and he destroys it like the Yātus and the Zandas.'

56 The holy Sraosha asked the Drug, with his club uplifted against her: 'O thou wretched and wicked Drug, what is the thing that can counteract that?'

57 Then the Drug demon, the guileful one, answered: 'O holy, tall-formed Sraosha! There is no means of counteracting it;'

58 'When a man or a woman, being more than fifteen years of age, walks without wearing the sacred girdle or the sacred shirt.'

59 'At the fourth step we Daēvas, at once, wither him even to the tongue and the marrow, and he goes thenceforth with power to destroy the world of the holy spirit, and he destroys it like the Yātus and the Zandas.'

60 Demand of me, thou upright one! of me who am the Maker, the best of all beings, the most knowing, the most pleased in answering what is asked of me; demand of me that thou mayst be the better, that thou mayst be the happier.

61 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Who grieves thee with the sorest grief? Who pains thee with the sorest pain?'

62 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the Gahi, O Spitama Zarathustra! who goes a-whoring after the faithful and the unfaithful, after the worshippers of Mazda and the worshippers of the Daēvas, after the wicked and the righteous.'

63 'Her look dries up one third of the mighty floods that run from the mountains; her look withers one third of the beautiful, golden hued, growing plants;'

64 'Her look withers one third of the grass wherewith Spenta Armaiti is clad, and her touch withers in the faithful one third of his good thoughts, of his good words, of his good deeds, one third of his strength, of his fiend-killing power, and of his holiness.'

65 'Verily I say unto thee, O Spitama Zarathustra! such creatures ought to be killed even more than gliding snakes 4, than howling wolves, than the wild she-wolf that falls upon the fold, or than the she-frog that falls upon the waters with her thousandfold brood.'

66 Demand of me, thou upright one! of me who am the Maker, the best of all beings, the most knowing, the most pleased in answering what is asked of me; demand of me that thou mayst be the better, that thou mayst be the happier.

67-68 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'If a man shall come unto a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period, and he does so wittingly and knowingly, and she allows it wilfully, wittingly, and knowingly, what is the atonement for it, what is the penalty that he shall pay to atone for the deed they have done?'

69 Ahura Mazda answered: 'If a man shall come unto a woman who has an issue of blood, either out of the ordinary course or at the usual period, and he does so wittingly and knowingly, and she allows it wilfully, wittingly, and knowingly;'

70 'He shall slay a thousand head of small cattle; he shall godly and piously offer up to the fire the entrails thereof together with Zaotra-libations; he shall bring the shoulder bones to the good waters.'

71 'He shall godly and piously bring unto the fire a thousand loads of soft wood, of Urvāsna, Vohu-gaona, Vohu-kereti, Hadhā-naēpata, or of any sweet-scented plant.'

72 'He shall tie and consecrate a thousand bundles of baresma; he shall godly and piously offer up to the good waters a thousand Zaotra-libations, together with the Haoma and the meat, cleanly prepared and well strained by a pious man, together with the roots of the tree known as Hadhā-naēpata.'

73 'He shall kill a thousand snakes of those that go upon the belly, two thousand of the other kind: he shall kill a thousand land frogs and two thousand water frogs; he shall kill a thousand corn-carrying ants and two thousand of the other kind.'

74 'He shall throw thirty bridges over canals; he shall undergo a thousand stripes with the Aspahē-astara, a thousand stripes with the Sraoshō-karana.'

75 'This is the atonement, this is the penalty that he shall pay to atone for the deed that he has done.'

76 'If he shall pay it, he shall enter the world of the holy ones; if he shall not pay it, he shall fall down into the world of the wicked, into that dark world, made of darkness, the offspring of darkness.'

1. From the region of the north, from the regions of the north, forth rushed Angra Mainyu, the deadly, the Daēva of the Daēvas. And thus spake the guileful one, he the evil-doer Angra Mainyu, the deadly: 'Drug, rush down upon him! destroy the holy Zarathustra!' The Drug came rushing along, the demon Būiti 3, the unseen death, the hell-born.

2 Zarathustra chanted aloud the Ahuna-Vairyā: 'The will of the Lord is the law of holiness; the riches of Vohu-manō shall be given to him who works in this world for Mazda, and wields according to the will of Ahura the power he gave to him to relieve the poor.' (He added): 'Offer up prayers to the good waters of the good Dāitya! 'Profess the law of the worshippers of Mazda!' The Drug dismayed, rushed away, the demon Būiti, the unseen death, the hell-born.'

3 And the Drug, the guileful one, said unto Angra Mainyu: 'O baneful Angra Mainyu! I see no way to kill him, so great is the glory of the holy Zarathustra.' Zarathustra saw (all this) from within his soul: 'The evil-doing Daēvas and Drvants (thought he) take counsel together for my death.'

4 Up started Zarathustra, forward went Zarathustra, unshaken by the evil spirit, by the hardness of his malignant riddles, swinging stones in his hand, stones as big as a house, which he obtained from the Maker, Ahura Mazda, he the holy Zarathustra. 'At what on this wide, round earth, whose ends lie afar, at what dost thou swing (those stones), thou who standest by the river Darega, upon the mountains, in the mansion of Pourusaspa?'

5 Thus Zarathustra answered Angra Mainyu: 'O evil-doer, Angra Mainyu! I will smite the creation of the Daēva; I will smite the Nasu, a creature of the Daēva; I will smite the Pairika Knāthaiti, till the fiend-smiter Saoshyant come up to life out of the lake Kāsava, from the region of the dawn, from the regions of the dawn.'

6 Again to him said the guileful one, the Maker of the evil world, Angra Mainyu: 'Do not destroy my creatures, O holy Zarathustra! Thou art the son of Pourusaspa, just born of thy mother. Renounce the good law of the worshippers of Mazda, and thou shalt gain such a boon as the murderer gained, the ruler of the nations.'

7 Thus in answer to him said Spitama Zarathustra: 'No! never will I renounce the good law of the worshippers of Mazda, though my body, my life, my soul should burst!'

8 Again to him said the guileful one, the Maker of the evil world, Angra Mainyu: 'By whose Word wilt thou strike, by whose Word wilt thou repel, by whose weapon will the good creatures (strike and repel) my creation who am Angra Mainyu?'

9 Thus in answer to him said Spitama Zarathustra: 'The sacred mortar, the sacred cup, the Haoma, the Words taught by Mazda, these are my weapons, my best weapons! By this Word will I strike, by this Word will I repel, by this weapon the good creatures (will strike and repel thee), O evil-doer, Angra Mainyu! To me Spenta Mainyu gave it, he gave it to me in the boundless Time; to me the Amsha Spentas, the all-ruling, the all-beneficent, gave it.'

10 Zarathustra chanted aloud the Ahuna-Vairyā. The holy Zarathustra said aloud 'This I ask thee: teach me the truth, O Lord! . . .'

11 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! [he was sitting by the Darega, on the mountain, praying to Ahura Mazda, to the good Vohu-manō, to Asha Vahista, Khshathra Vairyā, and Spenta Armaiti;]

12 'How shall I make the world free from that Drug, from the evil-doer Angra Mainyu? How shall I drive away direct defilement? How indirect defilement? How shall I drive the Nasu from the house of the worshippers of Mazda? How shall I cleanse the faithful man? How shall I cleanse the faithful woman?'

13 Ahura Mazda answered. 'Invoke, O Zarathustra! the good law of Mazda. Invoke, O Zarathustra! the Amsha Spentas who rule over the seven Karshvares of the earth. Invoke, O Zarathustra! the sovereign Heaven, the boundless Time, and Vayu, whose action is most high. Invoke, O Zarathustra! the powerful Wind, made by Mazda, and Spenta Armaiti, the fair daughter of Ahura Mazda.'

14 'Invoke, O Zarathustra! my Fravashi, who am Ahura Mazda, the greatest, the best, the fairest of all beings, the most solid 3, the most intelligent, the best shapen, the highest in holiness, and whose soul is the holy Word! Invoke, O Zarathustra! this creation of mine, who am Ahura Mazda.'

15 Zarathustra took those words from me, (and said): 'I invoke the holy creation of Ahura Mazda. I invoke Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, a god armed with beautiful weapons, with the most glorious of all weapons, with the most fiend-smiting of all weapons. I invoke the holy, tall-formed Sraosha, who wields a club in his hand, to bear upon the heads of the fiends.'

16 'I invoke the most glorious holy Word. I invoke the sovereign Heaven, the boundless Time, and Vayu, whose action is most high. I invoke the mighty Wind, made by Mazda, and Spenta (Armaiti), the fair daughter of Ahura Mazda. I invoke the good law of Mazda, the fiend-destroying law of Zarathustra.'

17 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Maker of the good world, Ahura Mazda! With what manner of sacrifice shall I worship, with what manner of sacrifice shall I worship and forward this creation of Ahura Mazda?'

18 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Go, O Spitama Zarathustra! towards that tree I that is beautiful, high-growing, and mighty amongst the high-growing trees, and say thou these words: "Hail to thee! O good, holy tree, made by Mazda! Ashem, vohu!"'

19 'Let the faithful man cut off a twig of baresma, long as a ploughshare, thick as a barley-corn. The faithful one, holding it in his left hand, shall not leave off keeping his eyes upon it, whilst he is offering up the sacrifice to Ahura Mazda and to the Amsha-Spentas, and to the high and beautiful golden Haomas, and to Vohu-manō and to the good Rāta, made by Mazda, holy and excellent.'

20 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O thou, all-knowing Ahura Mazda! thou art never asleep, never intoxicated, thou Ahura Mazda! Vohu-manō gets directly defiled: Vohu-manō gets indirectly defiled; the Daēvas defile him from the bodies smitten by the Daēvas 1: let Vohu-manō be made clean.'

21 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thou shalt take some gômēz from a bull ungelded and such as the law requires it; thou shalt take the man who is to be cleansed to the field made by Ahura, and the man that is to be cleansed him shall draw the furrows.'

22 'He shall recite a hundred Ashem vohu: "Holiness is the best of all good. Happy, happy the man who is holy with perfect holiness!" He shall chant two hundred Ahuna-Vairyā: "The will of the Lord is the law of holiness; the riches of Vohu-manō shall be given to him who works in this world for Mazda, and wields according to the will of Ahura the power he gave to him to relieve the poor." He shall wash Vohu-manō four times with the gômēz from the ox, and twice with the water made by Mazda 6.'

24 'When nine nights have passed away, thou shalt bring libations unto the fire, thou shalt bring hard wood unto the fire, thou shalt bring incense of Vohu-gaona unto the fire, and thou shalt perfume Vohu-manō therewith.'

25 'Thus shall Vohu-manō become clean, thus shall the man be clean: he shall take up Vohu-manō with the right arm and the left, with the left arm and the right, and Vohu-manō 4 shall say aloud: "Glory be to Ahura Mazda! Glory be to the Amsha-Spentas! Glory be to all the other holy beings."'

26 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O thou all-knowing Ahura Mazda: Should I urge upon the godly man, should I urge upon the godly woman, should I urge upon the wicked Daēva-worshipper who lives in sin, that they have once to leave behind them the earth made by Ahura, that they have to leave the water that runs, the corn that grows, and all the rest of their wealth?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'Thou shouldst, O holy Zarathustra.'

27 O Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! Where are the rewards given? Where does the rewarding take place? Where is the rewarding fulfilled? Whereto do men come to take the reward that, in their life in the material world, they have won for their souls?'

28 Ahura Mazda answered: 'When the man is dead, when his time is over, then the hellish, evil-doing Daēvas assail him; and when the third night is gone, when the dawn appears and brightens up, and makes Mithra, the god with beautiful weapons, reach the all-happy mountains, and the sun is rising:'

29 'Then the fiend, named Vizaresha, carries off in bonds the souls of the wicked Daēva-worshippers who live in sin. The soul enters the way made by Time, and open both to the wicked and to the righteous. At the head of the Kinvad bridge, the holy bridge made by Mazda, they ask for their spirits and souls the reward for the worldly goods which they gave away here below.'

30 'Then comes the well-shapen, strong and tall formed maid, with the dogs at her sides, one who can distinguish, who is graceful, who does what she wants, and is of high understanding. She makes the soul of the righteous one go up above the Hara-berezati; above the Kinvad bridge she places it in the presence of the heavenly gods themselves.'

31 'Up rises Vohu-manō from his golden seat: Vohu-manō exclaims: "How hast thou come to us, thou holy one, from that decaying world into this undecaying one?"'

32 'Gladly pass the souls of the righteous to the golden seat of Ahura Mazda, to the golden seat of the Amsha-Spentas, to the Garō-nmānem, the abode of Ahura Mazda, the abode of the Amsha-Spentas, the abode of all the other holy beings.'

10 'Unto thee will I give in return a thousand fleet, swift-running steeds; offer them up as a sacrifice unto the good Saoka, made by Mazda and holy. 'Unto thee will I give in return a thousand fleet, high-humped camels; offer them up as a sacrifice unto the good Saoka, made by Mazda and holy.

11 'Unto thee will I give in return a thousand brown oxen that do not push; offer them up as a sacrifice unto the good Saoka, made by Mazda and holy. 'Unto thee will I give in return a thousand young of all species of small cattle; offer them up as a sacrifice unto the good Saoka, made by Mazda and holy.

12 'And I will bless thee with the fair, holy blessing-spell, the friendly, holy blessing-spell, that makes the empty swell to fulness and the full to overflowing, that comes to help him who was sickening, and makes the sick man sound again.'

13 In obedience to Ahura's words he went, Nairyō-sangha, the herald; he drove towards the mansion of Airyaman, he spake unto Airyaman, saying:

14 Thus speaks Ahura Mazda, the Holy One, unto thee: 'I, Ahura Mazda, the Maker of all good things, when I made this mansion, the beautiful, the shining, seen afar (there may I go up, there may I pass!)

15 'Then the ruffian looked at me; the ruffian Angra Mainyu the deadly, wrought by his witchcraft nine diseases, and ninety, and nine hundred, and nine thousand, and nine times ten thousand diseases. So mayst thou heal me, O Airyaman, the much-desired!

16 'Unto thee will I give in return a thousand fleet, swift-running steeds; offer them up as a sacrifice unto the good Saoka, made by Mazda and holy. 'Unto thee will I give in return a thousand fleet, high-humped camels; offer them up as a sacrifice unto the good Saoka, made by Mazda and holy.

17 'Unto thee will I give in return a thousand brown oxen that do not push; offer them up as a sacrifice unto the good Saoka, made by Mazda and holy. 'Unto thee will I give in return a thousand young of all species of small cattle; offer them up as a sacrifice unto the good Saoka, made by Mazda and holy.

18 'And I will bless thee with the fair, holy blessing-spell, the friendly, holy blessing-spell, that makes the empty swell to fulness and the full to overflowing, that comes to help him who was sickening, and makes the sick man sound again.'

19 Quickly was it done, nor was it long, eagerly set off the much-desired Airyaman, towards the mountain of the holy questions, towards the forest of the holy questions.

20 Nine stallions brought he with him, the much-desired Airyaman. Nine camels brought he with him, the much desired Airyaman. Nine bulls brought he with him, the much desired Airyaman. Nine head of small cattle brought he with him, the much-desired Airyaman. He brought with him the nine twigs; he drew along nine furrows.

21 'I drive away Ishirē!. I drive away Aghūirē, I drive away Aghra, I drive away Ughra; I drive away sickness, I drive away death, I drive away pain and fever; I drive away Sārana, I drive away Sārstya, I drive away Azana, I drive away Azahva, I drive away Kurugha, I drive away Azivāka, I drive away Duruka, I drive away Astairya; I drive away the disease, rottenness, and infection which Angra Mainyu has created by his witchcraft against the bodies of mortals.

22 'I drive away all manner of diseases and deaths, all the Yātus and Pairikas, and all the wicked Gainis.

23 'May the much-desired Airyaman come here for the men and women of Zarathustra to rejoice, for the faithful to rejoice; with the desirable reward that is won by means of the law, and with that boon for holiness that is vouchsafed by Ahura.

24 'May the much-desired Airyaman smite all manner of diseases and deaths, all the Yātus and Pairikas, and all the wicked Gainis.

25 'Yathā ahū vairyo--the will of the Lord is the law of holiness; the riches of Vohu-manō shall be given to him who works in this world for Mazda, and wields according to the will of Ahura the power he gave him to relieve the poor. 'Kem nā mazda--whom hast thou placed to protect me, O Mazda! while the hate of the fiend is grasping me? Whom but thy Atar and Vohu-manō, by whose work the holy world goes on? Reveal to me the rules of thy law! 'Ke verethrem gā--who is he who will smite the fiend in order to maintain thy ordinances? Teach me clearly thy rules for this world and for the next, that Sraosha may come with Vohu-manō and help whomsoever thou pleasest. 'Keep us from our hater, O Mazda and Armaid Spenta! Perish, O fiendish Drug! Perish, O brood of the fiend! Perish, O world of the fiend! Perish away, O Drug! Perish away to the regions of the north, never more to give unto death the living world of the holy spirit!']

THE ZEND AVESTA, PART 2

Sacred Books of the East, Vol. 23

Translation: James Darmesteter, 1882

INTRODUCTION.

(This is part 2 of the Sacred Books of the East Zend Avesta translation. This portion of the Avesta is of great interest to the study of comparative mythology. Many of these are of also of outstanding literary value. Many of the texts in this part were originally hymns to very ancient gods and goddesses, such as Mithra, Anahita, as well as celestial bodies such as the sun, moon and the star Sirius, Tishtrya. These deities were retained in Zoroastrian mythology as demigods, somewhat like the Aeons of the Gnostics. There are also a number of texts which enumerate a huge body of legendary personages, some of whom also appear in the Shah Nama, the Persian national epic. Yast XII is a moving poetic description of the Zoroastrian after-death experience.

The present volume contains a translation of the Sīrōzāhs (common prayers), Yasts (on worship), and the Nyāyis (prayers of praise). This part of the Avesta treats chiefly of the mythical and legendary lore of Zoroastrianism. Of the remaining Yasts, which are mostly of an epic character, there is no direct translation available; but a close comparison of the legends in Firdausi's Shah Nāmāh seems to throw some light, even as regards philological points, on not a few obscure and important passages. This has enabled me, I believe, to restore a few myths to their original form, and to frame a more correct idea of others.

YASTS AND SIROZAHs.

(About the Sirozāhs: The Sirozāhs are a set of common prayers. Sirozāh means 'thirty days': it is the name of a prayer composed of thirty invocations addressed to the several Izeds who preside over the thirty days of the month. There are two Sirozāhs, but the only difference between them is that the formulas in the former are shorter, and there is also, occasionally, some difference in the epithets, which are fuller in the latter. In India the Sirozāh is recited in honour of the dead, on the thirtieth day after the death, on the thirtieth day of the sixth month, on the thirtieth day of the twelfth month, and then every year on the thirtieth day from the anniversary day (Anquetil, Zend-Avesta, 2, 315).

About the Yasts: The word yast, in Zend yēsti, means properly 'the act of worshipping,' the performance of the yasna; and it is often used in Parsi tradition as synonymous with yasna. But it has also been particularly applied to a certain number of writings in which the several Izeds are praised and magnified. These writings are generally of a higher poetical and epic character than the rest of the Avesta, and are most valuable records of the old mythology and historical legends of Iran. The Parsis believe that formerly every Amshaspañd and every Ized had his particular Yast, but we now possess only twenty Yasts and fragments of another. The writings known as Yast fragments, the Āfrīn Zartust, and Vīstāp Yast, are not proper Yasts, and have no liturgical character; they are not devoted to the praise of any Ized. The order in which the Yasts have been arranged by the Parsis follows exactly the order of the Sirozāh, which is the proper introduction to the Yasts.)

5 Sapendārmad. To the good Spenta-Ārmaid, and to the good Rāta, with eyes of love, made by Mazda and holy. To Haurvatāt, the master; to the prosperity of the seasons and to the years, the masters of holiness.

6 Murdād. To Ameretāt, the master; to fatness and flocks; to the plenty of corn; and to the powerful Gaokerena, made by Mazda. (At the gāh Hāvan): to Mithra, the lord of wide pastures and to Rāma Hvāstra. (At the gāh Rapithwin): to Asha-Vahista and to Atar, the son of Ahura Mazda. (At the gāh Uzireñ): to Apām Napāt, the tall lord, and to the water made by Mazda. (At the gāh Aiwisrūthrem): to the Fravashis of the faithful, and to the females that bring forth flocks of males; to the prosperity of the seasons; to the well-shaped and tall-formed Strength, to Verethraghna, made by Ahura, and to the crushing Ascendant. (At the gāh Ushahin): to the holy, devout, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world grow; to Rashnu Razista, and to Arstāt, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase.

7 Dai pa Ādar. To the Maker Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious, and to the Amesha-Speñtas.

8 Ādar. To Atar, the son of Ahura Mazda; to the Glory and to the Weal, made by Mazda; to the Glory of the Aryas, made by Mazda; to the awful Glory of the Kavis, made by Mazda. To Atar, the son of Ahura Mazda; to king Husravah; to the lake of Husravah; to Mount Ānavant, made by Mazda; to Lake Kaēkasta, made by Mazda; to the Glory of the Kavis, made by Mazda. To Atar, the son of Ahura Mazda; to Mount Raēvant, made by Mazda; to the Glory of the Kavis, made by Mazda. To Atar, the beneficent, the warrior; the God who is a full source of Glory, the God who is a full source of healing. To Atar, the son of Ahura Mazda, with all Ātars; to the God Nairyō-Sangha, who dwells in the navel of kings.

9 Ābān. To the good Waters, made by Mazda; to the holy water-spring Ardvi Anāhita; to all waters made by Mazda; to all plants made by Mazda.

10 Khōrshēd. To the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun.

11 Māh. To the Moon that keeps in it the seed of the Bull; to the only-created Bull; to the Bull of many species.

12 Tīr. To Tistrya, the bright and glorious star; to the powerful Satavaēsa, made by Mazda, who pushes waters forward; to the stars, made by Mazda, that have in them the seed of the waters, the seed of the earth, the seed of the plants; to the star Vanant 4, made by Mazda; to those stars that are seven in number, the Haptōiringas, made by Mazda, glorious and healing.

13 Gōs. To the body of the Cow, to the soul of the Cow, to the powerful Drvāspa, made by Mazda and holy.

15 Dai pa Mihir. To the Maker Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious, and to the Amsha-Spentas.

16 Mihir. To Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who has a thousand ears and ten thousand eyes, a God invoked by his own name; to Rāma Hvāstra.

17 Srōsh. To the holy, strong Sraosha, who is the incarnate Word, a mighty-speared and lordly God.

18 Rashn. To Rashnu Razista; to Arstāt, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase; to the true-spoken speech, that makes the world grow.

19 Farvardin. To the awful, overpowering Fravashis of the holy ones.

20 Bahrām. To the well-shapen, tall-formed Strength; to Verethraghna, made by Ahura; to the crushing Ascendant.

21 Rām. To Rāma Hvāstra; to Vayu, who works highly and is more powerful to destroy than all other creatures: to that part of thee, O Vayu, that belongs to Spenta-Mainyu; to the sovereign Sky, to the Boundless Time, to the sovereign Time of the long Period.

22 Bād. To the bounteous Wind, that blows below, above, before, and behind; to the manly Courage.

23 Dai pa Dīn. To the Maker, Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious; to the Amsha-Spentas.

24 Dīn. To the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy; to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda.

25 Ard. 29 Mahraspand. We sacrifice unto the Māthra Spenta, of high glory; we sacrifice unto the Law opposed to the Daēvas; we sacrifice unto the Law of Zarathustra; we sacrifice unto the long-traditional teaching; we sacrifice unto the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda; we sacrifice unto the Devotion to the Māthra Spenta; we sacrifice unto the understanding that keeps the Law of the worshippers of Mazda; we sacrifice unto the knowledge of the Māthra Spenta; we sacrifice unto the heavenly Wisdom, made by Mazda; we sacrifice unto the Wisdom acquired through the ear and made by Mazda.

30 Anērān. We sacrifice unto the eternal and sovereign luminous space; we sacrifice unto the bright Garō-mnāna; we sacrifice unto the sovereign place of eternal Weal; we sacrifice unto the Kinvat-bridge, made by Mazda; we sacrifice unto Apām Napāt, the swift-horsed, the high and shining lord, who has many wives; and we sacrifice unto the water, made by Mazda and holy; we sacrifice unto the golden and tall Haoma; we sacrifice unto the enlivening Haoma, who makes the world grow; we sacrifice unto Haoma, who keeps death far away; we sacrifice unto the pious and good Blessing; we sacrifice unto the awful, powerful, cursing thought of the wise, a God; we sacrifice unto all the holy Gods of the heavenly world; we sacrifice unto all the holy Gods of the material world. I praise, I invoke, I meditate upon, and we sacrifice unto the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the holy ones.

1. ORMAZD YAST.

(The Ormazd Yast, properly so called, ends with Ormazd Yast 23. The rest of the Yast, from § 24 to the end, is wanting in several manuscripts, and is supposed by the Parsis to be a fragment of the Bahman Yast.)

Ormazd Yast 1-6. The names of Ahura Mazda are the most powerful part of the Holy Word.

Ormazd Yast 7-8. The twenty names of Ahura Mazda are enumerated.

Ormazd Yast 9-11. Efficacy of these names.

Ormazd Yast 12-15. Another list of names.

Ormazd Yast 16-19. Efficacy of Ahura's names.

Ormazd Yast 20-23. Sundry formulas of invocation.

As may be seen from this summary, the subject has been treated twice over, first in §§ 1-11, and then in §§ 12-19; yet it does not appear that this Yast was formed out of two independent treatises, and it is more likely that the vague and indefinite enumeration in §§ 12-15, which interrupts so clumsily the train of ideas, is due either to an interpolation or simply to the literary deficiency of the writer himself.

The Ormazd Yast is recited every day at the Hāvan Gāh, after the morning prayer (Anquetil, Zend-Avesta, II, 143); it is well also to recite it when going to sleep and when changing one's residence (§ 17).

Speculations on the mystical powers of God's names have always been common among Orientals. The number of these names went on increasing: Dastūr Nōshīrvān wrote on the roc names of God; Dastūr Marzbān on his 125 names. With the Muslims, Allah had 1001 names. On the names of God among the Jews, see Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft, 35, pp. 162, 532.

We have three native translations of this Yast; one in Pahlavi (East India Office, 12, 39, and St. Petersburg, 99, 39; edited by Carl Salemann), one in Persian (East India Office, 22, 43), and one in Sanskrit (Paris, fonds Burnouf, V, 66); the last two edited in our Études Iraniennes, 2, 255).

The second part of the Yast, the so-called Bahman Yast fragment, is in a state of the utmost corruption. It is difficult to trace any connection in the ideas, yet §§ 28, 29, 30 seem to point rather clearly to the final struggle between Ormazd and Ahriman and to the annihilation of the Daēvas, and, thereby, some connection is established between this fragment and the Pahlavi Bahman Yast 1, which deals with the same subject. If that correspondence be real, § 26 might refer to the beginning of the Pahlavi Bahman Yast, in which Zarathustra is shown by Ahura the times to come and the end of the world. Of this fragment we have only a bad Pahlavi translation in the St. Petersburg manuscript mentioned above.)

May Ahura Mazda be rejoiced! May Angra Mainyu be destroyed! by those who do truly what is the foremost wish (of God).

I praise well-thought, well-spoken, and well-done thoughts, words, and deeds. I embrace all good thoughts, good words, and good deeds; I reject all evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds.

I give sacrifice and prayer unto you, O Amesha-Spentas! even with the fulness of my thoughts, of my words, of my deeds, and of my heart: I give unto you even my own life.

I recite the 'Praise of Holiness: 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good. Well is it for it, well is it for that holiness which is perfection of holiness!'

I confess myself a worshipper of Mazda, a follower of Zarathustra, one who hates the Daévas and obeys the laws of Ahura;

For sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification unto [Hávan], the holy and master of holiness;

For sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification unto [Sávanghi and Visya], the holy and masters of holiness;

For sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification unto the Masters of the days, of the periods of the day, of the months, of the seasons, and of the years;

Unto AHURA MAZDA, bright and glorious, be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification.

Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness: the riches of Vohû-Manô shall be given to him who works in this world for Mazda, and yields according to the will of Ahura the power he gave him to relieve the poor.

1 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'What of the Holy Word is the strongest? What is the most victorious? What is the most glorious? What is the most effective?'

2 'What is the most fiend-smiting? What is the best-healing? What destroyeth best the malice of Daévas and Men? What maketh the material world best come to the fulfillment of its wishes? What freeth the material world best from the anxieties of the heart?'

3 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Our Name, O Spitama Zarathustra! who are the Amesha-Spentas, that is the strongest part of the Holy Word; that is the most victorious; that is the most glorious; that is the most effective;'

4 'That is the most fiend-smiting; that is the best-healing; that destroyeth best the malice of Daévas and Men; that maketh the material world best come to the fulfillment of its wishes; that freeth the material world best from the anxieties of the heart.'

5 Then Zarathustra said: 'Reveal unto me that name of thine, O Ahura Mazda! that is the greatest, the best, the fairest, the most effective, the most fiend-smiting, the best-healing, that destroyeth best the malice of Daévas and Men;'

6 'That I may afflict all Daévas and Men; that I may afflict all Yátus and Pairikas; that neither Daévas nor Men may be able to afflict me; neither Yátus nor Pairikas.'

7 Ahura Mazda replied unto him: 'My name is the One of whom questions are asked, O holy Zarathustra! 'My second name is the Herd-giver. 'My third name is the Strong One. 'My fourth name is Perfect Holiness. 'My fifth name is All good things created by Mazda, the offspring of the holy principle. 'My sixth name is Understanding; 'My seventh name is the One with understanding. 'My eighth name is Knowledge; 'My ninth name is the One with Knowledge.'

8 'My tenth name is Weal; 'My eleventh name is He who produces weal. 'My twelfth name is AHURA (the Lord). 'My thirteenth name is the most Beneficent. 'My fourteenth name is He in whom there is no harm. 'My fifteenth name is the unconquerable One. 'My sixteenth name is He who makes the true account. 'My seventeenth name is the All-seeing One. 'My eighteenth name is the healing One. 'My nineteenth name is the Creator. 'My twentieth name is MAZDA (the All-knowing One).

9 'Worship me, O Zarathustra, by day and by night, with offerings of libations well accepted. I will come unto thee for help and joy, I, Ahura Mazda; the good, holy Sraosha will come unto thee for help and joy; the waters, the plants, and the Fravashis of the holy ones will come unto thee for help and joy.

10 'If thou wantest, O Zarathustra, to destroy the malice of Daévas and Men, of the Yátus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, of the blind and of the deaf, of the two-legged ruffians, of the two-legged Ashemaoghas, of the four-legged wolves; And of the hordes with the wide front, with the many spears, with the straight spears, with the spears uplifted, bearing the spear of havock; then, recite thou these my names every day and every night.

12 'I am the Keeper. I am the Creator and the Maintainer; I am the Discerner; I am the most beneficent Spirit. 'My name is the bestower of health; my name is the best bestower of health. 'My name is the Áthraivan; my name is the most Áthraivan-like of all Áthravans. 'My name is Ahura (the Lord). 'My name is Mazda (the all-knowing). 'My name is the Holy; my name is the most Holy. 'My name is the Glorious; my name is the most Glorious. 'My name is the Full-seeing; my name is the Fullest-seeing. 'My name is the Far-seeing; my name is the Farthest-seeing.

13 'My name is the Protector; my name is the Well-wisher; my name is the Creator; my name is the Keeper; my name is the Maintainer. 'My name is the Discerner; my name is the Best Discerner. 'My name is the Prosperity-producer; my name is the Word of Prosperity. 'My name is the King who rules at his will; my name is the King who rules most at his will. 'My name is the liberal King; my name is the most liberal King.

14 'My name is He who does not deceive; my name is He who is not deceived. 'My name is the good Keeper; my name is He who destroys malice; my name is He who conquers at once; my name is He who conquers everything; my name is He who has shaped everything. 'My name is All weal; my name is Full weal; my name is the Master of weal.

15 'My name is He who can benefit at his wish; my name is He who can best benefit at his wish. 'My name is the Beneficent One; my name is the Energetic One; my name is the most Beneficent. 'My name is Holiness; my name is the Great One; my name is the good Sovereign; my name is the Best of Sovereigns. 'My name is the Wise One; my name is the Wisest of the Wise; my name is He who does good for a long time.

16 'These are my names. 'And he who in this material world, O Spitama Zarathustra! shall recite and pronounce those names of mine either by day or by night;

17 'He who shall pronounce them, when he rises up or when he lays him down; when he lays him down or when he rises up; when he binds on the sacred girdle or when he unbinds the sacred girdle; when he goes out of his dwelling-place, or when he goes out of his town, or when he goes out of his country and comes into another country;

18 'That man, neither in that day nor in that night, shall be wounded by the weapons of the foe who rushes Áeshma-like and is Drug-minded; not the knife, not the cross-bow, not the arrow, not the sword, not the club, not the sling-stone shall reach and wound him.

19 'But those names shall come in to keep him from behind and to keep him in front, from the Drug unseen, from the female Varena fiend, from the evil-doer bent on mischief, and from that fiend who is all death, Angra Mainyu. It will be as if there were a thousand men watching over one man.

20 ' "Who is he who will smite the fiend in order to maintain thy ordinances? Teach me clearly thy rules for this world and for the next, that Sraosha may come with Vohu-Manô and help whomsoever thou pleasest."

21 'Hail to the Glory of the Kavis! Hail to the Airyanem Vaégha! Hail to the Saoka, made by Mazda! Hail to the waters of the Dáitya! Hail to Ardvi, the undefiled well! Hail to the whole world of the holy Spirit! 'Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord . . . 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good. . . .

22 'We worship the Ahuna Vairya. We worship Asha-Vahista, most fair, undying, and beneficent. We worship Strength and Prosperity and Might and Victory and Glory and Vigour. We worship Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious. 'Yénghe hátám: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda knows the goodness for a sacrifice [performed] in holiness, all those beings, males and females, do we worship.

23 'Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness . . . 'I bless the sacrifice and the prayer unto Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious, and his strength and vigour. (Bahman Yast.)

24 'O Zarathustra! keep thou for ever that man who is friendly [to me] from the foe unfriendly [to me]! Do not give up that friend unto the stroke (of the foe), unto vexations to be borne; wish no harm unto that man who would offer me a sacrifice, be it ever so great or ever so small, if it has reached unto us, the Amesha-Spentas.

25 'Here is Vohu-Manô, my creature, O Zarathustra! here is Asha-Vahista, my creature, O Zarathustra! here is Khsathra-Vairya, my creature, O Zarathustra! here is Spenta-Ármaiti, my creature, O Zarathustra! here is Haurvatât and Ameretât, who are the reward of the holy ones, when freed from their bodies, my creatures, O Zarathustra!

26 'Thou knowest this, and how it is, O holy Zarathustra! from my understanding and from my knowledge; namely, how the world first began, and how it will end. 'A thousand remedies, ten thousand remedies! 'A thousand remedies, ten thousand remedies! 'A thousand remedies, ten thousand remedies!

27 '[We worship] the well-shapen, tall-formed Strength; Verethraghna, made by Ahura; the crushing Ascendant, and Spenta-Ármaiti.

28 'And with the help of Spenta-Ármaiti, break ye asunder their 4 malice, turn their minds astray, bind their hands, make their knees quake against one another, bind their tongues. 'When, O Mazda! shall the faithful smite the wicked? When shall the faithful smite the Drug? When shall the faithful smite the wicked?'

29 Then Zarathustra said: 'I threw you back into the earth, and by the eyes of Spenta-Ármaiti the ruffian was made powerless.

30 'We worship the powerful Gaokerena, made by Mazda; the powerful Gaokerena, made by Mazda.

31 'We worship the memory of Ahura Mazda, to keep the Holy Word. 'We worship the understanding of Ahura Mazda, to study the Holy Word. 'We worship the tongue of Ahura Mazda, to speak forth the Holy Word. 'We worship the mountain that gives understanding, that preserves understanding 1; [we worship it] by day and by night, with offerings of libations well-accepted.

32 'We worship that creation [of Ahura's], Spenta-Ármaiti; and the holy creations of that creature and of Asha [Vahista], that are foremost in holiness. Here I take as lord and master the greatest of all, Ahura Mazda; to smite the fiend Angra Mainyu to smite Aésma of the wounding spear; to smite the Mázainya fiends; to smite all the Daévas and the Varena fiends; to increase Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious; to increase the Amesha-Spentas; to increase the star Tistrya, the bright and glorious; to increase the faithful men; to increase all the holy creatures of the Beneficent Spirit. 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good. . . .

33 '[Give] unto that man brightness and glory, give him health of body, give him sturdiness of body, give him victorious strength of body, give him full welfare of wealth, give him a virtuous offspring, give him long, long life, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones. 'May it come according to my blessing! 'A thousand remedies, ten thousand remedies! (three times.) 'Come to me for help, O Mazda! 'We worship the well-shapen, tall-formed Strength, and Verethraghna, made by Mazda, and the crushing Ascendant. 'We worship Râma Hvâstra, and Vayu who works highly and is more powerful to destroy than all other creatures. That part of thee do we worship, O Vayu, that belongs to Spenta Mainyu. We worship the sovereign Sky, the boundless Time, and the sovereign Time of the long Period. 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good. . . .

2. HAPTÂN YAST.

1 To Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious, and to the Amesha-Spentas; To Vohu-Manô; to Peace, whose breath is friendly, and who is more powerful to destroy than all other creatures; to the heavenly Wisdom, made by Mazda, and to the Wisdom acquired through the ear, made by Mazda;

2 To Asha-Vahista, the fairest; to the much-desired Airyaman; to the instrument made by Mazda; and to the good Saoka, with eyes of love, made by Mazda and holy; To Khsathra-Vairya; to the metals; to Mercy and Charity.

3 To the good Spenta-Ármaiti, and to the good Râta, with eyes of love, made by Mazda and holy; To Haurvatât, the master; to the prosperity of the seasons and to the years, the masters of holiness; And to Ameretât, the master; to fatness and flocks; to the plenty of corn; and to the powerful Gaokerena, made by Mazda.

4 (At the Gâh Hávan): To Mithra, the lord of wide pastures and to Râma Hvâstra. (At the Gâh Rapihwin): To Asha-Vahista and to Átar, the son of Ahura Mazda. (At the Gâh Uzîren): To Apâm Napât, the tall lord, and to water, made by Mazda.

5 (At the Gâh Aiwisrûthrem): To the Fravashis of the faithful and to the females that bring forth flocks of males; to the prosperity of the seasons; to the well-shapen and tall-formed Strength; to Verethraghna, made by Ahura, and to the crushing Ascendant. (At the Gâh Usahin): To the holy, devout, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world grow; to Rashnu-Razista and to Arstât, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase; Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification! Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

6 We sacrifice unto Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious; we sacrifice unto the Amesha-Spentas, the all-ruling, the all-beneficent. We sacrifice unto Vohu-Manô, the Amesha-Spenta; we sacrifice unto Peace, whose breath is friendly, and who is more powerful to destroy than all other creatures; we sacrifice unto the heavenly Wisdom, made by Mazda; we sacrifice unto the wisdom acquired through the ear, made by Mazda.

7 We sacrifice unto Asha-Vahista, the fairest, the Amesha-Spenta; we sacrifice unto the much-desired Airyaman; we sacrifice unto the instrument made by Mazda; we sacrifice unto the good Saoka, with eyes of love, made by Mazda and holy. We sacrifice unto Khsathra-Vairya; we sacrifice unto the metals; we sacrifice unto Mercy and Charity.

8 We sacrifice unto the good Spenta-Ármaiti; we sacrifice unto the good Râta, with eyes of love, made by Mazda and holy. We sacrifice unto Haurvatât, the Amesha-Spenta; we sacrifice unto the prosperity of the seasons; we sacrifice unto the years, the holy and masters of holiness. We sacrifice unto Ameretât, the Amesha-Spenta; we sacrifice unto fatness and flocks; we sacrifice unto the plenty of corn; we sacrifice unto the powerful Gaokerena, made by Mazda.

9 (At the Gâh Hávan): We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures; we sacrifice unto Râma Hvâstra. (At the Gâh Rapihwin): We sacrifice unto Asha-Vahista and Átar, the son of Ahura Mazda. (At the Gâh Uzîren): We sacrifice unto Apâm Napât, the swift-horsed, the tall and shining lord, the lord of the females; we sacrifice unto the holy waters, made by Mazda.

10 (At the Gâh Aiwirûthrem): We sacrifice unto the good, powerful, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful; we sacrifice unto the females who bring forth flocks of males; we sacrifice unto the prosperity of the seasons; we sacrifice unto the well-shapen, tall-formed Strength; we sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Mazda; we sacrifice unto the crushing Ascendant. (At the Gâh Usahin): We sacrifice unto the holy, tall-formed, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world grow, the holy and master of holiness; we sacrifice unto Rashnu-Razista, we sacrifice unto Arstât, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase.

11 Let the Yâtus be crushed, O Zarathustra! both Daêvas and men. Who is he in whose house, O Spitama Zarathustra! every Drug is destroyed, every Drug perishes, when he pronounces these words:

13 It is he who takes the seven Amesha-Spentas, the all-ruling, the all-beneficent, as a shield against his enemies. We worship the Law of the worshippers of Mazda; we worship the waters coming in the shape of a horse, made by Mazda.

14-15 He has renounced trespasses and faults, O Zarathustra! he has renounced all trespasses and faults, O Zarathustra! when he throws down the destroyer of Vohu-Manô and his words, with a hundred times hundredfold, with a many times manifold preaching and smiting, and he takes away the Law of Mazda, that was carried away as a prisoner, from the hands of the [ungodly], who are destroyed by his strength. Ashem Vohî: Holiness is the best of all good. . . .

16 Yathâ ahû vairîyô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness. . . . I bless the sacrifice and the prayer, the strength and vigour of Ahura Mazda, bright and glorious, and of the Amesha-Spentas; Of Vohu-Manô; of Peace, whose breath is friendly. . . . Of Asha-Vahista, the fairest; of the much-desired Airyaman. . . . Of Khshathra-Vairya, of the metals. . . . Of the good Spenta-Armaiti and of the good Râta. . . . Of Haurvatât, the master. . . . Of Ameretât, the master. . . . (At the Gâh Hâvan): Of Mithra. . . . (At the Gâh Rapithwin): Of Asha-Vahista. . . . (At the Gâh Uzîren): Of the high lord Apâm Napât. . . . (At the Gâh Aiwirûthrem): Of the Fravashis of the faithful. . . . (At the Gâh Usahin): Of the holy, devout, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world grow; of Rashnu-Razista and of Arstât, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase. Ashem Vohî: Holiness is the best of all good. . . . Give unto that man brightness and glory, give him health of body, give him sturdiness of body, give him victorious strength of body, give him full welfare of wealth, give him a virtuous offspring, give him long, long life, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones.

3. ARDIBEHIST YAST.

Unto Asha-Vahista, the fairest; unto the much-desired Airyaman, made by Mazda, and unto the good Saoka, with eyes of love, made by Mazda and holy; Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathâ ahû vairîyô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness. . . .

1 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'That thou mayest increase Asha-Vahista, O Spitama Zarathustra! with hymns of praise, with performance of the office, with invocations, holy words, sacrifice, blessings, and adoration—once to abide in the shining luminous space, in the beautiful abodes—for the sacrifice and invocation of us, the Amesha-Spentas'. . . .

2 Zarathustra said: 'Say unto me the right words, such as they are, O Ahura Mazda! that I may increase Asha-Vahista, with hymns of praise, with performance of the office, with invocations, holy words, sacrifice, blessings, and adoration,—once to abide in the shining luminous space, in the beautiful abodes,—for the sacrifice and invocation of you, the Amesha-Spentas.

3'. . . . I proclaim Asha-Vahista: if I proclaim Asha-Vahista, then easy is the way to the abode of the other Amesha-Spentas, which Ahura Mazda keeps with Good Thoughts, which Ahura Mazda keeps with Good Words, which Ahura Mazda keeps with Good Deeds;

4 '(Easy is the way to the Garô-nmâna of Ahura Mazda): the Garô-nmâna is for the holy souls, and no one of the wicked can enter the Garô-nmâna and its bright, wide, holy ways; (no one of them can go) to Ahura Mazda.

5 'The Airyaman prayer smites down the strength of all the creatures of Angra Mainyu, of the Yâtus and Pairikas. It is the greatest of spells, the best of spells, the very best of all spells; the fairest of spells, the very fairest of all spells; the fearful one amongst spells, the most fearful of all spells; the firm one amongst spells, the firmest of all spells; the victorious one amongst spells, the most victorious of all spells; the healing one amongst spells, the best-healing of all spells.

6 'One may heal with Holiness, one may heal with the Law, one may heal with the knife, one may heal with herbs, one may heal with the Holy Word: amongst all remedies this one is the healing one that heals with the Holy Word; this one it is that will best drive away sickness from the body of the faithful: for this one is the best-healing of all remedies.

7 'Sickness fled away [before it], Death fled away; the Daêva fled away, the Daêva's counter-work fled away; the unholy Ashemaogha fled away, the oppressor of men fled away.

8 'The brood of the Snake fled away; the brood of the Wolf fled away; the brood of the Two-legged fled away. Pride fled away; Scorn fled away; Hot Fever fled away; Slander fled away; Discord fled away; the Evil Eye fled away.

9 'The most lying words of falsehood fled away; the Gahi, addicted to the Yâtu, fled away; the Gahi, who makes one pine, fled away; the wind that blows from the North fled away; the wind that blows from the North vanished away.

10 'He it is who smites me that brood of the Snake, and who might smite those Daêvas by thousands of thousands, by ten thousands of ten thousands; he smites sickness, he smites death, he smites the Daêvas, he smites the Daêva's counter-work, he smites the unholy Ashemaogha, he smites the oppressor of men.

11 'He smites the brood of the Snake; he smites the brood of the Wolf; he smites the brood of the Two-legged. He smites Pride; he smites Scorn; he smites Hot Fever; he smites Slander; he smites Discord; he smites the Evil Eye.

12 'He smites the most lying words of falsehood; he smites the Gahi, addicted to the Yâtu; he smites the Gahi, who makes one pine. He smites the wind that blows from the North; the wind that blows from the North vanished away.

13 'He it is who smites me that brood of the Two-legged, and who might smite those Daêvas, by thousands of thousands, by ten thousands of ten thousands. Angra Mainyu, who is all death, the worst-lying of all Daêvas, rushed from before him.

14 'He exclaimed, did Angra Mainyu: "Woe is me! Here is the god Asha-Vahista, who will smite the sickliest of all sicknesses, who will afflict the sickliest of all sicknesses; "He will smite the deadliest of all deaths, he will afflict the deadliest of all deaths; "He will smite the most fiendish of all fiends, he will afflict the most fiendish of all fiends; "He will smite the most counter-working of all counter-works, he will afflict the most counter-working of all counter-works; "He will smite the unholy Ashemaogha, he will afflict the unholy Ashemaogha; " He will smite the most oppressive of the oppressors of men, he will afflict the most oppressive of the oppressors of men.

15 "He will smite the snakiest of the Snake's brood, he will afflict the snakiest of the Snake's brood; "He will smite the most wolfish of the Wolf's brood, he will afflict the most wolfish of the Wolf's brood; "He will smite the worst of the two-legged brood, he will afflict the worst of the two-legged brood; "He will smite Pride, he will afflict Pride; " He will smite Scorn, he will afflict Scorn; " He will smite the hottest of hot fevers, he will afflict the hottest of hot fevers; " He will smite the most slanderous of slanders, he will afflict the most slanderous of slanders; " He will smite the most discordant of discords, he will afflict the most discordant of discords; " He will smite the worst of the Evil Eye, he will afflict the worst of the Evil Eye.

16 "He will smite the most lying words of falsehood, he will afflict the most lying words of falsehood; "He will smite the Gahi, addicted to the Yâtu, he will afflict the Gahi, addicted to the Yâtu; " He will smite the Gahi, who makes one pine, he will afflict the Gahi, who makes one pine; " He will smite the wind that blows from the North, he will afflict the wind that blows from the North."

17 'The Drug will perish away, the Drug will perish; the Drug will rush, the Drug will vanish. Thou perishest away to the regions of the North, never more to give unto death the living world of the holy spirit. 'I bless the sacrifice and prayer and the strength and vigour of Asha-Vahista, the fairest; of the much-desired Airyaman, made by Mazda; and of the good Saoka, with eyes of love, made by Mazda and holy.

. . . Unto Haurvatât, the master; unto the prosperity of the seasons and unto the years, the masters of holiness. . . . We sacrifice unto Haurvatât, the Amesha-Spenta; we sacrifice unto the prosperity of the seasons; we sacrifice unto the years, the holy and masters of holiness.

1 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'I created for the faithful the help, the enjoyments, the comforts, and the pleasures of Haurvatât. We unite them with him who would come up to thee as one of the Amesha-Spentas, as he would come to any of the Amesha-Spentas, Vohu-Manô, Asha-Vahista, Khshathra-Vairya, Spenta-Armaiti, Haurvatât, and Ameretât.

2 'He who against the thousands of thousands of those Daêvas, against their ten thousands of ten thousands, against their numberless myriads would invoke the name of Haurvatât, as one of the Amesha-Spentas, he would smite the Nasu, he would smite Hasi, he would smite Basi, he would smite Saëni, he would smite Bûgi.

3 'I proclaim the faithful man as the first [of men]; if I proclaim the faithful man as the first [of men], then Rashnu Razista, then every heavenly Yazata of male nature in company with the Amesha-Spentas will free the faithful man.

4 'From the Nasu, from Hasi, from Gasi, from Saëni, from Bûgi; from the hordes with the wide front, from the hordes with the many spears uplifted, from the evil man who oppresses, from the wilful sinner, from the oppressor of men, from the Yâtu, from the Pairika, from the straying way.

5 'How does the way of the faithful turn and part from the way of the wicked?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is when a man pronouncing my spell, either reading or reciting it by heart, draws the furrows and hides there himself, [saying]:

6 "I will smite thee, O Drug! whomsoever thou art, whomsoever thou art amongst the Druges that come in an open way, whomsoever thou art amongst the Druges that come by hidden ways, whomsoever thou art amongst the Druges that defile by contact; whatsoever Drug thou art, I smite thee away from the Aryan countries; whatsoever Drug thou art, I bind thee; I smite thee down, O Drug! I throw thee down below, O Drug!"

7 'He draws [then] three furrows: I proclaim him one of the faithful; he draws six furrows: I proclaim him one of the faithful; he draws nine furrows: I proclaim him one of the faithful.

8 'The names of those (Amesha-Spentas) smite the men turned to Nasus by the Druges; the seed and kin of the deaf are smitten, the scornful are dead, as the Zaoatar Zarathustra blows them away to woe, however fierce, at his will and wish, as many as he wishes.

9 'From the time when the sun is down he smites them with bruising blows; from the time when the sun is no longer up, he deals deadly blows on the Nasu with his club struck down, for the propitiation and glorification of the heavenly gods.

10 'O Zarathustra! let not that spell be shown to any one, except by the father to his son, or by the brother to his brother from the same womb, or by the Athravan to his pupil in black hair, devoted to the good law, who, devoted to the good law, holy and brave, stills all the Druges.

5. ÂBÂN YAST.

(Yast to the Waters)

. . . Unto the good Waters, made by Mazda; unto the holy water-spring ARDVI ANÂHITA; unto all waters, made by Mazda; unto all plants, made by Mazda, Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification.

1 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'Offer up a sacrifice, O Spitama Zarathustra! unto this spring of mine, Ardvî Sûra Anâhita, the wide-expanding and health-giving, who hates the Daêvas and obeys the laws of Ahura, who is worthy of sacrifice in the material world, worthy of prayer in the material world; the life-increasing and holy, the herd-increasing and holy, the fold-increasing and holy, the wealth-increasing and holy, the country-increasing and holy;

2 'Who makes the seed of all males pure, who makes the womb of all females pure for bringing forth, who makes all females bring forth in safety, who puts milk into the breasts of all females in the right measure and the right duality;

3 'The large river, known afar, that is as large as the whole of the waters that run along the earth; that runs powerfully from the height Hukairya down to the sea Vouru-Kasha.

4 'All the shores of the sea Vouru-Kasha are boiling over, all the middle of it is boiling over, when she runs down there, when she streams down there, she, Ardvî Sûra Anâhita, who has a thousand cells and a thousand channels: the extent of each of those cells, of each of those channels is as much as a man can ride in forty days, riding on a good horse.

5 'From this river of mine alone flow all the waters that spread all over the seven Karshvares; this river of mine alone goes on bringing waters, both in summer and in winter. This river of mine purifies the seed in males, the womb in females, the milk in females' breasts.

6 'I, Ahura Mazda, brought it down with mighty vigour, for the increase of the house, of the borough, of the town, of the country, to keep them, to maintain them, to look over them, to keep and maintain them close.

7 'Then Ardvî Sûra Anâhita, O Spitama Zarathustra! proceeded forth from the Maker Mazda. Beautiful were her white arms, thick as a horse's shoulder or still thicker; beautiful was her. . . . and thus came she, strong, with thick arms, thinking thus in her heart:

8 ' "Who will praise me? Who will offer me a sacrifice, with libations cleanly prepared and well-strained, together with the Haoma and meat? To whom shall I cleave, who cleaves unto me, and thinks with me, and bestows gifts upon me, and is of good will unto me?"

9 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard; I will offer up unto the holy Ardvî Sûra Anâhita a good sacrifice with an offering of libations;—thus mayest thou advise us when thou art appealed to! Mayest thou be most fully worshipped, O Ardvî Sûra Anâhita! with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the words, with the deeds, with the libations, and with the rightly-spoken words. 'Yênê hâtâm: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda. . . .

10 'Offer up a sacrifice, O Spitama Zarathustra! unto this spring of mine, Ardvi Sūra Anāhita, the wide-expanding and health-giving, who hates the Daēvas and obeys the laws of Ahura, who is worthy of sacrifice in the material world, worthy of prayer in the material world; the life-increasing and holy, the herd-increasing and holy, the fold-increasing and holy, the wealth-increasing and holy, the country-increasing and holy;

11 'Who drives forwards on her chariot, holding the reins of the chariot. She goes driving, on this chariot, longing for men and thinking thus in her heart: "Who will praise me? Who will offer me a sacrifice, with libations cleanly prepared and well-strained, together with the Haoma and meat? To whom shall I cleave, who cleaves unto me, and thinks with me, and bestows gifts upon me, and is of good will unto me?" 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice, worth being heard

13 'Whom four horses carry, all white, of one and the same colour, of the same blood, tall, crushing down the hates of all haters, of the Daēvas and men, of the Yātus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, of the blind and of the deaf. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

15 'Strong and bright, tall and beautiful of form, who sends down by day and by night a flow of motherly waters as large as the whole of the waters that run along the earth, and who runs powerfully. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

17 'To her did the Maker Ahura Mazda offer up a sacrifice in the Airyana Væghah, by the good river Dāitya; with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the words, with the deeds, with the libations, and with the rightly-spoken words.

18 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may bring the son of Pourushaspa, the holy Zarathustra, to think after my law, to speak after my law, to do after my law!"

19 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and begging that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

21 'To her did Haoshyangha, the Paradhāta, offer up a sacrifice on the enclosure of the Hara, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, and ten thousand lambs.

22 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may become the sovereign lord of all countries, of the Daēvas and men, of the Yātus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, the blind and the deaf; and that I may smite down two thirds of the Daēvas of Māzana and of the fiends of Varena."

23 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

25 'To her did Yima Khshaeta, the good shepherd, offer up a sacrifice from the height Hukairya, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

26 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may become the sovereign lord of all countries, of the Daēvas and men, of the Yātus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, the blind and the deaf; and that I may take from the Daēvas both riches and welfare, both fatness and flocks, both weal and Glory."

27 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

29 'To her did Azi Dahāka, the three-mouthed, offer up a sacrifice in the land of Bawri, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, and ten thousand lambs.

30 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this boon, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may make all the seven Karshvares of the earth empty of men."

31 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita did not grant him that boon, although he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating her that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

33 'To her did Thraetaona, the heir of the valiant Athwya clan, offer up a sacrifice in the four-cornered Varena, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

34 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may overcome Azi Dahāka, the three-mouthed, the three-headed, the six-eyed, who has a thousand senses, that most powerful, fiendish Drug, that demon, baleful to the world, the strongest Drug that Angra Mainyu created against the material world, to destroy the world of the good principle; and that I may deliver his two wives, Savanghavāk and Erenavāk, who are the fairest of body amongst women, and the most wonderful creatures in the world."

35 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

37 'To her did Keresāsipa, the manly-hearted, offer up a sacrifice behind the Vairi Pisanah, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

38 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may overcome the golden-heeled Gandarewa, though all the shores of the sea Vouru-Kasha are boiling over; and that I may run up to the stronghold of the fiend on the wide, round earth, whose ends lie afar."

39 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

41 'To her did the Turanian murderer, Frangrasyan, offer up a sacrifice in his cave under the earth, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

42 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may seize hold of that Glory, that is waving in the middle of the sea Vouru-Kasha and that belongs to the Aryan people, to those born and to those not yet born, and to the holy Zarathustra."

43 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita did not grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

45 'To her did the great, most wise Kavi Usa offer up a sacrifice from Mount Erezifa, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

46 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may become the sovereign lord of all countries, of the Daēvas and men, of the Yātus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, the blind and the deaf."

47 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

49 'To her did the gallant Husravah, he who united the Aryan nations into one kingdom, offer up a sacrifice behind the Kaēkasta lake, the deep lake, of salt waters, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

50 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may become the sovereign lord of all countries, of Daēvas and men, of the Yātus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, the blind and the deaf; and that I may have the lead in front of all the teams and that he may not pass through the forest, he, the murderer, who now is fiercely striving against me on horseback."

51 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

53 'To her did the valiant warrior Tusa offer worship on the back of his horse, begging swiftness for his teams, health for his own body, and that he might, watch with full success those who hated him, smite down his foes, and destroy at one stroke his adversaries, his enemies, and those who hated him.

54 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may overcome the gallant sons of Væsaka, by the castle Kshathrō-saoka, that stands high up on the lofty, holy Kangha; that I may smite of the Turanian people their fifties and their hundreds, their hundreds and their thousands, their thousands and their tens of thousands, their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads."

55 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

57 'To her did the gallant sons of Væsaka offer up a sacrifice in the castle Kshathrō-saoka, that stands high up on the lofty, holy Kangha, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

58 'They begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant us this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that we may overcome the valiant warrior Tusa, and that we may smite of the Aryan people their fifties and their hundreds, their hundreds and their thousands, their thousands and their tens of thousands, their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads."

59 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita did not grant them that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

61 'The old Vafra Navāza worshipped her, when the strong fiend-smiter, Thraetaona, flung him up in the air in the shape of a bird, of a vulture.

62 'He went on flying, for three days and three nights, towards his own house; but he could not, he could not turn down. At the end of the third night, when the beneficent dawn came dawning up, then he prayed unto Ardvi Sūra Anāhita, saying:

63 ' "Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! do thou quickly hasten helpfully and bring me assistance at once. I will offer thee a thousand libations, cleanly prepared and well strained, along with Haomas and meat, by the brink of the river Rangha, if I reach alive the earth made by Ahura and my own house."

64 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita hastened unto him in the shape of a maid, fair of body, most strong, tall-formed, high-girded, pure, nobly born of a glorious race, wearing shoes up to the ankle, wearing a golden, and radiant.

65 'She seized him by the arm: quickly was it done, nor was it long till, speeding, he arrived at the earth made by Mazda and at his own house, safe, unhurt, unwounded, just as he was before.

66 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

68 'To her did Gāmāsipa offer up a sacrifice, with a hundred horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs, when he saw the army of the wicked, of the worshippers of the Daēvas, coming from afar in battle array.

69 'He asked of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may be as constantly victorious as any one of all the Aryans."

70 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

72 'To her did Ashavazdah, the son of Pourudhakhsti, and Ashavazdah and Thrita, the sons of Sāyuzdri, offer up a sacrifice, with a hundred horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs, by Apām Napāt, the tall lord, the lord of the females, the bright and swift-horsed.

73 'They begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant us this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that we may overcome the assemblers of the Turanian Dānus, Kara Asabana, and Vara Asabana, and the most mighty Dūraēkaeta, in the battles of this world."

74 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted them that boon, as they were offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant them that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

76 'Vistauru, the son of Naotara, worshipped her by the brink of the river Vitanghuhaiti, with well-spoken words, speaking thus:

77 ' "This is true, this is truly spoken, that I have smitten as many of the worshippers of the Daēvas as the hairs I bear on my head. Do thou then, O Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! leave me a dry passage, to pass over the good Vitanghuhaiti."

78 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita hastened unto him in the shape of a maid, fair of body, most strong, tall-formed, high-girded, pure, nobly born of a glorious race, wearing shoes up to the ankle, with all sorts of ornaments and radiant. A part of the waters she made stand still, a part of the waters she made flow forward, and she left him a dry passage to pass over the good Vitanghuhaiti.

79 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

81 'To her did Yōista, one of the Fryanas, offer up a sacrifice with a hundred horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs on the Pedvāpa of the Rangha.

82 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may overcome the evil-doing Akhtya, the offspring of darkness, and that I may answer the ninety-nine hard riddles that he asks me maliciously, the evil-doing Akhtya, the offspring of darkness."

83 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

85 'Whom Ahura Mazda the merciful ordered thus, saying: "Come, O Ardvi Sūra Anāhita, come from those stars down to the earth made by Ahura, that the great lords may worship thee, the masters of the countries, and their sons.

86 ' "The men of strength will beg of thee swift horses and supremacy of Glory. "The Athravans who read and the pupils of the Athravans will beg of thee knowledge and prosperity, the Victory made by Ahura, and the crushing Ascendant.

87 ' "The maids of barren womb, longing for a lord, will beg of thee a strong husband; "Women, on the point of bringing forth, will beg of thee a good delivery. "All this will thou grant unto them, as it lies in thy power, O Ardvi Sūra Anāhita!"

88 'Then Ardvi Sūra Anāhita came forth, O Zarathustra! down from those stars to the earth made by Mazda; and Ardvi Sūra Anāhita spake thus:

89 ' "O pure, holy Zarathustra! Ahura Mazda has established thee as the master of the material world: Ahura Mazda has established me to keep the whole of the holy creation. "Through my brightness and glory flocks and herds and two-legged men go on, upon the earth: I, forsooth, keep all good things, made by Mazda, the offspring of the holy principle, just as a shepherd keeps his flock."

90 'Zarathustra asked Ardvi Sūra Anāhita: "O Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! With what manner of sacrifice shall I worship thee? With what manner of sacrifice shall I worship and forward thee? So that Mazda may make thee run down (to the earth), that he may not make thee run up into the heavens, above the sun; and that the Serpent 2 may not injure thee with , with , with 5, and poisons."

91 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita answered: "O pure, holy Spitama! this is the sacrifice wherewith thou shalt worship me, this is the sacrifice wherewith thou shalt worship and forward me, from the time when the sun is rising to the time when the sun is setting. "Of this libation of mine thou shalt drink, thou who art an Athravan, who hast asked and learnt the revealed law, who art wise, clever, and the Word incarnate.

92 ' "Of this libation of mine let no foe drink, no man fever-sick, no liar, no coward, no jealous one, no woman, no faithful one who does not sing the Gāthas, no leper to be confined.

93 ' "I do not accept those libations that are drunk in my honour by the blind, by the deaf, by the wicked, by the destroyers, by the niggards, by the , nor any of those stamped with those characters which have no strength for the holy Word. "Let no one drink of these my libations who is hump-backed or bulged forward; no fiend with decayed teeth."

94 'Then Zarathustra asked Ardvi Sūra Anāhita "O Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! What becomes of those libations which the wicked worshippers of the Daēvas bring unto thee after the sun has set?"

95 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita answered: "O pure, holy Spitama Zarathustra! howling, clapping, hopping, and shouting, six hundred and a thousand Daēvas, who ought not to receive that sacrifice, receive those libations that men bring unto me after [the sun has set]."

96 'I will worship the height Hukairya, of the deep precipices, made of gold, wherefrom this mine Ardvi Sūra Anāhita leaps, from a hundred times the height of a man, while she is possessed of as much Glory as the whole of the waters that run along the earth, and she runs powerfully. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

98 'Before whom the worshippers of Mazda stand with baresma in their hands: the Hvōvas did worship her, the Naotaras did worship her; the Hvōvas asked for riches, the Naotaras asked for swift horses. Quickly was Hvōva blessed with riches and full prosperity; quickly became Vistāspa, the Naotarie, the lord of the swiftest horses in these countries.

99 '[Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted them that boon, as they were offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant them that boon.] 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

101 'Who has a thousand cells and a thousand channels: the extent of each of those cells, of each of those channels, is as much as a man can ride in forty days, riding on a good horse. In each channel there stands a palace, well-founded, shining with a hundred windows, with a thousand columns, well-built, with ten thousand balconies, and mighty.

102 'In each of those palaces there lies a well-laid, well-scented bed, covered with pillows, and Ardvi Sūra Anāhita, O Zarathustra! runs down there from a thousand times the height of a man, and she is possessed of as much Glory as the whole of the waters that run along the earth, and she runs powerfully.

104 'Unto her did the holy Zarathustra offer up a sacrifice in the Airyana Vaēgah, by the good river Dāitya; with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the speech, with the deeds, with the libations, and with the rightly-spoken words.

105 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may bring the son of Aurvat-aspa, the valiant Kavi Vistāspa, to think according to the law, to speak according to the law, to do according to the law."

106 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

108 'Unto her did the tall Kavi Vistāspa offer up a sacrifice behind Lake Frāzdānava, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

109 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may overcome Tāthravant, of the bad law, and Peshana, the worshipper of the Daēvas, and the wicked Aregat-aspa, in the battles of this world!"

110 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

112 'Unto her did Zairi-vairi, who fought on horseback, offer up a sacrifice behind the river Dāitya, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

113 'He begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant me this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that I may overcome Peshô-Kangha the corpse-burier, Humâyaka the worshipper of the Daēvas, and the wicked Aregat-aspa, in the battles of this world.

114 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

116 'Unto her did Aregat-aspa and Vandaremaini offer up a sacrifice by the sea Vouru-Kasha, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs.

117 'They I begged of her a boon, saying: "Grant us this, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! that we may conquer the valiant Kavi Vistāspa and Zairivairi who fights on horseback, and that we may smite of the Aryan people their fifties and their hundreds, their hundreds and their thousands, their thousands and their tens of thousands, their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads."

118 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita did not grant them that favour, though they were offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she should grant them that favour. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

120 'For whom Ahura Mazda has made four horses—the wind, the rain, the cloud, and the sleet—and thus ever upon the earth it is raining, snowing, hailing, and sleeting; and whose armies are so many and numbered by nine-hundreds and thousands.

121 'I will worship the height Hukairya, of the deep precipices, made of gold, wherefrom this mine Ardvi Sūra Anāhita leaps, from a hundred times the height of a man, while she is possessed of as much Glory as the whole of the waters that run along the earth, and she runs powerfully. 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

123 'She stands, the good Ardvi Sūra Anāhita, wearing a golden mantle, waiting for a man who shall offer her libations and prayers, and thinking thus in her heart:

124 ' "Who will praise me? Who will offer me a sacrifice, with libations cleanly prepared and well-strained, together with the Haoma and meat? To whom shall I cleave, who cleaves unto me, and thinks with me, and bestows gifts upon me, and is of good will unto me?" 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

126 'Ardvi Sūra Anāhita, who stands carried forth in the shape of a maid, fair of body, most strong, tall-formed, high-girded, pure, nobly born of a glorious race, wearing along her a mantle fully embroidered with gold;

127 'Ever holding the baresma in her hand, according to the rules, she wears square golden earrings on her ears bored, and a golden necklace around her beautiful neck, she, the nobly born Ardvi Sūra Anāhita; and she girded her waist tightly, so that her breasts may be well-shaped, that they may be tightly pressed.

128 'Upon her head Ardvi Sūra Anāhita bound a golden crown, with a hundred stars, with eight rays, a fine , a well-made crown, in the shape of a , with fillets streaming down.

129 'She is clothed with garments of beaver, Ardvi Sūra Anāhita; with the skin of thirty beavers of those that bear four young ones, that are the finest kind of beavers; for the skin of the beaver that lives in water is the finest-coloured of all skins, and when worked at the right time it shines to the eye with full sheen of silver and gold.

130 'Here, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! I beg of thee this favour: that I, fully blessed, may conquer large kingdoms, rich in horses, with high tributaries, with snorting horses, sounding chariots, flashing swords, rich in aliments, with stores of food, with well-scented beds; that I may have at my wish the fulness of the good things of life and whatever makes a kingdom thrive.

131 'Here, O good, most beneficent Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! I beg of thee two gallant companions, one two-legged and one four-legged: one two-legged, who is swift, quickly rushing, and clever in turning a chariot round in battle; and one four-legged, who can quickly turn towards either wing of the host with a wide front, towards the right wing or the left, towards the left wing or the right.

132 'Through the strength of this sacrifice, of this invocation, O Ardvi Sūra Anāhita! come down from those stars, towards the earth made by Ahura, towards the sacrificing priest, towards the full boiling [milk]; come to help him who is offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that thou wouldst grant him thy favours; that all those gallant warriors may be strong, like king Vistāspa. . . . 'I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of the holy water-spring Anāhita.

6. KHÔRSHĒD YAST.
(YAST TO THE SUN.)

Unto the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun; Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

1 We sacrifice unto the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun. When the light of the sun waxes warmer, when the brightness of the sun waxes warmer, then up stand the heavenly Yazatas, by hundreds and thousands: they gather together its Glory, they make its Glory pass down, they pour its Glory upon the earth made by Ahura, for the increase of the world of holiness, for the increase of the creatures of holiness, for the increase of the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun.

2 And when the sun rises up, then the earth, made by Ahura, becomes clean; the running waters become clean, the waters of the wells become clean, the waters of the sea become clean, the standing waters become clean; all the holy creatures, the creatures of the Good Spirit, become clean.

3 Should not the sun rise up, then the Daēvas would destroy all the things that are in the seven Karshvares, nor would the heavenly Yazatas find any way of withstanding or repelling them in the material world.

4 He who offers up a sacrifice unto the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun—to withstand darkness, to withstand the Daēvas born of darkness, to withstand the robbers and bandits, to withstand the Yātus and Pairikas, to withstand death that creeps in unseen—offers it up to Ahura Mazda, offers it up to the Ameshâ-Spentas, offers it up to his own soul. He rejoices all the heavenly and worldly Yazatas, who offers up a sacrifice unto the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun.

5 I will sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who has a thousand ears, ten thousand eyes. I will sacrifice unto the club of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, well struck down upon the skulls of the Daēvas. I will sacrifice unto that friendship, the best of all friendships, that reigns between the moon and the sun.

6 For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard, namely, unto the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun. Unto the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun we offer up the libations, the Haoma and meat, the baresma, the wisdom of the tongue, the holy spells, the speech, the deeds, the libations, and the rightly-spoken words. Yēhê hâtām: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

7 Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and the invocation, and the strength and vigour of the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun. Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good Give unto that man brightness and glory, give him health of body, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones.

7. MĀH YAST.
(Yast to the Moon)

Unto the Moon that keeps in it the seed of the Bull; unto the only-created Bull and unto the Bull of many species; Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathā ahū vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

1 Hail to Ahura Mazda! Hail to the Ameshaspentas! Hail to the Moon that keeps in it the seed of the Bull! Hail to thee when we look at thee! Hail to thee when thou lookest at us!

2 How does the moon wax? How does the moon wane? For fifteen days does the moon wax; for fifteen days does the moon wane. As long as her waxing, so long is the waning; as long as her waning, so long is the waxing. 'Who is there but thee who makes the moon wax and wane?'

3 We sacrifice unto the Moon that keeps in it the seed of the Bull, the holy and master of holiness. Here I look at the moon, here I perceive the moon; here I look at the light of the moon, here I perceive the light of the moon. The Ameshaspentas stand up, holding its glory; the Ameshaspentas stand up, pouring its glory upon the earth, made by Mazda.

4 And when the light of the moon waxes warmer, golden-hued plants grow on from the earth during the spring. We sacrifice unto the new moons, the full moons, and the Vishpatahas. We sacrifice unto the new moon, the holy and master of holiness; We sacrifice unto the full moon, the holy and master of holiness; We sacrifice unto the Vishpataha, the holy and master of holiness. . . . ; it has the same meaning in Vend. XVIII, 9 [23]; cf. Yt. XXII, 18. }

5 I will sacrifice unto the Moon, that keeps in it the seed of the Bull, the liberal, bright, glorious, water-giving, warmth-giving, wisdom-giving, wealth-giving, riches-giving, thoughtfulness-giving, weal-giving, freshness-giving, prosperity-giving, the liberal, the healing. . . . I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of the Moon, that keeps in it the seed of the Bull, and of the only-created Bull, and of the Bull of many species.

8. TĪR YAST.
(Yast to the stars and planets)

Unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, and unto the powerful Satavaësa, made by Mazda, who pushes waters forward, Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathā ahū vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

1 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'We worship the lordship and mastership [of Tistrya], whereby he protects the Moon, the dwelling, the food, when my glorious stars come along and impart their gifts to men. I will sacrifice unto the star Tistrya, that gives the fields their share [of waters].'

2 'We offer up libations unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, that gives happy dwelling and good dwelling; the white, shining, seen afar, and piercing; the health-bringing, loud-snorting, and high, piercing from afar with its shining, undefiled rays; and unto the waters of the wide sea, the Vanguhi of wide renown, and the species of the Bull, made by Mazda, the awful kingly Glory, and the Fravashi of the holy Spitama Zarathustra.

3 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard, namely, unto the star Tistrya. 'Unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, we offer up the libations, the Haoma and meat, the baresma, the wisdom of the tongue, the holy spells, the speech, the deeds, the libations, and the rightly-spoken words. 'Yēnhē hātām: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

4 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, who is the seed of the waters, powerful, tall, and strong, whose light goes afar; powerful and highly working, through whom the brightness and the seed of the waters come from the high Apām Napāt. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

5 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star; for whom long flocks and herds and men, looking forward for him and deceived in their hope: "When shall we see him rise up, the bright and glorious star Tistrya? When will the springs run with waves as thick as a horse's size and still thicker? Or will they never come?" 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

6 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star; who flies, towards the sea Vouru-Kasha, as swiftly as the arrow darted through the heavenly space, which Erekhsha, the swift archer, the Arya amongst the Aryas whose arrow was the swiftest, shot from Mount Khshaotha to Mount Hvanvant.

7 'For Ahura Mazda gave him assistance; so did the waters and the plants; and Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, opened a wide way unto him. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

8 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, that afflicts the Pairikas, that vexes the Pairikas, who, in the shape of worm-stars, fly between the earth and the heavens, in the sea Vouru-Kasha, the powerful sea, the large-sized, deep sea of salt waters. He goes to its lake in the shape of a horse, in a holy shape; and down there he makes the waters boil over, and the winds flow above powerfully all around.

9 'Then Satavaësa makes those waters flow down to the seven Karshvares of the earth, and when he has arrived down there, he stands, beautiful, spreading ease and joy on the fertile countries (thinking in himself): "How shall the countries of the Aryas grow fertile?" 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

10 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, who spake unto Ahura Mazda, saying: "Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One!

11 ' "If men would worship me with a sacrifice in which I were invoked by my own name, as they worship the other Yazatas with sacrifices in which they are invoked by their own names, then I should have come to the faithful at the appointed time; I should have come in the appointed time of my beautiful, immortal life, should it be one night, or two nights, or fifty, or a hundred nights."

12 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya: 'We sacrifice unto the rains of Tistrya. 'We sacrifice unto the first star; we sacrifice unto the rains of the first star. 'I will sacrifice unto the stars Haptōringa, to oppose the Yātus and Pairikas. 'We sacrifice unto Vanant, the star made by Mazda; for the well-shapen strength, for the Victory, made by Ahura, for the crushing Ascendant, for the destruction of what distresses us, for the destruction of what persecutes us. 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, whose eye-sight is sound.

13 'For ten nights, O Spitama Zarathustra! Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, mingles his shape with light, moving in the shape of a man of fifteen years of age, bright, with clear eyes, tall, full of strength, strong, and clever.

14 'He is active as the first man was; he goes on with the strength of the first man; he has the virility of the first man.

15 'Here he calls for people to assemble, here he asks, saying: "Who now will offer me the libations with the Haoma and the holy meat? To whom shall I give wealth of male children, a troop of male children, and the purification of his own soul? Now I ought to receive sacrifice and prayer in the material world, by the law of excellent holiness."

16 'The next ten nights, O Spitama Zarathustra! the bright and glorious Tistrya mingles his shape with light, moving in the shape of a golden-horned bull.

17 'Here he calls for people to assemble, here he asks, saying: "Who now will offer me the libations with the Haoma and the holy meat? To whom shall I give wealth of oxen, a herd of oxen, and the purification of his own soul? Now I ought to receive sacrifice and prayer in the material world, by the law of excellent holiness."

18 'The next ten nights, O Spitama Zarathustra! the bright and glorious Tistrya mingles his shape with light, moving in the shape of a white, beautiful horse, with golden ears and a golden caparison.

19 'Here he calls for people to assemble, here he asks, saying: "Who now will offer me the libations with the Haoma and the holy meat? To whom shall I give wealth of horses, a troop of horses, and the purification of his own soul? Now I ought to receive sacrifice and prayer in the material world, by the law of excellent holiness."

20 'Then, O Spitama Zarathustra! the bright and glorious Tistrya goes down to the sea Vouru-Kasha in the shape of a white, beautiful horse, with golden ears and a golden caparison.

21 'But there rushes down to meet him the Daëva Apaosha, in the shape of a dark horse, black with black ears, black with a black back, black with a black tail, stamped with brands of terror.

22 'They meet together, hoof against hoof, O Spitama Zarathustra! the bright and glorious Tistrya and the Daëva Apaosha. They fight together, O Spitama Zarathustra! for three days and three nights. And then the Daëva Apaosha proves stronger than the bright and glorious Tistrya, he overcomes him.

23 'And Tistrya flees from the sea Vouru-Kasha, as far as a Hāthra's length. He cries out in woe and distress, the bright and glorious Tistrya: "Woe is me, O Ahura Mazda! I am in distress, O Waters and Plants! O Fate and thou, Law of the worshippers of Mazda! Men do not worship me with a sacrifice in which I am invoked by my own name, as they worship the other Yazatas with sacrifices in which they are invoked by their own names.

24 ' "If men had worshipped me with a sacrifice in which I had been invoked by my own name, as they worship the other Yazatas with sacrifices in which they are invoked by their own names, I should have taken to me the strength of ten horses, the strength of ten camels, the strength of ten bulls, the strength of ten mountains, the strength of ten rivers."

25 'Then I, Ahura Mazda, offer up to the bright and glorious Tistrya a sacrifice in which he is invoked by his own name, and I bring him the strength of ten horses, the strength of ten camels, the strength of ten bulls, the strength of ten mountains, the strength of ten rivers.

26 'Then, O Spitama Zarathustra! the bright and glorious Tistrya goes down to the sea Vouru-Kasha in the shape of a white, beautiful horse, with golden ears and golden caparison.

27 'But there rushes down to meet him the Daëva Apaosha in the shape of a dark horse, black with black ears, black with a black back, black with a black tail, stamped with brands of terror.

28 'They meet together, hoof against hoof, O Spitama Zarathustra! the bright and glorious Tistrya, and the Daëva Apaosha; they fight together, O Zarathustra! till the time of noon. Then the bright and glorious Tistrya proves stronger than the Daëva Apaosha, he overcomes him.

29 'Then he goes from the sea Vouru-Kasha as far as a Hāthra's length: "Hail!" cries the bright and glorious Tistrya. "Hail unto me, O Ahura Mazda! Hail unto you, O waters and plants! Hail, O Law of the worshippers of Mazda! Hail will it be unto you, O lands! The life of the waters will flow down unrestrained to the big-seeded cornfields, to the small-seeded pasture-fields, and to the whole of the material world!"

30 'Then the bright and glorious Tistrya goes back down to the sea Vouru-Kasha, in the shape of a white, beautiful horse, with golden ears and a golden caparison.

31 'He makes the sea boil up and down; he makes the sea stream this and that way; he makes the sea flow this and that way; all the shores of the sea Vouru-Kasha are boiling over, all the middle of it is boiling over.

32 'And the bright and glorious Tistrya rises up from the sea Vouru-Kasha. O Spitama Zarathustra! the bright and glorious Satavaësa rises up from the sea Vouru-Kasha; and vapours rise up from Mount Us-hindu, that stands in the middle of the sea Vouru-Kasha.

33 'Then the vapours push forward, in the regular shape of clouds; they go following the wind, along the ways which Haoma traverses, the increaser of the world. Behind him travels the mighty wind, made by Mazda, and the rain, and the cloud, and the sleet, down to the several places, down to the fields, down to the seven Karshvares of the earth.

34 'Apām Napāt, O Spitama Zarathustra! divides the waters amongst the countries in the material world, in company with the mighty wind, the Glory, made by the waters, and the Fravashis of the faithful. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

35 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, who from the shining east, moves along his long winding course, along the path made by the gods, along the way appointed for him the watery way, at the will of Ahura Mazda, at the will of the Ameshaspentas. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

36 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, whose rising is watched by men who live on the fruits of the year, by the chiefs of deep understanding; by the wild beasts in the mountains, by the tame beasts that run in the plains; they watch him, as he comes up to the country for a bad year, or for a good year, (thinking in themselves): "How shall the Arya countries be fertile?" 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

37 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, swift-flying and swift-moving, who flies towards the sea Vouru-Kasha, as swiftly as the arrow darted through the heavenly space, which Erekhsha, the swift archer, the Arya amongst the Aryas whose arrow was the swiftest, shot from Mount Khshaotha to Mount Hvanvant.

38 'Ahura Mazda gave him assistance, and the Ameshaspentas and Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, pointed him the way: behind him went the tall Ashis Vanguhi and Pārendi on her light chariot: always till, in his course, he reached Mount Hvanvant on the shining waters. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

39 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, who afflicts the Pairikas, who destroys the Pairikas, that Angra Mainyus flung to stop all the stars that have in them the seed of the waters.

40 'Tistrya afflicts them, he blows them away from the sea Vouru-Kasha; then the wind blows the clouds forward, bearing the waters of fertility, so that the friendly showers spread wide over, they spread helpfully and friendly over the seven Karshvares. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

41 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, for whom long the standing waters, and the running spring-waters, the stream-waters, and the rain-waters:

42 ' "When will the bright and glorious Tistrya rise up for us? When will the springs with a flow and overflow of waters, thick as a horse's shoulder, run to the beautiful places and fields, and to the pastures, even to the roots of the plants, that they may grow with a powerful growth?" 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

43 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, who washes away all things of fear, stunts the growth of all and brings health to all these creations, being most beneficent, when he has been worshipped with a sacrifice and propitiated, rejoiced, and satisfied. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

44 'I will sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, whom Ahura Mazda has established as a lord and overseer above all stars, in the same way as he has established Zarathustra above men; whom neither Angra Mainyu, nor the Yátus and the Pairikas, nor the men Yátus can deliver unto death, nor can all the Daévas together prevail for his death. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

45 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, to whom Ahura Mazda has given a thousand senses, and who is the most beneficent amongst the stars that have in them the seed of the waters:

46 'Who moves in light with the stars that have in them the seed of the waters: he, from the sea Vouru-Kasha, the powerful sea, the large-sized, deep, and salt of waters, goes to all the lakes, and to all the beautiful caves, and to all the beautiful channels, in the shape of a white, beautiful horse, with golden ears and a golden caparison.

47 'Then, O Spitama Zarathustra! the waters flow down from the sea Vouru-Kasha, mother-like, friendly, and healing: he divides them amongst these countries, being most beneficent, when he has been worshipped with a sacrifice and propitiated, rejoiced, and satisfied. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

48 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, for whom long all the creatures of Spenta-Mainyu, those that live under the ground, and those that live above the ground; those that live in the waters, and those that live on dry land; those that fly, and those that run in the plains 5; and all those that live within this boundless and endless world of the holy Spirit. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

49 'We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, the healthful, wise, happy, and powerful, who is the lord of a thousand boons, and grants many boons to that man who has pleased him, whether begging or not begging for them.

50 'I, O Spitama Zarathustra! have created that star Tistrya as worthy of sacrifice, as worthy of prayer, as worthy of propitiation, as worthy of glorification as myself, Ahura Mazda;

51 'In order to withstand, to break asunder, to afflict, to drive back the malice of that Pairika Duzyárya, whom evil-speaking people call Huyárya.

52 'Had I not created that star Tistrya as worthy of sacrifice, as worthy of prayer, as worthy of propitiation, as worthy of glorification as myself, Ahura Mazda;

53 'In order to withstand, to break asunder, to afflict, to drive back the malice of that Pairika Duzyárya, whom evil-speaking people call Huyárya;

54 'Then all day long, all night long, that Pairika Duzyárya would wage war against this material world of mine, wanting to extinguish its life, and she goes on, rushing upon and around it.

55 'But the bright and glorious Tistrya keeps that Pairika in bonds, with twofold bonds, with threefold bonds, that cannot be overcome, with bonds all over the body: it is as if there were a thousand men keeping one man in bonds, a thousand men of those who are the strongest in strength.

56 'If the Aryan countries, O Spitama Zarathustra! would perform in honour of the bright and glorious Tistrya the due sacrifice and invocation, just as that sacrifice and invocation ought to be performed in the perfection of holiness; never should a hostile horde enter these Aryan countries, nor any plague, nor leprosy, nor venomous plants, nor the chariot of a foe, nor the uplifted spear of a foe.'

57 Zarathustra asked: 'What is then, O Ahura Mazda! the sacrifice and invocation in honour of the bright and glorious Tistrya, as it ought to be performed in the perfection of holiness?'

58 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Let the Aryan nations bring libations unto him; let the Aryan nations tie bundles of baresma for him; let the Aryan nations cook for him a head of cattle, either white, or black, or of any other colour, but all of one and the same colour.

59 'Let not a murderer take of these offerings, nor a whore, nor a . . . who does not sing the Gáthás, who spreads death in the world and withstands the law of Mazda, the law of Zarathustra.

60 'If a murderer take of these offerings, or a whore, or a . . . who does not sing the Gáthás, who spreads death in the world and withstands the law of Mazda, the law of Zarathustra, then the bright and glorious Tistrya takes back his healing virtues.

61 'Plagues will ever pour upon the Aryan nations; hostile hordes will ever fall upon the Aryan nations; the Aryans will be smitten, by their fifties and their hundreds, by their hundreds and their thousands, by their thousands and their tens of thousands, by their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads.

62 'Yathá ahú vairýô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness . . . 'I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of Tistrya, the bright and glorious star, and of the powerful Satavaësa, made by Mazda, who pushes waters forward.

9. GÔS YAST.

(Yast to the Animals)

... Unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy, Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathá ahú vairýô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness. . . .

1 We sacrifice unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy, who keeps the flocks in health, the herds in health, the grown-up (cattle) in health, the young ones in health; who watches well from afar, with a wide-spread and long-continued welfare-giving friendship;

2 Who yokes teams of horses, who makes her chariot turn and its wheels sound, fat and glistening, strong, tall-formed, weal-possessing, health-giving, powerful to stand and powerful to turn for assistance to the faithful.

3 To her did Haoshyangha, the Paradhâta, offer up a sacrifice on the enclosure of the Hara, the beautiful height, made by Mazda, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, and ten thousand lambs, and with an offering of libations:

4 'Grant me this boon, O good, most beneficent Drvâspa! that I may overcome all the Daévas of Mázana; that I may never fear and bow through terror before the Daévas, but that all the Daévas may fear and bow in spite of themselves before me, that they may fear and flee down to darkness.'

5 The powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda, the holy Drvâspa, the maintainer, granted him that boon, as he was offering libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon.

6 For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard; I will offer her a sacrifice well performed, namely, unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy. We offer up libations to the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy; we offer her the Haoma and meat, the baresma, the wisdom of the tongue, the holy spells, the speech, the deeds, the libations, and the rightly-spoken words. Yênhê hâtâm: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda . . .

7 We offer up a sacrifice unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy, who keeps the flocks in health . . . Who yokes teams of horses . . . for assistance to the faithful.

8 To her did Yima Khshaëta, the good shepherd, offer up a sacrifice from the height Hukairyâ, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs, and with an offering of libations:

9 'Grant me this boon, O good, most beneficent Drvâspa! that I may bring fatness and flocks down to the world created by Mazda; that I may bring immortality down to the world created by Mazda;

10 'That I may take away both hunger and thirst, from the world created by Mazda; that I may take away both old age and death, from the world created by Mazda; that I may take away both hot wind and cold wind, from the world created by Mazda, for a thousand years.'

11 The powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda, the holy Drvâspa, the maintainer, granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

12 We offer up a sacrifice unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy, who keeps the flocks in health . . . Who yokes teams of horses . . . for assistance to the faithful.

13 To her did Thraëtaona, the heir of the valiant Áthwya clan, offer up a sacrifice in the four-cornered Varena, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs, and with an offering of libations:

14 'Grant me this boon, O good, most beneficent Drvâspa! that I may overcome Azi Dahâka, the three-mouthed, the three-headed, the six-eyed, who has a thousand senses, that most powerful, fiendish Drug, that demon, baleful to the world, the strongest Drug that Angra Mainyu created against the material world, to destroy the world of the good principle; and that I may deliver his two wives, Savanghavâk and Erenavâk, who are the fairest of body amongst women, and the most wonderful creatures in the world.'

15 The powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda, the holy Drvâspa, the maintainer, granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

16 We offer up a sacrifice unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy, who keeps flocks in health . . . Who yokes teams of horses . . . for assistance to the faithful.

17 To her did Haoma offer up a sacrifice, Haoma, the enlivening, the healing, the beautiful, the lordly, with golden eyes, upon the highest height of the Haraiti Bareza. He begged of her a boon, saying:

18 'Grant me this boon, O good, most beneficent Drvâspa! that I may bring the Turanian murderer, Franghrasyan that I may drag him bound, that I may bring him bound unto king Husravah, that king Husravah may kill him, behind the Kaëkasta lake, the deep lake of salt waters, to avenge the murder of his father Syâvarshâna, a man, and of Aghraëra, a semi-man.'

19 The powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda, the holy Drvâspa, the maintainer, granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would give him that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

20 We offer up a sacrifice unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy, who keeps the flocks in health . . . Who yokes teams of horses . . . for assistance to the faithful.

21 To her did the gallant Husravah, he who united the Arya nations into one kingdom, offer up a sacrifice, behind the Kaëkasta lake, the deep lake of salt waters, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs, and an offering of libations:

22 'Grant me this boon, O good, most beneficent Drvâspa! that I may kill the Turanian murderer, Franghrasyan, behind the Kaëkasta lake, the deep lake of salt waters, to avenge the murder of my father Syâvarshâna, a man, and of Aghraëra, a semi-man.' 23 The powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda, the holy Drvâspa, the maintainer, granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

24 We offer up a sacrifice unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy, who keeps the flocks in health . . . Who yokes teams of horses . . . for assistance to the faithful.

25 To her did the holy Zarathustra offer up a sacrifice in the Airyana Vaëgah, by the good river Dâitya, with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the speech, with the deeds, with the libations, and with the rightly-spoken words. He begged of her a boon, saying:

26 'O good, most beneficent Drvâspa! grant me this boon, that I may bring the good and noble Hutaosa to think according to the law, to speak according to the law, to do according to the law, that she may spread my Mazdean law and make it known, and that she may bestow beautiful praises upon my deeds.'

27 The strong Drvâspa, made by Mazda, the holy Drvâspa, the maintainer, granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard . . .

28 We offer up a sacrifice unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy, who keeps the flocks in health . . . Who yokes teams of horses . . . for assistance to the faithful.

29 To her did the tall Kavi Vistâspa offer up a sacrifice behind the waters of the river Dâitya, with a hundred male horses, a thousand oxen, ten thousand lambs, and with an offering of libations:

30 'Grant me this boon, O good, most beneficent Drvâspa! that I may put to flight Asta-aurvant, the son of Vispas-thaurvô-asti, the all-afflicting, of the brazen helmet, of the brazen armour, of the thick neck, behind whom seven hundred camels . . . ; that I may put to flight the Hyaona murderer, Aregat-aspa; that I may put to flight Darsinika, the worshipper of the Daévas;

31 And that I may smite Tâthravant of the bad law; that I may smite Spingauruska, the worshipper of the Daévas; and that I may bring unto the good law the nations of the Varedhakas and of the Hyaonas; and that I may smite of the Hyaona nations their fifties and their hundreds, their hundreds and their thousands, their thousands and their tens of thousands, their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads.'

32 The strong Drvâspa, made by Mazda, the holy Drvâspa, the maintainer, granted him that boon, as he was offering up libations, giving gifts, sacrificing, and entreating that she would grant him that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard; I will offer her a sacrifice well performed, namely, unto the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy. We offer up libations to the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy; we offer her the Haoma and meat, the baresma, the wisdom of the tongue, the holy spells, the speech, the deeds, the libations, and the rightly-spoken words. Yathá ahú vairýô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness . . . 'I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of the powerful Drvâspa, made by Mazda and holy. Ashem Vohî: Holiness is the best of all good . . . [Give] unto that man brightness and glory, give him health of body, . . . give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones. . .

10. MIHIR YAST.

Unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who has a thousand ears, ten thousand eyes, a Yazata invoked by his own name, and unto Rama Hvâstra, Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathá ahú vairýô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness . . .

1 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'Verily, when I created Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, O

Spitama! I created him as worthy of sacrifice, as worthy of prayer as myself, Ahura Mazda.

2 'The ruffian who lies unto Mithra brings death unto the whole country, injuring as much the faithful world as a hundred evil-doers could do. Break not the contract, O Spitama! neither the one that thou hadst entered into with one of the unfaithful, nor the one that thou hadst entered into with one of the faithful who is one of thy own faith. For Mithra stands for both the faithful and the unfaithful.

3 'Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, gives swiftness to the horses of those who lie not unto Mithra. 'Fire, the son of Ahura Mazda, gives the straightest way to those who lie not unto Mithra. The good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful give a virtuous offspring to those who lie not unto Mithra.

4 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard, namely, unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures. 'We offer up libations unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who gives a happy dwelling and a good dwelling to the Aryan nations.

5 'May he come to us for help! May he come to us for ease! May he come to us for joy! May he come to us for mercy! May he come to us for health! May he come to us for victory! May he come to us for good conscience! May he come to us for bliss! he, the awful and overpowering, worthy of sacrifice and prayer, not to be deceived anywhere in the whole of the material world, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures.

6 'I will offer up libations unto him, the strong Yazata, the powerful Mithra, most beneficent to the creatures: I will apply unto him with charity and prayers: I will offer up a sacrifice worth being heard unto him, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the speech, with the deeds, with the libations, and with the rightly-spoken words. 'Yenhê hâtâm: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda. . . .

7 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who is truth-speaking, a chief in assemblies, with a thousand ears, well-shapen, with ten thousand eyes, high, with full knowledge, strong, sleepless, and ever awake;

8 'To whom the chiefs of nations offer up sacrifices, as they go to the field, against havocking hosts, against enemies coming in battle array, in the strife of conflicting nations.

9 'On whichever side he has been worshipped first in the fulness of faith of a devoted heart, to that side turns Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, with the fiend-smiting wind, with the cursing thought of the wise. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

10 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake.

11 'Whom the horsemen worship on the back of their horses, begging swiftness for their teams, health for their own bodies, and that they may watch with full success those who hate them, smite down their foes, and destroy at one stroke their adversaries, their enemies, and those who hate them. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

12 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake;

13 'Who first of the heavenly gods reaches over the Hara, before the undying, swift-horsed sun; who, foremost in a golden array, takes hold of the beautiful summits, and from thence looks over the abode of the Aryans with a beneficent eye.

14 'Where the valiant chiefs draw up their many troops in array; where the high mountains, rich in pastures and waters, yield plenty to the cattle; where the deep lakes, with salt waters, stand; where wide-flowing rivers swell and hurry towards Iskata and Pouruta, Mouru and Harôyu, the Gava-Sughda and Hvâirizem;

15 'On Arezahi and Savahi, on Fradadhafshu and Vidadhafshu, on Vourubaresti and Vourubaresti, on this bright Karshvare of Hvaniratha, the abode of cattle, the dwelling of cattle, the powerful Mithra looks with a health-bringing eye;

16 'He who moves along all the Karshvares, a Yazata unseen, and brings glory; he who moves along all the Karshvares, a Yazata unseen, and brings sovereignty; and increases strength for victory to those who, with a pious intent, holily offer him libations. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

17 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Unto whom nobody must lie, neither the master of a house, nor the lord of a borough, nor the lord of a town, nor the lord of a province.

18 'If the master of a house lies into him, or the lord of a borough, or the lord of a town, or the lord of a province, then comes Mithra, angry and offended, and he breaks asunder the house, the borough, the town, the province; and the masters of the houses, the lords of the boroughs, the lords of the towns, the lords of the provinces, and the foremost men of the provinces.

19 'On whatever side there is one who has lied unto Mithra, on that side Mithra stands forth, angry and offended, and his wrath I is slow to relent.

20 'Those who lie unto Mithra, however swift they may be running, cannot overtake; riding, cannot. . . . ; driving, cannot. The spear that the foe of Mithra flings, darts backwards, for the number of the evil spells that the foe of Mithra works out.

21 'And even though the spear be flung well, even though it reach the body, it makes no wound, for the number of the evil spells that the foe of Mithra works out. The wind drives away the spear that the foe of Mithra flings, for the number of the evil spells that the foe of Mithra works out. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

22 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who takes out of distress the man who has not lied unto him, who takes him out of death.

23 'Take us out of distress, take us out of distresses, O Mithra! as we have not lied unto thee. Thou bringest down terror upon the bodies of the men who lie unto Mithra; thou takest away the strength from their arms, being angry and all-powerful; thou takest the swiftness from their feet, the eye-sight from their eyes, the hearing from their ears.

24 'Not the wound of the well-sharpened spear or of the flying arrow reaches that man to whom Mithra comes for help with all the strength of his soul, he, of the ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-seeing, un-deceivable Mithra. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

25 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who is lordly, deep, strong, and weal-giving; a chief in assemblies, pleased with prayers, high, holily clever, the incarnate Word, a warrior with strong arms;

26 'Who breaks the skulls of the Daëvas, and is most cruel in exacting pains; the punisher of the men who lie unto Mithra, the withstander of the Pairikas; who, when not deceived, establisheth nations in supreme strength; who, when not deceived, establisheth nations in supreme victory;

27 'Who confounds the ways of the nation that delights in havoc, who turns away their Glory, takes away their strength for victory, blows them away helpless, and delivers them unto ten thousand strokes; he, of the ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-seeing, un-deceivable Mithra. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

28 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who upholds the columns of the lofty house and makes its pillars solid; who gives herds of oxen and male children to that house in which he has been satisfied; he breaks to pieces those in which he has been offended.

29 'Thou, O Mithra! art both bad and good to nations; thou, O Mithra! art both bad and good to men; thou, O Mithra! keepst in thy hands both peace and trouble for nations.

30 'Thou makest houses large, beautiful with women, beautiful with chariots, with well-laid foundations, and high above their groundwork; thou makest that house lofty, beautiful with women, beautiful with chariots, with well-laid foundations, and high above its groundwork, of which the master, pious and holding libations in his hand, offers thee a sacrifice, in which thou art invoked by thy own name and with the proper words.

31 'With a sacrifice, in which thou art invoked by thy own name, with the proper words will I offer thee libations, O powerful Mithra! 'With a sacrifice, in which thou art invoked by thy own name, with the proper words will I offer thee libations, O most beneficent Mithra! 'With a sacrifice, in which thou art invoked by thy own name, with the proper words will I offer thee libations, O thou un-deceivable Mithra!

32 'Listen unto our sacrifice, O Mithra! Be thou pleased with our sacrifice, O Mithra! Come and sit at our sacrifice! Accept our libations! Accept them as they have been consecrated! Gather them together with love and lay them in the Garô-nmâna!

33 'Grant us these boons which we beg of thee, O powerful god! in accordance with the words of revelation, namely, riches, strength, and victory, good conscience and bliss, good fame and a good soul; wisdom and the knowledge that gives happiness, the victorious strength given by Ahura, the crushing Ascendant of Asha Vahista, and conversation (with God) on the Holy Word.

34 'Grant that we, in a good spirit and high spirit, exalted in joy and a good spirit, may smite all our foes; that we, in a good spirit and high spirit, exalted in joy and a good spirit, may smite all our enemies; that we, in a good spirit and high spirit, exalted in joy and a good spirit, may smite all the malice of Daëvas and Men, of the Yâtus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, the blind, and the deaf. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

35 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Victory-making, army-governing, endowed with a thousand senses; power-wielding, power-possessing, and all-knowing;

36 'Who sets the battle a going, who stands against (armies) in battle, who, standing against (armies) in battle, breaks asunder the lines arrayed. The wings of the columns gone to battle shake, and he throws terror upon the centre of the havocking host. 37 'He can bring and does bring down upon them distress and fear; he throws down the heads of those who lie unto Mithra, he takes off the heads of those who lie unto Mithra.

38 'Sad is the abode, unpeopled with children, where abide men who lie unto Mithra, and, verily, the fiendish killer of faithful men. The grazing cow goes a sad straying way, driven along the vales of the Mithradrugis: they stand on the road, letting tears run over their chins.

39 'Their falcon-feathered arrows, shot from the string of the well-bent bow, fly towards the mark, and hit it not, as Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, angry, offended, and unsatisfied, comes and meets them. 'Their spears, well whetted and sharp, their long spears fly from their hands towards the mark, and hit it not, as Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, angry, offended, and unsatisfied, comes and meets them.

40 'Their swords, well thrust and striking at the heads of men, hit not the mark, as Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, angry, offended, and unsatisfied, comes and meets them. 'Their clubs, well falling and striking at the heads of men, hit not the mark, as Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, angry, offended, and unsatisfied, comes and meets them.

41 'Mithra strikes fear into them; Rashnu strikes a counter-fear into them; the holy Sraosha blows them away from every side towards the two Yazatas, the maintainers of the world. They make the ranks of the army melt away, as Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, angry, offended, and unsatisfied, comes and meets them.

42 'They cry unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, saying: "O Mithra, thou lord of wide pastures! here are our fiery horses taking us away, as they flee from Mithra; here are our sturdy arms cut to pieces by the sword, O Mithra!"

43 'And then Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, throws them to the ground, killing their fifties and their hundreds, their hundreds and their thousands, their thousands and their tens of thousands, their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads; as Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, is angry and offended. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

44 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Whose dwelling, wide as the earth, extends over the material world, large, unconfined, and bright, a far-and-wide-extending abode.

45 'Whose eight friends sit as spies for Mithra, on all the heights, at all the watching-places, observing the man who lies unto Mithra, looking at those, remembering those who have lied unto Mithra, but guarding the ways of those whose life is sought by men who lie unto Mithra, and, verily, by the fiendish killers of faithful men.

46 'Helping and guarding, guarding behind and guarding, in front, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, proves an un-deceivable spy and watcher for the man to whom he comes to help with all the strength of his soul, he of the ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-knowing, un-deceivable god. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

47 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'A god of high renown and old age I, whom wide-hoofed horses carry against havocking hosts, against enemies coming in battle array, in the strife of conflicting nations.

48 'And when Mithra drives along towards the havocking hosts, towards the enemies coming in battle array, in the strife of the conflicting nations, then he binds the hands of those who have lied unto Mithra, he confounds their eye-sight, he takes the hearing from their ears; they can no longer move their feet; they can no longer withstand those people, those foes, when Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, bears them ill-will. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

49 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake;

50 'For whom the Maker, Ahura Mazda, has built up a dwelling on the Hara Berezaiti, the bright mountain around which the many (stars) revolve, where come neither night nor darkness, no cold wind and no hot wind, no deathful sickness, no uncleanness made by the Daëvas, and the clouds cannot reach up unto the Haraiti Barezai;

51 'A dwelling that all the Ameshas-Spentas, in one accord with the sun, made for him in the fulness of faith of a devoted heart, and he surveys the whole of the material world from the Haraiti Barezai.

52 'And when there rushes a wicked worker of evil, swiftly, with a swift step, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, goes and yokes his horses to his chariot, along with the holy, powerful Sraosha and Nairiô-sangha, who strikes a blow that smites the army, that smites the strength of the malicious. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

53 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake;

54 'Who, with hands lifted up, ever cries unto Ahura Mazda, saying: 'I am the kind keeper of all creatures, I am the kind maintainer of all creatures; yet men worship me not with a sacrifice in which I am invoked by my own name, as they worship the other gods with sacrifices in which they are invoked by their own names.

55 'If men would worship me with a sacrifice in which I were invoked by my own name, as they worship the other Yazatas with sacrifices in which they are invoked by their own names, then I would come to the faithful at the appointed time; I would come in the appointed time of my beautiful, immortal life."

56 'But the pious man, holding libations in his hands, does worship thee with a sacrifice, in which thou art invoked by thy own name, and with the proper words. 'With a sacrifice, in which thou art invoked by thy own name, with the proper words will I offer thee libations, O powerful Mithra! 'With a sacrifice, in which thou art invoked by thy own name, with the proper words will I offer thee libations, O most beneficent Mithra! 'With a sacrifice, in which thou art invoked by thy own name, with the proper words will I offer thee libations, O thou undecivable Mithra!

57 'Listen unto our sacrifice, O Mithra! Be thou pleased with our sacrifice, O Mithra! Come and sit at our sacrifice! Accept our libations! Accept them as they have been consecrated! Gather them together with love and lay them in the Garô-nmâna!

58 'Grant us these boons which we beg of thee, O powerful god! in accordance with the words of revelation, namely, riches, strength, and victory, good conscience and bliss, good fame and a good soul; wisdom and the knowledge that gives happiness, the victorious strength given by Ahura, the crushing Ascendant of Asha-Vahista, and conversation (with God) on the Holy Word.

59 'Grant that we, in a good spirit and high spirit, exalted in joy and a good spirit, may smite all our foes; that we, in a good spirit and high spirit, exalted in joy and a good spirit, may smite all our enemies; that we, in a good spirit and high spirit, exalted in joy and a good spirit, may smite all the malice of Daēvas and Men, of the Yâtus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, the blind, and the deaf. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

60 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Whose renown is good, whose shape is good, whose glory is good; who has boons to give at his will, who has pasture-fields to give at his will; harmless to the tiller of the ground, , beneficent; he, of the ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-knowing, undecivable god. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

61 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Firm-legged, a watcher fully awake; valiant, a chief in assemblies; making the waters flow forward; listening to appeals; making the waters run and the plants grow up; ruling over the Karshvares; delivering; happy; undecivable; endowed with many senses; a creature of wisdom;

62 'Who gives neither strength nor vigour to him who has lied unto Mithra; who gives neither glory nor any boon to him who has lied unto Mithra.

63 'Thou takest away the strength from their arms, being angry and all-powerful; thou takest the swiftness from their feet, the eye-sight from their eyes, the hearing from their ears. 'Not the wound of the well-sharpened spear or of the flying arrow reaches that man to whom Mithra comes for help with all the strength of his soul, he, of the ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-knowing, undecivable god. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

64 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who takes possession of the beautiful, wide-expanding law, greatly and powerfully, and whose face looks over all the seven Karshvares of the earth;

65 'Who is swift amongst the swift, liberal amongst the liberal, strong amongst the strong, a chief of assembly amongst the chiefs of assemblies; increase-giving, fatness-giving, cattle-giving, sovereignty-giving, son-giving, cheerfulness-giving, and bliss-giving.

66 'With whom proceed Ashi Vanguhi, and Pârendi on her light chariot, the awful Manly Courage, the awful kingly Glory, the awful sovereign Sky, the awful cursing thought of the wise, the awful Fravashis of the faithful, and he who keeps united together the many faithful worshippers of Mazda. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

67 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who drives along on his high-wheeled chariot, made of a heavenly substance, from the Karshvare of Arezahi to the Karshvare of Hvaniratha, the bright one; accompanied by the wheel of sovereignty, the Glory made by Mazda, and the Victory made by Ahura;

68 'Whose chariot is embraced by the great Ashi Vanguhi; to whom the Law of Mazda opens a way, that he may go easily; whom four heavenly steeds, white, shining, seen afar, beneficent, endowed with knowledge, swiftly carry along the heavenly space 10, while the cursing thought of the wise pushes it forward;

69 'From whom all the Daēvas unseen and the Varenya fiends flee away in fear. Oh! may we never fall across the rush of the angry lord, who goes and rushes from a thousand sides against his foe, he, of the ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-knowing, undecivable god. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

70 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Before whom Verethraghna, made by Ahura, runs opposing the foes in the shape of a boar, a sharp-toothed he-boar, a sharp-jawed boar, that kills at one stroke, pursuing, wrathful, with a dripping face; strong, with iron feet, iron fore-paws, iron weapons, an iron tail, and iron jaws;

71 'Who, eagerly clinging to the fleeing foe, along with Manly Courage, smites the foe in battle, and does not think he has smitten him, nor does he consider it a blow till he has smitten away the marrow and the column of life, the marrow and the spring of existence.

72 'He cuts all the limbs to pieces, and mingles, together with the earth, the bones, hair, brains, and blood of the men who have lied unto Mithra. 'For his brightness and glory, we offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

73 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who, with hands lifted up, rejoicing, cries out, speaking thus:

74 ' "O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent spirit! Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'If men would worship me I with a sacrifice in which I were invoked by my own name, as they worship the other gods with sacrifices in which they are invoked by their own names, then I should come to the faithful at the appointed time; I should come in the appointed time of my beautiful, immortal life."

75 'May we keep our field; may we never be exiles from our field, exiles from our house, exiles from our borough, exiles from our town, exiles from our country.

76 'Thou dashest in pieces the malice of the malicious, the malice of the men of malice; dash thou in pieces the killers of faithful men! 'Thou hast good horses, thou hast a good chariot: thou art bringing help at every appeal, and art powerful.

77 'I will pray unto thee for help, with many consecrations, with good consecrations of libations; with many offerings, with good offerings of libations, that we, abiding in thee, may long inhabit a good abode, full of all the riches that can be wished for.

78 'Thou keepest those nations that tender a good worship to Mithra, the lord of wide pastures; thou dashest in pieces those that delight in havoc. Unto thee will I pray for help: may he come to us for help, the awful, most powerful Mithra, the worshipful and praiseworthy, the glorious lord of nations. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

79 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who made a dwelling for Rashnu, and to whom Rashnu gave all his soul for long friendship;

80 'Thou art a keeper and protector of the dwelling of those who lie not: thou art the maintainer of those who lie not. With thee hath Verethraghna, made by Ahura, contracted the best of all friendships, and thus it is how so many men who have lied unto Mithra, even privily, lie smitten down on the ground. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

81 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who made a dwelling for Rashnu, and to whom Rashnu gave all his soul for long friendship;

82 'To whom Ahura Mazda gave a thousand senses and ten thousand eyes to see. With those eyes and those senses, he watches the man who injures Mithra, the man who lies unto Mithra. Through those eyes and those senses, he is undecivable, he, of the ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-knowing, undecivable god. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

83 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Whom the lord of the country invokes for help, with hands uplifted; 'Whom the lord of the town invokes for help, with hands uplifted;

84 'Whom the lord of the borough invokes for help, with hands uplifted; 'Whom the master of the house invokes for help, with hands uplifted; 'Whom the in danger of death invokes for help, with hands uplifted; 'Whom the poor man, who follows the good law, when wronged and deprived of his rights, invokes for help, with hands uplifted.

85 'The voice of his wailing reaches up to the sky, it goes over the earth all around, it goes over the seven Karshvares, whether he utters his prayer in a low tone of voice or aloud.

86 'The cow driven astray invokes him for help, longing for the stables: "When will that bull, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, bring us back, and make us reach the stables? when will he turn us back to the right way from the den of the Drug where we were driven?"

87 'And to him with whom Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, has been satisfied, he comes with help; and of him with whom Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, has been offended, he crushes down the house, the borough, the town, the province, the country. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

88 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'To whom the enlivening, healing, fair, lordly, golden-eyed Haoma offered up a sacrifice on the highest of the heights, on the Haraiti Barezta, he the undefiled to one undefiled, with undefiled baresma, undefiled libations, and undefiled words;

89 'Whom the holy Ahura Mazda has established as a priest, quick in performing the sacrifice and loud in song. He performed the sacrifice with a loud voice, as a priest quick in sacrifice and loud in song, a priest to Ahura Mazda, a priest to the Ameshas-Spentas. His voice reached up to the sky, went over the earth all around, went over the seven Karshvares.

90 'Who first lifted up Haomas, in a mortar inlaid with stars and made of a heavenly substance. Ahura Mazda longed for him, the Ameshas-Spentas longed for him, for the well-shapen body of him whom the swift-horsed sun awakes for prayer from afar.

91 'Hail to Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who has a thousand ears and ten thousand eyes! Thou art worthy of sacrifice and prayer: mayest thou have sacrifice and prayer in the houses of men! Hail to the man who shall offer thee a sacrifice, with the holy wood in his hand, the baresma in his hand, the holy meat in his hand, the holy mortar in his hand, with his hands well-washed, with the mortar well-washed, with the bundles of baresma tied up, the Haoma uplifted, and the Ahuna Vairya sung through.

92 'The holy Ahura Mazda confessed that religion and so did Vohu-Manô, so did Asha-Vahista, so did Khshathra-Vairya, so did Spenta-Armaiti, so did Haurvatât and Ameretât; and all the Ameshas-Spentas longed for and confessed his religion. The kind Mazda conferred upon him the mastership of the world; and [so did they] who saw thee amongst all creatures the right lord and master of the world, the best cleanser of these creatures.

93 'So mayest thou in both worlds, mayest thou keep us in both worlds, O Mithra, lord of wide pastures! both in this material world and in the world of the spirit, from the fiend of Death, from the fiend Aëshma, from the fiendish hordes, that lift up the spear of havoc, and from the onsets of Aëshma, wherein the evil-doing Aëshma rushes along with Vidôtu, made by the Daēvas.

94 'So mayest thou, O Mithra, lord of wide pastures! give swiftness to our teams, strength to our own bodies, and that we may watch with full success those who hate us, smite down our foes, and destroy at one stroke our adversaries, our enemies and those who hate us. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

95 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who goes over the earth, all her breadth over, after the setting of the sun, touches both ends of this wide, round earth, whose ends lie afar, and surveys everything that is between the earth and the heavens,

96 'Swinging in his hands a club with a hundred knots, a hundred edges, that rushes forwards and fells men down; a club cast out of red brass, of strong, golden brass; the strongest of all weapons, the most victorious of all weapons;

97 'From whom Angra Mainyu, who is all death, flees away in fear; from whom Aëshma, the evil-doing Peshôtana, flees away in fear; from whom the long-handed Bûshyâsta flees away in fear; from whom all the Daēvas unseen and the Varenya fiends flee away in fear.

98 'Oh! may we never fall across the rush of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, when in anger! May Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, never smite us in his anger; he who stands up upon this earth as the strongest of all gods, the most valiant of all gods, the most energetic of all gods, the swiftest of all gods, the most fiend-smiting of all gods, he, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

99 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'From whom all the Daēvas unseen and the Varenya fiends flee away in fear. 'The lord of nations, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, drives forward at the right-hand side of this wide, round earth, whose ends lie afar.

100 'At his right hand drives the good, holy Sraosha; at his left hand drives the tall and strong Rashnu; on all sides around him drive the waters, the plants, and the Fravashis of the faithful.

101 'In his might, he ever brings to them falcon-feathered arrows, and, when driving, he himself comes there, where are nations, enemy to Mithra, he, first and foremost, strikes blows with his club on the horse and his rider; he throws fear and fright upon the horse and his rider. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

102 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'The warrior of the white horse, of the sharp spear, the long spear, the quick arrows; foreseeing and clever;

103 'Whom Ahura Mazda has established to maintain and look over all this moving world, and who maintains and looks over all this moving world; who, never sleeping, wakefully guards the creation of Mazda; who, never sleeping, wakefully maintains the creation of Mazda. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

104 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Whose long arms, strong with Mithra-strength, encompass what he seizes in the easternmost river and what he beats with the westernmost river, what is by the Sanaka of the Rangha and what is by the boundary of the earth.

105 'And thou, O Mithra! encompassing all this around, do thou reach it, all over, with thy arms. 'The man without glory, led astray from the right way, grieves in his heart; the man without glory thinks thus in himself: "That careless Mithra does not see all the evil that is done, nor all the lies that are told."

106 'But I think thus in my heart: "Should the evil thoughts of the earthly man be a hundred times worse, they would not rise so high as the good thoughts of the heavenly Mithra; ' "Should the evil words of the earthly man be a hundred times worse, they would not rise so high as the good words of the heavenly Mithra; ' "Should the evil deeds of the earthly man be a hundred times worse, they would not rise so high as the good deeds of the heavenly Mithra;

107 "'Should the heavenly wisdom in the earthly man be a hundred times greater, it would not rise so high as the heavenly wisdom in the heavenly Mithra; "And thus, should the ears of the earthly man hear a hundred times better, he would not hear so well as the heavenly Mithra, whose ears hears well, who has a thousand senses, and sees every man that tells a lie." 'Mithra stands up in his strength, he drives in the awfulness of royalty, and sends from his eyes beautiful looks that shine from afar, (saying):

108 "'Who will offer me a sacrifice? Who will lie unto me? Who thinks me a god worthy of a good sacrifice? Who thinks me worthy only of a bad sacrifice? To whom shall I, in my might, impart brightness and glory? To whom bodily health? To whom shall I, in my might, impart riches and full wealth? Whom shall I bless by raising him a virtuous offspring?

109 "'To whom shall I give in return, without his thinking of it, the awful sovereignty, beautifully arrayed, with many armies, and most perfect; the sovereignty of an all-powerful tyrant, who fells down heads, valiant, smiting, and unsmitten; who orders chastisement to be done and his order is done at once, which he has ordered in his anger?" 'O Mithra! when thou art offended and not satisfied, he soothes thy mind, and makes Mithra satisfied.

110 "'To whom shall I, in my might, impart sickness and death? To whom shall I impart poverty and sterility? Of whom shall I at one stroke cut off the offspring?

111 "'From whom shall I take away, without his thinking of it, the awful sovereignty, beautifully arrayed, with many armies, and most perfect; the sovereignty of an all-powerful tyrant, who fells down heads, valiant, smiting, and unsmitten; who orders chastisement to be done and his order is done at once, which he has ordered in his anger?" 'O Mithra! while thou art satisfied and not angry, he moves thy heart to anger, and makes Mithra unsatisfied. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

112 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; A warrior with a silver helm, a golden cuirass, who kills with the poniard, strong, valiant, lord of the borough. Bright are the ways of Mithra, by which he goes towards the country, when, wishing well, he turns its plains and vales to pasture grounds,

113 'And then cattle and males come to graze, as many as he wants. 'May Mithra and Ahura, the high gods, come to us for help, when the poniard lifts up its voice aloud, when the nostrils of the horses quiver, when the poniards , when the strings of the bows whistle and shoot sharp arrows; then the brood of those whose libations are hated fall smitten to the ground, with their hair torn off.

114 'So mayest thou, O Mithra, lord of wide pastures! give swiftness to our teams, strength to our own bodies, and that we may watch with full success those who hate us, smite down our foes, and destroy at one stroke our adversaries, our enemies, and those who hate us. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

115 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake. 'O Mithra, lord of wide pastures! thou master of the house, of the borough, of the town, of the country, thou Zarathustrôtema!

116 'Mithra is twentyfold between two friends or two relations; 'Mithra is thirtyfold between two men of the same group; 'Mithra is fortyfold between two partners; 'Mithra is fiftyfold between wife and husband; 'Mithra is sixtyfold between two pupils (of the same master); 'Mithra is seventyfold between the pupil and his master; 'Mithra is eightyfold between the son-in-law and his father-in-law; 'Mithra is ninetyfold between two brothers;

117 'Mithra is a hundredfold between the father and the son; 'Mithra is a thousandfold between two nations; 'Mithra is ten thousandfold when connected with the Law of Mazda, and then he will be every day of victorious strength.

118 'May I come unto thee with a prayer that goes lowly or goes highly! As this sun rises up above the Hara Berezaiti and then fulfils its career, so may I, O Spitama! with a prayer that goes lowly or goes highly, rise up above the will of the fiend Angra Mainyu! 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard 119 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake. 'Offer up a sacrifice unto Mithra, O Spitama! and order thy pupils to do the same. 'Let the worshipper of Mazda sacrifice unto thee with small cattle, with black cattle, with flying birds, gliding forward on wings.

120 'To Mithra all the faithful worshippers of Mazda must give strength and energy with offered and proffered Haomas, which the Zaothr profers unto him and gives in sacrifice. Let the faithful man drink of the libations cleanly prepared, which if he does, if he offers them unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, Mithra will be pleased with him and without anger.'

121 Zarathustra asked him: 'O Ahura Mazda! how shall the faithful man drink the libations cleanly prepared, which if he does and he offers them unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, Mithra will be pleased with him and without anger?'

122 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Let them wash their bodies three days and three nights; let them undergo thirty strokes 3 for the sacrifice and prayer unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures. Let them wash their bodies two days and two nights; let them undergo twenty strokes for the sacrifice and prayer unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures. Let no man drink of these libations who does not know the staota yēsnya: Vispê ratavô. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard 123 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'To whom Ahura Mazda offered up a sacrifice in the shining Garô-mâna.

124 'With his arms lifted up towards Immortality, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, drives forward from the shining Garô-mâna, in a beautiful chariot that drives on, ever-swift, adorned with all sorts of ornaments, and made of gold.

125 'Four stallions draw that chariot, all of the same white colour, living on heavenly food and undying. The hoofs of their fore-feet are shod with gold, the hoofs of their hind-feet are shod with silver; all are yoked to the same pole, and wear the yoke 6 and the cross-beams of the yoke, fastened with hooks 6 of Khshathra vairyô to a beautiful

126 'At his right hand drives Rashnu-Razista, the most beneficent and most well-shapen. 'At his left hand drives the most upright Kista, the holy one, bearing libations in her hands, clothed with white clothes, and white herself; and the cursing thought of the Law of Mazda.

127 'Close by him drives the strong cursing thought of the wise man, opposing foes in the shape of a boar, a sharp-toothed he-boar, a sharp-jawed boar, that kills at one stroke, pursuing, wrathful, with a dripping face, strong and swift to run, and rushing all around. 'Behind him drives Âtar, all in a blaze, and the awful kingly Glory.

128 'On a side of the chariot of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, stand a thousand bows well-made, with a string of cawgut; they go through the heavenly space, they fall through the heavenly space upon the skulls of the Daēvas.

129 'On a side of the chariot of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, stand a thousand vulture-feathered arrows, with a golden mouth, with a horn shaft, with a brass tail, and well-made. They go through the heavenly space, they fall through the heavenly space upon the skulls of the Daēvas.

130 'On a side of the chariot of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, stand a thousand spears well-made and sharp-piercing. They go through the heavenly space, they fall through the heavenly space upon the skulls of the Daēvas. 'On a side of the chariot of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, stand a thousand steel-hammers, two-edged, well-made. They go through the heavenly space, they fall through the heavenly space upon the skulls of the Daēvas.

131 'On a side of the chariot of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, stand a thousand swords, two-edged and well-made. They go through the heavenly space, they fall through the heavenly space upon the skulls of the Daēvas. 'On a side of the chariot of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, stand a thousand maces of iron, well-made. They go through the heavenly space, they fall through the heavenly space upon the skulls of the Daēvas.

132 'On a side of the chariot of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, stands a beautiful well-falling club, with a hundred knots, a hundred edges, that rushes forward and fells men down; a club cast out of red brass, of strong, golden brass; the strongest of all weapons, the most victorious of all weapons. It goes through the heavenly space, it falls through the heavenly space upon the skulls of the Daēvas.

133 'After he has smitten the Daēvas, after he has smitten down the men who lied unto Mithra, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, drives forward through Arezahê and Savahê, through Fradadhafshu and Vidadhafshu, through Vourubaresti and Vourugaresti, through this our Karshvare, the bright Hvaniratha.

134 'Angra Mainyu, who is all death, flees away in fear; Aëshma, the evil-doing Peshotanu, flees away in fear; the long-handed Bûshyâsta flees away in fear; all the Daēvas unseem and the Varenya fiends flee away in fear.

135 'Oh! may we never fall across the rush of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, when in anger! May Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, never smite us in his anger; he who stands up upon this earth as the strongest of all gods, the most valiant of all gods, the most energetic of all gods, the swiftest of all gods, the most fiend-smiting of all gods, he, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures. For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard 136 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'For whom white stallions, yoked to his chariot, draw it, on one golden wheel, with a full shining axle.

137 'If Mithra takes his libations to his own dwelling, "Happy that man, I think,"—said Ahura Mazda,—"O holy Zarathustra! for whom a holy priest, as pious as any in the world, who is the Word incarnate, offers up a sacrifice unto Mithra with bundles of baresma and with the [proper] words. "Straight to that man, I think, will Mithra come, to visit his dwelling,

138 "'When Mithra's boons will come to him, as he follows God's teaching, and thinks according to God's teaching. "Woe to that man, I think,"—said Ahura Mazda,—"O holy Zarathustra! for whom an unholy priest, not pious, who is not the Word incarnate, stands behind the baresma, however full may be the bundles of baresma he ties, however long may be the sacrifice he performs."

139 'He does not delight Ahura Mazda, nor the other Ameshâ-Spentas, nor Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, he who thus scorns Mazda, and the other Ameshâ-Spentas, and Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, and the Law, and Rashnu, and Arstât, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

140 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake. I will offer up a sacrifice unto the good Mithra, O Spitama! unto the strong, heavenly god, who is foremost, highly merciful, and peerless; whose house is above, a stout and strong warrior;

141 'Victorious and armed with a well-fashioned weapon, watchful in darkness and undecivable. He is the stoutest of the stoutest, he is the strongest of the strongest, he is the most intelligent of the gods, he is victorious and endowed with Glory; he, of the ten thousand eyes, of the ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-knowing, undecivable god. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

142 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, sleepless, and ever awake; 'Who, with his manifold knowledge, powerfully increases the creation of Spenta Mainyu, and is a well-created and most great Yazata, self-shining like the moon, when he makes his own body shine;

143 'Whose face is flashing with light like the face of the star Tistrya; whose chariot is embraced by that goddess who is foremost amongst those who have no deceit in them, O Spitama! who is fairer than any creature in the world, and full of light to shine. I will worship that chariot, wrought by the Maker, Ahura Mazda, inlaid with stars and made of a heavenly substance; (the chariot) of Mithra, who has ten thousand spies, the powerful, all-knowing, undecivable god. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard

144 'We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who is truth-speaking, a chief in assemblies, with a thousand ears, well-shapen, with a thousand eyes, high, with full knowledge, strong, sleepless, and ever awake. 'We sacrifice unto the Mithra around countries; 'We sacrifice unto the Mithra within countries; 'We sacrifice unto the Mithra in this country; 'We sacrifice unto the Mithra above countries; 'We sacrifice unto the Mithra under countries; 'We sacrifice unto the Mithra before countries; 'We sacrifice unto the Mithra behind countries.

145 'We sacrifice unto Mithra and Ahura, the two great, imperishable, holy gods; and unto the stars, and the moon, and the sun, with the trees that yield up baresma. We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of all countries. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard, namely, unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures. 'Yathâ ahû vairyô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness 'I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who has a thousand ears, ten thousand eyes, a Yazata invoked by his own name; and that of Râma Hvâstra. 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good '[Give] unto that man brightness and glory, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones!'

11. SRÖSH YAST HĀDHÖKHT.

Unto the holy, strong Sraosha, who is the incarnate Word, a mighty-speared and lordly god, Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathā ahū vairiō: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

1 We sacrifice unto the holy, tall-formed, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world increase, the holy and master of holiness. Good prayer, excellent prayer to the worlds, O Zarathustra!

2 This it is that takes away the friendship of the fiend and fiends, of the he-fiend and of the she-fiend; it turns away in giddiness their eyes, minds, ears, hands, feet, mouths, and tongues; as good prayer, without deceit and without harm, is Manly Courage, and turns away the Drug.

3 The holy Sraosha, the best protector of the poor, is fiend-smiting; he is the best smiter of the Drug. The faithful one who pronounces most words of blessing is the most victorious in victory; the Māthra Spenta takes best the unseen Drug away. The Ahuna Vairya is the best fiend-smiter among all spells; the word of truth is the fighter that is the best of all fiend-smiters. The Law of the worshippers of Mazda is the truest giver of all the good things, of all those that are the offspring of the good principle; and so is the Law of Zarathustra.

4 And he who should pronounce that word, O Zarathustra! either a man or a woman, with a mind all intent on holiness, with words all intent on holiness, with deeds all intent on holiness, when he is in fear either of high waters or of the darkness of a rainy night; Or at the fords of a river, or at the branching-off of roads; Or in the meeting together of the faithful, or the rushing together of the worshippers of the Daēvas;

5 Whether on the road or in the law he has to fear, not in that day nor in that night shall the tormenting fiend, who wants to torment him, prevail to throw upon him the look of his evil eye, and the malice of the thief who carries off cattle shall not reach him.

6 Pronounce then that word, O Zarathustra! that word to be spoken, when thou fall upon the idolaters and thieves and Daēvas rushing together. Then the malice of the wicked worshippers of the Daēvas, of the Yātus and their followers, of the Pairikas and their followers, will be affrighted and rush away. Down are the Daēvas! Down are the Daēva-worshippers, and they take back their mouths from biting.

7 And therefore we take around us the holy-natured Sraosha, the holy, the fiend-smiter, as one does with shepherds' dogs; therefore we sacrifice unto the holy-natured Sraosha, the holy, the fiend-smiter, with good thoughts, good words, and good deeds.

8 For his brightness and glory, for his strength and victorious power, for his offering sacrifices unto the gods, I will offer him a sacrifice worth being heard. I will offer up libations unto the holy Sraosha, unto the great Ashi Vanguhi, and unto Nairyō-sangha, the tall-formed. So may the holy Sraosha, the fiend-smiter, come to us for help!

9 We worship the holy Sraosha; we worship the great master, Ahura Mazda, who is supreme in holiness, who is the foremost to do deeds of holiness. We worship all the words of Zarathustra, and all the good deeds, those done and those to be done. Yēnhē hātām: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

10 We sacrifice unto the holy, tall-formed, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world increase, the holy and master of holiness; Who strikes the evil-doing man, who strikes the evil-doing woman; who smites the fiendish Drug, and is most strong and world-destroying; who maintains and looks over all this moving world;

11 Who, never sleeping, wakefully guards the creation of Mazda; who, never sleeping, wakefully maintains the creation of Mazda; who protects all the material world with his club uplifted, from the hour when the sun is down;

12 Who never more did enjoy sleep from the time when the two Spirits made the world, namely, the good Spirit and the evil One; who every day, every night, fights with the Māzainya Daēvas.

13 He bows not for fear and fright before the Daēvas: before him all the Daēvas bow for fear and fright reluctantly, and rush away to darkness. For his brightness and glory, for his strength and victorious power

14 Yathā ahū vairiō: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness We sacrifice unto the holy, tall-formed, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world increase, the holy and master of holiness; Who with peace and friendship watches the Drug and the most beneficent Spirit: so that the Ameshaspentas may go along the seven Karshvares of the earth; who is the teacher of the Law: he himself was taught it by Ahura Mazda, the holy One. For his brightness and glory, for his strength and victorious power

15 Yathā ahū vairiō: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness We sacrifice unto the holy, tall-formed, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world increase, the holy and master of holiness; Whom the holy Ahura Mazda has created to withstand Aēshma, the fiend of the wounding spear; we sacrifice unto Peace, whose breath is friendly, and unto the two withstanders of sin and guilt,

16 The friends of the holy Sraosha; The friends of Rashnu Razista; The friends of the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda; The friends of Arstāt, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase, who makes the world prosper; The friends of Ashi Vanguhi; The friends of the good Kisti; The friends of the most right Kista;

17 The friends of all gods; The friends of the Māthra Spenta; The friends of the fiend-destroying Law; The friends of the long-traditional teaching; The friends of the Ameshaspentas; The friends of ourselves, the Saoshyants I, the two-footed part of the holy creation; The friends of all the beings of the holy world. For his brightness and glory, for his strength and victorious power

18 Yathā ahū vairiō: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness We sacrifice unto the holy, tall-formed, fiend-smiting Sraosha, who makes the world increase, the holy and master of holiness; The first [Sraosha], the next, the middle, and the highest; with the first sacrifice, with the next, with the middle, and with the highest. We sacrifice unto all [the moments] of the holy and strong Sraosha, who is the incarnate Word;

19 The strong Sraosha, of the manly courage, the warrior of the strong arms, who breaks the skulls of the Daēvas; who smites with heavy blows and is strong to smite; the holy Sraosha, who smites with heavy blows; we sacrifice unto the crushing Ascendant of both the holy Sraosha and Arsti.

20 We sacrifice for all the houses protected by Sraosha, where the holy Sraosha is dear and friendly treated and satisfied, as well as the faithful man, rich in good thoughts, rich in good words, rich in good deeds.

21 We sacrifice unto the body of the holy Sraosha; We sacrifice unto the body of Rashnu Razista; We sacrifice unto the body of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures; We sacrifice unto the body of the holy wind; We sacrifice unto the body of the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda; We sacrifice unto the body of Arstāt, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase, who makes the world prosper; We sacrifice unto the body of Ashi Vanguhi; We sacrifice unto the body of the good Kisti; We sacrifice unto the body of the most right Kista; We sacrifice unto the bodies of all the gods;

22 We sacrifice unto the body of the Māthra Spenta; We sacrifice unto the body of the fiend-destroying Law; We sacrifice unto the body of the long-traditional teaching; We sacrifice unto the bodies of the Ameshaspentas; We sacrifice unto the bodies of ourselves, the Saoshyants, the two-footed part of the holy creation; We sacrifice unto the bodies of all the beings of the holy world. For his brightness and glory, for his strength and victorious power

23 Yathā ahū vairiō: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and prayer, the strength and vigour of the holy, strong Sraosha, who is the incarnate Word, a mighty-speared and lordly god. [Give] unto that man brightness and glory, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones!

13. FARVARDĪN YAST.

Unto the awful, overpowering Fravashis of the faithful; unto the Fravashis of the men of the primitive law; unto the Fravashis of the next-of-kin, Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification.

Yathā ahū vairiō: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

1 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'Do thou proclaim, O pure Zarathustra! the vigour and strength, the glory, the help and the joy that are in the Fravashis of the faithful, the awful and overpowering Fravashis; do thou tell how they come to help me, how they bring assistance unto me, the awful Fravashis of the faithful.'

2 'Through their brightness and glory, O Zarathustra! I maintain that sky, there above, shining and seen afar, and encompassing this earth all around.

3 'It looks like a palace, that stands built of a heavenly substance, firmly established, with ends that lie afar, shining in its body of ruby over the three-thirds (of the earth); it is like a garment inlaid with stars, made of a heavenly substance, that Mazda puts on, along with Mithra and Rashnu and Spenta-Armaiti, and on no side can the eye perceive the end of it.

4 'Through their brightness and glory, O Zarathustra! I maintain Ardvī Sara Anāhita, the wide-expanding and health-giving, who hates the Daēvas and obeys the laws of Ahura, who is worthy of sacrifice in the material world, worthy of prayer in the material world; the life-increasing and holy, the flocks-increasing and holy, the fold-increasing and holy, the wealth-increasing and holy, the country-increasing and holy;

5 'Who makes the seed of all males pure, who makes the womb of all females pure for bringing forth, who makes all females bring forth in safety, who puts milk in the breasts of all females in the right measure and the right quality;

6 'The large river, known afar, that is as large as the whole of all the waters that run along the earth; that runs powerfully from the height Hukairyā down to the sea Vouru-Kasha.

7 'All the shores of the sea Vouru-Kasha are boiling over, all the middle of it is boiling over, when she runs down there, when she streams down there, she, Ardvī Sūra Anāhita, who has a thousand cells and a thousand channels; the extent of each of those cells, of each of those channels, is as much as a man can ride in forty days, riding on a good horse.

8 'From this river of mine alone flow all the waters that spread all over the seven Karshvares; this river of mine alone goes on bringing waters, both in summer and in winter. This river of mine purifies the seed in males, the womb in females, the milk in females' breasts.

9 'Through their brightness and glory, O Zarathustra! I maintain the wide earth made by Ahura, the large and broad earth, that bears so much that is fine, that bears all the bodily world, the live and the dead, and the high mountains, rich in pastures and waters;

10 'Upon which run the many streams and rivers; upon which the many kinds of plants grow up from the ground, to nourish animals and men, to nourish the Aryan nations, to nourish the five kinds of animals, and to help the faithful.

11 'Through their brightness and glory, O Zarathustra! I maintain in the womb the child that has been conceived, so that it does not die from the assaults of Vidōtu, and I develop in it the bones, the hair, the, the entrails, the feet, and the sexual organs.

12 'Had not the awful Fravashis of the faithful given help unto me, those animals and men of mine, of which there are such excellent kinds, would not subsist; strength would belong to the Drug, the dominion would belong to the Drug, the material world would belong to the Drug.

13 'Between the earth and the sky the immaterial creatures would be harassed by the Drug; between the earth and the sky the immaterial creatures would be smitten by the Drug; and never afterwards would Angra-Mainyu give way to the blows of Spenta-Mainyu. 14 'Through their brightness and glory the waters run and flow forward from the never-failing springs; through their brightness and glory the plants grow up from the earth, by the never-failing springs; through their brightness and glory the winds blow, driving down the clouds towards the never-failing springs.

15 'Through their brightness and glory the females conceive offspring; through their brightness and glory they bring forth in safety; it is through their brightness and glory when they become blessed with children.

16 'Through their brightness and glory a man is born who is a chief in assemblies and meetings, who listens well to the (holy) words, whom Wisdom holds dear, and who returns a victor from discussions with Gaotema, the heretic. 'Through their brightness and glory the sun goes his way; through their brightness and glory the moon goes her way; through their brightness and glory the stars go their way.

17 'In fearful battles they are the wisest for help, the Fravashis of the faithful. 'The most powerful amongst the Fravashis of the faithful, O Spitama! are those of the men of the primitive law or those of the Saoshyants not yet born, who are to restore the world. Of the Others, the Fravashis of the living faithful are more powerful, O Zarathustra! than those of the dead, O Spitama!

18 'And the man who in life shall treat the Fravashis of the faithful well, will become a ruler of the country with full power, and a chief most strong; so shall any man of you become, who shall treat Mithra well, the lord of wide pastures, and Arstāt, who makes the world grow, who makes the world increase.

19 'Thus do I proclaim unto thee, O pure Spitama! the vigour and strength, the glory, the help, and the joy that are in the Fravashis of the faithful, the awful and overpowering Fravashis; and how they come to help me, how they bring assistance unto me, the awful Fravashis of the faithful.'

20 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'If in this material world, O Spitama Zarathustra! thou happenest to come upon frightful roads, full of dangers and fears, O Zarathustra! and thou fearest for thyself, then do thou recite these words, then proclaim these fiend-smiting words, O Zarathustra!

21 'I praise, I invoke, I meditate upon, and we sacrifice unto the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful. We worship the Fravashis of the masters of the houses, those of the lords of the boroughs, those of the lords of the towns, those of the lords of the countries, those of the Zarathustrōtēmas; the Fravashis of those that are, the Fravashis of those that have been, the Fravashis of those that will be; all the Fravashis of all nations, and most friendly the Fravashis of the friendly nations;

22 'Who maintain the sky, who maintain the waters, who maintain the earth, who maintain the cattle, who maintain in the womb the child that has been conceived, so that it does not die from the assaults of Vidōtu, and develop in it the bones, the hair, the, the entrails, the feet, and the sexual organs;

23 'Who are much-bringing, who move with awfulness, well-moving, swiftly moving, quickly moving, who move when invoked; who are to be invoked in the conquest of good, who are to be invoked in fights against foes, who are to be invoked in battles;

24 "Who give victory to their invoker, who give boons to their lover, who give health to the sick man, who give good Glory to the faithful man that brings libations and invokes them with a sacrifice and words of propitiation;

25 "Who turn to that side where are faithful men, most devoted to holiness, and where is the greatest piety, where the faithful man is rejoiced, and where the faithful man is not ill-treated."

26 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who are the mightiest of drivers, the lightest of those driving forwards, the slowest of the retiring, the safest of all bridges, the least-erring of all weapons and arms, and who never turn their backs.

27 At once, wherever they come, we worship them, the good ones, the excellent ones, the good, the strong, the beneficent Fravashis of the faithful. They are to be invoked when the bundles of baresma are tied; they are to be invoked in fights against foes, in battles, and there where gallant men strive to conquer foes.

28 Mazda invoked them for help, when he fixed the sky and the waters and the earth and the plants; when Spenta-Mainyu fixed the sky, when he fixed the waters, when the earth, when the cattle, when the plants, when the child conceived in the womb, so that it should not die from the assaults of Vidôtu, and developed in it the bones, the hair, the . . . , the entrails, the feet, and the sexual organs.

29 Spenta-Mainyu maintained the sky, and they sustained it from below, they, the strong Fravashis, who sit in silence, gazing with sharp looks; whose eyes and ears are powerful, who bring long joy, high and high-girded; well-moving and moving afar, loud-snorting, possessing riches and a high renown.

30 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful; whose friendship is good, and who know how to benefit; whose friendship lasts long; who like to stay in the abode where they are not harmed by its dwellers; who are good, beautiful afar 3, health-giving, of high renown, conquering in battle, and who never do harm first.

31 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful; whose will is dreadful unto those who vex them; powerfully working and most beneficent; who in battle break the dread arms of their foes and haters.

32 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful; liberal, valiant, and full of strength, not to be seized by thought, welfare-giving, kind, and health-giving, following with Ashi's remedies, as far as the earth extends, as the rivers stretch, as the sun rises.

33 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who gallantly and bravely fight, causing havoc, wounding, breaking to pieces all the malice of the malicious, Daëvas and men, and smiting powerfully in battle, at their wish and will. 34 You kindly deliver the Victory made by Ahura, and the crushing Ascendant, most beneficently, to those countries where you, the good ones, unharmed and rejoiced, unoppressed and unoffended, have been held worthy of sacrifice and prayer, and proceed the way of your wish.

35 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, of high renown, smiting in battle, most strong, shield-bearing and harmless to those who are true, whom both the pursuing and the fleeing invoke for help: the pursuer invokes them for a swift race, and for a swift race does the flee invoke them;

36 Who turn to that side where are faithful men, most devoted to holiness, and where is the greatest piety, where the faithful man is rejoiced, and where the faithful man is not ill-treated.

37 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who form many battalions, girded with weapons, lifting up spears, and full of sheen; who in fearful battles come rushing along where the gallant heroes go and assail the Dânus.

38 There you destroy the victorious strength of the Turanian Dânus; there you destroy the malice of the Turanian Dânus; through you the chiefs are of high intellect and most successful; they, the gallant heroes the gallant Saoshyants, the gallant conquerors of the offspring of the Dânus chiefs of myriads, who wound with stones.

39 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who rout the two wings of an army standing in battle array, who make the centre swerve, and swiftly pursue onwards, to help the faithful and to distress the doers of evil deeds.

40 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful; awful, overpowering, and victorious, smiting in battle, sorely wounding, blowing away (the foes), moving along to and fro, of good renown, fair of body, godly of soul, and holy; who give victory to their invoker, who give boons to their lover, who give health to the sick man;

41 Who give good glory to him who worships them with a sacrifice, as that man did worship them, the holy Zarathustra, the chief of the material world, the head of the two-footed race, in whatever struggle he had to enter, in whatever distress he did fear; 42 Who, when well invoked, enjoy bliss in the heavens; who, when well invoked, come forward from the heavens, who are the heads of that sky above, possessing the well-shapen Strength, the Victory made by Ahura, the crushing Ascendant, and Welfare, the wealth-bringing, boon-bringing, holy, well fed, worthy of sacrifice and prayer in the perfection of holiness.

43 They shed Satavaësa between the earth and the sky, him to whom the waters belong, who listens to appeals and makes the waters flow and the plants grow up, to nourish animals and men, to nourish the Aryan nations, to nourish the five kinds of animals, and to help the faithful.

44 Satavaësa comes down and flows between the earth and the sky, he to whom the waters belong, who listens to appeals and makes the waters and the plants grow up, fair, radiant, and full of light, to nourish animals and men, to nourish the Aryan nations, to nourish the five kinds of animals, and to help the faithful.

45 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful; with helms of brass, with weapons of brass, with armour of brass; who struggle in the fights for victory in garments of light, arraying the battles and bringing them forwards, to kill thousands of Daëvas. When the wind blows from behind them and brings their breath unto men, 46 Then men know where blows the breath of victory: and they pay pious homage unto the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, with their hearts prepared and their arms uplifted.

47 Whichever side they have been first worshipped in the fulness of faith of a devoted heart, to that side turn the awful Fravashis of the faithful, along with Mithra and Rashnu and the awful cursing thought of the wise and the victorious wind.

48 And those nations are smitten at one stroke by their fifties and their hundreds, by their hundreds and their thousands, by their thousands and their tens of thousands, by their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads, against which turn the awful Fravashis of the faithful, along with Mithra and Rashnu, and the awful cursing thought of the wise and the victorious wind.

49 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who come and go through the borough at the time of the Hamaspathmaêdha; they go along there for ten nights, asking thus:

50 'Who will praise us? Who will offer us a sacrifice? Who will meditate upon us? Who will bless us? Who will receive us with meat and clothes in his hand and with a prayer worthy of bliss? Of which of us will the name be taken for invocation? Of which of you will the soul be worshipped by you with a sacrifice? To whom will this gift of ours be given, that he may have never-failing food for ever and ever?'

51 And the man who offers them up a sacrifice, with meat and clothes in his hand, with a prayer worthy of bliss, the awful Fravashis of the faithful, satisfied, unharmed, and unoffended, bless thus:

52 'May there be in this house flocks of animals and men! May there be a swift horse and a solid chariot! May there be a man who knows how to praise God and rule in an assembly, who will offer us sacrifices with meat and clothes in his hand, and with a prayer worthy of bliss.'

53 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who show beautiful paths to the waters, made by Mazda, which had stood before for a long time in the same place without flowing.

54 And now they flow along the path made by Mazda, along the way made by the gods, the watery way appointed to them, at the wish of Ahura Mazda, at the wish of the Amesha-Spentas.

55 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who show a beautiful growth to the fertile places, which had stood before for a long time in the same place without growing:

56 And now they grow up along the path made by Mazda, along the way made by the gods, in the time appointed to them, at the wish of Ahura Mazda, at the wish of the Amesha-Spentas.

57 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who showed their paths to the stars, the moon, the sun, and the endless lights, that had stood before for a long time in the same place, without moving forwards, through the oppression of the Daëvas and the assaults of the Daëvas.

58 And now they move around in their far-revolving circle for ever, till they come to the time of the good restoration of the world.

59 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who watch over the bright sea Vouru-Kasha, to the number of ninety thousand, and nine thousand, and nine hundred, and ninety-nine.

60 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who watch over the stars Haptôiringa, to the number of ninety thousand, and nine thousand, and nine hundred, and ninety-nine.

61 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who watch over the body of Keresâspa, the son of Sâma, the club-bearer with plaited hair, to the number of ninety thousand, and nine thousand, and nine hundred, and ninety-nine.

62 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who watch over the seed of the holy Zarathustra 2, to the number of ninety thousand, and nine thousand, and nine hundred, and ninety-nine.

63 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who fight at the right hand of the reigning lord, if he rejoices the faithful and if the awful Fravashis of the faithful are not hurt by him, if they are rejoiced by him, unharmed and unoffended.

64 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who are greater, who are stronger, who are swifter, who are more powerful, who are more victorious, who are more healing, who are more effective than can be expressed by words; who run by tens of thousands into the midst of the Myzadas.

65 And when the waters come up from the sea Vouru-Kasha, O Spitama Zarathustra! along with the Glory made by Mazda, then forwards come the awful Fravashis of the faithful, many and many hundreds, many and many thousands, many and many tens of thousands, 66 Seeking water for their own kindred, for their own borough, for their own town, for their own country, and saying thus: 'May our own country have a good store and full joy!'

67 They fight in the battles that are fought in their own place and land, each according to the place and house where he dwelt (of yore): they look like a gallant warrior who, girded up and watchful, fights for the hoard he has treasured up.

68 And those of them who win bring waters to their own kindred, to their own borough, to their own town, to their own country, saying thus: 'May my country grow and increase!'

69 And when the all-powerful sovereign of a country has been surprised by his foes and haters, he invokes them, the awful Fravashis of the faithful.

70 And they come to his help, if they have not been hurt by him, if they have been rejoiced by him, if they have not been harmed nor offended, the awful Fravashis of the faithful: they come flying unto him, it seems as if they were well-winged birds.

71 They come in as a weapon and as a shield, to keep him behind and to keep him in front, from the Drug unseen, from the female Varenya fiend, from the evil-doer bent on mischief, and from that fiend who is all death, Angra Mainyu. It will be as if there were a thousand men watching over one man;

72 So that neither the sword well-thrust, neither the club well-falling, nor the arrow well-shot, nor the spear well-darted, nor the stones flung from the arm shall destroy him.

73 They come on this side, they come on that side, never resting, the good, powerful, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, asking for help thus: 'Who will praise us? Who will offer us a sacrifice? Who will meditate upon us? Who will bless us? Who will receive us with meat and clothes in his hand and with a prayer worthy of bliss? Of which of us will the name be taken for invocation? Of which of you will the soul be worshipped by you with a sacrifice? To whom will that gift of ours be given, that he may have never-failing food for ever and ever?'

74 We worship the perception; we worship the intellect; we worship the conscience; we worship those of the Saoshyants; We worship the souls; those of the tame animals; those of the wild animals; those of the animals that live in the waters; those of the animals that live under the ground; those of the flying ones; those of the running ones; those of the grazing ones. We worship their Fravashis.

75 We worship the Fravashis. We worship them, the liberal; We worship them, the valiant; we worship them, the most valiant; We worship them, the beneficent; we worship them, the most beneficent; We worship them, the powerful; We worship them, the most strong; We worship them, the light; we worship them, the most light; We worship them, the effective; we worship them, the most effective.

76 They are the most effective amongst the creatures of the two Spirits, they the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, who stood holding fast when the two Spirits created the world, the Good Spirit and the Evil One.

77 When Angra Mainyu broke into the creation of the good holiness, then came in across Vohû Manô and Âtar.

78 They destroyed the malice of the fiend Angra Mainyu, so that the waters did not stop flowing nor did the plants stop growing; but at once the most beneficent waters of the creator and ruler, Ahura Mazda, flowed forward and his plants went on growing.

79 We worship all the waters; We worship all the plants; We worship all the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful. We worship the waters by their names; We worship the plants by their names; We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful by their names.

80 Of all those ancient Fravashis, we worship the Fravashi of Ahura Mazda; who is the greatest, the best, the fairest, the most solid, the wisest, the finest of body and supreme in holiness;

81 Whose soul is the Māthra Spenta, who is white, shining, seen afar; and we worship the beautiful forms, the active forms wherewith he clothes the Amesha-Spentas; we worship the swift-horsed sun.

82 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the Amesha-Spentas, the bright ones, whose looks perform what they wish, the tall, quickly coming to do, strong, and lordly, who are undecaying and holy;

83 Who are all seven of one thought, who are all seven of one speech, who are all seven of one deed; whose thought is the same, whose speech is the same, whose deed is the same, whose father and commander is the same, namely, the Maker, Ahura Mazda;

84 Who see one another's soul thinking of good thoughts, thinking of good words, thinking of good deeds, thinking of Garō-nmāna, and whose ways are shining as they go down towards the libations.

85 We worship the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis: that of the most rejoicing fire, the beneficent and assembly-making; and that of the holy, strong Sraosha, who is the incarnate Word, a mighty-speared and lordly god; and that of Nairyō-sangha.

86 And that of Rashnu Razista; That of Mithra, the lord of wide pastures; That of the Māthra-Spenta; That of the sky; That of the waters; That of the earth; That of the plants; That of the Bull; That of the living man; That of the holy creation.

87 We worship the Fravashi of Gaya Maretan, who first listened unto the thought and teaching of Ahura Mazda; of whom Ahura formed the race of the Aryan nations, the seed of the Aryan nations. We worship the piety and the Fravashi of the holy Zarathustra;

88 Who first thought what is good, who first spoke what is good, who first did what is good; who was the first Priest, the first Warrior, the first Plougher of the ground; who first knew and first taught; who first possessed and first took possession of the Bull, of Holiness, of the Word, the obedience to the Word, and dominion, and all the good things made by Mazda, that are the offspring of the good Principle;

89 Who was the first Priest, the first Warrior, the first Plougher of the ground; who first took the turning of the wheel from the hands of the Daēva and of the cold-hearted man; who first in the material world pronounced the praise of Asha, thus bringing the Daēvas to naught, and confessed himself a worshipper of Mazda, a follower of Zarathustra, one who hates the Daēvas, and obeys the laws of Ahura.

90 Who first in the material world said the word that destroys the Daēvas, the law of Ahura; who first in the material world proclaimed the word that destroys the Daēvas, the law of Ahura; who first in the material world declared all the creation of the Daēvas unworthy of sacrifice and prayer; who was strong, giving all the good things of life, the first bearer of the Law amongst the nations;

91 In whom was heard the whole Māthra, the word of holiness; who was the lord and master of the world, the praiser of the most great, most good and most fair Asha; who had a revelation of the Law, that most excellent of all beings;

92 For whom the Amesha-Spentas longed, in one accord with the sun, in the fulness of faith of a devoted heart; they longed for him, as the lord and master of the world, as the praiser of the most great, most good, and most fair Asha, as having a revelation of the Law, that most excellent of all beings;

93 In whose birth and growth the waters and the plants rejoiced; in whose birth and growth the waters and the plants grew; in whose birth and growth all the creatures of the good creations cried out, Hail!

94 'Hail to us! for he is born, the Âthravan, Spitama Zarathustra. Zarathustra will offer us sacrifices with libations and bundles of baresma; and there will the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda come and spread through all the seven Karshvares of the earth.

95 'There will Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, increase all the excellences of our countries, and allay their troubles; there will the powerful Apām-Napāt increase all the excellences of our countries, and allay their troubles.' We worship the piety and Fravashi of Maidhyō-maungha, the son of Arāsti, who first listened unto the word and teaching of Zarathustra.

96 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Asmō-hvanvant; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Asan-hvanvant. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Gavayan. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Parshat-gaus, the son of Frāta; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vohvasti, the son of Snaoya; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Isvat, the son of Varāza.

97 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Saēna, the son of Ahūm-stut, who first appeared upon this earth with a hundred pupils. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Fradhidaia. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Usmānara, the son of Paēshata. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vohu-raokah, the son of Frānya; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Ashō-raokah, the son of Frānya; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Varesmō-raokah, the son of Frānya.

98 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Isat-vāstra, the son of Zarathustra; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Urvat-nara, the son of Zarathustra; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Hvare-kithra, the son of Zarathustra. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Daēvō-tbis, the son of Takhma. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Thrimithtwāt, the son of Spitāma. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Daungha, the son of Zairita.

99 We worship the Fravashi of the holy king Vistāspa 3; the gallant one, who was the incarnate Word, the mighty-speared, and lordly one; who, driving the Drug before him, sought wide room for the holy religion; who, driving the Drug before him, made wide room for the holy religion, who made himself the arm and support of this law of Ahura, of this law of Zarathustra.

100 Who took her, standing bound, from the hands of the Hunus, and established her to sit in the middle [of the world], high ruling, never falling back, holy, nourished with plenty of cattle and pastures, blessed with plenty of cattle and pastures.

101 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Zairivairi; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Yuktavairi; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Srīraokhsan; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Keresaoakhsan; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vanāra; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Varāza; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Būgi-sravah. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Berez-y-arsti; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Tizyarsi; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Perethu-arsti; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vizyarsi.

102 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Naptya; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vazāspa; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Habāspa. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vistauru, the son of Naotara. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Fras-hām-vareta; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Frashōkareta. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Âtare-vanu; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Âtare-pāta; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Âtare-dāta; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Âtare-kithra; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Âtare-hvarenah; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Âtare-savah; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Âtare-zantu; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Âtare-danghu.

103 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Huskyaothna; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Piskyaothna; We worship the Fravashi of the holy and gallant Spentō-dāta. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Bastavairi; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Kavārezem. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Frashastra, the son of Hvōva; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Gāmāspa, the son of Hvōva; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Avāraostri.

104 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Huskyaothna, the son of Frashastra; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Hvādaēna, the son of Frashastra. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Hanghaurvaugh, the son of Gāmāspa; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Varesna, the son of Hanghaurvaugh. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vohu-nemah, the son of Avāraostri. To withstand evil dreams, to withstand evil visions, to withstand evil, to withstand the evil Pairikas.

105 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Māthravāka, the son of Simāēzi, the Aēthrapati, the Hamidhpati, who was able to smite down most of the evil, unfaithful Ashemaoghas, that shout the hymns, and acknowledge no lord and no master, the dreadful ones whose Fravashis are to be broken; to withstand the evil done by the faithful.

106 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Ashastu, the son of Maidhyō-maungha. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Avarethrabah, the son of Rāstare-vaghat. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Būgra, the son of Dāzgarāspa. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Zburvant; We worship the Fravashi of the holy and gallant Karesna, the son of Zburvant; who was the incarnate Word, mighty-speared and lordly;

107 In whose house did walk the good, beautiful, shining Ashi Vanguhi, in the shape of a maid fair of body, most strong, tall-formed, high-up girded, pure, nobly born of a glorious seed; who, rushing to the battle, knew how to make room for himself with his own arms; who, rushing to the battle, knew how to fight the foe with his own arms.

108 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vīrāspa, the son of Karesna; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Zāta, the son of Karesna; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Frāyaotha, the son of Karesna. We worship the Fravashi of the holy and good Arshya; Arshya, the chief in assemblies, the most energetic of the worshippers of Mazda. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Dārayat-ratha; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Frāyat-ratha; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Skārayat-ratha.

109 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Arsvant; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Vyarsvant; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Paityarsvant. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Amru; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Kamru. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Drātha; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Patidrātha; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Paitivangha. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Frashāvakhsha. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Nemōvangu, the son of Vāēdhayangha.

110 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Visadha. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Ashāvangu, the son of Bivandangha; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Garō-danghu, the son of Pairistīra; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Neremyazdana, the son of Âthwyōza. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Berezisnu, the son of Ara; We worship the Fravashi of the holy Kasupatu, the son of Ara. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Frya. We worship the Fravashi of the holy ASTVAT-ERETA.

111 We worship the Fravashi of the holy Gaopi-vangu. We worship the Fravashi of the holy and gallant Hām-baretar vanghvām. We worship the Fravashi of the holy Staotar-Vahistahē-Ashyehē. 142 We worship the Fravashi of the holy maid Vanghu-fedhri; We worship the Fravashi of the holy maid Eredat-fedhri, who is called Vispa-taurvairi. She is Vispa-taurvairi (the all-destroying) because she will bring him forth, who will destroy the malice of Daêvas and men, to withstand the evil done by the Gahi.

143 We worship the Fravashis of the holy men in the Aryan countries; We worship the Fravashis of the holy women in the Aryan countries. We worship the Fravashis of the holy men in the Turanian countries; We worship the Fravashis of the holy women in the Turanian countries. We worship the Fravashis of the holy men in the Sairimyan countries; We worship the Fravashis of the holy women in the Sairimyan countries.

144 We worship the Fravashis of the holy men in the Sâini countries; We worship the Fravashis of the holy women in the Sâini countries. We worship the Fravashis of the holy men in the Dâhi countries; We worship the Fravashis of the holy women in the Dâhi countries. We worship the Fravashis of the holy men in all countries; We worship the Fravashis of the holy women in all countries.

145 We worship all the good, awful, beneficent Fravashis of the faithful, from Gaya Maretan down to the victorious Saoshyant. May the Fravashis of the faithful come quickly to us! May they come to our help!

146 They protect us when in distress with manifest assistance, with the assistance of Ahura Mazda and of the holy, powerful Sraosha, and with the Mâthra-Spenta, the all-knowing, who hates the Daêvas with a mighty hate, a friend of Ahura Mazda, whom Zarathustra worshipped so greatly in the material world.

147 May the good waters and the plants and the Fravashis of the faithful abide down here! May you be rejoiced and well received in this house! Here are the Athravans of the countries, thinking of good holiness. Our hands are lifted up for asking help, and for offering a sacrifice unto you, O most beneficent Fravashis!

148 We worship the Fravashis of all the holy men and holy women whose souls are worthy of sacrifice, whose Fravashis are worthy of invocation. We worship the Fravashis of all the holy men and holy women, our sacrificing to whom makes us good in the eyes of Ahura Mazda: of all of those we have heard that Zarathustra is the first and best, as a follower of Ahura and as a performer of the law.

149 We worship the spirit, conscience, perception, soul, and Fravashi of men of the primitive law, of the first who listened to the teaching (of Ahura), holy men and holy women, who struggled for holiness; we worship the spirit, conscience, perception, soul, and Fravashi of our next-of-kin, holy men and holy women, who struggled for holiness.

150 We worship the men of the primitive law who will be in these houses, boroughs, towns, and countries; We worship the men of the primitive law who have been in these houses, boroughs, towns, and countries; We worship the men of the primitive law who are in these houses, boroughs, towns, and countries.

151 We worship the men of the primitive law in all houses, boroughs, towns, and countries, who obtained these houses, who obtained these boroughs, who obtained these towns, who obtained these countries, who obtained holiness, who obtained the Mâthra, who obtained the [blessedness of the] soul, who obtained all the perfections of goodness.

152 We worship Zarathustra, the lord and master of all the material world, the man of the primitive law; the wisest of all beings, the best-ruling of all beings, the brightest of all beings, the most glorious of all beings, the most worthy of sacrifice amongst all beings, the most worthy of prayer amongst all beings, the most worthy of propitiation amongst all beings, the most worthy of glorification amongst all beings, whom we call well-desired and worthy of sacrifice and prayer as much as any being can be, in the perfection of his holiness.

153 We worship this earth; We worship those heavens; We worship those good things that stand between (the earth and the heavens) and that are worthy of sacrifice and prayer and are to be worshipped by the faithful man.

154 We worship the souls of the wild beasts and of the tame. We worship the souls of the holy men and women, born at any time, whose consciences struggle, or will struggle, or have struggled, for the good.

155 We worship the spirit, conscience, perception, soul, and Fravashi of the holy men and holy women who struggle, will struggle, or have struggled, and teach the Law, and who have struggled for holiness. Yênhê hâtâm: All those beings to whom Ahura Mazda . . . Yathâ ahû vairiyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness . . .

156 The Fravashis of the faithful, awful and overpowering, awful and victorious; the Fravashis of the men of the primitive law; the Fravashis of the next-of-kin; may these Fravashis come satisfied into this house; may they walk satisfied through this house!

157 May they, being satisfied, bless this house with the presence of the kind Ashi Vanguhi! May they leave this house satisfied! May they carry back from here hymns and worship to the Maker, Ahura Mazda, and the Amesha-Spentas! May they not leave this house of us, the worshippers of Mazda, complaining!

158 Yathâ ahû vairiyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness . . . I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of the awful, overpowering Fravashis of the faithful; of the Fravashis of the men of the primitive law; of the Fravashis of the next-of-kin. Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good. . . . [Give] unto that man brightness and glory, . . . give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones.

14. BAHRÂM YAST.

1 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

2 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him first, running in the shape of a strong, beautiful wind, made by Mazda; he bore the good Glory, made by Mazda, the Glory made by Mazda, that is both health and strength.

3 Then he, who is the strongest, said unto him: 'I am the strongest in strength; I am the most victorious in victory; I am the most glorious in Glory; I am the most favouring in favour; I am the best giver of welfare; I am the best-healing in health-giving.

4 'And I shall destroy the malice of all the malicious, the malice of Daēvas and men, of the Yātus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, the blind, and the deaf.

5 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard; namely, unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. We worship Verethraghna, made by Ahura, with an offering of libations, according to the primitive ordinances of Ahura; with the Haoma and meat, the baresma, the wisdom of the tongue, the holy spells, the speech, the deeds, the libations, and the rightly-spoken words. 'Yēnhē hātām: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda. . . .

6 'We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura.' Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is, the best-armed of the heavenly Gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

7 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the second time, running in the shape of a beautiful bull, with yellow ears and golden horns; upon whose horns floated the well-shapen Strength, and Victory, beautiful of form, made by Ahura: thus did he come, bearing the good Glory, made by Mazda, the Glory made by Mazda, that is both health and strength. Then he, who is the strongest, said unto him: 'I am the strongest in strength. . . . 'And I shall destroy the malice of all malicious. . . . 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

8 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

9 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the third time, running in the shape of a white, beautiful horse, with yellow ears and a golden caparison; upon whose forehead floated the well-shapen Strength, and Victory, beautiful of form, made by Ahura: thus did he come, bearing the good Glory, made by Mazda, that is both health and strength. Then he, who is the strongest, said unto him: 'I am the strongest in strength. . . . 'And I shall destroy the malice of all malicious. . . . 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

10 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

11 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the fourth time, running in the shape of a burden-bearing camel, sharp-toothed, swift. . . . , stamping forwards, long-haired, and living in the abodes of men;

12 Who of all males in rut shows greatest strength and greatest fire, when he goes to his females. Of all females those are best kept whom a burden-bearing camel keeps, who has thick forelegs and large humps, , quick-eyed, long-headed, bright, tall, and strong;

13 Whose piercing look goes afar. . . . , even in the dark of the night; who throws white foam along his mouth; well-kneed, well-footed, standing with the countenance of an all-powerful master: Thus did Verethraghna come, bearing the good Glory made by Mazda, the Glory made by Mazda. . . .

14 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

15 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the fifth time, running in the shape of a boar, opposing the foes, a sharp-toothed he-boar, a sharp-jawed boar, that kills at one stroke, pursuing, wrathful, with a dripping face, strong, and swift to run, and rushing all around. Thus did Verethraghna come, bearing the good Glory made by Mazda, the Glory made by Mazda. . . .

16 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

17 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the sixth time, running in the shape of a beautiful youth of fifteen, shining, clear-eyed, thin-heeled. Thus did Verethraghna come, bearing the good Glory made by Mazda, the Glory made by Mazda. . . .

18 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

19 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the seventh time, running in the shape of a raven that. . . . below and. . . . above, and that is the swiftest of all birds, the lightest of the flying creatures.

20 He alone of living things,—he or none,—overtakes the flight of an arrow, however well it has been shot. He flies up joyfully at the first break of dawn, wishing the night to be no more, wishing the dawn, that has not yet come, to come.

21 He grazes the hidden ways of the mountains, he grazes the tops of the mountains, he grazes the depths of the vales, he grazes the summit of the trees, listening to the voices of the birds. Thus did Verethraghna come, bearing the good Glory made by Mazda 1, the Glory made by Mazda. . . .

22 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

23 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the eighth time, running in the shape of a wild, beautiful ram, with horns bent round. Thus did Verethraghna come, bearing the good Glory made by Mazda, the Glory made by Mazda. . . .

24 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

25 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the ninth time, running in the shape of a beautiful, fighting buck, with sharp horns. Thus did Verethraghna come, bearing the good Glory made by Mazda, the Glory made by Mazda. . . .

26 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Who is the best-armed of the heavenly gods?' Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is Verethraghna, made by Ahura, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

27 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, came to him the tenth time, running in the shape of a man, bright and beautiful, made by Mazda: he held a sword with a golden blade, inlaid with all sorts of ornaments. Thus did Verethraghna come, bearing the good Glory made by Mazda, the Glory made by Mazda. . . .

28 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura, who makes virility, who makes death, who makes resurrection, who possesses peace, who has a free way. Unto him did the holy Zarathustra offer up a sacrifice, [asking] for victorious thinking, victorious speaking, victorious doing, victorious addressing, and victorious answering.

29 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, gave him the fountains of manliness, the strength of the arms, the health of the whole body, the sturdiness of the whole body, and the eye-sight of the Kara fish, that lives beneath the waters and can measure 3 a rippling of the water, not thicker than a hair, in the Rangha whose ends lie afar, whose depth is a thousand times the height of a man. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . . 12.

30 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura, who makes virility, who makes death, who makes resurrection, who possesses peace, who has a free way. Unto him did the holy Zarathustra offer up a sacrifice, [asking] for victorious thinking, victorious speaking, victorious doing, victorious addressing, and victorious answering.

31 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, gave him the fountains of manliness, the strength of the arms, the health of the whole body, the sturdiness of the whole body, and the eye-sight of the male horse, that, in the dark of the night, in its first half 5 and through the rain, can perceive a horse's hair lying on the ground and knows whether it is from the head or from the tail 6. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

32 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura, who makes virility, who makes death, who makes resurrection, who possesses peace, who has a free way. Unto him did the holy Zarathustra sacrifice, [asking] for victorious thinking, victorious speaking, victorious doing, victorious addressing, and victorious answering.

33 Verethraghna, made by Ahura, gave him the fountains of virility, the strength of the arms, the health of the whole body, the sturdiness of the whole body, and the eye-sight of the vulture with a golden collar, that, from as far as nine districts, can perceive a piece of flesh not thicker than the fist, giving just as much light as a needle gives, as the point of a needle gives 2. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

34 We sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'If I have a curse thrown upon me, a spell told upon me by the many men who hate me, what is the remedy for it?'

35 Ahura Mazda answered: Take thou a feather of that bird with. . . . feathers, the Vārengana, O Spitama Zarathustra!

With that feather thou shalt rub thy own body, with that feather thou shalt curse back thy enemies.

36 'If a man holds a bone of that strong bird, or a feather of that strong bird, no one can smite or turn to flight that fortunate man. The feather of that bird of birds brings him help; it brings unto him the homage of men, it maintains in him his glory.

37 'Then the sovereign, the lord of countries, will no longer kill his hundreds, though he is a killer of men; the. . . . will not kill at one stroke; he alone smites and goes forwards.

38 'All tremble before him who holds the feather, they tremble therefore before me; all my enemies tremble before me and fear my strength and victorious force and the fierceness established in my body.

39 'He carries the chariot of the lords; he carries the chariots of the lordly ones, the chariots of the sovereigns. He carried the chariot of Kavi Usa; upon his wings runs the male horse, runs the burden-bearing camel, runs the water of the river.

40 'Him rode the gallant Thraētaona, who smote Azi Dahāka, the three-mouthed, the three-headed, the six-eyed, who had a thousand senses; that most powerful, fiendish Drug, that demon, baleful to the world, the strongest Drug that Angra Mainyu created against the material world, to destroy the world of the good principle. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

41 'We sacrifice to Verethraghna, made by Ahura. 'Verethraghna confounds the glory of this house with its wealth in cattle. He is like that great bird, the Saēna; he is like the big clouds, full of water, that beat the mountains. 'For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard. . . .

42 'We sacrifice to Verethraghna, made by Ahura.' Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! 'Where is it that we must invoke the name of Verethraghna, made by Ahura? Where is it that we must praise him? That we must humbly praise him?'

43 Ahura Mazda answered: 'When armies meet together in full array, O Spitama Zarathustra! (asking) which of the two is the party that conquers and is not crushed, that smites and is not smitten;

44 'Do thou throw four feathers in the way. Whichever of the two will first worship the well-shapen Strength, and Verethraghna, beautiful of form, made by Mazda, on his side will victory stand.

45 'I will bless Strength and Victory, the two keepers, the two good keepers, the two maintainers; the two who. . . . , the two who. . . . , the two who. . . . ; the two who forgive, the two who strike off, the two who forget.

46 'O Zarathustra! let not that spell be shown to any one, except by the father to his son, or by the brother to his brother from the same womb, or by the Athravan to his pupil. These are words that are awful and powerful, awful and assembly-ruling, awful and victorious, awful and healing; these are words that save the head that was lost and chant away the uplifted weapon.'

47 We sacrifice to Verethraghna, made by Ahura: who goes along the armies arrayed, and goes here and there asking, along with Mithra and Rashnu: 'Who is it who lies unto Mithra? Who is it who thrusts [his oath] against Rashnu? To whom shall I, in my might, impart illness and death?'

48 Ahura Mazda said: 'If men sacrifice unto Verethraghna, made by Ahura, if the due sacrifice and prayer is offered unto him just as it ought to be performed in the perfection of holiness, never will a hostile horde enter the Aryan countries, nor any plague, nor leprosy, nor venomous plants, nor the chariot of a foe, nor the uplifted spear of a foe.'

49 Zarathustra asked: 'What is then, O Ahura Mazda! the sacrifice and invocation in honour of Verethraghna, made by Ahura, as it ought to be performed in the perfection of holiness?'

50 Ahura Mazda answered: 'Let the Aryan nations bring libations unto him; let the Aryan nations tie bundles of baresma for him; let the Aryan nations cook for him a head of cattle, either white, or black, or of any other colour, but all of one and the same colour.

51 'Let not a murderer take of those offerings, nor a whore, nor a. . . . , who does not sing the Gāthās, who spreads death in the world and withstands the law of Mazda, the law of Zarathustra.

52 'If a murderer take of those offerings, or a whore, or a. . . . , who does not sing the Gāthās, then Verethraghna, made by Ahura, takes back his healing virtues.

53 'Plagues will ever pour upon the Aryan nations; hostile hordes will ever fall upon the Aryan nations; the Aryans will be smitten by their fifties and their hundreds, by their hundreds and their thousands, by their thousands and their tens of thousands, by their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads.'

54 There Verethraghna, made by Ahura, proclaimed thus: 'The Soul of the Bull, the wise creature, does not receive from man due sacrifice and prayer; for now the Daēvas and the worshippers of the Daēvas make blood flow and spill it like water;

55 'For now the Daēvas and the worshippers of the Daēvas bring to the fire the plant that is called Haperesi, the wood that is called Nemetka;

56 ('Therefore) when the Daēvas and the worshippers of the Daēvas bow their backs, bend their waists, and arrange all their limbs, they think they will smite and smite not, they think they will kill and kill not; and then the Daēvas and the worshippers of the Daēvas have their minds confounded and their eyes made giddy.' For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

57 We sacrifice to Verethraghna, made by Ahura. I offer up Haoma, who saves one's head; I offer up the victorious Haoma; I offer him up, the good protector; I offer up Haoma, who is a protector to my body, as a man who shall drink of him shall win and prevail over his enemies in battle;

58 That I may smite this army, that I may smite down this army, that I may cut in pieces this army that is coming behind me. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

59 We sacrifice to Verethraghna, made by Ahura. The prince and his son and his sons who are chiefs of myriads offer him up a bright . . . [saying]: 'He is strong, and Victorious is his name; he is victorious, arid Strong is his name.'

60 That I may be as constantly victorious as any one of all the Aryans; that I may smite this army, that I may smite down this army, that I may cut in pieces this army that is coming behind me. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

61 We sacrifice to Verethraghna, made by Ahura. Yathā ahū vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness In the ox is our strength, in the ox is our need; in the ox is our speech, in the ox is our victory; in the ox is our food, in the ox is our clothing; in the ox is tillage, that makes food grow for us. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

62 We sacrifice to Verethraghna, made by Ahura; Who breaks the columns asunder, who cuts the columns to pieces, who wounds the columns, who makes the columns shake; who comes and breaks the columns asunder, who comes and cuts the columns to pieces, who comes and wounds the columns, who comes and makes the columns shake, both of Daēvas and men, of the Yātus and Pairikas, of the oppressors, the blind, and the deaf. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

63 We sacrifice to Verethraghna, made by Ahura. When Verethraghna, made by Ahura, binds the hands, confounds the eye-sight, takes the hearing from the ears of the Mithradrugres marching in columns, allied by cities, they can no longer move their feet, they can no longer withstand. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

64 Yathā ahū vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness. . . . I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of Verethraghna, made by Mazda; and of the crushing Ascendant.

15. RĀM YAST.

1 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them. I will sacrifice to Peace, whose breath is friendly, and to Weal, both of them. To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke, for this house, for the master of this house, and for the man here who is offering libations and giving gifts. To this excellent God do we sacrifice, that he may accept our meat and our prayers, and grant us in return to crush our enemies at one stroke.

2 To him did the Maker, Ahura Mazda, offer up a sacrifice in the Airyana Vaēgah, on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of full-boiling [milk].

3 He begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that I may smite the creation of Angra Mainyu, and that nobody may smite this creation of the Good Spirit!'

4 Vayu, who works highly, granted him that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda, did pursue it.

5 We sacrifice to the holy Vayu; we sacrifice to Vayu, who works highly. To this part of thee do we sacrifice, O Vayu! that belongs to Spenta Mainyu. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard, namely, unto the awful Vayu, who works highly. We offer up a sacrifice unto the awful Vayu, who works highly, with the libations, with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, the words, the deeds, the libations, and the well-spoken words. Yēnhē hātām: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

6 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

7 To him did Haoshyangha, the Paradhāta, offer up a sacrifice on the Taēra of the Hara, bound with iron, on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offering of full-boiling [milk].

8 He begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that I may smite two-thirds of the Daēvas of Māzana and of the fiends of Varena.'

9 Vayu, who works highly, granted him that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda 4, did pursue it. We sacrifice to the holy Vayu For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

10 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

11 To him did Takhma Urupa, the well-armed, offer up a sacrifice on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of full-boiling [milk].

12 He begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that I may conquer all Daēvas and men, all the Yātus and Pairikas, and that I may ride Angra Mainyu, turned into the shape of a horse, all around the earth from one end to the other, for thirty years.'

13 Vayu, who works highly, granted him that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda, did pursue it. We sacrifice to the holy Vayu For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

14 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

15 Unto him did the bright Yima, the good shepherd, sacrifice from the height Hukaiyā, the all-shining and golden, on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of full-boiling [milk].

16 He begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that I may become the most glorious of the men born to behold the sun: that I may make in my reign both animals and men undying, waters and plants undying, and the food for eating creatures never-failing.' In the reign of the valiant Yima there was neither cold wind nor hot wind, neither old age nor death, nor envy made by the Daēvas.

17 Vayu, who works highly, granted him that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda, did pursue it. We sacrifice to the holy Vayu For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

18 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

19 Unto him did the three-mouthed Azi Dahāka offer up a sacrifice in his accursed palace of Kvirinta, on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of full-boiling [milk].

20 He begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that I may make all the seven Karshvares of the earth empty of men.'

21 In vain did he sacrifice, in vain did he beg, in vain did he invoke, in vain did he give gifts, in vain did he bring libations; Vayu did not grant him that boon. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

22 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

23 Unto him did Thraētaona, the heir of the valiant Āthwya clan, offer up a sacrifice in the four-cornered Varena, on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of full-boiling [milk].

24 He begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that I may overcome Azi Dahāka, the three-mouthed, the three-headed, the six-eyed, who has a thousand senses, that most powerful, fiendish Drug, that demon baleful to the world, the strongest Drum that Angra Mainyu created against the material world, to destroy the world of the good principle; and that I may deliver his two wives, Savanghavāk and Erenavāk, who are the fairest of body amongst women, and the most wonderful creatures in the world.'

25 Vayu, who works highly, granted him that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda, did pursue it. We sacrifice to the holy Vayu For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

26 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

27 To him did the manly-hearted Keresāspa offer up a sacrifice by the Gudha, a channel of the Rangha, made by Mazda, upon a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of full-boiling [milk].

28 He begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that I may succeed in avenging my brother Urvākhshaya, that I may smite Hitāspa and yoke him to my chariot.' The Gandarewa, who lives beneath the waters, is the son of Ahura in the deep, he is the only master of the deep.

29 Vayu, who works highly, granted him that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda, did pursue it. We sacrifice to the holy

Vayu For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

30 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

31 To him did Aurvasāra, the lord of the country, offer up a sacrifice, towards the White Forest, by the White Forest, on the border of the White Forest, on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of full-boiling [milk].

32 He begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that the gallant Husravah, he who unites the Aryan nations into one kingdom, may not smite us; that I may flee from king Husravah; That king Husravah and all the Aryans in the Forest may smite him.'

33 Vayu, who works highly, granted him that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda, did pursue it. We sacrifice to the holy Vayu For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

34 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

35 To him did Hutaosa, she of the many brothers, of the Naotara house, offer up a sacrifice, on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of boiling milk.

36 She begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that I may be dear and loved and well-received in the house of king Vistāspa.'

37 Vayu, who works highly, granted her that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda, did pursue it. We sacrifice to the holy Vayu For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

38 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke

39 To him did I the maids, whom no man had known, offer up a sacrifice on a golden throne, under golden beams and a golden canopy, with bundles of baresma and offerings of boiling milk.

40 They begged of him a boon, saying: 'Grant us this, O Vayu! who dost work highly, that we may find a husband, young and beautiful of body, who will treat us well, all life long, and give us offspring; a wise, learned, ready-tongued husband.'

41 Vayu, who works highly, granted them that boon, as the Maker, Ahura Mazda, did pursue it. We sacrifice to the holy Vayu For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard

42 I will sacrifice to the Waters and to Him who divides them To this Vayu do we sacrifice, this Vayu do we invoke We sacrifice to that Vayu that belongs to the Good Spirit, the bright and glorious Vayu.

43 My name is Vayu, O holy Zarathustra! My name is Vayu, because I go through (vyēmi) the two worlds 3, the one which the Good Spirit has made and the one which the Evil Spirit has made. My name is the Overtaker (apāēta), O holy Zarathustra! My name is the Overtaker, because I can overtake the creatures of both worlds, the one that the Good Spirit has made and the one that the Evil Spirit has made.

44 My name is the All-smiting, O holy Zarathustra! My name is the All-smiting, because I can smite the creatures of both worlds, the one that the Good Spirit has made and the one that the Evil Spirit has made. My name is the Worker of Good, O holy Zarathustra! My name is the Worker of Good, because I work the good of the Maker, Ahura Mazda, and of the Amesha-Spentas 1.

45 My name is He that goes forwards. My name is He that goes backwards. My name is He that bends backwards. My name is He that hurls away. My name is He that hurls down. My name is He that destroys. My name is He that takes away. My name is He that finds out. My name is He that finds out the Glory (Hvarenō).

46 My name is the Valiant; my name is the Most Valiant. My name is the Strong; my name is the Strongest. My name is the Firm; my name is the Firmest. My name is the Stout; my name is the Stoutest. My name is He that crosses over easily. My name is He that goes along hurling away. My name is He that crushes at one stroke. My name is My name is He that works against the Daēvas. My name is 47 My name is He that prevails over malice; my name is He that destroys malice. My name is He that unites; my name is He that re-unites; my name is He that separates. My name is the Burning; my name is the Quick of intelligence. My name is Deliverance; my name is Welfare. My name is the Burrows; my name is He who destroys the burrows; my name is He who spits upon the burrows.

48 My name is Sharpness of spear; my name is He of the sharp spear. My name is Length of spear; my name is He of the long spear. My name is Piercingness of spear; my name is He of the piercing spear. My name is the Glorious; my name is the Over-glorious.

49 Invoke these names of mine, O holy Zarathustra! in the midst of the havoeking hordes, in the midst of the columns moving forwards, in the strife of the conflicting nations.

50 Invoke these names of mine, O holy Zarathustra! when the all-powerful tyrant of a country falls upon thee, rushes upon thee, deals wounds upon thee, or hurls his chariot against thee, to rob thee of thy wealth, to rob thee of thy health.

51 Invoke these names of mine, O holy Zarathustra! when the unholy Ashemaogha falls upon thee, rushes upon thee, deals wounds upon thee, or hurls his chariot against thee, to rob thee of thy strength, to rob thee of thy wealth, to rob thee of thy health.

52 Invoke these names of mine, O holy Zarathustra! when a man stands in bonds, when a man is being thrown into bonds, or when a man is being dragged in bonds: thus the prisoners flee from the hands of those who carry them, they flee away out of the prison.

53 O thou Vayu! who striketh fear upon all men and horses, who in all creatures worketh against the Daēvas, both into the lowest places and into those a thousand times deep dost thou enter with equal power.

54 'With what manner of sacrifice shall I worship thee? With what manner of sacrifice shall I forward and worship thee? With what manner of sacrifice will be achieved thy adoration, O great Vayu! thou who art high-up girded, firm, swift-moving, high-footed, wide-breasted, wide-thighed, with untrembling eyes, as powerful in sovereignty as any absolute sovereign in the world?'

55 'Take thou a baresma, O holy Zarathustra! turn it upwards or downwards, according as it is full day or dawning; upwards during the day, downwards at the dawn.

56 'If thou makest me worshipped with a sacrifice, then I shall say unto thee with my own voice things of health, made by Mazda and full of glory, so that Angra Mainyu may never do harm unto thee, nor the Yātus, nor those addicted to the works of the Yātu, whether Daēvas or men.'

57 We sacrifice unto thee, O great Vayu! we sacrifice unto thee, O strong Vayu! We sacrifice unto Vayu, the greatest of the great; we sacrifice unto Vayu, the strongest of the strong. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden helm. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden crown. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden necklace. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden chariot. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden wheel. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden weapons. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden garment. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden shoe. We sacrifice unto Vayu, of the golden girdle. We sacrifice unto the holy Vayu; we sacrifice unto Vayu, who works highly. To this part of thee do we sacrifice, O Vayu! that belongs to the Good Spirit. For his brightness and glory, I will offer unto him a sacrifice worth being heard, namely, unto the awful Vayu, who works highly 58 Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and invocation unto, and the strength and vigour of Râma Hvâstra, and Vayu, who works highly, more powerful to afflict than all the other creatures: this part of thee that belongs to the Good Spirit.

16. DÎN YAST.

To the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy, and to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda, Be propitiation from me, for sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

1 We sacrifice to the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy; we sacrifice to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda, the supplier of good stores, who runs quickly to the goal and frees one best from dangers, who brings libations, who is holy, clever, and renowned, speedy to work and quick of work; who goes quickly and cleanses well; the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda;

2 To whom Zarathustra did sacrifice, saying: 'Rise up from thy seat, come forward from the Abode, thou most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy. If thou art before me, stay for me; if thou art behind me, overtake me.

3 'Let everything be as friendly to us as anything can be: may we go smoothly along the roads, find good pathways in the mountains, run easily through the forests, and cross happily the rivers!'

4 For her brightness and glory, I will offer unto her a sacrifice worth being heard, namely, unto the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy. I will offer up a sacrifice unto the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy, with the libations, with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the words and deeds, with the libations, with the well-spoken words. Yênhê hâtâm: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

5 We sacrifice to the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy; we sacrifice to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda

6 To whom Zarathustra did sacrifice for righteousness of thought, for righteousness of speech, for righteousness of deed, and for this boon,

7 That the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy, would give him the swiftness of the feet, the quick hearing of the ears, the strength of the arms, the health of the whole body, the sturdiness of the whole body, and the eye-sight of the Kara fish, that lives beneath the waters, and can measure a rippling of the waters not thicker than a hair, in the Rangha, whose ends lie afar and whose depth is a thousand times the height of a man. For her brightness and glory, I will offer unto her a sacrifice worth being heard

8 We sacrifice to the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy; we sacrifice to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda

9 To whom Zarathustra did sacrifice for righteousness of thought, for righteousness of speech, for righteousness of deed, and for this boon,

10 That the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy, would give him the swiftness of the feet, the quick hearing of the ears, the strength of the arms, the health of the whole body, the sturdiness of the whole body, and the eye-sight of the male horse, that, in the dark of the night, through the rain, the snow, the hail, or the sleet, from as far as nine districts, can perceive a horse's hair, mingled with the earth, and knows whether it is from the head or from the tail. For her brightness and glory, I will offer unto her a sacrifice worth being heard

11 We sacrifice to the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy; we sacrifice to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda

12 To whom Zarathustra did sacrifice for righteousness of thought, for righteousness of speech, for righteousness of deed, and for this boon,

13 That the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy, would give him the swiftness of the feet, the quick hearing of the ears, the strength of the arms, the health of the whole body, the sturdiness of the whole body, and the eye-sight of the vulture with a golden collar, that, from as far as nine districts, can perceive a piece of flesh, not thicker than a fist, giving just as much light as a needle gives, as the point of a needle gives. For her brightness and glory, I will offer unto her a sacrifice worth being heard

14 We sacrifice to the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy; we sacrifice to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda

15 To whom the holy Hvôvi did sacrifice with full knowledge, wishing that the holy Zarathustra would give her his good narcotic, that she might think according to the law, speak according to the law, and do according to the law. For her brightness and glory, I will offer unto her a sacrifice, worth being heard

16 We sacrifice to the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy; we sacrifice to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda

17 To whom the Âthravans, sent afar, did sacrifice, wishing a good memory to preach the law, and wishing strength for their own body. For her brightness and glory, I will offer unto her a sacrifice worth being heard

18 We sacrifice to the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy; we sacrifice to the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda

19 To whom the king of the country, the lord of the country does sacrifice, wishing peace for his country, wishing strength for his own body. For her brightness and glory, I will offer unto her a sacrifice worth being heard 20 Yathâ ahû vairyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of the most right Kista, made by Mazda and holy, and of the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda.

17. ASHI YAST.

1 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high, tall-formed, well worthy of sacrifice, with a loud-sounding chariot, strong, welfare-giving, healing, with fulness of intellect, and powerful;

2 The daughter of Ahura Mazda, the sister of the Amesha-Spentas, who ends all the Saoshyants with the enlivening intelligence; she also brings heavenly wisdom at her wish, and comes to help him who invokes her from near and him who invokes her from afar, and worships her with offerings of libations.

3 For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard; I will offer up unto Ashi Vanguhi a good sacrifice with an offering of libations. We sacrifice unto Ashi Vanguhi with the libations; with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the words, with the deeds, with the libations, and with the rightly-spoken words. Yênhê hâtâm: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

4 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high, tall-formed, well worthy of sacrifice, with a loud-sounding chariot, strong, welfare-giving, healing, with fulness of intellect, and powerful.

5 Homage unto Haoma, and unto the Mâthra, and unto the holy Zarathustra! Homage unto Haoma, because all other drinks are attended with Aëshma, the fiend of the wounding spear; but the drinking of Haoma is attended with Asha and with Ashi Vanguhi herself.

6 Ashi is fair; Ashi is radiant with joy; she is far-piercing with her rays. Ashi gives good Glory unto those men whom thou dost follow, O Ashi! Full of perfumes is the house in which the good, powerful Ashi Vanguhi puts her feet, for long friendship.

7 Those men whom thou dost attend, O Ashi! are kings of kingdoms, that are rich in horses, with large tributes, rich in aliments and in stores of food; well-scented where the beds are spread and full of all the other riches that may be wished for. Happy the man whom thou dost attend! do thou attend me, thou rich in all sorts of desirable things and strong!

8 Those men whom thou dost attend, O Ashi Vanguhi! have houses that stand well laid up, rich in cattle, foremost in Asha, and long-supported. Happy the man whom thou dost attend! Do thou attend me, thou rich in all sorts of desirable things and strong!

9 The men whom thou dost attend, O Ashi Vanguhi! have beds that stand well-spread, well-adorned, well-made, provided with cushions and with feet inlaid with gold. Happy the man whom thou dost attend! Do thou attend me, thou rich in all sorts of desirable things and strong!

10 The men whom thou dost attend, O Ashi Vanguhi! have their ladies that sit on their beds, waiting for them: they lie on the cushions, adorning themselves, with square bored ear-rings and a necklace of gold: 'When will our lord come? when shall we enjoy in our bodies the joys of love?' Happy the man whom thou dost attend! Do thou attend me, thou rich in all sorts of desirable things and strong!

11 The men whom thou dost attend, O Ashi Vanguhi! have daughters that sit thin is their waist, beautiful is their body, long are their fingers; they are as fair of shape as those who look on can wish. Happy the man whom thou dost attend! Do thou attend me, thou rich in all sorts of desirable things and strong!

12 The men whom thou dost attend, O Ashi Vanguhi! have horses swift and loud-neighing; they drive the chariot lightly, they take it to the battle, they bear a gallant praiser (of the gods), who has many horses, a solid chariot, a sharp spear, a long spear, and swift arrows, who hits his aim, pursuing after his enemies, and smiting his foes. Happy the man whom thou dost attend! Do thou attend me, thou rich in all sorts of desirable things and strong!

13 The men whom thou dost attend, O Ashi Vanguhi! have large-humped, burden-bearing camels, flying from the ground or fighting with holy fieriness. Happy the man whom thou dost attend! Do thou attend me, thou rich in all sorts of desirable things and strong!

14 The men whom thou dost attend, O Ashi Vanguhi! have hoards of silver and gold brought together from far distant regions; and garments of splendide make. Happy the man whom thou dost attend! Do thou attend me, thou rich in all sorts of desirable things and strong!

15 Do not turn thy look from me! turn thy mercy towards me, O great Ashi! thou art well-made and of a noble seed; thou art sovereign at thy wish; thou art Glory in a bodily form.

16 Thy father is Ahura Mazda, the greatest of all gods, the best of all gods; thy mother is Armaidî Spenta; thy brothers are Sraosha, a god of Asha, and Rashnu, tall and strong, and Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who has ten thousand spies and a thousand ears; thy sister is the Law of the worshippers of Mazda.

17 Praised of the gods, unoffended by the righteous, the great Ashi Vanguhi stood up on her chariot, thus speaking: 'Who art thou who dost invoke me, whose voice is to my ear the sweetest of all that invoked me most?'

18 And he said aloud: 'I am Spitama Zarathustra, who, first of mortals, recited the praise of the excellent Asha and offered up sacrifice unto Ahura Mazda and the Amesha-Spentas; in whose birth and growth the waters and the plants rejoiced; in whose birth and growth the waters and the plants grew; in whose birth and growth all the creatures of the good creation cried out, Hail!'

19 'In whose birth and growth Angra Mainyu rushed away from this wide, round earth, whose ends lie afar, and all, the evil-doing Angra Mainyu, who is all death, said: "He, the gods together have not been able to smite me down in spite of myself, and Zarathustra alone can reach me in spite of myself.

20 ' "He smites me with the Ahuna Vairya, as strong a weapon as a stone big as a house; he burns me with Asha-Vahista, as if it were melting brass. He makes it better for me that I should leave this earth, he, Spitama Zarathustra, the only one who can daunt me." '

21 And the great Ashi Vanguhi exclaimed: 'Come nearer unto me, thou pure, holy Spitama! lean against my chariot!' Spitama Zarathustra came nearer unto her, he leant against her chariot.

22 And she caressed him with the left arm and the right, with the right arm and the left, thus speaking: 'Thou art beautiful, O Zarathustra! thou art well-shapen, O Spitama! strong are thy legs and long are thy arms: Glory is given to thy body and long cheerfulness to thy soul, as sure as I proclaim it unto thee.'

23 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high, tall-formed, well worthy of sacrifice, with a loud-sounding chariot, strong, welfare-giving, healing, with fulness of intellect and powerful.

24 To her did Haoshyangha, the Paradhâta, offer up a sacrifice, upon the enclosure of the Hara, the beautiful height, made by Mazda.

25 He begged of her a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O great Ashi Vanguhi! that I may overcome all the Daëvas of Mâzana; that I may never fear and bow through terror before the Daëvas, but that all the Daëvas may fear and bow in spite of themselves before me, that they may fear and flee down to darkness.'

26 The great Ashi Vanguhi ran and came to his side: Haoshyangha, the Paradhâta, obtained that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

27 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high . . . and powerful.

28 To her did Yima Khshtaëta, the good shepherd, offer up a sacrifice from the height Hukairyâ.

29 He begged of her a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O great Ashi Vanguhi! that I may bring fatness and flocks down to the world created by Mazda; that I may bring immortality down to the world created by Mazda;

30 'That I may take away both hunger and thirst, from the world created by Mazda; that I may take away both old age and death, from the world created by Mazda; that I may take away both hot wind and cold wind, from the world created by Mazda, for a thousand years.'

31 The great Ashi Vanguhi ran and came to his side: Yima Khshtaëta, the good shepherd, obtained that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

32 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high and powerful.

33 To her did Thraëtaona, the heir of the valiant Âthwya clan, offer up a sacrifice in the four-cornered Varena.

34 He begged of her a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O great Ashi Vanguhi! that I may overcome Azi Dahâka, the three-mouthed, the three-headed, the six-eyed, who has a thousand senses, that most powerful, fiendish Drug, that demon, baleful to the world, the strongest Drug that Angra Mainyu created against the material world, to destroy the world of the good principle; and that I may deliver his two wives, Savanghavâk and Erenavâk, who are the fairest of body amongst women, and the most wonderful creatures in the world.'

35 The great Ashi Vanguhi ran and came to his side. Thraëtaona, the heir of the valiant Âthwya clan, obtained that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

36 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high and powerful.

37 To her did Haoma offer up a sacrifice, Haoma, the enlivening, the healing, the beautiful, the lordly, with golden eyes, upon the highest height of the Haraiti Bareza.

38 He begged of her a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O great Ashi Vanguhi! that I may bind the Turanian murderer, Franghrasyan, that I may drag him bound, that I may bring him bound unto king Husravah, that king Husravah may kill him, behind the Kaëkasta lake, the deep lake of salt waters, to avenge the murder of his father Syâvarshâna, a man, and of Aghraëra, a semi-man.'

39 The great Ashi Vanguhi ran and came to his side. Haoma, the enlivening, the healing, the beautiful, the lordly, with golden eyes, obtained that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice

40 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high and powerful.

41 To her did the gallant Husravah, he who united the Aryan nations into one kingdom, offer up a sacrifice, behind the Kaëkasta lake, the deep lake of salt waters.

42 He begged of her a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O great Ashi Vanguhi! that I may kill the Turanian murderer, Franghrasyan, behind the Kaëkasta lake, the deep lake of salt waters, to avenge the murder of my father Syâvarshâna, a man, and of Aghraëra, a semi-man.'

43 The great Ashi Vanguhi ran and came to his side. The gallant Husravah, he who united the Aryan nations into one kingdom, obtained that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard

44 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high and powerful.

45 To her did the holy Zarathustra offer up a sacrifice in the Airyana Vaëgah, by the good river Dâitya, with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the speech, with the deeds, with the libations, and with the rightly-spoken words.

46 He begged of her a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O great Ashi Vanguhi! that I may bring the good and noble Hutaosa to think according to the law, to speak according to the law, to do according to the law, that she may spread my law and make it known, that she may bestow beautiful praises upon my deeds.'

47 The great Ashi Vanguhi ran and came to his side: the holy Zarathustra obtained that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard

48 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high and powerful.

49 To her did the tall Kavi Vistâspa offer up a sacrifice behind the waters of the river Dâitya.

50 He begged of her a boon, saying: 'Grant me this, O great Ashi Vanguhi! that I may put to flight Asta-aurvant, the son of Vispô-thaurvô-asti, the all-afflicting, of the brazen helmet, of the brazen armour, of the thick neck, behind whom seven hundred camels; that I may put to flight the Hvyæona murderer, Aregat-aspa; that I may put to flight Darsinika, the worshipper of the Daëvas;

51 'And that I may smite Tâthravant of the bad law; that I may smite Spingauruska, the worshipper of the Daëvas; and that I may bring unto the good law the nations of the Varedhakas and of the Hvyæonas; and that I may smite of the Hvyæona nations their fifties and their hundreds, their hundreds and their thousands, their thousands and their tens of thousands, their tens of thousands and their myriads of myriads.'

52 The great Ashi Vanguhi ran and came to his side: the tall Kavi Vistâspa obtained that boon. For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard

53 We sacrifice to Ashi Vanguhi, who is shining, high and powerful.

54 And the great Ashi Vanguhi said: 'None of those libations will be accepted by me, which are sent to me either by a man whose seed is dried out, or by the courtesan who produces untimely issues, or by young boys, or by girls who have known no man. 'When the Turanians and the swift-horsed Naotaras, clapping their hands, ran after me,

55 'I hid myself under the foot of a bull walking under his burden; then young boys, and girls who had known no man, discovered me, even while the Turanians and the swift-horsed Naotaras, clapping their hands, were running after me.'

56 'Even I hid myself under the throat of a ram of hundredfold energy: then again young boys, and girls who had known no man, discovered me, even while the Turanians and the swift-horsed Naotaras, clapping their hands, were running after me.'

57 The first wailing of the great Ashi Vanguhi is her wailing about the courtesan who destroys her fruit: 'Stand thou not near her, sit thou not on her bed!—'What shall I do? Shall I go back to the heavens? Shall I sink into the earth?'

58 The second wailing of the great Ashi Vanguhi is her wailing about the courtesan who brings forth a child conceived of a stranger and presents it to her husband: 'What shall I do? Shall I go back to the heavens? Shall I sink into the earth?'

59 This is the third wailing of the great Ashi Vanguhi: 'This is the worst deed that men and tyrants do, namely, when they deprive maids, that have been barren for a long time, of marrying and bringing forth children. What shall I do? Shall I go back to the heavens? Shall I sink into the earth?'

60 Ahura Mazda answered: 'O fair and wise Ashi, go not back to the heavens, sink not into the earth! Stay here and walk inside the fine kingly palace.'

61 I shall worship thee with such a sacrifice, I shall worship and forward thee with such a sacrifice as Vistâspa offered unto thee, behind the river Dâitya. The Zoatar lifted up a loud voice, with baresma before him. With that sort of sacrifice shall I worship thee? With that sort of sacrifice shall I worship and forward thee? O fair and wise Ashi? For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard

62 Yathâ ahû vairyô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of Ashi Vanguhi; of the good Kisti; of the good Erethe; of the good Rasâtât; of the Glory and Weal, made by Mazda.

18. ASTAD YAST.

Unto the Glory of the Aryans, made by Mazda, Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathâ ahû vairyô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

1 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'I made the Aryan Glory, rich in food, rich in flocks, rich in wealth, rich in Glory; provided with full store of intelligence, with full store of money, to withstand Need, and to withstand enemies.'

2 'It destroys Angra Mainyu, who is all death: it destroys Aëshma, the fiend of the wounding spear; it destroys the yellow Bûshyâsta; it destroys the contagion of Aëkha; it destroys the fiend of death, Apaosha; it destroys the non-Aryan nations.'

3 'And I made the great Ashi Vanguhi; she comes in, amid the family; she comes in, inside the fine royal palace.'

4 'Let Ashi, with fulness of welfare, follow the man who gladdens the faithful with his gifts! she comes in, inside his family; she comes in, inside his fine royal palace. 'With all sorts of flocks, with all victory, with all intelligence, with all

Glory, the great Ashi Vanguhi puts one foot inside his family; she comes in, inside his fine royal palace.'

5 'Horses multiply a thousandfold, flocks multiply a thousandfold; and so does his virtuous offspring, (as) the bright, glorious star Tistrya moves on equally, and so does the strong wind made by Mazda, and so does the Glory of the Aryas.'

6 'And they bring increase on the tops of all mountains, down the depths of all vales; they bring increase to all the growing plants, the fair, the golden-hued. And they bring (away) the contagion of Aëkha, they bring (away) the fiend of death, Apaosha.'

7 'Hail to the bright and glorious star Tistrya! Hail to the strong wind, made by Mazda! Hail to the Glory of the Aryas! 'Yathâ ahû vairyô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good

8 'We worship the Ahuna Vairya. 'We worship Asha-Vahista, the fairest Amesha Spenta. 'We worship the rightly-spoken Words, fiend-smiting and healing. 'We worship the healing, well-spoken Words, the fiend-smiting. 'We worship the Mâthra Spenta and the Law of Mazda, and (piety) that delights in Haoma. We worship the Glory of the Aryas. 'Yênêhâtâm: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

9 'Yathâ ahû vairyô: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of the Glory of the Aryas, made by Mazda.'

19. ZAMYAD YAST.

1 The first mountain that rose up out of the earth, O Spitama Zarathustra! was the Haraiti Barez. That mountain stretches all along the shores of the land washed by waters towards the east. The second mountain was Mount Zeredhôn, outside Mount Manusha: this mountain too stretches all along the shores of the land washed by waters towards the east.

2 From there grew up Mount Ushi-dhau Ushi-darena, Mount Erezifya, and Mount Fraorepa. The sixth was Mount Erezura. The seventh was Mount Bumya. The eighth was Mount Raoidhita. The ninth was Mount Mazisissvau. The tenth was Mount Antare-danghu. The eleventh was Mount Erezisha. The twelfth was Mount Vâiti-gaësa.

3 And Mount Âdarana, Mount Bayana, Mount Iskata Upairi-saëna, with the snows; the two Hamankuna mountains, the eight Vasna mountains, the eight powerful Frâvanku, the four Vidhvana summits;

4 Mount Aëzakha, Mount Maënakha, Mount Vâkhedrakæ, Mount Asaya, Mount Tudhaskæ, Mount Isavaë, Mount Draoshivau, Mount Sâirivau, Mount Nanghusmau, Mount Kakahyu, Mount Antare-Kangha;

5 Mount Sikidava, Mount Ahuna, Mount Raëmana, Mount Asha-stembaona, Mount Urunyô-vâidhkaë, Mount Asnavant, Mount Ushaoma, Mount Usta-hvarenah, Mount Syâmaka, Mount Vafrayau, Mount Vourusha;

6 Amongst which stand Mount Gatara, Mount Adhutavau, Mount Spitavarena, Mount Spentô-dâta, Mount Kadrvâ-aspa 2, Mount Kaoirisa, Mount Taëra, Mount Barô-srayana, Mount Barana, Mount Frâpayau, Mount Udrya, and Mount Raëvant, and all those heights to which men have given the name of mount,

7 To the number of two thousand mountains, and two hundred and forty and four, O Spitama Zarathustra!

8 For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice worth being heard, namely, unto the awful kingly Glory. Unto the awful kingly Glory we offer up the libations, the Haoma and meat, the baresma, the wisdom of the tongue, the holy spells, the speech, the deeds, the libations, and the rightly-spoken words. Yënêhâtâm: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

9 We sacrifice unto the awful kingly Glory, made by Mazda; most conquering, highly working, that possesses health, wisdom, and happiness, and is more powerful to destroy than all other creatures;

10 That belongs to Ahura Mazda, as (through it) Ahura Mazda made the creatures, many and good, many and fair, many and wonderful, many and prosperous, many and bright;

11 So that they may restore the world, which will (thenceforth) never grow old and never die, never decaying and never rotting, ever living and ever increasing, and master of its wish, when the dead will rise, when life and immortality will come, and the world will be restored at its wish;

12 When the creation will grow deathless,—the prosperous creation of the Good Spirit,—and the Drug shall perish, though she may rush on every side to kill the holy beings; she and her hundredfold brood shall perish, as it is the will of the Lord.

13 For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

14 We sacrifice unto the awful kingly Glory, made by Mazda

15 That belongs to the Amesha-Spentas, the bright ones, whose looks perform their wish, tall, quickly coming to do, strong, lordly, who are undecaying and holy;

16 Who are all seven of one thought, who are all seven of one speech, who are all seven of one deed; whose thought is the same, whose speech is the same, whose deed is the same, whose father and commander is the same, namely, the Maker, Ahura Mazda.

17 Who see one another's soul thinking of good thoughts, thinking of good words, thinking of good deeds, thinking of Garō-nmāna, and whose ways are shining as they go down to the libations;

18 Who are the makers and governors, the shapers and overseers, the keepers and preservers of these creations of Ahura Mazda.

19 It is they who shall restore the world, which will (thenceforth) never grow old and never die, never decaying and never rotting, ever living and ever increasing, and master of its wish, when the dead will rise, when life and immortality will come, and the world will be restored at its wish;

20 When the creation will grow deathless,—the prosperous creation of the Good Spirit,—and the Drug shall perish, though she may rush on every side to kill the holy beings; she and her hundredfold brood shall perish, as it is the will of the Lord. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

22 That belongs to the gods in the heavens and to those in the material world, and to the blessed ones, born or not yet born, who are to perform the restoration of the world.

23 It is they who shall restore the world, which will (thenceforth) never grow old and never die, never decaying and never rotting, ever living and ever increasing, and master of its wish, when the dead will rise, when life and immortality will come, and the world will be restored at its wish;

24 When the creation will grow deathless,—the prosperous creation of the Good Spirit,—and the Drug shall perish, though she may rush on every side to kill the holy beings; she and her hundredfold brood shall perish, as it is the will of the Lord. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

26 That clave unto Haoshyangha, the Paradhāta, for a long time, when he ruled over the seven Karshvares of the earth, over the Daēvas and men, over the Yātus and the Pairikas, over the oppressors, the blind, and the deaf, he who smote two-thirds of the Daēvas of Māzana and of the Varenya fiends. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

27 We sacrifice unto the awful kingly Glory, made by Mazda

28 That clave unto Takhma Urupa, the well-armed, while he ruled over the seven Karshvares of the earth, over the Daēvas and men, the Yātus and Pairikas, the oppressors, the blind, and the deaf;

29 When he conquered all Daēvas and men, all the Yātus and Pairikas, and rode Angra Mainyu, turned into the shape of a horse, all around the earth from one end to the other, for thirty years. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

30 We sacrifice unto the awful kingly Glory, made by Mazda

31 That clave unto the bright Yima, the good shepherd, for a long time, while he ruled over the seven Karshvares of the earth, over the Daēvas and men, the Yātus and Pairikas, the oppressors, the blind, and the deaf;

32 He who took from the Daēvas both riches and welfare, both fatness and flocks, both weal and Glory; In whose reign both ailments were never failing for feeding creatures, flocks and men were undying, waters and plants were undying;

33 In whose reign there was neither cold wind nor hot wind, neither old age nor death, nor envy made by the Daēvas 5, in the times before his lie, before he began to have delight in words of falsehood and untruth.

34 But when he began to find delight in words of falsehood and untruth, the Glory was seen to flee away from him in the shape of a bird. When his Glory had disappeared, then the great Yima Khshaēta the good shepherd, trembled and was in sorrow before his foes; he was confounded, and laid him down on the ground.

35 The first time when the Glory departed from the bright Yima, the Glory went from Yima, the son of Vivanghant, in the shape of a Vāraghna bird. Then Mithra seized that Glory, Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, whose ear is quick to hear, who has a thousand senses. We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of all countries, whom Ahura Mazda has created the most glorious of all the gods in the heavens.

36 The second time when the Glory departed from the bright Yima, the Glory went from Yima, the son of Vivanghant, in the shape of a Vāraghna bird. Then Thraētaona seized that Glory, he, the heir of the valiant Áthwya clan, who was the most victorious of all victorious men next to Zarathustra;

37 Who smote Azi Dahāka, the three-mouthed, the three-headed, the six-eyed, who had a thousand senses, that most powerful, fiendish Drug; that demon baleful to the world, the strongest Drug that Angra Mainyu created against the material world, to destroy the world of the good principle.

38 The third time when the Glory departed from the bright Yima, that Glory went from Yima, the son of Vivanghant, in the shape of a Vāraghna bird. Then the manly-hearted Keresāspa I seized that Glory; he who was the sturdiest of the men of strength, next to Zarathustra, for his manly courage.

39 For Manly Courage clave unto him. We worship Manly Courage, firm or foot, unsleeping, quick to rise, and fully awake, that clave unto Keresāspa;

40 Who killed the snake Srvara, the horse-devouring, men-devouring, yellow, poisonous snake, over which yellow poison flowed a thumb's breadth thick. Upon him Keresāspa was cooking his food in a brass vessel: at the time of noon, the fiend felt the heat, and stood upon his feet: he rushed from under the brass vessel and upset the boiling water: the manly-hearted Keresāspa fell back affrighted;

41 Who killed the golden-heeled Gandarewa, that was rushing with open jaws, eager to destroy the living world of the good principle; Who killed the brood of Pathana, all the nine; and the brood of Nivika, and the brood of Dāstayana; Who killed the golden-crowned Hitāspa, and Vareshava, the son of Dāna, and Pitaona, attended by many Pairikas;

42 Who killed Arezō-shamana, him of the manly courage, who was strong, well-beloved, hail, energetically rushing, fully awake, never falling back

43 Who killed Snāvīdhaka, him who killed with his nails, the stone-handed: thus did he exclaim to all around: 'I am an infant still, I am not yet of age: if I ever grow of age, I shall make the earth a wheel, I shall make the heavens a chariot;

44 I shall bring down the Good Spirit from the shining Garō-nmāna: I shall make the Evil Spirit rush up from the dreary Hell. They will carry my chariot, both the Good Spirit and the Evil One, unless the manly-hearted Keresāspa kill me.' The manly-hearted Keresāspa killed him, his life went away, his spirit vanished. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

45 We sacrifice unto the awful Glory, that cannot be forcibly seized, made by Mazda

46 For which the Good Spirit and the Evil One did struggle with one another: for that Glory that cannot be forcibly seized they flung each of them. their darts most swift. The Good Spirit flung a dart, and so did Vohu-Manō, and Asha-Vahista and Átar, the son of Ahura Mazda. The Evil Spirit flung a dart, and so did Akem-Manō, and Aēshma of the wounding spear, and Azi Dahāka and Spityura, he who saved Yima in twain.

47 Then forward came Átar, the son of Ahura Mazda, thinking thus in his heart: 'I want to seize that Glory that cannot be forcibly seized.' But Azi Dahāka, the three-mouthed, he of the evil law, rushed on his back, thinking of extinguishing it:

48 'Here give it up to me, O Átar, son of Ahura Mazda: if thou seizest that Glory that cannot be forcibly seized, I shall rush upon thee, so that thou mayest never more blaze on the earth made by Ahura and protect the world of the good principle.' And Átar took back his hands, as the instinct of life prevailed, so much had Azi affrighted him.

49 Then Azi, the three-mouthed, he of the evil law, rushed forward, thinking thus in his heart: 'I want to seize that Glory that cannot be forcibly seized.' But Átar, the son of Ahura Mazda, advanced behind him, speaking in these words:

50 'Then give it up to me, thou three-mouthed Azi Dahāka. If thou seizest that Glory that cannot be forcibly seized, then I will enter thy hinder part, I will blaze up in thy jaws, so that thou mayest never more rush upon the earth made by Mazda and destroy the world of the good principle.' Then Azi took back his hands, as the instinct of life prevailed, so much had Átar affrighted him.

51 That Glory swells up and goes to the sea Vouru-Kasha. The swift-horsed Son of the Waters seizes it at once: this is the wish of the Son of the Waters, the swift-horsed: 'I want to seize that Glory that cannot be forcibly seized, down to the bottom of the sea Vouru-Kasha, in the bottom of the deep rivers.'

52 We sacrifice unto the Son of the Waters, the swift-horsed, the tall and shining lord, the lord of females; the male god, who helps one at his appeal; who made man, who shaped man, a god who lives beneath waters, and whose ear is the quickest to hear when he is worshipped.

53 'And whosoever of you, O men,—thus said Ahura Mazda,—'O holy Zarathustra! shall seize that Glory that cannot be forcibly seized, he has the gifts of an Athravan; whosoever shall long for the illumination of knowledge, he has the gifts of an Athravan; whosoever shall long for fulness of knowledge, he has the gifts of an Athravan;

54 'And Riches will cleave unto him, giving him full welfare, holding a shield before him, powerful, rich of cattle and garments; and Victory will cleave unto him, day after day; and likewise Strength, that smites more than a year. Attended by that Victory, he will conquer the havoeking hordes; attended by that Victory, he will conquer all those who hate him.' For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

55 We sacrifice unto the awful Glory, that cannot be forcibly seized, made by Mazda

56 Which the Turanian ruffian Frangrasyan tried to seize in the sea Vouru-Kasha. He stripped himself naked, wishing to seize that Glory that belongs to the Aryan nations, born and unborn, and to the holy Zarathustra. But the Glory escaped, the Glory fled away, the Glory changed its seat, and an arm of the sea Vouru-Kasha was produced, namely, that lake that is called Lake Husravah.

57 Then the most crafty Turanian Frangrasyan rushed out of the sea Vouru-Kasha, O Spítama Zarathustra! thinking evil thoughts: '. . . . I have not been able to conquer the Glory that belongs to the Aryan nations, born and unborn, and to the holy Zarathustra.

58 'Then I will defile all corn and liquors, as to greatness, goodness, and fairness.' —'Ahura Mazda will come against thee, ever eager to create new creatures.' Then the most crafty Turanian Frangrasyan rushed down into the sea Vouru-Kasha, O Spítama Zarathustra!

59 A second time he stripped himself naked, wishing to seize that Glory that belongs to the Aryan nations, born and unborn, and to the holy Zarathustra. But the Glory escaped, the Glory fled away, the Glory changed its seat, and an arm of the sea Vouru-Kasha was produced, namely, that lake that is called Lake Vanghazdau.

60 Then the most crafty Turanian Frangrasyan rushed out of the sea Vouru-Kasha, O Spítama Zarathustra! thinking evil thoughts: '. . . . I have not been able to conquer the Glory that belongs to the Aryan nations, born and unborn, and to the holy Zarathustra.

61 'Then I will defile all corn and liquors, as to greatness, goodness, and fairness.' —'Ahura Mazda will come against thee, ever eager to create new creatures.' Then the most crafty Turanian Frangrasyan rushed down into the sea Vouru-Kasha.

62 A third time he stripped himself naked, wishing to seize the Glory that belongs to the Aryan nations, born and unborn, and to the holy Zarathustra. But the Glory escaped, the Glory fled away, the Glory changed its seat, and an arm was produced in the sea Vouru-Kasha, namely, the water that is called Awz-dānava.

63 Then the most crafty Turanian Frangrasyan rushed out of the sea Vouru-Kasha, O Spítama Zarathustra! thinking evil thoughts: '. . . . I have not been able to conquer the Glory that belongs to the Aryan nations, born and unborn, and to the holy Zarathustra!

64 He was not able to seize the Glory that belongs to the Aryan nations, born and unborn, and to the holy Zarathustra. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

65 We sacrifice unto the awful Glory that cannot be forcibly seized, made by Mazda

66 That cleaves unto him who grows up there, where lies Lake Kāsava, along with the Haētumant river; there where stands Mount Ushidhau, surrounded by waters, that run from the mountain.

67 It runs unto him, it flows and swells unto him, bringing good pastures and fine horses, bringing plenty, full of glory; with beauty and weal; powerful and friendly, rich of pastures, prolific and golden. It runs unto him, it flows and swells unto him, bright and glorious, making the white grow, smiting away all plagues.

68 And there comes with him a horse's strength, there comes with him a camel's strength, there comes with him a man's strength, there comes with him the kingly Glory; and there is in him, O holy Zarathustra! so much of kingly Glory as might extinguish at once all the non-Aryan nations.

69 And then (through it) living creatures may keep away hunger and death, living creatures (may keep away) cold and heat. Such is the kingly Glory, the keeper of the Aryan nations and of the five kinds of animals, made to help the faithful and the Law of the worshippers of Mazda. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

71 That clave unto Kavi Kavāta, and unto Kavi Aipivōhu, and unto Kavi Usadha, and unto Kavi Arshan, and unto Kavi Pisina, and unto Kavi Byārshan, and unto Kavi Syāvarshan;

72 So that they were all of them brave, all of them strong, all of them healthful, all of them wise, all of them happy in their wishes, all of them powerful kings. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

73 We sacrifice unto the awful kingly Glory, made by Mazda

74 That clave unto Kavi Husravah for the well-shapen Strength, for the Victory made by Ahura, for the crushing Ascendant; for the righteousness of the law, for the innocence of the law, for the unconquerable power of the law; for the extermination of the enemies at one stroke;

75 And for the vigour of health, for the Glory made by Mazda, for the health of the body, and for a good, virtuous offspring, wise, chief in assemblies, bright, and clear-eyed, that frees [their father] from the pangs [of hell], of good intellect; and for that part in the blessed world that falls to wisdom and to those who do not follow impiety;

76 And for a dominion full of splendour, for a long, long life, and for all boons and remedies;

77 So that king Husravah [had the lead] all along the long race, and he could not pass through the forest, he, the murderer, was fiercely striving against him on horseback; the lord Kavi Husravah prevailed over all; he put in bonds Frangrasyan and Keresavazda, to avenge the murder of his father Syāvarshāna, a man, and of Aghraēratha, a semi-man. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

78 We sacrifice unto the awful kingly Glory, made by Mazda

79 That clave unto the holy Zarathustra, so that he thought according to the Law, spake according to the Law, and did according to the Law; so that he was the holiest in holiness in all the living world, the best-ruling in exercising rule, the brightest in brightness, the most glorious in glory, the most victorious in victory.

80 At his sight the Daēvas rushed away; at his sight the (demoniac) malices were extinguished; at his sight the Gains drew back their ways from the mortals and, lamenting and wailing, laid violent hands on the Daēvas.

81 And that one prayer, the Ahuna Vairya, which the holy Zarathustra sang and repeated four times, with a song that waxed louder and louder, drove back all the Daēvas beneath the earth, and took off from them sacrifice and prayer.

82 It was it, the Glory of Zarathustra, that the Turanian ruffian Frangrasyan tried to seize to rule over all the Karshvares; round about the seven Karshvares did that ruffian Frangrasyan rush, trying to seize the Glory of Zarathustra. But that Glory escaped to hidden inlets of the sea; and there those two made will roll on; they entered my will, as it was my wish, Ahura Mazda's, and as it was the wish of the Law of Mazda. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

84 That clave unto king Vistāspa, so that he thought according to the Law, spake according to the Law, and did according to the Law; so that he professed that Law, destroying his foes and causing the Daēvas to retire.

85 Who, driving the Drug before him, sought wide room for the holy religion; who, driving the Drug before him, made wide room for the holy religion; who made himself the arm and support of this law of Ahura, of this law of Zarathustra;

86 Who took her, standing bound, from the hands of the Hunus, and established her to sit in the middle [of the world], high ruling, never falling back, holy, nourished with plenty of cattle and pastures, blessed with plenty of cattle and pastures.

87 The valiant king Vistāspa conquered all enemies, Tāhravant of the evil law, Peshana, the worshipper of the Daēvas, and the fiendish wicked Aregat-aspā and the other wicked Hvyaoas 3. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

88 We sacrifice unto the awful kingly Glory, made by Mazda

89 That will cleave unto the victorious Saoshyant and his helpers, when he shall restore the world, which will (thenceforth) never grow old and never die, never decaying and never rotting, ever living and ever increasing, and master of its wish, when the dead will rise, when life and immortality will come, and the world will be restored at its wish;

90 When the creation will grow deathless,—the prosperous creation of the Good Spirit,—and the Drug shall perish, though she may rush on every side to kill the holy beings; she and her hundredfold brood shall perish, as it is the will of the Lord. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

92 When Astvat-ereta shall rise up from Lake Kāsava, a friend of Ahura Mazda, a son of Vispa-taurvairi, knowing the victorious knowledge. It was that Glory that Thrātaona bore with him when Azi Dahāka was killed;

93 That Frangrasyan, the Turanian, bore when Drvau was killed, when the Bull was killed; That king Husravah bore when Frangrasyan, the Turanian, was killed; That king Vistāspa bore, when he victoriously maintained Holiness against the host of the fiends and took off the Drug from the world of the good principle.

94 He, with the eye of intelligence, shall look down upon all the creatures of the Paēsīs, her of the evil seed: he shall look upon the whole living world with the eye of plenty, and his look shall deliver to immortality the whole of the living creatures.

95 And there shall his friends come forward, the friends of Astvat-ereta, who are fiend-smiting, well-thinking, well-speaking, well-doing, following the good law, and whose tongues have never uttered a word of falsehood. Before them shall Aēshma of the wounding spear, who has no Glory, bow and flee; he shall smite the most wicked Drug, her of the evil seed, born of darkness.

96 Akem-Manō 6 smites, but Vohu-Manō shall smite him; the Word of falsehood smites, but the Word of truth shall smite it. Haurvatāt and Ameretāt shall smite both hunger and thirst: Haurvatāt and Ameretāt shall smite the evil hunger and the evil thirst. The evil-doing Angra Mainyu bows and flees, becoming powerless. For its brightness and glory, I will offer it a sacrifice

97 Yathā ahū vairiyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of Mount Ushi-darena, made by Mazda, the seat of holy happiness; of the kingly Glory, made by Mazda; of the Glory that cannot be forcibly seized, made by Mazda.

20. VANANT YAST.

Unto the star Vanant, made by Mazda, Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathā ahū vairiyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

1 We sacrifice unto the star Vanant, made by Mazda, the holy and master of holiness. I will sacrifice unto Vanant, strong, invoked by his own name, healing, in order to withstand the accursed and most foul Khrasstras of the most abominable Angra Mainyu.

2 Yathā ahū vairiyo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of the star Vanant, made by Mazda. Ashem Vohū: Holiness is the best of all good [Give] unto that man brightness and glory, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones.

21 AND 22. YAST FRAGMENTS.

(These two Yasts or Yast fragments are known among the Parsis as the Hādōkht Nask, though their context does not correspond to any part of the description of that Nask as given in the Din-kart [West, Pahlavi Texts, 1, 224].)

21. YAST FRAGMENT.

Yast 21 is a eulogy of the Ashem Vohū prayer, the value of which rises higher and higher, according as the circumstances under which it is being recited are of greater importance.

1 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! What is the only word in which is contained the glorification of all good things, of all the things that are the offspring of the good principle?'

2 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is the praise of Holiness, O Spitama Zarathustra!'

3 'He who recites the praise of Holiness, in the fulness of faith and with a devoted heart, praises me, Ahura Mazda; he praises the waters, he praises the earth, he praises the cattle, he praises the plants, he praises all good things made by Mazda, all the things that are the offspring of the good principle.

4 'For the reciting of that word of truth, O Zarathustra! the pronouncing of that formula, the Ahuna Vairya, increases strength and victory in one's soul and piety.

5 'For that only recital of the praise of Holiness is worth a hundred kshnaothras of the beings of Holiness, when delivered while going to sleep, a thousand when delivered after eating, ten thousand when delivered during cohabitation, or any number when delivered in departing this life.'

6 'What is the one recital of the praise of Holiness that is worth ten others in greatness, goodness, and fairness?'

7 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is that one, O holy Zarathustra! that a man delivers when eating the gifts of Haurvatāt and Ameretāt, at the same time professing good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, and rejecting evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds.'

8 'What is the one recital of the praise of Holiness that is worth a hundred others in greatness, goodness, and fairness?'

9 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is that one, O holy Zarathustra! that a man delivers while drinking of the Haoma strained for the sacrifice, at the same time professing good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, and rejecting evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds.'

10 'What is the one recital of the praise of Holiness that is worth a thousand others in greatness, goodness, and fairness?'

11 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is that one, O holy Zarathustra! that a man delivers when starting up from his bed or going to sleep again, at the same time professing good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, and rejecting evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds.'

12 'What is the one recital of the praise of Holiness that is worth ten thousand others in greatness, goodness, and fairness?'

13 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is that one, O holy Zarathustra! that a man delivers when waking up and rising from sleep, at the same time professing good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, and rejecting evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds.'

14 'What is the one recital of the praise of Holiness that is worth this Karshvare of ours, Hvaniratha, with its cattle and its chariots, without its men, in greatness, goodness, and fairness?'

15 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is that one, O holy Zarathustra! that a man delivers in the last moments of his life, at the same time professing good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, and rejecting evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds.'

16 'What is the one recital of the praise of Holiness that is worth all that is between the earth and the heavens, and this earth, and that luminous space, and all the good things made by Mazda, that are the offspring of the good principle in greatness, goodness, and fairness?'

17 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It is that one, O holy Zarathustra! that a man delivers to renounce evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds.'

(This Yast is a description of the fate that attends the soul of the righteous (§§ 1-18) and the soul of the wicked (§§ 19-37) after death. They spend the first three nights (the sadis or sidōs; cf. Commentaire du Vendidad, 13, 55) amongst the highest enjoyments or pains; they are then met by their own conscience in the shape of a beautiful heavenly maiden (or a fiendish old woman), and are brought in four steps up to heaven or down to hell, through the three paradises of Good-Thought, Good-Word, and Good-Deed, or the three hells of Evil-Thought, Evil-Word, and Evil-Deed: there they are praised and glorified by Ahura, or rebuked and insulted by Angra Mainyu, and fed with ambrosia or poison. Similar developments are to be found in Yast 24, 53-65; Ardā Virāf 17; Minokhired 2, 123-194.)

1 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When one of the faithful departs this life, where does his soul abide on that night?'

2 'It takes its seat near the head, singing the Ustavaiti Gātha and proclaiming happiness: "Happy is he, happy the man, whoever he be, to whom Ahura Mazda gives the full accomplishment of his wishes!" On that night his soul tastes as much of pleasure as the whole of the living world can taste.'

3 'On the second night where does his soul abide?'

4 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It takes its seat near the head, singing the Ustavaiti Gātha and proclaiming happiness: "Happy is he, happy the man, whoever he be, to whom Ahura Mazda gives the full accomplishment of his wishes!" On that night his soul tastes as much of pleasure as the whole of the living world can taste.'

5 'On the third night where does his soul abide?'

6 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It takes its seat near the head, singing the Ustavaiti Gātha and proclaiming happiness: "Happy is he, happy the man, whoever he be, to whom Ahura Mazda gives the full accomplishment of his wishes!" On that night his soul tastes as much of pleasure as the whole of the living world can taste.'

7 At the end of the third night, when the dawn appears, it seems to the soul of the faithful one as if it were brought amidst plants and scents; it seems as if a wind were blowing from the region of the south, from the regions of the south, a sweet-scented wind, sweeter-scented than any other wind in the world.

8 And it seems to the soul of the faithful one as if he were inhaling that wind with the nostrils, and he thinks: 'Whence does that wind blow, the sweetest-scented wind I ever inhaled with my nostrils?'

9 And it seems to him as if his own conscience were advancing to him in that wind, in the shape of a maiden fair, bright, white-armed, strong, tall-formed, high-standing, thick-breasted, beautiful of body, noble, of a glorious seed, of the size of a maid in her fifteenth year, as fair as the fairest things in the world.

10 And the soul of the faithful one addressed her, asking: 'What maid art thou, who art the fairest maid I have ever seen?'

11 And she, being his own conscience, answers him: 'O thou youth of good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, of good religion, I am thy own conscience! Everybody did love thee for that greatness, goodness, fairness, sweet-scentedness, victorious strength and freedom from sorrow, in which thou dost appear to me;

12 'And so thou, O youth of good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, of good religion! didst love me for that greatness, goodness, fairness, sweet-scentedness, victorious strength, and freedom from sorrow, in which I appear to thee.

13 'When thou wouldst see a man making derision and deeds of idolatry, or rejecting (the poor) and shutting his door, then thou wouldst sit singing the Gāthas and worshipping the good waters and Atar, the son of Ahura Mazda, and rejoicing the faithful that would come from near or from afar.

14 'I was lovely and thou madest me still lovelier; I was fair and thou madest me still fairer; I was desirable and thou madest me still more desirable; I was sitting in a forward place and thou madest me sit in the foremost place, through this good thought, through this good speech, through this good deed of thine; and so henceforth men worship me for my having long sacrificed unto and conversed with Ahura Mazda.

15 'The first step that the soul of the faithful man made, placed him in the Good-Thought Paradise; 'The second step that the soul of the faithful man made, placed him in the Good-Word Paradise; 'The third step that the soul of the faithful man made, placed him in the Good-Deed Paradise;

'The fourth step that the soul of the faithful man made, placed him in the Endless Lights.'

16 Then one of the faithful, who had departed before him, asked him, saying: 'How didst thou depart this life, thou holy man? How didst thou come, thou holy man! from the abodes full of cattle and full of the wishes and enjoyments of love? From the material world into the world of the spirit? From the decaying world into the undecaying one? How long did thy felicity last?'

17 And Ahura Mazda answered: 'Ask him not what thou askest him, who has just gone the dreary way, full of fear and distress, where the body and the soul part from one another.'

18 '[Let him eat] of the food brought to him, of the oil of Zaremaya: this is the food for the youth of good thoughts, of good words, of good deeds, of good religion, after he has departed this life; this is the food for the holy woman, rich in good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, well-principled and obedient to her husband, after she has departed this life.'

19 Zarathustra asked Ahura Mazda: 'O Ahura Mazda, most beneficent Spirit, Maker of the material world, thou Holy One! When one of the wicked perishes, where does his soul abide on that night?'

20 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It rushes and sits near the skull, singing the Kima Gâtha, O holy Zarathustra! "To what land shall I turn, O Ahura Mazda? To whom shall I go with praying?" "On that night his soul tastes as much of suffering as the whole of the living world can taste.'

21 —'On the second night, where does his soul abide?'

22 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It rushes and sits near the skull, singing the Kima Gâtha, O holy Zarathustra! "To what land shall I turn, O Ahura Mazda? To whom shall I go with praying?" "On that night his soul tastes as much of suffering as the whole of the living world can taste.'

23 —'On the third night, where does his soul abide?'

24 Ahura Mazda answered: 'It rushes and sits near the skull, singing the Kima Gâtha, O holy Zarathustra! "To what land shall I turn, O Ahura Mazda? To whom shall I go with praying?" "On that night his soul tastes as much of suffering as the whole of the living world can taste.'

25 At the end of the third night, O holy Zarathustra! when the dawn appears, it seems to the soul of the faithless one as if it were brought amidst snow and stench, and as if a wind were blowing from the region of the north, from the regions of the north, a foul-scented wind, the foulest-scented of all the winds in the world.

26-32 And it seems to the soul of the wicked man as if he were inhaling that wind with the nostrils, and he thinks: 'Whence does that wind blow, the foulest-scented wind that I ever inhaled with my nostrils?'

33 The first step that the soul of the wicked man made laid him in the Evil-Thought Hell; The second step that the soul of the wicked man made laid him in the Evil-Word Hell; The third step that the soul of the wicked man made laid him in the Evil-Deed Hell; The fourth step that the soul of the wicked man made laid him in the Endless Darkness.

34 Then one of the wicked who departed before him addressed him, saying: 'How didst thou perish, O wicked man? How didst thou come, O fiend! from the abodes full of cattle and full of the wishes and enjoyments of love? From the material world into the world of the Spirit? From the decaying world into the undecaying one? How long did thy suffering last?'

35 Angra Mainyu, the lying one, said: 'Ask him not what thou askest him, who has just gone the dreary way, full of fear and distress, where the body and the soul part from one another.'

36 'Let him eat of the food brought unto him, of poison and poisonous stench: this is the food, after he has perished, for the youth of evil thoughts, evil words, evil deeds, evil religion after he has perished; this is the food for the fiendish woman, rich in evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds, evil religion, ill-principled, and disobeyed to her husband.'

37 'We worship the Fravashi of the holy man, whose name is Asmô-hvanvant; then I will worship the Fravashis of the other holy Ones who were strong of faith.'

38 'We worship the memory of Ahura Mazda, to keep the Holy Word. 'We worship the understanding of Ahura Mazda, to study the Holy Word. 'We worship the tongue of Ahura Mazda, to speak forth the Holy Word. 'We worship the mountain that gives understanding, that preserves understanding; [we worship it] by day and by night, with offerings of libations well-accepted.'

39 'O Maker! how do the souls of the dead, the Fravashis of the holy Ones, manifest themselves?'

40 Ahura Mazda answered: 'They manifest themselves from goodness of spirit and excellence of mind.'

41 Then towards the dawning of the dawn, that bird Parôdars, that bird Karetô-dâsu hears the voice of the Fire.

42 Here the fiendish Bûshyâsta, the long-handed, rushes from the region of the north, from the regions of the north, speaking thus, lying thus: 'Sleep on, O men! Sleep on, O sinners! Sleep on and live in sin.'

23. AFRIN PAIGHAMBAR ZARTUST [Zoroaster].

1 'I am a pious man, who speaks words of blessing.' — 'Thou appearest unto me full of Glory.' And Zarathustra spake unto king Vistâspa, saying: 'I bless thee, O man! O lord of the country! with the living of a good life, of an exalted life, of a long life. May thy men live long! May thy women live long! May sons be born unto thee of thy own body!'

2 'Mayest thou have a son like Gâmâspa, and may he bless thee as (Gâmâspa blessed) Vistâspa (the lord) of the country! 'Mayest thou be most beneficent, like Mazda! 'Mayest thou be fiend-smiting, like Thraëtaona! 'Mayest thou be strong, like Gâmâspa! 'Mayest thou be well-armed, like Takhma-Urupa!'

3 'Mayest thou be glorious, like Yima Khshaëta, the good shepherd! 'Mayest thou be instructed with a thousand senses, like Azi Dahâka, of the evil law! 'Mayest thou be awful and most strong, like Keresâspa! 'Mayest thou be a wise chief of assemblies, like Urvâkshaya! 'Mayest thou be beautiful of body and without fault, like Syâvarshâna!'

4 'Mayest thou be rich in cattle, like an Âthwyanide! 'Mayest thou be rich in horses, like Pourus-aspa! 'Mayest thou be holy, like Zarathustra Spitama! 'Mayest thou be able to reach the Rangha, whose shores lie afar, as Vafra Navâza was! 'Mayest thou be beloved by the gods and revered by men!'

5 'May ten sons be born of you! In three of them mayest thou be an Âthraivan! In three of them mayest thou be a warrior! In three of them mayest thou be a tiller of the ground! And may one be like thyself, O Vistâspa!'

6 'Mayest thou be swift-horsed, like the Sun! 'Mayest thou be resplendent, like the moon! 'Mayest thou be hot-burning, like fire! 'Mayest thou have piercing rays, like Mithra! 'Mayest thou be tall-formed and victorious, like the devout Sraosha!'

7 'Mayest thou follow a law of truth, like Rashnu! 'Mayest thou be a conqueror of thy foes, like Verethraghna, made by Ahura! 'Mayest thou have fulness of welfare, like Râma Hvâstra! 'Mayest thou be freed from sickness and death, like king Husravah!'

8 'Then the blessing goes for the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones. 'May it happen unto thee according to my blessing! 'Let us embrace and propagate the good thoughts, good words, and good deeds that have been done and that will be done here and elsewhere, that we may be in the number of the good.'

24. VISTASP YAST.

1 'I am a pious man, who speaks words of blessing,' thus said Zarathustra to the young king Vistâspa. — 'She appears to me full of Glory, O Zarathustra! — 'O young king Vistâspa! [I bless thee] with the living of a good life, of an exalted life, of a long life. May thy men live long! May thy women live long! May sons be born unto thee of thy own body!'

2 'Mayest thou thyself be holy, like Zarathustra! 'Mayest thou be rich in cattle, like an Âthwyanide! 'Mayest thou be rich in horses, like Pourus-aspa! 'Mayest thou have a good share of bliss, like king Husravah! 'Mayest thou have strength to reach the Rangha, whose way lies afar, as Vafra Navâza did.'

3 'May ten sons be born of thy own body! three as Âthravans, three as warriors, three as tillers of the ground! May one of them be like Gâmâspa, that he may bless thee with great and ever greater happiness!'

4 'Mayest thou be freed from sickness and death, like Peshô-tanu. 'Mayest thou have piercing rays, like Mithra! 'Mayest thou be warm, like the moon! 'Mayest thou be resplendent, like fire! 'Mayest thou be long-lived, as long-lived as an old man can be!'

5 'And when thou hast fulfilled a duration of a thousand years, [mayest thou obtain] the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones! 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good'

6 'Give him strength and victory! Give him welfare in cattle and bread!' thus said Zarathustra to the young king Vistâspa! 'Give him a great number of male children, praisers [of God] and chiefs in assemblies, who smite and are not smitten, who smite at one stroke their enemies, who smite at one stroke their foes, ever in joy and ready to help.'

7 'Ye gods of full Glory, ye gods of full healing, let your greatness become manifest!'

8 Zarathustra addressed him, saying: 'O young king Vistâspa! May their greatness become manifest as it is called for! 'Ye Waters, impart and give your Glory to the man who offers you a sacrifice! 'This is the boon we beg (for thee) of Ashi Vanguhi, of Râta, with eyes of love.'

9 Pârendi, of the light chariot, follows: 'Mayest thou become manifest unto him, the young king Vistâspa! 'May plenty dwell in this house, standing upon high columns and rich in food! Thou wilt never offer and give bad food to a priest: for a priest must be to thee like the brightest offspring of thy own blood.'

10 Zarathustra spake unto him: 'O young king Vistâspa! 'He who supports the Law of the worshippers of Mazda, as a brother or as a friend, he who treats her friendly in any way, looks to keep off want of food from her.'

11 The holy Zarathustra preached that law to Frashaostra and Gâmâspa: 'May ye practise holiness and thrive, O young Frashaostra (and Gâmâspa)!'

12 Thus said Ahura Mazda unto the holy Zarathustra, and thus again did Zarathustra say unto the young king Vistâspa: 'Have no bad priests or unfriendly priests; for bad priests or unfriendly priests will bring about much harm, and, though thou wish to sacrifice, it will be to the Amesha-Spentas as if no sacrifice had been offered. 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good'

13 'When I teach thee, that thou mayest do the same to thy son, O Vistâspa! receive thou well that teaching; that will make thee rich in children and rich in milk; rich in seed, in fat, in milk.'

14 'Thus do we announce unto thee, Ahura Mazda, and Sraosha, and Ashi, and the Law of the worshippers of Mazda, with the whole of all her hymns, with the whole of all her deeds, with the whole of her performances; the Law of Mazda, who obtains her wishes, who makes the world grow, who listens to the songs and rejoices the faithful man at his wish; who protects the faithful man, who maintains the faithful man;'

15 'From whom come the knowledge of holiness and the increase in holiness of the world of the holy Principle, and without whom I no faithful man can know holiness. 'To thee come every Hâvanan, every Âtare-vakhsha, every Frabaretar, every Âberet, every Asnâtar, every Rathwiskar, every Sraoshâ-varez;'

16 'Every priest, every warrior, every husbandman; every master of a house, every lord of a borough, every lord of a town, every lord of a province;'

17 'Every youth of good thoughts, good words, good deeds, and good religion; every youth who speaks the right words; every one who performs the next-of-kin marriage; every itinerant priest; every mistress of a house; every wandering priest, obedient to the Law.'

18 'To thee come all the performers (of holiness), all the masters of holiness, who, to the number of three and thirty, stand next to Hâvani, being masters of holiness.'

19 'May they be fully protected in thee, O young king Vistâspa! While thou smitest thy adversaries, thy foes, those who hate thee, a hundred times a hundred for a hundred, a thousand times a thousand for a thousand, ten thousand times ten thousand for ten thousand, myriads of myriads for a myriad.'

20 'Proclaim thou that word, as we did proclaim it unto thee! 'O Maker of the good world! Ahura Mazda, I worship thee with a sacrifice, I worship and forward thee with a sacrifice, I worship this creation of Ahura Mazda.'

21 The young king Vistâspa asked Zarathustra: 'With what manner of sacrifice shall I worship, with what manner of sacrifice shall I worship and forward this creation of Ahura Mazda?'

22 Zarathustra answered: 'We will make it known unto thee, O young king Vistâspa! 'Go towards that tree that is beautiful, high-growing, and mighty amongst the high-growing trees, and say thou these words: "Hail to thee! O good, holy tree, made by Mazda! Ashem Vohû!"'

23 'Let the faithful man cut off twigs of baresma, either one, or two, or three: let him bind them and tie them up according to the rites, being bound and unbound according to the rites. 'The smallest twig of Haoma, pounded according to the rules, the smallest twig prepared for sacrifice, gives royalty to the man (who does it). 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good'

24 Zarathustra said: 'O young king Vistâspa! 'Invoke Ahura Mazda, who is full of Glory, Ahura Mazda, and the sovereign Heaven, the boundless Time, and Vayu who works highly.'

25 'Invoke the powerful Wind, made by Mazda, and Fate. 'Repeat thou those words, that the god invoked may give thee the boon wished for; that thou, strong, and belonging to the creation of the good Spirit, mayest smite and take away the Drug and watch with full success those who hate thee; smite down thy foes, and destroy at one stroke thy adversaries, thy enemies, and those who hate thee.'

26 'Proclaim thou those prayers: they will cleanse thy body from deeds of lust, O young king Vistâspa! 'I will worship thee, O Fire, son of Ahura Mazda, who art a valiant warrior. He falls upon the fiend Kunda, who is drunken without drinking, upon the men of the Drug, the slothful ones, the wicked Daëva-worshippers, who live in sin.'

27 'He I trembles at the way made by Time and open both to the wicked and to the righteous. 'They tremble at the perfume of his soul, as a sheep does on which a wolf is falling.'

28 'Reciting the whole collection of the Staota Yêsnya 5 prayers brings one up all the way to the blessed Garô-mâna, the palace beautifully made. That indeed is the way.'

29 'That man does not follow the way of the Law, O Zarathustra! who commits the Baodhô-(varsta) crime with a damsel and an old woman,' said Zarathustra to the young king Vistâspa. 'Let him praise the Law, O Spitama Zarathustra! and long for it and embrace the whole of the Law, as an excellent horse turns back from the wrong way and goes along the right one, smiting the many Druages.'

30 'Go forward with praises, go forward the way of the good Mazdean law and of all those who walk in her ways, men and women. 'He who wishes to seize the heavenly reward, will seize it by giving gifts to him who holds up (the Law) to us in this world here below . . .

31 'Let him give (the Law) to him who is unfriendly to her, that he may become friendly. 'Wash thy hands with water, not with gôméz, and let thy son, who will be born of thy wife, do the same. 'Thus thy thought will be powerful to smite him, who is not so; thy speech will be powerful to smite him, who is not so; thy deed will be powerful to smite him.

32 'Hear me! Forgive me!'—We, the Amesha-Spentas, will come and show thee, O Zarathustra! the way to that world, to long glory in the spiritual world, to long happiness of the soul in Paradise;

33 'To bliss and Paradise, to the Garô-nmâna of Ahura Mazda, beautifully made and fully adorned, when his soul goes out of his body through the will of fate, when I, Ahura Mazda, when I, Ahura Mazda, gently show him his way as he asks for it. 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good . . .

34 'They will impart to thee full brightness and Glory. 'They will give him quick and swift horses, and good sons. 'He wishes to go to the Law, the young king Vistâspa. 'Zarathustra said: 'Let him who is unfriendly to her become a follower of the Law of Mazda, such as we proclaim it.

35 'Proclaim thou ever (unto the poor): "Ever mayest thou wait here for the refuse that is brought unto thee, brought by those who have profusion of wealth!" Thus the Drug will not fall upon thee and throw thee away; thou wilt wield kingly power there.

36 'The Law of Mazda will not deliver thee unto pain. Thou art entreated (for charity) by the whole of the living world, and she is ever standing at thy door in the person of thy brethren in the faith: beggars are ever standing at the door of the stranger, amongst those who beg for bread. 'Ever will that bread be burning coal upon thy head. 'The good, holy Râta, made by Mazda, goes and nurses thy bright offspring.'

37 Zarathustra addressed Vistâspa, saying: 'O young king Vistâspa! The Law of Mazda, O my son! will give thy offspring the victorious strength that destroys the fiends. 'Let no thought of Angra Mainyu ever infect thee, so that thou shouldst indulge in evil lusts, make derision and idolatry, and shut (to the poor) the door of thy house.

38 'Âtar thus blesses the man who brings incense to him, being pleased with him and not angry, and fed as he required: "May herds of oxen grow for thee, and increase of sons! May fate and its decrees bring thee the boons thou wishest for! Therefore do thou invoke and praise (me) excellently in this glorious world! That I may have unceasing food, full of the glory of Mazda and with which I am well pleased."

39 'O Mazda! take for thyself the words of our praise: of these words I speak and speak again, the strength and victorious vigour, the power of health and healing, the fulness, increase, and growth. 'Bring it together with the words of hymns up to the Garô-nmâna of Ahura Mazda. He will first enter there. Therefore do thou pronounce these prayers. 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good . . .

40 'Converse ye with the Amesha-Spentas,' said Zarathustra unto the young king Vistâspa, and with the devout Sraosha, and Nairyô-sangha, the tall-formed, and Âtar, the son of Ahura Mazda, and the well-desired kingly Glory.

41 'Men with lustful deeds address the body; but thou, all the night long, address the heavenly Wisdom; but thou, all night long, call for the Wisdom that will keep thee awake. 'Three times a day raise thyself up and go to take care of the beneficent cattle.

42 'Of these men may the lordship belong to the wisest of all beings, O Zarathustra! May their lord belong to the wisest, O Zarathustra! Let him show them the way of holiness, let him show them at once the way thereto, which the Law of the worshippers of Mazda enters victoriously. Thus the soul of man, in the joy of perfect holiness, walks over the bridge, known afar, the powerful Kinvat-bridge, the well-kept, and kept by virtue.

43 'How the worlds were arranged was said to thee first, O Zarathustra! Zarathustra said it again to the young king Vistâspa; therefore do thou praise him 6 who keeps and maintains the moon and the sun. 'He who has little friendship for the Law, I have placed him down below to suffer.'

44 Thus said Angra Mainyu, he who has no Glory in him, who is full of death: 'This is an unbeliever, let us throw him down below; this is a liar, or a traitor to his relatives, and like a mad dog who wounds cattle and men; but the dog who inflicts wounds pays for it as for wilful murder. 'The first time he shall smite a faithful man, the first time he shall wound a faithful man, he shall pay for it as for wilful murder. 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good . . .

45 'Mayest thou receive, O holy young king Vistâspa! (a house) with a hundred . . . ten thousand large windows, ten thousand small windows, all the year long, O holy Vistâspa! never growing old, never dying, never decaying, never rotting, giving plenty of meat, plenty of food, plenty of clothes to the other worshippers of Mazda.

46 'May all boons be bestowed upon thee, as I proclaim it unto thee! May the Amesha-Spentas impart to thee their brightness and glory and plenty! May they give him quick and swift horses and good sons, strong, great in all things, powerful to sing the hymns.

47 'He wields his power according to the wish of Ahura Mazda, the Good Spirit, and for the destruction of the Evil Spirit, whichever of two men goes quicker to perform a sacrifice (to Ahura); but if he chooses to perform the sacrifice and prayer to us not in the right way, he does not wield the right power, he will not reign.

48 'He will receive bad treatment in the next world, though he has been the sovereign of a country, with good horses to ride and good chariots to drive. Give royalty to that man, O Zarathustra! who gives royalty unto thee with good will.

49 'Thou shalt keep away the evil by this holy spell: "Of thee [O child!] I will cleanse the birth and growth; of thee [O woman!] I will make the body and the strength pure; I make thee a woman rich in children and rich in milk; a woman rich in seed, in milk, and in offspring. For thee I shall make springs run and flow towards the pastures that will give food to the child."

50 'Do not deliver me into the hands of the fiend; if the fiend take hold of me, then fever with loss of all joy will dry up the milk of the good Spenta-Armaiti. The fiend is powerful to distress, and to dry up the milk of the woman who indulges in lust and of all females.

51 'The perfume of fire, pleasant to the Maker, Ahura Mazda, takes them I away from afar; . . . ; and all those that harm the creation of the Good Spirit are destroyed;

52 'Whom Mithra, and Rashnu Razista, and the Law of the worshippers of Mazda wish to be taken far away, longing for a man who is eager to perform and does perform the ceremonies he has been taught; . . . 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good . . .

53 'The words of the Vahistôisti Gâtha are to be sung: "Happy is he, O holy Vistâspa! happy the man, whoever he be, to whom Ahura Mazda gives the full accomplishment of his wishes." 'Where does his soul abide on that night?"

54 Ahura Mazda answered: 'O my son, Frashaotra! It takes its seat near the head, singing the Ustavaiti Gâtha and proclaiming happiness: "Happy is he, happy the man whoever he be!" 'On the first night, his soul sits in Good Words 8; on the second night, it sits in Good Deeds; on the third night, it goes along the ways (to Garô-nmâna).

55 'At the end of the third night, O my son, Frashaotra! when the dawn appears, it seems to the soul of the faithful one as if it were brought amidst plants [and scents: it seems as if a wind were blowing from the region of the south, from the regions of the south], a sweet-scented wind, sweeter-scented than any other wind in the world, and it seems to his soul as if he were inhaling that wind with the nose, and it asks, saying: "Whence does that wind blow, the sweetest-scented wind I ever inhaled with my nose?"

56 'And it seems to him as if his own conscience were advancing to him in that wind, in the shape of a maiden fair, bright, white-armed, strong, tall-formed, high-standing, thick-breasted, beautiful of body, noble, of a glorious seed, of the size of a maid in her fifteenth year, as fair as the fairest things in the world.

57 'And the soul of the faithful one addressed her, asking: "What maid art thou, who art the fairest maid I have ever seen?"

58 'And she, being his own conscience, answers him: "O thou youth, of good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, of good religion! I am thy own conscience. "Everybody did love thee for that greatness, goodness, fairness, sweet-scentedness, victorious strength, and freedom from sorrow, in which thou dost appear to me; [and so thou, O youth of good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, of good religion! didst love me for that greatness, goodness, fairness, sweet-scentedness, victorious strength, and freedom from sorrow, in which I appear to thee.]

59 ' "When thou wouldst see a man] making derision and deeds of idolatry, or rejecting (the poor) and shutting (his door), then, thou wouldst sit, singing the Gâthas, and worshipping the good waters, and Âtar, the son of Ahura Mazda, and rejoicing the faithful that would come from near or from afar.

60 ' "I was lovely, and thou madest me still lovelier; I was fair, and thou madest me still fairer; I was desirable, and thou madest me still more desirable; I was sitting in a forward place, and thou madest me sit in the foremost place, through this good thought, through this good speech, through this good deed of thine; and so henceforth men worship me for my having long sacrificed unto and conversed with Ahura Mazda."

61 'The first step that the soul of the faithful man made, placed him in the Good-Thought Paradise; the second step that the soul of the faithful man made, placed him in the Good-Word Paradise; the third step that the soul of the faithful man made, placed him in the Good-Deed Paradise; the fourth step that the soul of the faithful man made, placed him in the Endless Light.

62 'Then one of the faithful, who had departed before him, asked, saying: "How didst thou depart this life, thou holy man? How didst thou come, thou holy man! from the abodes full of cattle and full of the wishes and enjoyments of love? from the material world into the world of the spirit? from the decaying world into the undecaying one? How long did thy felicity last?"

63 And Ahura Mazda answered: 'Ask him not what thou askest him, who has just gone the dreary way, full of fear and distress, when the body and the soul part from one another.

64 '[Let him eat] of the food brought to him, of the oil of Zaremaya: this is the food for the youth of good thoughts, of good words, of good deeds, of good religion, after he has departed this life; this is the food for the holy woman, rich in good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, well-principled, and obedient to her husband, after she has departed this life.'

65 Spitamata Zarathustra said to the young king Vistâspa: 'To what land shall I turn, O Ahura Mazda? To whom shall I go with praying?

NYAYIS (The Prayers of Praise).

(A Nyâyis is properly a begging prayer, as opposed to Sitâyis, a prayer of praise. It is a term particularly applied to five prayers addressed to the Sun, to Mithra, to the Moon, to Waters, and to Fire. Every layman over eight years old is bound to recite the Nyâyis: he recites it standing and girded with his Kôsti. The Sun Nyâyis is recited three times a day, at the rising of the sun (Gâh Hâvan), at noon (Gâh Râpitvin), and at three o'clock in the afternoon (Gâh Uzren). The Mithra Nyâyis is recited with the Sun Nyâyis, as Mithra follows the sun in its course. The Moon Nyâyis is recited three times a month: first, at the time when it begins to be seen; second, when it is at the full; third, when it is on the wane. The Waters Nyâyis and the Fire Nyâyis are recited every day, when one finds oneself in the proximity of those elements. The Fire Nyâyis is recited with the Penôm on. The first four Nyâyis must be recited especially on the days over which the Izads invoked preside; that is to say, on the Khôrsheid, Mihir, Mâh, and Âbân days - that is the eleventh, sixteenth, twelfth, and tenth days of the month.)

1. KHORSHEID NYAYIS.

1 [Hail unto the Sun, the swift-horsed! May Ahura Mazda be rejoiced!] Hail unto thee, O Ahura Mazda, in the threefold way! [Hail unto thee] before all other creatures! Hail unto you, O Amesha-Spentas, who are all of you of one accord with the Sun! May this prayer come unto Ahura Mazda! May it come unto the Amesha-Spentas! May it come unto the Fravashis of the holy Ones! May it come unto the Sovereign Vayu of the long Period!

2 [Hail unto the Sun, the swift-horsed!] May Ahura Mazda be rejoiced! May Angra Mainyu be destroyed! by those who do truly what is the foremost wish (of God). I recite the 'Praise of Holiness.'

3 I praise well-thought, well-spoken, and well-done thoughts, words, and deeds. I embrace all good thoughts, good words, and good deeds; I reject all evil thoughts, evil words, and evil deeds.

4 I give sacrifice and prayer unto you, O Amesha-Spentas! even with the fulness of my thoughts, of my words, of my deeds, and of my heart: I give unto you even my own life. I recite the 'Praise of Holiness.' 'Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good. Well is it for it, well is it for that holiness which is perfection of holiness!'

5 Hail to Ahura Mazda! Hail to the Amesha-Spentas! Hail to Mithra, the lord of wide pastures! Hail to the Sun, the swift-horsed! Hail to the two eyes of Ahura Mazda! Hail to the Bull! Hail to Gaya! Hail to the Fravashi of the holy Spitamata Zarathustra! Hail to the whole of the holy creation that was, is, or will be! May I grow in health of body through Vohu-Manô, Kshathra, and Asha, and come to that luminous space, to that highest of all high things, when the world, O Spenta Mainyu! has come to an end! Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good . . .

6 We sacrifice unto the bright, undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun. We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who is truth-speaking, a chief in assemblies, with a thousand ears, well-shapen, with ten thousand eyes, high, with full knowledge, strong, sleepless, and ever awake.

7 We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of all countries, whom Ahura Mazda made the most glorious of all the gods in the world unseen. So may Mithra and Ahura, the two great gods, come to us for help! We sacrifice unto the bright, undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun.

8 We sacrifice unto Tistrya, whose sight is sound. We sacrifice unto Tistrya; we sacrifice unto the rains of Tistrya. We sacrifice unto Tistrya, bright and glorious. We sacrifice unto the star Vanant, made by Mazda. We sacrifice unto Tistrya, the bright and glorious star. We sacrifice unto the sovereign sky. We sacrifice unto the boundless Time. We sacrifice unto the sovereign Time of the long Period. We sacrifice unto the beneficent, well-doing Wind. We sacrifice unto the most upright Kista, made by Mazda and holy. We sacrifice unto the good Law of the worshippers of Mazda. We sacrifice unto the way of content. We sacrifice unto the golden instrument. We sacrifice unto Mount Saokanta, made by Mazda.

9 We sacrifice unto all the holy gods of the world unseen. We sacrifice unto all the holy gods of the material world. We sacrifice unto our own soul. We sacrifice unto our own Fravashi. We sacrifice unto the good, strong, beneficent Fravashis of the holy Ones. We sacrifice unto the bright, undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun.

10 I confess myself a worshipper of Mazda, a follower of Zarathustra Unto the bright, undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun; Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good [Give] unto the Ahurian waters, the waters of Ahura, with excellent libations, with finest libations, with libations piously strained. Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good [Give] unto that man brightness and glory, give him health of body, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones.

2. MIHIR NYAYIS.

[text lost] We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who is truth-speaking, a chief in assemblies, with a thousand ears, well-shapen, with ten thousand eyes, high, with full knowledge, strong, sleepless, and ever awake.

7 We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of all countries, whom Ahura Mazda made the most glorious of all the heavenly gods. So may Mithra and Ahura, the two great gods, come to us for help! We sacrifice unto the undying, shining, swift-horsed Sun.

8 We sacrifice unto Tistrya, whose sight is sound

9 We sacrifice unto all the holy gods of the world unseen

10 I confess myself a worshipper of Mazda, a follower of Zarathustra

11 We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, who is truth-speaking, a chief in assemblies, with a thousand ears, well-shapen, with a thousand eyes, high, with full knowledge, strong, sleepless, and ever awake. We sacrifice unto the Mithra around countries; We sacrifice unto the Mithra within countries; We sacrifice unto the Mithra in this country; We sacrifice unto the Mithra above countries; We sacrifice unto the Mithra under countries; We sacrifice unto the Mithra before countries; We sacrifice unto the Mithra behind countries.

12 We sacrifice unto Mithra and Ahura, the two great, imperishable, holy gods; and unto the stars, and the moon, and the sun, with the trees that yield baresma. We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of all countries.

3. MAH NYAYIS.

1 Hail to Ahura Mazda! Hail to the Amesha-Spentas! Hail to the Moon that keeps in it the seed of the Bull! Hail to thee when we look at thee! Hail to thee when thou lookest at us!

2 Unto the Moon that keeps in it the seed of the Bull; unto the only-created Bull and unto the Bull of many species; Be propitiation

3 Hail to Ahura Mazda!

4 How does the moon wax? How does the moon wane?

5 We sacrifice unto the Moon that keeps in it the seed of the Bull

6 And when the light of the moon waxes warmer

7 I will sacrifice unto the Moon

8 For its brightness and glory

9 Yathâ aha vairÿo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

10 Give us strength and victory! Give us welfare in cattle and in bread! Give us a great number of male children, praisers [of God] and chiefs in assemblies, who smite and are not smitten, who smite at one stroke their enemies, who smite at one stroke their foes, ever in joy and ready to help.

11 Ye gods of full Glory, ye gods of full healing, let your greatness become manifest! let your assistance become manifest as soon as you are called for! and ye, Waters, manifest your Glory, and impart it to the man who offers you a sacrifice. Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good [Give] unto that man brightness and glory, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones.

4. ABAN NYAYIS.

1 May Ahura Mazda be rejoiced! Unto the good Waters, made by Mazda; unto the holy water-spring ARDVI ANĀHITA; unto all waters, made by Mazda; unto all plants, made by Mazda, Be propitiation

2 Ahura Mazda spake unto Spitama Zarathustra, saying: 'Offer up a sacrifice, O Spitama Zarathustra! unto this spring of mine, Ardivi Sûra Anāhita

3 'Who makes the seed of all males pure, who makes the womb of all females pure for bringing forth

4 'The large river, known afar, that is as large as the whole of the waters that run along the earth

5 'All the shores of the sea Vouru-Kasha are boiling over, all the middle of it is boiling over, when she runs down there

6 'From this river of mine alone flow all the waters that spread all over the seven Karshvares;

7 'I, Ahura Mazda, brought it down with mighty vigour, for the increase of the house, of the borough, of the town, of the country.

8 'He from whom she will hear the staota yēsnya; he from whom she will hear the Ahuna vairÿa; he from whom she will hear the Asha-vaḥista; he by whom the good waters will be made pure; with the words of the holy hymns, he will enter first the Garō-mnāna of Ahura Mazda: she will give him the boons asked for.

9 'For her brightness and glory, I will offer her a sacrifice worth being heard; I will offer her a sacrifice well-performed. Thus mayest thou advise us when thou art appealed to! Mayest thou be most fully worshipped. 'We sacrifice unto the holy Ardivi Sûra Anāhita with libations. We sacrifice unto Ardivi Sûra Anāhita, the holy and master of holiness, with the Haoma and meat, with the baresma, with the wisdom of the tongue, with the holy spells, with the words, with the deeds, with the libations, and with the rightly-spoken words. 'Yēnhē hātām: All those beings of whom Ahura Mazda

10 Yathâ ahû vairÿo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness 'I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of the holy water-spring Anāhita. [Give] unto that man brightness and glory, give him the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones.'

5. ATAS NYAYIS

1 Take me out, O Ahura! give me perfect piety and strength [text lost]

4 May Ahura Mazda be rejoiced! Hail unto thee, O Fire, son of Ahura Mazda, thou beneficent and most great Yazata! Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good I confess myself a worshipper of Mazda For sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification Unto Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda; unto thee Ātar, son of Ahura Mazda!

5 Unto Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda; unto the Glory and the Weal, made by Mazda; unto the Glory of the Aryas, made by Mazda; unto the Glory of the Kavis, made by Mazda. Unto Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda; unto king Husravah; unto the lake of Husravah; unto Mount Ānavant, made by Mazda; unto Lake Kaēkasta, made by Mazda; unto the Glory of the Kavis, made by Mazda.

6 Unto Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda; unto Mount Raēvant, made by Mazda; unto the Glory of the Kavis, made by Mazda. Unto Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda. Unto Ātar, the beneficent, the warrior; the God who is a full source of Glory, the God who is a full source of healing. Unto Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda, with all Ātars; unto the God Nairyō-sangha, who dwells in the navel of kings; Be propitiation, with sacrifice, prayer, propitiation, and glorification. Yathâ ahû vairÿo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness

7 I bless the sacrifice and invocation, and the good offering, the beneficent offering, the offering of assistance offered unto thee, O Ātar, son of Ahura Mazda! Thou art worthy of sacrifice and invocation; mayest thou receive the sacrifice and the invocation in the houses of men. Well may it be unto the man who ever worships thee with a sacrifice, holding the sacred wood in his hand, the baresma in his hand, the meat in his hand, the mortar in his hand.

8 Mayest thou have the right wood! Mayest thou have the right incense! Mayest thou have the right food! Mayest thou have the right fuel! Mayest thou be full-grown for protecting (this house)! Mayest thou grow excellent for protecting!

9 Mayest thou burn in this house! Mayest thou ever burn in this house! Mayest thou blaze in this house! Mayest thou increase in this house! Even for a long time, till the powerful restoration of the world, till the time of the good, powerful restoration of the world!

10 Give me, O Ātar, son of Ahura Mazda! lively welfare, lively maintenance, lively living; fulness of welfare, fulness of maintenance, fulness of life; Knowledge, sagacity; quickness of tongue; (holiness of) soul; a good memory; and then the understanding that goes on growing and the one that is not acquired through learning; And then the manly courage.

11 Firm-footed, unsleeping, (sleeping only) for a third part of the day and of the night, quick to rise up from bed, ever awake; And a protecting, virtuous offspring, able to rule countries and assemblies of men, well growing up, good, freeing us from the pangs (of hell), endowed with a good intellect, that may increase my house, my borough, my town, my country, my empire.

12 Give me, O Ātar, son of Ahura Mazda! however unworthy I am I, now and for ever, a seat in the bright, all-happy, blissful abode of the holy Ones. May I obtain the good reward, a good renown, and long cheerfulness for my soul!

13 Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda, lifts up his voice to all those for whom he cooks their evening meal and their morning meal. From all those he wishes a good offering, a beneficent offering, an offering of assistance, O Spitama!

14 Ātar looks at the hands of all those who pass by: 'What does the friend bring to his friend? What does he who comes and goes bring to him who stays motionless?' We sacrifice unto Ātar, the valiant warrior.

15 And if the passer-by brings him wood holily brought, or bundles of baresma holily tied up, or twigs of Hadhānāpata I then Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda, well pleased with him and not angry, and fed as required, will thus bless him:

16 'May herds of oxen grow for thee, and increase of sons; may thy mind be master of its vow, may thy soul be master of its vow, and mayest thou live on in the joy of the soul all the nights of thy life.' This is the blessing which Ātar speaks unto him who brings him dry wood, well-examined by the light of the day, well-cleansed with godly intent.

17 Yathâ ahû vairÿo: The will of the Lord is the law of holiness I bless the sacrifice and prayer, and the strength and vigour of Ātar, the son of Ahura Mazda Ashem Vohû: Holiness is the best of all good 18 We gladden by our virtue thy mighty Fire, O Ahura! thy most quick and powerful Fire, who shows his assistance to him who has ever comforted him, but delights in taking vengeance with his hands on the man who has harmed him.

THE ZEND AVESTA, PART 3

Sacred Books of the East, Vol. 31

Translation: Lawrence Heyworth Mills, 1887

THE GATHAS

(The Gathas are 17 Avestan hymns believed to have been composed by Zarathusthra (Zoroaster) himself. They form the core of the Zoroastrian liturgy (the Yasna). They are arranged in five different modes or metres. The Avestan term Gatha ("hymn", but also "mode, metre") is cognate with Sanskrit verb gatha ("to sing").

Structure and organisation

The Gathas are in verse, metrical in the nature of ancient Iranian religious poetry, which is extremely terse (or brief), and in which grammatical constructs are an exception. The 17 hymns of the Gathas consist of 238 stanzas, of about 1300 lines or 6000 words in total. They were later incorporated into the 72-chapter Yasna (chapter: ha or had, from the Avestan ha'iti, 'cut'), which in turn is the primary liturgical collection of texts within the greater compendium of the Avesta. The 17 hymns are identified by their chapter numbers in the Yasna, and are divided into these major sections:

Yasna 28–34 / "The Ahunavaiti Gatha": (cf. Ahuna Vairya), 100 stanzas, (3 verses, 7+9 syllable metre) Yasna 43–46 / "The Ushtavaiti Gatha": 'Having Happiness', 66 stanzas (5 verses, 4+7 syllable metre)

Yasna 47–50 / "The Spenta Mainyu Gatha": 'Bounteous Spirit', 41 stanzas (4 verses, 4+7 syllable metre)

Yasna 51 / "The Vohu Khshathra Gatha": 'Good Dominion', 22 stanzas (3 verses, 7+7 syllable metre)

Yasna 53 / "The Vahishto Ishti Gatha": 'Best Beloved', 9 stanzas (4 verses, two of 7+5 and two of 7+7+5 syllables) metre: In poetry, "metre" (or "meter") means the rhythmic patterns in a verse. The units of poetic metre, like rhyme, vary from language to language and between poetic traditions. As, through translation, the original metre had been lost, we will not display metres or rhymes in a particular visible way. The Grand Bible focusses on content rather than style.)

Yasna 54 / "The Airyaman ishya Gatha": 'The invocation of the divinity Airyaman'

(Note: stanza: In poetry, a stanza; from Italian stanza ("room") is a grouped set of lines within a poem, usually set off from other stanzas by a blank line or indentation. Stanzas can have regular rhyme and metrical schemes, though stanzas are not strictly required to have either.

With the exception of Ahunavaiti Gatha, which is named after the Ahuna Vairya prayer (Yasna 27, not in the Gathas), the names of the Gathas reflect the first word(s) of the first hymn within them. The metre of the hymns is historically related to the Vedic tristubh-jagati family of metres. Hymns of these meters are recited, not sung.

The sequential order of the Gathas is structurally interrupted by the Yasna Haptanghaiti ("seven-chapter Yasna", chapters 35–41, linguistically as old as the Gathas but in prose) and by two other minor hymns at Yasna 42 and 52.

Miscellaneous Fragments 1-9

As to the general benefit which has resulted from Zarathustrianism in the past, few reflections need to be added. If the mental illumination and spiritual elevation of many millions of mankind, throughout long periods of time, are of any importance, it would require strong proof to deny that Zarathustrianism has had an influence of very positive power in determining the gravest results. That men should be taught to look within rather than without, to believe that suffering and sin do not originate from the capricious power of a Deity still called "good," that the "good thought, word, and deed" should be recognised as essential to all sanctity, even in the presence of a superstitious ceremonial, that a judgement should have been expected according to the deeds done in the body, and the soul consigned to a Heaven of virtue or to a Hell of vice, its recompense being pronounced by the happy or stricken conscience, these can never be regarded by serious historians as matters of little moment, and if, on the contrary, they are allowed to be matters of great moment, the Zend-Avesta should be revered and studied by all who value the records of the human race.

THE GĀTHAS.

THE five Gāthas of Zarathustra and his immediate followers are placed here before the other parts of the Yasna on account of their higher antiquity. There existed no other Yasna for years or centuries beside them.

The more remarkable circumstances connected with them have been already discussed in the Introduction.

If it is necessary to recall any of them here, the most prominent would be that they are undoubtedly the productions of a small group of influential men who are referred to in them for the most part by name; that Zarathustra, everywhere else nearly or quite a demi-god, is here a struggling and suffering man. He is a prophet, or a divinely appointed instructor, but thoroughly human and real, so far as his situations become apparent.

Secondly, their historical tone may be emphasised. Their doctrines and exhortations concern an actual religious movement taking place contemporaneously with their composition; and that movement was exceptionally pure and most earnest. Their tone is therefore everywhere serious. Nearly all myths are dropped, and likewise, as perhaps their most striking peculiarity, even the old Aryan gods, who reappear in the later Yasna, Vendidad, and Yasts, are, save one, wholly absent.

The movement in its reformatory character seems to have thrown them out, not perhaps with definite intention, but because the minds of the devout enthusiasts excluded them as having inferior interest, in view of the results immediately before them.

So far as a claim to a high position among the curiosities of ancient moral lore is concerned, the reader may trust himself freely to the impression that he has before him an anthology which was probably composed with as fervent a desire to benefit the spiritual and moral natures of those to whom it was addressed as any which the world had yet seen. Nay, he may provisionally accept the opinion that nowhere else are such traces of intelligent religious earnestness to be found as existing at the period of the Gāthas or before them, save in the Semitic scriptures.

As to their speculative depth; wherever theosophical speculation is put into words, the evidence of their grasp and subjectivity becomes positive. As the extent of documents necessarily produces a certain impression upon the mind of an investigator, it must not be forgotten that the Gāthas were in all probability many times more voluminous than the fragments which now remain to us. The historian may argue from what has survived to what once existed, and the inevitable conclusion is imposing.

For additional details see the Introduction, and the summaries at the head of each Gātha and chapter.

THE GĀTHA(Ā) AHUNAVAITI(Ī).

This Gātha, consisting of seven chapters of the Yasna (28-34), takes its name from the similarity of its metre to that of the Ahuna-vairyā formula which also occurs before it in the Yasna. It is composed of homogeneous material, but as its material is also homogeneous with that of the other Gāthas, it probably owes its existence as a group of sections to its metrical form. Its lines were intended to number sixteen syllables, and they are put together in stanzas of three. It is all very ancient and probably nearly all original with Zarathustra himself, though parts seem to be put into the mouths of his immediate associates and disciples. Whether any persons existed in the immediate circle of the sage capable of composing hymns like these unaided, is of course a question; but that some were able to put poetical matter together under his guidance or inspiration seems certain.

An analysis and general summary is placed before each chapter as more convenient than massing them all together. The reader is reminded that the rhythm of the original, so far as it could be reasonably conjectured, is somewhat imitated in parts of the translations.)

THE GATHAS.

YASNA 29

THE WAIL OF THE KINE. THE CALL OF ZARATHUSTRA. HIS PRAYER FOR AID.

(Homage to you, O Sacred Gāthas!)

1. Unto you (O Ahura and Asha!) the Soul of the Kine (our sacred herds and folk) cried aloud: For whom did ye create me, and by I whom did ye fashion me? On me comes the assault of wrath, and of violent power, the blow of desolation, audacious insolence, and (thievish) might. None other pasture-giver have I than you, therefore do ye teach me good (tillage) for the fields (my only hope of welfare)!

Ahura speaks.

2 Upon this the Creator 6 of the Kine (the holy herds) asked of Righteousness: How (was) thy guardian for the Kine (appointed) by thee when, as having power (over all her fate), ye made her? (In what manner did ye secure) for her, together with pasture, a cattle-chief who was both skilled and likewise energetic? Whom did ye select as her (life's) master who might hurl back the fury of the wicked?

Asha answers.

3 To Him the (Divine Righteousness) answered with his sanctity. (Great was our perplexity); a chieftain who war capable of smiting back (their fury), and who was himself without hate (was not to be obtained by us); among such things as these, those things are not to be known (by beings such as we) which are the influences which approach (and move) the lofty fires (revealing the favour and the will of God).

Of beings He is the mightiest to whom those who have performed their actions approach with invocations. (He has no need to ask!)

Zarathustra intervenes.

4 The Great Creator (is himself) most mindful of the uttered indications which have been fulfilled beforehand hitherto in the deeds of demon-gods and (good or evil) men, and of those which shall be fulfilled by them hereafter. He Ahura is the discerning arbiter; so shall it be to us as He shall will!

5 Therefore it is that we both, my soul and (the soul) of the mother Kine, (are) making our supplications for the two worlds to Ahura, and with hands stretched out in entreaty, when (we pray to the Great Creator with questions in our doubt; and He will answer).

Not for the righteous liver, nor for the thrifty (tiller of the earth), shall there be destruction together with the wicked!

Ahura.

6 Upon this the Lord, the Great Creator, He who understands the mysterious grace by His insight, spake thus. Not in this manner is a spiritual master found for us, nor a chieftain moved by Righteousness and appointed (in its spirit); therefore Thee have I named 8 (as such a head) to the diligent tiller of the ground!

The Ameshōspends.

7 Mazda has created the inspired Word-of-reason which is a Māthra of fatness (for the offering), the (Divine) Righteousness consenting with Him in his deed. Food he has prepared for the Kine and for the eaters, He the one bountiful with his (saving) doctrine; but whom hast Thou, endowed with the Good Mind, who may give forth those (doctrines) by word of mouth to mortals?

Ahura.

8 This man is found for me here who alone has hearkened to our enunciations, Zarathustra Spitama! Our mighty and completed acts of grace he desires to enounce for us, for (Me), the Great Creator and for Righteousness; wherefore I will give him the good abode (and authoritative place) of such an one as speaks!

The Geus Urvan.

9 Upon this the Soul of the Kine lamented (: Woe is unto me) since (I have obtained for myself) in my wounding a lord who is powerless to effect (his) wish, the (mere) voice of a feeble and pusillanimous man, whereas I desire one who is lord over his will (and able as one of royal state to bring what he desires to effect).

The Ameshōspends.

((Aye.) when shall he ever appear who may bring to her help strong-handed?)

Zarathustra.

10 Do ye, O Ahura and thou, O Righteousness! grant gladness unto these (our disciples), and the sovereign Kingdom (of the Deity) such as (is established) in (His) Good Mind by which one bestows upon them the peaceful amenities of home and quiet happiness (as against the fearful ravages which they suffer), for of these, O Great Creator! I ever thought Thee first possessor!

11 And when shall the (Divine) Righteousness, the Good Mind (of the Lord, and His) Sovereign Power (come) hastening to me (to give me strength for my task and mission), O Great Creator, the Living Lord! (For without his I cannot advance or undertake my toil.) Do ye now therefore assign unto us your aid and in abundance for our great cause. May we be (partakers) of the bountiful grace of these your equals 2 (your counsellors and servants)!

YASNA 28

PRAYERS CHIEFLY FOR GRACE AND FOR THE WORDS OF REVELATION.

1 (A strengthening blessing is the thought, a blessing is the word, a blessing is the deed of the righteous Zarathustra. May the Bountiful Immortals accept and help on the chants. Homage to you, O sacred Gāthas!

THE GRAND BIBLE

2 With venerating (desire) for this (gift) of gracious help, O Mazda, and stretching forth my hands (to Thee) I pray for the first (blessing) of (Thy) bountiful Spirit; (that is, I beseech of Thee that my) actions (toward) all (may be performed) in (the Divine) Righteousness; and with this I implore from Thee the understanding of Thy Benevolent Mind, in order that I may propitiate the Soul of the Kine 1 (our herds and folk, which cries so bitterly to Thee).

3 And therefore, O Great Creator, the Living Lord! (inspired) by Thy Benevolent Mind, I approach You 2. (and beseech of Thee) to grant me (as a bountiful gift) for both the worlds, the corporeal and (for that) of mind, those attainments which are to be derived from the (Divine) Righteousness, and by means of which (that personified Righteousness 4 within us) may introduce those who are its recipients into beatitude and glory!

4 O (thou Divine) Righteousness, and thou Benevolent Mind (of Deity)! I will worship you, and Ahura Mazda the first 1, for all of whom the Pious ready mind (within us) is causing the imperishable Kingdom to advance. (And while I thus utter my supplications to You), come Ye to my calls to help!

5 (Yea, I will approach You with my supplications, I) who am delivering up (my) mind and soul to that (heavenly) Mount (whither all the redeemed at last must pass), knowing (full well) the holy characteristics and rewards of the (ceremonial and moral) actions (prescribed) by Ahura Mazda. (And) so long as I am able and may have the power, so long will I teach (Your people concerning these holy deeds to be done by them with faith toward God, and) in the desire (for the coming) of the (Divine) Righteousness (within their souls).

6 And, thou Righteousness! when shall I see (thee, knowing the Good Mind (of God), and above all the personified) Obedience (of our lives which constitutes) the way to the most beneficent Ahura Mazda. (Asking this, I thus beseech thee, for) with this holy word of supplication we most hold off with tongue the flesh-devouring fiends, (the very sign and power of all spiritual foulness)!

7 And do Thou, O Lord, the Great Creator! come to me with Thy Good Mind; and do Thou, who bestowest gifts through Thy Righteousness, bestow alike long-lasting life on us. And (that this life may be spent aright, do) Thou by means of Thy lofty words (bestow) the (needed) powerful spiritual help upon Zarathustra and upon us, whereby we may overcome 2 the torments of the tormentor.

8 (And) do thou, O (Divine) Righteousness, bestow (upon me) that sacred blessing which is constituted by the attainments of the Good Mind (within my soul); and do thou also, O Piety! grant unto Vīstāspa and to me our wish; (yea) may'st Thou grant (us), O Mazda, ruler (as Thou art! that grace) whereby we may hear (with understanding) Thy benignant words.

9 That best (of gifts therefore) do I beseech (of Thee), O Thou best (of beings) Ahura! who art one in will with (Thy Divine) Righteousness (within us, likewise), the best (of spirits), desiring it (as I now do) for the (heroic) man Frashaostra, and for me, upon whom also may'st Thou bestow it (not for time alone), but for all the ages of Thy Good Mind (that reign of Thy Benevolence which shall be to us as Heaven)!

10 And (impressed and moved) by these gifts of strengthening grace (which Thou may'st give in answer to these prayers) may we never anger You, O Ahura Mazda! (nor Thy) Righteousness (within us), nor yet Thy Kindly Mind (toward us), since we have most earnestly made effort (helping to advance Your cause) in the (chanting) offering of Your praises, for most easy to be invoked (are Ye). (Yours are verily both) the desire for (spiritual) blessings (for us), and the (Divine) Possession (of their power).

11 And therefore do Thou, O Lord, the Great Creator! fill up and satisfy (my) desire with these attainments (of the grace) of Thy Good Mind, which Thou dost know to be derived from Righteousness, (and) which (are verily) sublime, for I have known Thine instructions to be never void of their effect (in the struggles) for our (daily) food, and therefore worthy objects of desire.

12 (Yea, I approach Thee with my prayers, I) who by these (great gifts of grace) will protect ((Thy) Divine Righteousness, and (Thy) Good Mind within us) for ever. And do Thou therefore, O Ahura Mazda! teach me from Thyself, yea, from Thine own mouth of spirit, that I may declare it forth to (these Thy waiting people) by what (powers and according to what laws) the primeval world arose!

YASNA 30

THE DOCTRINE OF DUALISM.

1 And now I will proclaim, O ye who are drawing near and seeking I to be taught! those animadversions which appertain to Him who knows (all things) whatsoever; the praises which are for Ahura, and the sacrifices (which spring) from the Good Mind, and likewise the benignant meditations inspired by Righteousness. And I pray that propitious results may be seen in the lights.

2 Hear ye then with your ears; see ye the bright flames with the (eyes of the) Better Mind. It is for a decision as to religions, man and man, each individually for himself. Before the great effort of the cause, awake ye (all) to our 3 teaching!

3 Thus are the primeval spirits who as a pair (combining their opposite strivings), and (yet each) independent in his action, have been famed (of old). (They are) a better thing, they two, and a worse, as to thought, as to word, and as to deed. And between these two let the wisely acting choose aright. (Choose ye) not (as) the evil-doers!

4 (Yea) when the two spirits came together at the first to make 1 life, and life's absence, and to determine how the world at the last shall be (ordered), for the wicked (Hell) the worst life, for the holy (Heaven) the Best Mental State.

5 (Then when they had finished each his part in the deeds of creation, they chose distinctly each his separate realm.) He who was the evil of them both (chose the evil), thereby working the worst of possible results, but the more bounteous spirit chose the (Divine) Righteousness; (yea, He so chose) who clothes upon Himself the firm 1 stones of heaven (as His robe). And He chose likewise them who content Ahura with actions, which (are performed) really in accordance with the faith.

6 And between these two spirits the Demon-gods (and they who give them worship) can make no righteous choice, since we have beguiled them. As they were questioning and debating in their council the (personified) Worst Mind approached them that he might be chosen. (They made their fatal decision.) And thereupon they rushed together unto the Demon of Fury, that they might pollute the lives of mortals.

7 Upon this Āramaiti (the personified Piety of the saints) approached, and with her came the Sovereign Power, the Good Mind, and the Righteous Order. And (to the spiritual creations of good and of evil) Āramaiti gave a body, she the abiding and ever strenuous. And for these (Thy people) so let (that body) be (at the last), O Mazda! as it was when Thou camest first with creations!

8 And (when the great struggle shall have been fought out which began when the Dævas first seized the Demon of Wrath as their ally), and when the (just) vengeance shall have come upon these wretches, then, O Mazda! the Kingdom shall have been gained for Thee by (Thy) Good Mind (within Thy folk). For to those, O living Lord! does (that Good Mind) utter his command, who will deliver the Demon of the Lie into the two hands of the Righteous Order (as a captive to a destroyer).

9 And may we be such as those who bring on this great renovation, and make this world progressive, (till its perfection shall have been reached). (As) the Ahuras of Mazda 1 (even) may we be; (yea, like Thyself), in helpful readiness to meet (Thy people), presenting (benefits) in union with the Righteous Order. For there 4 will our thoughts be (tending) where true wisdom shall abide in her home.

10 (And when perfection shall have been attained) then shall the blow of destruction fall upon the Demon of Falsehood, (and her adherents shall perish with her), but swiftest in the happy abode of the Good Mind and of Ahura the righteous saints shall gather, they who proceed in their walk (on earth) in good repute (and honour).

11 Wherefore, O ye men! ye are learning (thus) these religious incitations which Ahura gave in (our) happiness and (our) sorrow. (And ye are also learning) what is the long wounding for the wicked, and the blessings which are in store for the righteous. And when these (shall have begun their course), salvation shall be (your portion)!

YASNA 31

THE PROGRESS AND STRUGGLES OF THE CAUSE.

1 These doctrines (therefore) we are earnestly declaring to You as we recite them forth from memory, words (till now) unheard (with faith) by those who by means of the doctrinal vows of the harmful Lie are delivering the settlements of Righteousness to death, but words which are of the best unto those who are heartily devoted to Ahura.

2 And if by this means the indubitable truths 4 are not seen in the soul, then as better (than these words) I will come to you all (in my person) with that power, and in that way according to which Ahura Mazda knows and appoints His ruler 1, that ruler over both the two (struggling) bands, in order that we (in obedience to him), may live according to Righteousness.

3 And that keenness, that deciding satisfaction, which Thou hast given by (Thy) Spirit, and (Thy) Fire, and by Thy Righteousness (itself) to the two battling (sides), do Thou declare unto us, O Ahura! that vow which is for the seeing (as those endowed with mental light). Yea, do Thou declare this that we may know it, O Mazda! With the tongue of Thy mouth do Thou speak it (that as I preach its mighty truths) I may make all the living believers!

4 And when the Divine Righteousness shall be inclined to my appeal 1, and with him all those (remaining ones who are as) Mazda's 2 (own) Ahuras then with the blessedness (of the reward), with (my) Piety and with Thy Best Mind (active within me), I will pray for that mighty Kingdom by whose force 4 we may smite the Lie-demon.

5 Aye, do Thou tell me that I may discern it, since through (Thy) Righteous Order the better (lot) is given; tell me this that I may know it with (Thy) Good Mind (as it speaks within me), and that I may ponder 7 that to which these my truths belong (and of which my prophet speaks; yea), tell me those things, O Mazda Ahura! which may not be, and which may be 1.

6. And that verily shall be the best of all words to Him which the All-wise one) will 3 declare to me in very deed, that word which is the Māthra of Welfare and of Immortality (for it proclaims His beneficent power). And to the Great Creator (shall there be) a Realm such as that (whose strength I asked for victory), and which (at the last) shall flourish in its holiness to His (glory)!

7 (For He has sovereign control.) He who conceived of these (truths of the Māthra) as their first (inspirer), (and as He thought their existence they (all) as (His) glorious 1 (conceptions first) clothed themselves in the stars, He is through His understanding the Creator of the Righteous Order. And thus likewise He supports His Beneficent Mind (in His saints). And these (holy creatures) may'st Thou cause to prosper by Thy Spirit (since they are Thine own), O Ahura Mazda! Thou who art for every hour the same!

8 Therefore, as the first did I conceive of Thee, O Ahura Mazda! as the one to be adored with the mind in the creation, as the Father of the Good Mind within us, when I beheld Thee 7 with my (enlightened) eyes as the veritable maker of our Righteousness, as the Lord of the actions of life!

9 Thine, O Ahura! was Piety; yea, Thine, O Creator of the Kine! was understanding and the Spirit, when Thou didst order a path for her (guiding). From the earth's tiller (aided) she goeth (in that allotted way), or from him who was never tiller. (Thy path hath given her choice.)

10 (But she did not pause in temptation.) Of the two she chose the husbandman, the thrifty toiler in the fields, as a holy master endowed with the Good Mind's wealth. Never, Mazda! shall the thieving nomad share the good creed. (For the Kine's choice would bestow it!)

11 (And this doctrine was the first of rules to regulate our actions. Yet the opposer speaks beside Thee.) For when first, O Ahura Mazda! Thou didst create the (holy) settlements, and didst reveal the religious laws; and when Thou gavest (us) understanding from Thine own mind, and madest our (full) bodily life, and (didst thus determine) actions (by Thy power), and didst moreover deliver to us (nearer) injunctions whereby (as by a rule) the wisher may place his choices,

12 (There strife at once arose, and still is raging.) There (beside Thy prophet) the truthful or liar, the enlightened or unenlightened, lifts his voice (to utter his faith), and with devoted mind and heart. (But without hindrance from this striving, or pausing with feeble search, our) Piety steadily questions the two spirits (not here on earth) but (there in the spirit-world) where (they dwell as) in their home.

13 (Yea, my Piety questions searchingly, for Thou, O Maker! hast Thy view on all; we cannot question lightly.) What questions are asked which are open 6 (permitted to our thoughts), or what questions (are asked) which are furtive (hiding themselves from the light), or (what decision soever we may make, and the man) who for the smallest sin binds on the heaviest penance, on all with Thy glittering eye(s) as a righteous guard Thou art gazing!

14 This then I will ask Thee, O Ahura Mazda! (as I seek Thy counsel once again). What events are coming now, and what events shall come in the future; and what prayers with debt-confessions are offered with the offerings of the holy? And what (are the awards) for the wicked? And how shall they be in the (final) state of completion?

15 And I would ask Thee this, O Mazda! (concerning the coadjutor of the wicked): What is the award for him who prepares the throne for the evil, for the evil-doer, O Ahura! for him who cannot else reclaim his life, nor else save with lawless harm to the tiller's herd, to the pious husbandman's flock, who speaks no word with lying, (who abjures the Lie-demon's faith)?

16 Yea, I would ask Thee such a thing as this: How such an one as he who, with wise action, has striven to promote (Thy holy) Rule over house, and region, and province, in the Righteous Order and in truth, how he may become like Thee, O Great Creator, Living Lord? And when he may so become, (this also I would ask), and in what actions living he may so be?

17 And which of the (religions) is the greater (and the more prevailing 5 as to these questions which thus concern the soul)? Is it that which the righteous believes, or the wicked? (Let then our questionings cease.) Let the enlightened (alone) speak to the enlightened. Let not the ignorant (further) deceive us, (high though he may lift his voice). Do Thou thyself, O Ahura Mazda! declare to us (the truth) as Thy Good Mind's full revealer.

18 (And you, ye assembled throngs!) let not a man of you lend a hearing to Māthra, or to command of that sinner (ignorant as he is), for home, village, region, and province he would deliver to ruin and death. But (fly ye to arms without hearing), and hew ye them all with the halberd!

19 Let them hear Him who conceived of the Righteous Order for the worlds, the (all)-wise One, O Ahura! For truthful speech He rules with absolute sway over words, and ever free of tongue (to guide us in our way). By Thy shining flame 2 (He doth guide us, Thine altar's flame with its signs of decision and of grace) sent forth for the good of the strivers.

20 (But, O ye listening men!) he who renders the saint deceived 1, for him shall be later destruction. Long life shall be his lot in the darkness; foul shall be his food; his speech shall be of the lowest. And this, which is such a life as your own, O ye vile! your (perverted) conscience through your own deeds will bring you!

21 But Ahura Mazda will give both Universal Weal and Immortality in the fulness of His Righteous Order, and from himself as the head of Dominion (within His saints). And He will likewise give the Good Mind's vigorous might to him who in spirit and deeds is His friend, (and with faith fulfils his vows)

22 And to the wise are these things clear as to the one discerning with his mind (not blinded by the perverter 1). With Thy Good Mind and Thy (holy) Kingdom he follows the Righteous Order both in his words and his actions. And to Thee, O Ahura Mazda! such a man shall be the most helpful and vigorous being (for he serves with every power)!

THE STRUGGLE IS CONTINUED IN THE MIDST OF REVERSES.

1 (That rival-monarch (thus we may supply the sense of lost verses) for whom some are plotting to secure the sovereignty, and who, once in power, would deliver over home, village, town, and province to ruin and to death, is active in his efforts, and offering the devotions of his false religion to accomplish his ends.). His lord-kinsman will pray (as I Zarathustra prayed), and his labouring villagers, with his (trusted) peers, and his (fellow) Daëva-worshippers. But in my mind is the friendship of Ahura Mazda, the Great Creator, the living Lord; and Thine heralds, O Ahura! may we be; may we hold back those who hate and who offend You!

2 To these (for whom the prophet spake) Ahura Mazda answered, ruling as He does through His Good Mind (within their souls). He replied from His Sovereign Power, our good friend (as he is) through His surpassing Righteousness: We have accepted your good and bountiful Piety, and we have chosen her; ours shall she be!

3 But you, O ye Daëvas! are all a seed from the Evil Mind. He who offers sacrifice to You the most is of the Lie-demon, and (he is a child) of perversion. In advance (are your) deceits whereby ye are famed in the sevenfold earth!

4 For ye (are) confusing our thoughts, whereby men, giving forth the worst deeds, will speak, as of the Demon-gods beloved, forsaken by the Good Mind, (far) astray from the understanding of the Great Creator, the Living Lord, and (far astray) from His Righteousness!

5 Therefore ye would beguile mankind of happy life (upon earth) and of Immortality (beyond it), since the Evil Spirit (has ruled) you with his evil mind. Yea, he has ruled you, (ye) who are of the Demon-gods, and with an evil word unto action, as his ruler (governs) the wicked!

6 Full of crime (your leader) has desired to destroy us, wherefore he is famed, (and his doctrine is declared); but if this be so of these, then in the same manner, O Ahura! Thou possessest (because Thou knowest) the true (teachings) in Thy memory. And in Thy kingdom and Thy Righteous Order will establish Thy precepts (in Thy name).

7 Among these wretched beings (this their leader) knows not that those things which are declared as victorious (by his allies) are bound together for the smiting; yea, those things by which he was famed (as victorious) by his (blade of) glittering iron. But the utter destruction of those things Thou, O Ahura Mazda! knowest, most surely!

8 Of these wretched beings Yima Vivangusha was famed to be; he who, desiring to content our men, was eating kine's flesh in its pieces. But from (such as) these, O Ahura Mazda! in Thy discerning discrimination, am I (to be seen as distinct).

9 An evil teacher (as that leader is), he will destroy (our) doctrines, and by his teachings he will pervert the (true) understanding of life, seizing away (from me) my riches, the choice and real wealth of (Thy) Good Mind. To You and to Asha, O Ahura Mazda! am I therefore crying with the voice of my spirit's (need)!

10 Aye, this man will destroy my doctrines (indeed, for he blasphemeth the highest of creatures that live or are made). He declares that the (sacred) Kine and the Sun are the worst of things which eye can see; and he will offer the gifts of the wicked (as priest to their Demon-gods). And at the last he will parch 6 our meadows with drought, and will hurl his mace at Thy saint (who may fall before his arms).

11 Yea, these will destroy my life, for they consult with the great 1 of the wicked (enlightening themselves by their words 2). And they are seizing away the gifts of inherited treasures from both household-lord and from house-wife; (wretched men that they are), and those who will fiercely wound (my folk, repelled and in no way kindly moved) by the better mind of the holy.

12 (But Ahura will speak His rebuke, for) as to those doctrines which (such) men may be (basely) delivering (repelled) by the holiest action, (and galled by its sacred truth) God hath said: Evil (are they! Yea, unto these He hath said it) who have slain the Kine's life by a blessing (and have cursed her while they offered to help her), men by whom Grehmas are loved above Righteousness, and the Karpans, and the Throne of those who have wished for the Demon of lies (as their deity and friend).

13 And the Grehma will seek for these things by means of his (evil) kingdom 4 in the abode of (Hell which is) the Worst Mind (who both are together) the destroyers of life, and who, O Mazda! will bewail 6 with glad but (envious) wish the message of Thy prophet. (But he will not abate with his vengeance), he will hold them afar from the sight of the truth!

14 His is Grehma; aye, his! And to (oppose) Thee he will establish the Kavis and (their) scheming plans. Their deeds of power are but deceits since they have come as an aid to the wicked, and since he has been (falsely) said (to be set) to conquer the Kine, he who shall kindle that (very) help of grace which removes our death afar, (and lightens Thy saving flame).

15 And therefore will I drive from hence the Karpans' and Kavis' disciples. And after these (have thus been driven hence and away) then these (my princely aiding saints) whom they (now) render no longer rulers at will over life, (and deprive of their absolute power), these shall be borne (at last) by the (immortal) two to the home of (Thy) Good Mind (in Heaven)!

16 (And) this entire (reward of the righteous) is from that Best One who teaches in the wide (mental) light of the pious, ruling (as supreme), O Mazda Ahura! whose are my woes and my doubts (yea, they lie in His power to heal), when I shall make (my prophets) men to be sought for the harm of the wicked. And this I shall do by the word of my mouth (to defend and avenge my saints)!

YASNA 33

PRAYERS, HOPES, AND SELF-CONSECRATION.

1 As by the laws of the primeval world, so will our spiritual chieftain act (that chief besought-for by the Kine, and named as Zarathustra by the Lord). Deeds most just he will do toward the wicked, as toward the righteous, and toward him whose deeds of fraud and righteous deeds combine (in equal measure).

2 Yea, (he will act with justice but with vengeance, for) he who does evil to the wicked by word, or with thought (and plan), and (who therein does not dally, but toils labouring as) with both the hands, or he (again) who admonishes one for his good 4, such as these are offering (a gift) to their religious faith in the love (and with the approving view) of Ahura Mazda; (they are offering to conscience).

3 (And so may it be), O Ahura! Let the man who is the best toward the righteous saint, whether lord's kinsman 1, or as village labourer, with the allied peer (of the master), having light, and endowed with energy for the cattle (a Ratu such as Ahura sought to satisfy their wail), let such an one be (for us) 3 in the work-field of the Righteous Order, in the pastures of Thy Good Mind.

4 (And I beseech for Thine instruction), I who will abjure all disobedience (toward Thee, praying that others likewise may withhold it) from Thee; I who abjure the Evil Mind as well, the lordly kinsman's arrogance, and that lying sin which is (alas!) the next thing to the people (their most familiar fault), and the blaming ally's falsehood, and from the Kine the worst care of her meadows (the crime of stint in labour).

5 I, who (abjuring these sins), call earnestly on Thine Obedience of all (assisting guardians) the greatest one for our help 1, gaining (thereby) long life in the Realm of (Thy) Good Mind (incarnate in our tribes), and paths that are straight from their Righteous Order, wherein Ahura Mazda dwells,

6 (Yea), I who, as this Thy faithful priest, invoke Thee through (my) Righteousness, (now) seek 4 with longing from (Thy) Best Spirit, and with that (best) intention of mind, (to know) what he himself thought of the working of (our) fields 7. Therefore (because I abjure the Evil Mind, and all disobedience, arrogance, falsehood), O Mazda! would I beseech of Thee for a sight of Thee, and for consultation with Thee! (What is Thy will and mind?)

7 Come Ye, then, to my best (regulations. Come to my men, and my laws), my very own, O Mazda! and let them see through the Righteous Order and (Thy) Good Mind (which Thou wilt bestow in Thy drawing near) how I am heard before the rich giver (in the assembly of Thy worshippers). Yea, (come Ye); and let the manifold offerings of worship be manifest among us 3. (Arouse Ye, and help our zeal!)

8 (Come Ye) and show me the worthy aims of our faith, so that I may approach and fulfil them with (Thy) Good Mind, the offering, O Mazda! of the One like You, or the words of praises offered with Righteousness. And give Ye as Your offering (of grace to me) the abiding gifts of Your Immortality and Welfare!

9 And let (one like those), O Mazda! bear on to Thee the spirit of the two leaders who cause the holy ritual Truth to flourish; let him 4 bear them to (Thy) brilliant home 5 with 6 preternatural insight, and with the Better Mind. Yea, let him bear that spirit on as a fellow-help 7 in (furthering) the readiness 1 of those (in their holy work) whose souls go hand in hand 2.

10 (And not for these alone do I pray, but for us as well.) All prosperous states in being which have been enjoyed in the past, which men are now enjoying, and which shall be known in the future, do Thou grant (me) these in Thy love. (Yea, cause (our) bodily and personal life to be blest with salvation 6 through (Thy) Good Mind, (Thy) Sovereign Power, and (Thy) Sanctity 7.

11 And, O Thou who art the most beneficent Ahura Mazda! and thou who art Aramaiti (our piety), and also the Righteous Order who dost further on the settlements; and Thou, the Good Mind, and the Sovereign Power! hear ye me all, and have mercy 8 for every deed which I do whatsoever 9!

12 And Thou, O Ahura! do Thou (Thyself) arise to me! Through Aramaiti give me power, O most bountiful Spirit Mazda! through (my) faithful appeals and offerings; and for (my) Righteousness grant me mighty strength, and (Thy) thrift-law through (Thy) Good Mind.

13 (Arise to give me power), and then for grace in a wide perception (that I may view its depth and extent), do Thou reveal to me Thy nature, O Ahura! (the power of Thine attributes), and those of Thy (holy) kingdom, and by these, the blessed gifts of (Thy) Good Mind! And do Thou, O bountiful Piety show forth the religious truths through (Thy) Righteous Order.

14 Thus, as an offering, Zarathustra gives the life of his very body. And he offers, likewise, O Mazda! the priority of the Good Mind, (his offering gained) by his holiness (with Thy folk); and he offers (above all his) Obedience (to Thee) in deed and in speech, and with these (Thine established) Sovereign Power!

1 As to those (three gifts of blessings), Immortality, the Righteous Order, and the (established) Kingdom of Welfare, which Thou, O Mazda! hast given through (holy) deeds, words, and the sacrifice unto these (Thy servants here in my sight), gifts (shall) be offered by us in return to Thee, O Ahura! and with the foremost of them all.

2 Yea, and all those gifts of the Good Spirit 3 have been given (back in gratitude) to Thee by the mind and the deed of the bountiful man, whose soul goes hand in hand with the Righteous Order in the settlement, in homage toward the One like You, O Mazda! and with the chants of the (thankful) praisers 1.

3 And unto Thee, O Ahura! will we offer the (thankful) meat-offering with self-humbling praise, and to Thy Righteousness (like Thee a person), and for all the settlements in Thy kingdom which are guarded by Thy Good Mind. For in the perfect preparation of the justly acting (has that offering its power), O Mazda! together with all (others of its kind). Among those like You and worthy of Yourselves, it is a blessing 3.

4 And we pray likewise for Thy Fire, O Ahura! strong through Righteousness (as it is), most swift, (most) powerful, to the house with joy receiving it, in many wonderful ways our help, but to the hater, O Mazda! it is a steadfast 4 harm as if with weapons hurled from the hands.

5 What is 1 then Your Kingdom, O Mazda? What are Your riches? that I may become 2 Your own in my actions, with the Righteous Order, and (Thy) Good Mind, to care for Your poor (in their suffering). Apart from all would we declare You, yea, apart from Daëvas, and Khrashtra-polluted mortals!

6 If thus Ye are in verity, O Mazda! with the Righteous Order and Thy Good Mind, then grant Ye me a sign 1 of this in this world's entire abiding (while I live amid its scenes), how offering sacrifice and praising You the more devoutly, I may approach You (in my worship)!

7 Where 5 are Thine offerers, O Mazda! Thy helpers, who as the enlightened of the Good Mind are producing the doctrines with wide mental light as inherited treasures, (delivering them as Thy word) in misfortune and in woe? I know none other than You; then do Ye save us through Your righteousness!

8 Through these our deeds (of sacrifice and zeal 7), they are terrified 8 among whom there was (once) destruction, and for many (at the time) when the oppressor of Thy holy vows was as the stronger oppressing the weaker. They who have not thought (in consonance) with Thy Righteous Order, from these Thy Good Mind abideth afar.

9 Aye, they who desert Thy bountiful Piety, O Mazda! that one desired of Thee, O Thou omniscient! and who thus abandon her by reason of the evil-doer, and in their ignorance of (Thy) Good Mind, from such as these (Aramaiti) with her holiness utterly departs as the red Khrashtra (who destroy and pollute all life, flee) from us (Thy faithful servants).

10 Through the action of this (His) Good Mind (as he works his grace within us) the benevolently wise One declared a result as its fruit, He knowing the bountiful Piety, the creatrix of righteous beings. These all, O Mazda Ahura! in Thy Kingdom (are 'helps to our progress') for they smite (our tyrants) with fear.

11 And for Thee hath Âramaiti (who is Our Piety) increased both the Universal Weal and (its continuance in) Immortality, and (with them as ever united) the Righteous (ritual and moral) Order (established and made firm) in the Kingdom of (Thy Good Mind). Those powerful lasting two (hath she increased) to (give us the needful) food. And through these, O Mazda! art Thou with Thy perfect expellers of hate. (Thou removest Thy foes afar!)

12 What then are Thy regulations? And what wilt Thou? What of praise, or of (fuller) offering? Speak forth that we hear it, O Mazda! what will establish the blessed rewards of Thine ordinance! Teach Thou us the paths through Righteousness, those verily trod by (Thy) Good Mind as he lives within Thy saints.

13 (Do I ask what is that path?) That way which Thou declarest to me as the path of the Good Mind, O Ahura! (is made in its parts by) the religious precepts and laws of the Saviours, wherein the well-doer thrives from (his) Righteousness. And it marks for the good a reward of which Thou art Thyself the bestower.

14 For that (reward), O Mazda! ye have given as the one to be chosen for (our) bodily life through the deeds of Thy Good Mind (in us). They who work in the toil of the mother. Kine, these further Your merciful care through the understanding's action, and (taught) by Thine Order's (word).

15 Yea, (show me, O Mazda! that path and its reward); tell me the best (of truths); reveal the best words and best actions, and the confessing prayer of the praiser through Thy Good Mind (living within us); and through the Righteous Order, O Ahura! And by Your Sovereign Power and grace may'st Thou make life really progressive (till perfection shall have been reached!)

THE GĀTHA(Ā) USTAVAITĪ(Ī).

YASNA 43

SALVATION IS ANNOUNCED AS UNIVERSAL FOR BELIEVERS. REFLECTIONS OF ZARATHUSTRA UPON THE SUBLIMITY AND BOUNTIFULNESS OF AHURA.

1 Salvation to this man, salvation to him whosoever (he may be)! Let the absolutely ruling Great Creator grant (us, He) the living Lord, the two eternal powers. Yea, verily, I ask it of Thee (O Ahura) for the maintaining Righteousness. And may'st Thou also give it to me, (O inspiring) Piety! splendour (as it is), holy blessings, the Good Mind's life.

2 Yea, to this one may the man endowed with glory give that best of all things, the (spiritual) glory. And do Thou likewise (Thyself) reveal Thine own (gifts) through Thy most bountiful spirit, O Mazda! (And do Thou teach us) Thy wonderful thoughts of wisdom, those of Thy Good Mind, which Thou hast revealed (to us) by Thy Righteousness (within us) with the happy increase of (our joy), and on a long life's every day.

3 And may that (holy man) approach toward that which is the better than the good, he who will show to us the straight paths of (spiritual) profit, (the blessings) of this corporeal life, and of that the mental, in those veritably real (eternal) worlds, where dwells Ahura; (that holy man) an offerer of Thine, O Mazda! a faithful citizen, and bountiful of (mind).

4 Yea, I will regard Thee as mighty and likewise bountiful, O Ahura Mazda! when (I behold) those aids of grace (approach me), aids which Thou dost guard and nurture 2 as (Thy) just awards to the wicked (to hold him far from us), as well as to the righteous (for our help), Thy Fire's flame therewith so strong through the Holy Order, and when to me the Good Mind's power comes 4 + 5

5 (For) so I conceived of Thee as bountiful, O Great Giver, Mazda! when I beheld Thee as supreme 6 in the generation of life, when, as rewarding deeds and words, Thou didst establish evil for the evil, and happy blessings for the good, by Thy (great) virtue (to be adjudged to each) in the creation's final change.

6 In which (last) changing Thou shalt come, and with Thy bounteous spirit, and Thy sovereign power, O Ahura Mazda! by deeds of whom the settlements are furthered through the Righteous Order. And saving regulations likewise unto these shall Âramaiti utter, (she, our Piety within us), yea, (laws) of Thine understanding which no man may deceive.

7 Yea, I conceived of Thee as bountiful, O Great Giver Mazda! when he (Thy messenger, Obedience) drew near me, and asked me thus: Who art thou? And whose is thine allegiance? And how to-day shall I show the signs that give the light on this (our) question, (signs) as to the lands (from whence thou camest) and in thyself?

8 Then to him I, Zarathustra, as my first answer, said: To the wicked (would that I could be) in very truth a strong tormentor and avenger, but to the righteous may I be a mighty help and joy, since to preparations for Thy Kingdom, and in desire (for its approach), I would devote myself so long as to Thee, O Mazda! I may praise, and weave my song.

9 Yea, I conceived of Thee as bountiful, O Ahura Mazda! when (Thine herald) with Thy Good Mind near approached me, and asked me thus: For what dost thou desire that thou may'st gain, and that thou may'st know it? Then for Thy Fire an offering of praise and holiness (I desired. And on that offering for myself) as long as I have the power, will I meditate, (and for its holy power among Thy people will I plan).

10 And mayest Thou likewise grant me (Thy) Righteousness (within me), since I earnestly invoke that perfect readiness (of mind), joining in my prayer with Âramaiti (our Piety toward Thee. Yea, pray Thou Thyself within me through these holy powers). Ask Thou (Thyself) our questions, those which shall be asked by us of Thee; for a question asked by Thee (as its inspirer), is as the question of the mighty, whene'er Thy ruler speaks his potent wish.

11 Yea, I conceived of Thee as bountiful, O Ahura Mazda! when (Thy messenger) with Thy Good Mind near approached me, and with your words I first impressed (my soul). Woes then 'midst men Thy heart-devoted one declared (to be my portion); but that will I do which Thou did'st say was best.

12 And since Thou, coming thus, Thy legal Righteousness in fulness spakest, then declare not to me words as yet unheard (with faith or knowledge; command me not) to go forth (with these upon my task) before Thy Sraosha (Obedience) comes to me, to go on hand in hand with me with holy recompense and mighty splendour, whereby to give the contending throngs, as a blessing, (Your) spiritual gifts (of certainty and peace).

13 Thus I conceived of Thee as bounteous, O Ahura Mazda! when with Thy Good Mind (Sraosha, Obedience) approached me. (And I would therefore pray thus of Thee, that bounteous one.) In order that I may make known to men the true and sacred aims of their desires (in the rite or daily toil), grant Ye me long life for this, (that blessing) which none with daring may extort from You, even this (gift) of that desired 6 place which has been declared to be within Thy Realm.

14 Yea, as the man enlightened (in Thy law), and who has possessions, gives to his friend, (so give Ye) me, O Great Creator! Thy rejoicing and abounding grace, when through Thy sovereign Power, and from (the motives of Thy cause of) Righteous Order, I stand forth to go out to, or to arouse, the chiefs of Thy (pure) proclamation, with all those (others) who recite Thy well-remembered Māthra word.

15 Yea, I conceived of Thee as bounteous, O Ahura Mazda! when with the Good Mind's grace Thy Sraosha (Obedience) approached me, (and said): Let the quiet and long-enduring better mind with understanding teach (thee); let not a foremost man conciliate the wicked (as sycophant desiring aid), for with that (quiet mind of faith), Thy saints have brought full many a sinner unto Thee (as convert, and in penitence).

16 Thus, O Ahura Mazda! this Zarathustra loves the Spirit 3, and every man most bounteous prays (beside him): Be Righteousness life-strong, and clothed with body. In that (holy) Realm which shines (with splendour) as the sun, let Piety be present; and may she through the indwelling of Thy Good Mind give us blessings in reward for deeds!

QUESTIONS ASKED OF AHURA WITH THANKFULNESS AND DEVOTION.

1 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright; when praise is to be offered, how (shall I complete) the praise of the One like You, O Mazda! Let the One like Thee declare it earnestly to the friend who is such as I, thus through Thy Righteousness (within us) to offer friendly help to us, so that the One like Thee 2 may draw near us through Thy Good Mind (within the soul).

2 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright, how, in pleasing Him, may we serve the supreme one of (Heaven) the better world 4; yea, how to serve that chief who may grant us those (blessings of His grace, and) who will seek for (grateful requitals at our hands); for He, bountiful (as He is) through the Righteous Order, (will hold off) ruin from (us) all, guardian (as He is) for both the worlds, O Spirit Mazda! and a friend.

3 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright: Who by generation was the first father of the Righteous Order (within the world)? Who gave the (recurring) sun and stars their (undeviating) way? Who established that whereby the moon waxes, and whereby she wanes, save Thee? These things, O Great Creator! would I know, and others likewise still.

4 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright, who from beneath hath sustained the earth and the clouds 6 above that they do not fall? Who made the waters and the plants? Who to the wind has yoked on the storm-clouds, the swift and fleetest two? Who, O Great Creator! is the inspirer of the good thoughts (within our souls)?

5 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright; who, as a skilful artisan, hath made the lights and the darkness? Who, as thus skilful, hath made sleep and the zest (of waking hours)? Who (spread) the Auroras, the noontides and midnight, monitors to discerning (man), duty's true (guides)?

6 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright these things which I shall speak forth, if they are truly thus. Doth the Piety (which we cherish) in reality increase the sacred orderliness within our actions? To these Thy true saints hath she given the Realm through the Good Mind. For whom hast Thou made the Mother-kine, the producer of joy?

7 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright; who fashioned Âramaiti (our piety) the beloved, together with Thy Sovereign Power? Who, through his guiding wisdom, hath made the son revering the father? (Who made him beloved?) With (questions such as) these, so abundant, O Mazda! I press Thee, O bountiful Spirit, (Thou) maker of all!

8 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright, that I may ponder these which are Thy revelations, O Mazda! and the words which were asked (of Thee) by Thy Good Mind (within us), and that whereby we may attain, through Thine Order, to this life's perfection. Yea, how may my soul with joyfulness increase in goodness? Let it thus be.

9 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright, how to myself shall I hallow 7 the Faith of Thy people, which the beneficent kingdom's lord hath taught me, even the admonitions which He called Thine equal, hath taught me through His lofty (and most righteous Sovereignty and) Power, as He dwells in like abode 1 with Thine Order and Thy Good Mind?

10 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright that holy Faith which is of all things best, and which, going on hand in hand with Thy people, shall further my lands in Asha. Thine order, and, through the words of Âramaiti (our piety), shall render actions just. The prayers of mine understanding will seek for Thee, O Ahura!

11 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright; how to these your (worshippers) may (that Piety once again and evermore) approach, to them to whom O Lord, Thy Faith is uttered? Yea, I beseech of Thee to tell me this, I who am known to Thee as Thy foremost of (servants); all other (Gods, with their polluted worshippers), I look upon with (my) spirit's hate.

12 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright; who is the righteous one in that regard in which I ask Thee my question? And who is evil? For which is the wicked? Or which is himself the (foremost) wicked one? And the vile man who stands against me (in this gain of) Thy blessing, wherefore 4 is he not held and believed to be the sinner that he is?

13 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright, how shall I banish this Demon-of-the-Lie from us hence to those beneath who are filled with rebellion? The friends of Righteousness (as it lives in Thy saints) gain no light (from their teachings), nor have they loved the questions which Thy Good Mind (asks in the soul)!

14 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright; how shall I deliver that Demon-of-the-Lie into the two hands of Thine Order (as he lives in our hosts) to cast her down to death through Thy Māthras of doctrine, and to send mighty destruction among her evil believers, to keep those deceitful and harsh oppressors from reaching their (fell) aims?

15 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright. If through Thy Righteousness (within our souls) Thou hast the power over this for my protection, when the two hosts shall meet in hate (as they strive) for those vows which Thou dost desire to maintain, how, O Mazda! and to which of both wilt Thou give the day?

16 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright, who smites with victory in the protection (of all) who exist, and for the sake of, and by means of Thy doctrine? Yea, clearly reveal a lord having power (to save us) for both lives. Then let (our) Obedience with Thy Good Mind draw near to that (leader), O Mazda! yea, to him to whomsoever Thou (shalt) wish that he should come.

17 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright; how, O Mazda! shall I proceed to that (great) conference with You, to that consummation of Your own, when my spoken wish shall be (effected) unto me, (the desire) to be in the chieftainship (and supported) by (the hope of) Weal and Immortality (those saving powers of Thy grace), and by that (holy) Māthra (Thy word of thought) which fully guides our way through Righteousness (within).

18 (And, having gained Thine audience and Thine Order's sacred chieftainship), then I ask of Thee, O Ahura! and tell me aright, how shall I acquire that Thy Righteous Order's prize, ten (costly) mares male-mated, and with them the camel (those signs of honour and blessing for Thy chief. I ask Thee for these gifts for sacrifice). For it was told me for the sake of our Welfare (in our salvation), and of our Immortality, in what manner Thou shalt give to these (Thy conquering hosts) both of these Thy (gifts of grace).

19 This I ask Thee, O Ahura! tell me aright; (in the case of the recreant, of him) who does not give this (honoured) gift to him who hath earned it; yea, who does not give it to this (veracious tiller of the earth, to him who in no respect shows favour to the Demon-of-the-Lie, even to the) correct speaker 5 (of Thy sacrificial word), what shall be his sentence at the first (now at this time, and because of this false dealing? I ask it), knowing well his doom at last.

20 (And how as to our deluded foes?) Have Daēva- (worshippers) e'er reigned as worthy kings? (This verily I ask of Thee, the Daēva-worshippers) who fight for these (who act amiss? Have they well reigned) by whom the Karpan and the Usig(k) gave the (sacred) Kine to Rapine, whence, too, the Kavian in persistent strength has flourished? (And these have also never given us tribal wealth nor blessings), nor for the Kine have they brought waters to the fields for the sake of the Righteous Order (in our hosts), to further on their growth (and welfare)!

YASNA 45

THE DOCTRINE OF DUALISM. HOMAGE TO AHURA.

1 Yea, I will speak forth; hear ye; now listen, ye who from near, and ye who from afar have come seeking (the knowledge). Now ponder 2 ye clearly all (that concerns) him. Not for a second time shall the false teacher slay our life (of the mind, or the body). The wicked is hemmed in with his faith and his tongue!

2 Yea, I will declare the world's two first 6 spirits, of whom the more bountiful thus spake to the harmful: Neither our thoughts, nor commands, nor our understandings, nor our beliefs, nor our deeds, nor our consciences, nor our souls, are at one.

3 Thus I will declare this world's first (teaching), that which the all-wise Mazda Ahura hath told me. And they among you who will not so fulfil and obey this Mātra, as I now shall conceive and declare it, to these shall the end of life (issue) in woe.

4 Thus I will declare forth this world's best (being). From (the insight of His) Righteousness Mazda, who hath appointed these (things), hath known (what He utters to be true; yea, I will declare) Him the father of the toiling Good Mind (within us). So is His daughter through good deeds (our) Piety. Not to be deceived is the all-viewing I Lord.

5 Yea, thus I will declare that which the most bountiful One told me, that word which is the best to be heeded by mortals. They who therein grant me obedient attention, upon them cometh Weal to bless, and the Immortal being, and in the deeds of His Good Mind cometh the Lord.

6 Aye, thus I will declare forth Him who is of all the greatest, praising through my Righteousness, I who do aright, those who (dispose of all as well aright). Let Ahura Mazda hear with His bounteous spirit, in whose homage (what I asked) was asked with the Good Mind. Aye, let Him exhort me through His wisdom (which is ever) the best.

7 (Yea, I will declare Him) whose blessings the offerers will seek for, those who are living now, as well as those who have lived (aforetime), as will they also who are coming (hereafter). Yea, even the soul(s) of the righteous (will desire) them in the eternal Immortality. (Those things they will desire which are blessings to the righteous) but woes to the wicked. And these hath Ahura Mazda (established) through His kingdom, He, the creator (of all).

8 Him in our hymns of homage and of praise would I faithfully serve, for now with (mine) eye, I see Him clearly, Lord of the good spirit, of word, and action, I knowing through my Righteousness Him who is Ahura Mazda. And to Him (not here alone, but) in His home of song, His praise we shall bear.

9 Yea, Him with our better Mind we seek to honour, who desiring (good), shall come to us (to bless) in weal and sorrow. May He, Ahura Mazda, make us vigorous through Kshathra's royal power, our flocks and men in thrift to further, from the good support and bearing of His Good Mind, (itself born in us) by His Righteousness.

10 Him in the Yasnas of our Piety we seek to praise with homage, who in His persistent energy was famed to be (in truth) the Lord Ahura Mazda, for He hath appointed in His kingdom, through His holy Order and His Good Mind, both Weal and Immortality, to grant the eternal mighty pair to this our land (and the creation).

11 (Him would we magnify and praise) who hath despised the Daēva-gods and alien men, them who before held Him in their derision. Far different are (these) from him who gave Him honour. This latter one is through the Saoshyant's bounteous Faith, who likewise is the Lord of saving power, a friend, brother, or a father to us, Mazda Lord!

PERSONAL SUFFERINGS, HOPES, AND APPEALS.

1 To what land to turn; aye, whither turning shall I go? On the part of a kinsman (prince), or allied peer, none, to conciliate, give (offerings) to me (to help my cause), nor yet the throngs of labour, (not) even such as these, nor yet (still less) the evil tyrants of the province. How then shall I (establish well the Faith, and thus) conciliate Thy (grace), O Lord?

2 This know I, Mazda! wherefore I am thus unable to attain my wish 1, and why my flocks are so reduced in number, and why my following is likewise scant. Therefore I cry to Thee; behold it, Lord! desiring helpful grace for me, as friend bestows on friend. (Therefore to meet my spirit's need, and this as well) declare and teach to me the Good Mind's wealth.

3 When come, Great Giver! they who are the day's enlighteners, to hold the Righteous Order of the world upright, and forward pressing? When are the schemes of the saviour Saoshyants with (their) lofty revelations (to appear)? To whom for help does he (their chief) approach, who has Thy Good Mind (as his fellow-worker)? Thee, for mine exhorter and commander, Living Lord! I choose.

4 (But ever these helpers come to me, all rests as yet in gloom.) The evil man is holding back those who are the bearers of the Righteous Order from progress with the Kine, (from progress with the sacred cause) within the region, or the province, he, the evil governor, endowed with evil might, consuming life with evil deeds. Wherefore, whoever crushes him from his power, O Mazda! or from life, stores for the Kine in sacred wisdom shall he make.

5 (Yea, he who, as ruler, treats no coming applicant with injury, as a good citizen (or nobly wise) in sacred vow and duty, and living righteously in every covenant, who, as an uncorrupted judge, discerns the wicked (that leader who, rejecting me, would keep back those who propagate the Faith), let him, (this righteous judge), declare (the vengeance) to that (hostile) lord, (my) kinsman. Yea, let him crush him when he sallies forth (to approach us for our harm)!

6 (And he who leaves him in his guilty error has my curse.) Yea, he who has the power, and will not thus (with stern reproof) approach him, shall go to the abode of the Lie, (and) the enchainer. For he is evil who is the best one to the evil, and he is holy who is friendly to the righteous, as Thou didst fix the moral laws, O Lord!

7 Whom, then, as guard, O Mazda! hast Thou set me then when that wicked one still held me for his hate? Whom (had I) then but Thee, Thy Fire and Mind, Ahura! by deeds performed in which Thy Righteous rule is saved and nurtured? Therefore that spiritual power (vouchsafing me) for the (holy) Faith (its truths) declare.

8 And as to him who (now by evil power) delivers up my settlements to harm, let not his burning (wrath) in deeds attain 7 me. But bearing back the (evil will and evil influence of such), let these things come (back) to him in anger. Let that to his body come which holds from welfare; but let no (help) at all (approach him, which may) keep him back from misery. (And let this happen as I speak) from (vengeful) hate, O Lord!

9 But who is the freely helping one who will teach me foremost how we may adore Thee, Thou the well to be invoked as in Thy deeds, the holy, bountiful Ahura? What (words) the Kine's creator spake for Thee by aid of, and to aid, the Righteous ritual Order, these words of Thine, (Thy people coming) with Thy Good Mind, are seeking now (to gain and learn from) me, O Mazda Lord!

10 Whoever, man or woman, shall give to me those (gifts) of life which Thou hast known as best, O Mazda! and as a holy blessing through (Thy) Righteous Order, a throne (established) with (Thy) Good Mind, (with these I shall go forth; yea, those) whom I shall (accompany and so) incite, to the homage of such as You (on earth), forth to the Judge's Bridge (itself) with all of them shall I lead on (at last).

11 (And they and I have every need for help, for now) the Karpan and the Kavi will join in governments to slay the life of man with evil deeds, they whom their own souls and their own conscience will beery. And when they approach there where the Judge's Bridge (extends, unlike the believing ones of God, who go so firmly forth with me as guide and helper, these shall miss their path and fall), and in the Lie's abode for ever shall their habitation be.

12 (But for the penitent there is yet hope; for all our former foes shall not thus fall, as from the Kinvat Bridge to woe, for) when from among the tribes and kith of the Turanian, even among the more powerful ones of the Fryāna, those shall arise 2 who further on the settlements of Piety with energy and zeal, with these shall Ahura dwell together through His Good Mind (in them), and to them for joyful grace deliver His commands.

13 Yea, he who will propitiate Zarathustra Spitāma 4 with gifts midst men, this man is fitted for the proclamation, and to him Ahura Mazda will give the (prospered) life. And he will likewise cause the settlements to thrive in mental goodness. We think him, therefore, Your good companion to (further and maintain) Your Righteousness (and meet for Your approach).

(A voice from among the Chiefs.)

14 (But where is such an one?) Whom hast thou Zarathustra! thus a holy friend for the great (effort of the) cause? Who is it who thus desires to speak it forth? (Zarathustra answers. Aye, such an one have.) It is our Kavi Vistāspa, the heroic; (and not he alone, but all) whom thou shalt (as in Thy prophet) meet in the assembly, O Ahura Mazda! these likewise will I call (to my attempt), and with Thy Good Mind's words.

15 O ye Haēkat-aspas, Spitāmas! to you will I now address my words, since ye discern the things unlawful, and the lawful, for these your actions to establish (firmly on its base) for the Righteous Order through those which are the Lord's primeval laws.

16 (And to the Hvōgvas would I likewise speak.) Thou Frashastra Hvōgva (whom I see); go thou (forth) with the generous helpers, with those whom we are praying for as for salvation to the land. Go thou where Piety joins hand in hand with the Righteous Order, where are the wished-for Realms of Good Mind, where Mazda in His most honoured home abides.

17 Where in your measured verse I will declare aloud (the praises), not in unmeasured lines, Gāmāspa Hvōgva! but songs of homage (will I weave) with ever gained Obedience in offering. (And unto Mazda) will I chant them, yea, to Him who will discern aright what things are lawful (or) unlawful (which I thus do, or utter), and with His wonder-working thoughts of Righteousness (attend).

18 (For) whoever (offers) sanctity to me, to him shall be the best gifts whatsoever. Yea, of my (spirit's) wealth will I bestow on him through Thy Good Mind (which I give), but oppressions will I send on him who as oppressor will deliver us to anguish, O Mazda! desiring, as I do, to satisfy Your choice by righteous (vengeance). This is the decision of mine understanding and my will.

19 (Yea, this I earnestly announce.) He who from Righteousness (in mind and life) shall verily perform for me, for Zarathustra, that which is thus most helpful (for my cause) according to my earnest wish (and through my words of urgent zeal) on him shall they bestow reward(s) beyond this earth, with all the mental blessings gained through the sacred mother-kine. And these things (all) didst Thou (Thyself) command to me, O Mazda, Thou most wise!

THE GĀTHA (Ā) SPENTĀ MAINYŪ (SPENTĀMAINYU(Ū)).

THE BOUNTIFULNESS OF AHURA.

1 And to this I (man, His chosen saint), Ahura Mazda will give both the two (greatest gifts, His) Universal Weal and Immortality, by means of His bountiful Spirit, and with His Best Mind, from (the desire to maintain His) Righteous moral Order in word and deed, and by the (strength and wisdom) of His Sovereign Power, (established) in Piety (among His folk).

2 Aye, (that blessedness, which is the) best (creation) of this most bounteous spirit, Ahura Mazda will bring forth in action with words from the mouth and tongue of His Good Mind (within His seers), and by the two hands of Āramaiti (His Piety as she lives within the soul). And by such wise (beneficence is) He the father of the righteous Order (within our worship and our lives).

3 And Thou art therein, O Ahura Mazda! the bountiful One who appertains to, and who possesses, that (most bounteous) spirit in that Thou art He who for this (man, in whom this spirit works) hath made the joy-creating Kine. (And as to her), for her, as joyful meadows 1 of her peace, wilt Thou bestow (Thine) Āramaiti (who is our Piety as earth considered), since he (for her) hath taken counsel with Thy Good Mind, Lord!

4 (But this Thy bounteous spirit doth not alone bestow rewards and blessings on the good.) The wicked (foemen of the Faith) are harmed, and from (the motives which move) that bounteous spirit (of Thine own), O Mazda! but not thus the saints. (And yet the ruler's pride would ever slight the righteous.) The feeble man alone stands free to give in kindly obligation to Thy saint, but having wealth and ruling power, the evil (man) is (at the service) of the wicked, and for much.

5 But Thou wilt give these gifts, and through Thy (most blessed and most) bounteous spirit, O Ahura Mazda! to this Thy holy saint, for they are whatsoever is the best; but far from Thy love the wicked has his portion, abiding in the actions of the Evil Mind.

6 Aye, these things wilt Thou give (to him), O Thou Ahura Mazda! and through Thy bounteous spirit, (and) by Thy Fire as in a good bestowal to the two striving (throngs) through the prosperous increase of our Piety, and of the Righteous ritual and moral Truth; for that (Piety of ours instructing) doth teach the many coming ones who seek her (face)!

YASNA 48

ANTICIPATED STRUGGLES AND PRAYERS FOR CHAMPIONS AND DEFENDERS.

1 If through his action in the offering of gifts in accordance with the Righteous Order, (Thy saint) shall smite the Demon-of-the-Lie (the inspiring spirit of our foes), when that in very truth shall come, which has been (and is still yet) proclaimed as a deceit, (when it shall come) in the Immortal life, regarding (as it does both) men (to bless), and Daēvas (to afflict them), then shall (Thy faithful worshipper) increase thereby the celebration of Thy praise, O Lord! and with it blessings (for Thy folk).

2 Tell me then, Lord? (the end), for Thou dost know it. (Tell me to grant me strength and courage) before those conflicts come which shall encounter me (as leader of Thy tribes); shall the champion of Thy holy Order, O Ahura! smite (at last) the evil heretic, and when? (I ask Thee this); for this if it be gained (is known) to be the (one) good consummation of (our) life.

3 (Yea, tell me then this), for to the enlightened 3 man is that the best of teachings which the beneficent Ahura doth proclaim, and through (the revelations of) His holy Order, bounteous as he and wise with His intelligence, as well as they who declare to us (still other) secret sayings (in His name). The one like Thee (their chieftain) is, O Mazda! endowed with Thy Good Mind's understanding thoughts.

4 (Yea, tell me the secret of the future struggle 1; for that enlightened man) must follow close the holy Faith (for which that struggle had its toil and effort). Yea, O Mazda! he who would bend his mind (till it attains to) that which is the better and more holy, must pursue the Daëna close in word and action. His will and wish must be consistent with his chosen creed and fealty, and in Thine Understanding (which discerneth all) shall he in many ways be (versed) at last!

5 (But while I as yet know not the issue, I can yet hope and pray.) Let the good kings obtain the rule. Let not the evil monarchs govern us, (but let the righteous gain the day and rule us), with deeds done in a good discernment, O thou pious wisdom, Aramaiti! sanctifying to men's minds the best of blessings for (their) offspring. Yea, for the Kine, (O Aramaiti!) let (Thy) toil be given, and may'st Thou cause her to prosper for our life.

6 For she will grant us pleasing homes 2, and, (while we live) in this Thy Good Mind's longing 3 prayer (to gain her welfare), she grants us likewise lasting strength (for every deed which that Thy Good Mind moves us to perform), and therefore hath Mazda caused the plants to flourish for her (nurture), He, Ahura, in the generation of primeval life.

7 (Then in our coming strife let both her mortal foes be slain.) Let the Wrath-demon of rapine be cast down. Smite ye against the envy (which would plot against our Throne), O ye who, abiding by the Good Mind, and in accordance with our holy Order, desire to hold that refuge fast, to whose sacred bond the bounteous man belongs. And therefore, O Ahura! (to save Thy struggling saint who toils with changing lot) will I place (that refuge) for him in Thy world.

8 (And how shall I beseech Thee for this victory and gift?) What is the (potent) prayer to bring on that Thy holy Reign? What for Thy sacred reward and blessing for my (soul)? How shall I seek the open helpers for (the spread and maintenance of) Thy (great) Order, while I myself live 4 on in Thy Good Spirit's deeds?

9 (Aye, when shall faith be changed to sight); and when shall I in verity discern if Ye indeed have power over aught, O Lord! and through Thy Righteous Order (guarding here on earth), O Thou within whose (power lie) my griefs and doubts? Let then Thy saving prophet find and gain aright (for) my delight Thy Good Mind's wonder-working grace; yea, let Thy Saoshyant see how gifts of recompense may be his own.

10 When, Mazda! shall the men of mind's perfection come? And when shall they drive from hence, the soil of this (polluted) drunken joy, whereby the Karpanas with (their) angry zeal would crush us, and by whose inspiration the tyrants of the provinces (hold on) their evil rule?

11 Yea, when shall our perfected Piety appear together with Thy Righteousness? When shall she come, as having the amenities of home for us, and provided (like our land) with pastures (for the kine)? And who shall give us quiet from the cruel (men) of evil life and faith? To whom shall Thy Good Mind's sacred wisdom come (to guide them in their toil to rescue and avenge us)?

12 (To whom? The answer lieth near.) Such shall be the Saviours of the Provinces, and they who, through Thy Good Mind's grace, shall go on hand in hand with mental keenness 4 (as it spreads among Thy saints) by the doing every deed of Thy commandment, O Ahura! through the help of, and in accordance with, Thy Holy Order; for such as these are set (for us), as steadfast foes of hate!

YASNA 49
REVERSES AND HOPES. HONOUR TO FRASHAOSTRA AND OTHER CHIEFS.

1 Bendva 1 has ever fought with me; (yea, since he first appeared at hand to threaten, and alas to his advantage in the strife) He is the most powerful (in brutal might), and (in his predominance) would crush my strength as I seek to win back the disaffected (in my host) through Righteous (zeal), O Mazda! Come then with gifts of (vengeful) good to (meet) my sorrow. Through (Thine inspiring) Good Mind obtain (for me) that (Bendva's) death!

2 (Aye, he is indeed the greatest), for that Bendva's evil judge doth cause me to hesitate and ponder (in my earnest course of propagation and reform), a deceiver as he is, (estranged) from the Righteous Order, and receiving from it (not happiness) but many a wound. The bountiful and perfect Piety he has not maintained nor strengthened for this land, nor questions with Thy Good Mind hath he asked (to gain him light), O Lord!

3 (But (all is not yet lost!); for this religious choice (our holy creed, for which our last lost battle has been fought), O Mazda! Thy blessed Order (our guardian help) has yet been set to save and bless us. (But) for (that evil) Judge, the Demon-of-the-Lie, (is set) to deal (for him) her wounds. Therefore do I pray (the more) for the sheltering leadership of Thy Good Mind (within our folk and our commanders). And all the allies of the wicked I abjure.

4 They who with evil scheme and will shall cherish and help on the Wrath of Rapine, and with her Râma, and (not by silent favour, but) with their very tongues, whose will and wish 1 (run) not with good but evil deeds. These settle and support the Daëvas (in their power, not the Lord). It is the wicked's Faith and Insight (so to do. Their faith is the perverted).

5 But he, O Mazda! is our abundance and our fatness, who (will yet dare these unbelieving foes) and guard the Faith (against that envious Wrath), and with the Good Mind's power. For every man of Piety is a wise citizen in accordance with the holy Order, and so are all who are (in truth) within Thy Realm, O Lord!

6 And now, will I beseech of You, O Mazda, and Righteousness (within Thy Mâthra) speaks (to tell me) what lies within Your will's intention, that (having discerned Thy Insight as the enlightened ever must), I may as well discern aright how we can herald forth those (truths), and that pure Daëna (with them) which is the Faith of Him who is Thyself, O Lord.

7 And (as we speak it forth as taught by Asha) then let the (zealous 2 citizen) give heed, and with Thy Good Mind, O Ahura Mazda! Yea, let him give ear in accordance with (the dictate of) the Holy Order, and do Thou hear alike as well. Who shall be the ally; and who the kinsman-lord himself, who, with his gifts and (legal rules), shall institute and settle for the serving mass a worthy praise (for God)?

8 (And I do not ask in vain, for such an one is found for us, and near at hand.) To Frashastra hast Thou given that most favouring guardian power, the headship of the Holy Order (for us), O Ahura! This therefore would I pray of Thee (to confirm to him that gracious gift), and for myself likewise, would I now seek as well that sheltering headship which is within Thy Realm; yea, most blest and foremost may we both for ever be within it.

9 Aye, let the zealous and thrifty husbandman, so formed for giving help and blessings, give heed and listen when I call, (O Mazda!) Let not the truthful (tiller, he who hears and speaks Thy word), be he who takes that sheltering chieftainship together with the wicked. Let the believing natures (only) join in that best recompense. And thus in the course of the holy Order are in the fact so joined those two, Gâmâspa and the 'hero'.

10 (And since these champions thus join in that reward), then therefore will I place as well in Thy protection (Thy) Good Mind 1 (in the living) and the spirits of the dead. Yea, I confide our very self-humbling praises, (which we offer, unto Thee), by which (Thine) Aramaiti (who is our Piety, exists), and likewise sacrificing zeal. And this would we do to further Thy great Sovereign Power (among Thy folk), and with undying 2 (?) strength.

11 (But as to faithless reprobates); the souls (of the evil dead) shall meet those evil men who serve their evil rulers, who speak with evil words, and harbour evil consciences, these souls (in Hell) shall come with evil food (to welcome them), and in the Lie's abode their dwelling verily shall be!

YASNA 49, 12-50.
Y. 49, 12

1 What aids of grace hast Thou for Thine invoking Zarathustra, (O Ahura Mazda!) to grant him through Thy Righteous Order? Yea, what (aids of grace hast thou for me as) through Thy Good Mind given (within my soul), for me who will (still) pray to Thee with praises, O Great Creator! beseeching what in accordance with Your wished-for aim is best? Aye, doth my soul indeed obtain assisting grace, and which of Thy blessings is that gift to me, O Lord? What saving champion is found to save both flocks and herds? And who for myself other than Thy Righteous Order, and Thyself, Ahura? Tell me, O (ye) invoked ones! Or what of grace is there for me save Thy Best Mind (itself)?

2 (And if Thy guardian is verily to save our wealth) how shall he (obtain, and by what means shall he) seek after that joy-creating Kine (who is the living symbol of our peace)? (How shall that man obtain his wish) who shall desire to see her provided with pastures for (the welfare of) this land? (That only way is righteousness.) Do Thou then grant me lands (so would I ask of Thee) which live in justice in the many splendours of the sun, and lands which openly thus live, and which are to be sought and gained by me (as conquests for the cause). Give Thou this gift!

3 (Yea, let that joy-creating one) be his possession through the Righteous Order (which he helps to bring, that living sign) which (the most valiant citizen) may give to him (at once reward and charge), and in accordance with Thy Sovereign Authority. (May that heroic settler grant him this gift) he who may make the (last imperilled) farm to flourish in the vigour of Thy blest prosperity, the tract which lies the nearest (to the fields) which our foeman holds as his.

4 (And therefore both in thankfulness and hope) will I give sacrifice to You with praises, O Ahura Mazda! together with Thine Order and Thy Best Mind (in Thy saints), and in accordance with Thy sacred Sovereign Power, by whose help the wisher (heaven-bound) may stand upon the (certain) pathway, and in Thine Home-of-song shall I (by means of these my Yasnas offered here) there hear the praises of Thine offering saints who see Thy face.

5 And we are in readiness as well (to fulfil Your praises and declare your words), O Ahura Mazda! through Your (grace, and) in accordance with Your Holy Order, since Ye advance with friendliness to cheer the speaker of Your Mâthra-word with open acts of visible relief, as if with hand sent forth, whereby that Mâthra-speaker of Your truth may bring us on, and settle us, in weal and bliss.

6 (Therefore will I incite him to his task the more. Let him indeed proclaim the righteous way) he who already lifts his voice in Mâthras, O Ahura Mazda! he, Zarathustra, the faithful friend in accordance with the Holy Order, and with self-abasing worship, giver of understanding for this land, voice-guider (of the way to glory), let him indeed proclaim and teach my regulations, and in accordance with Thy Good Mind (as his law).

7 (And together with that chief speaker of your word I would engage yet others in the cause). Your well-incited and swift 6 (servants), O Ahura! would I yoke on (as steeds to take their holy course toward heaven), gaining thereby (at last) the Bridges where Your adoration (rules and is complete). Yea, I yoke on your mighty ones, and with Thy Holy Order, and Thy Good Mind. And with these may Ye drive on; aye, be Ye for my help!

8 (And as I yoke on Your Mâthra-speakers for their course, then) would I (myself) approach You in the (highest) deed of worship 1, and with these sacred metric feet (of Zarathustra and his peers 2), those which are heard and famed afar, as the metric feet of zealous worship, and with my hands stretched out (in supplicating prayer). Yea, You (would I approach), O Mazda! in union with Your sacred ritual Truth, and with the homage of a freely-giving helper, and with the good virtue of (Your) Good Mind (in my soul).

9 Yea, with these Yasnas of Your sacrifice would I approach You, praising back to You (in answer to Your mercies), O Ahura! and Thou, O Righteousness! in (the holy) actions of Your Good Mind. (as he moves within us), so long indeed as I shall have the power, commanding at my will o'er this my sacred (privilege) and gift. (And doing as) the wise man (thus), may I (like him) become a supplicant who gains 5 his ends.

10 (Mine every wish and prayer is this), then therefore whatsoever I shall do, and whatsoever deeds (of ritual and truth I shall yet further do) on account of, (and to make full) these (prior deeds of worship), yea, whatsoever (holy works) shine bright 2 as having worth in (all) men's eyes through Thy Good Mind (whose character they share; these as) the stars, suns, and the Aurora which brings on the light of days, are all, through their Righteous Order, (the speakers) of Thy praise, O Thou Great Giver, Lord!

11 Your praiser then (by eminence) would I be named, and (more), would be it, so long as by (Thine inspiring) Righteousness I am thus able and may have the power. And may the maker of the world give help through (His implanted) Good Mind (in my fellow-servants). And may that (all) be done (to further us) which through His veritable grace is most promotive (for the cause)!

THE GĀTHA(Ā) VOHŪ KHSHATHREM (VOHUKHSHATHRA(Ā)).

(This Gātha consists of the single chapter Y. 51. It has lines of fourteen syllables with caesura in the middle.)

YASNA 51
INSTRUCTIONS AND APPEALS TO AN ASSEMBLY OF THE FAITHFUL.

1 The good Government (of Ahura) is to be chosen (among all wished-for things) as that lot which most of all brings on (our happiness). Actions that oppress us it opposes, through the holy Order (which pervades it), and with the pious zeal (of its true servants). Therefore, O Great Creator! let me produce, and help bring on (that Sovereign Power) which is the best for us at every present hour.

2 And first I will ask for these two blessings of Your own, O Thou Great Creator, and thou His Righteous Order! and I also ask of thee, Our Piety (personified, as well); and grant me this Your Sovereign Rule over our desired wealth (to give and to preserve it; and likewise) those spiritual blessings which are advantageous for our worship (of Ahura) through (the inspiration of His) Good Mind (within the soul).

3 (And it is not I alone who thus appeal to You; I speak for all) who are guarded in the (ceremonial and moral) actions of Your (law), and by those (inspired) words (which proceed) from the tongue of Thy Good Mind (as he speaks within Thy Mâthra). Yea, these are all assembling (each) to hear You, of whom Thou, O Ahura Mazda! art the foremost guide and light.

4 (And they cry aloud to Thee, O Mazda! I speaking with them, and in their name): Where is the (promised) lord of our thrift (the embodied law, saving us from the most dreaded dangers that we fear, the thrift-lord) of (our) ready zeal? Where does he stand to (show us) mercy? Whither are (Thy) Righteousness and the Bountiful Aramaiti (our Piety) approaching? From what direction comes Thy Best Mind (to inspire and to guide)? And whence (again), O Great Creator! Thy Sovereign Power (to be our ruler and defence)?

5 And it is the tiller of the earth who asks this of Thee, O Ahura! (Thy chosen saint himself); he has asked this all of Thee, striving to discover how he may gain to himself the sacred Kine (and with all wealth in herds beside. And he would seek this) moved by the motives which flow from Thy Righteous Order (and Thy cause), upright as he is in actions, and wise in his self-humbling worship (of that One) who, as a righteous ruler, has appointed a just controlling guide for those whom He has made.

6 (And in partial answer to his question, and to solve his doubt, I now declare the truth): He who gives to this (good citizen) that which is better than the good; yea, He who bestows on him in accordance with his religious choice is (our) Ahura Mazda (and not a false god of the Daévas). And this will He bestow through His divine Authority (established in preparation here), while on the withholder of the sacrifice, who offers nothing to His (cause). He will send worse than the evil (and that not here alone, but) in the last turning of the creation in its course!

7 (And as Thou wilt bestow thus graciously on him), so grant me also, O Thou most bountiful Spirit Mazda, Thou who hast made both the Kine and the waters and the plants (for her support) both Immortality and Welfare, those two eternal powers, and through Thy Good Mind in the doctrine (which is revealed through his inspired words).

8 (Yea, grant me these two inseparable gifts, for having them in store) I will speak for Thee, O Mazda! because to the man of understanding one should declare for Thee that which is woe to the wicked, but salvation to him who has maintained the holy Order (in Thy folk and in his soul). For he is (repaid in his deed, and) rejoiced by the Māthra who declares it to the wise.

9 (And when I shall speak, I will declare for You that mental) keenness (which reaches the decision), and which Thou hast bestowed upon the two striving sides, (in Thy satisfying word). And this I will announce by means of Thy flaming Fire; yea, I will declare it for the bestowal of that sword of justice which is forged from steel, and wrought for both the worlds. And for the wounding of the wicked (with its blade) may'st Thou, O Ahura Mazda! bless and prosper Thine (avenging) saint!

10 (Yea, let Thy believer wound the wicked to the quick), for he, who totally estranged from this (our holy rule), O Mazda! seeks to destroy my life, is a son of the Lie's creation, and belongs to the miscreants; (but as for me), I call on Asha (Thy Righteous Order to be my help); and may he come with Thy good blessing.

11 (And ye who through the great assembly, it is of you I speak while, with my lips, I now address the Lord): Who, O Ahura! is a loyal friend to the Spítāma, to Zarathustra? Who has asked his question of the divine Righteousness, (as he approached)? By whom is the bounteous Piety (received and cherished)? Or who has been regarded as upright and fitted for the great cause of Thy Good Mind?

12 ('Who is worthy?' would I ask, for Zarathustra was ever such, and from earliest days. He was no polluted wretch.) Paederast never gained his ear, nor Kavi-follower on this (temptation-)bridge of earth, when his body was (maturely) grown, when they both hasten(ed) to him with the bosom's impure power.

13 (And he will be likewise victorious on the veritable Judgement Bridge, for) the righteous man's conscience will truly crush the wicked man's (spirit) while his soul rages fiercely on the open Kinvat Bridge, as he strives by his actions, and his tongue's (cursing speech) to reach (and to pollute) Asha's paths (where the faithful souls come).

14 (And as are those lost spirits, so are our foes.) No friends to the creatures are the Karpans, (not granting) complete (harvests) from the fields with complete (pasture) for the Kine (chief objects for our prayer), bringing woe by their deeds and their teachings. And they will deliver these (beings whom they lead) at the last by their doctrine(s) in the Home of the Lie.

15 But this is the reward which Zarathustra declared before (to his friends who counsel with Asha), and are fitted for the cause; Ahura Mazda will come the first into His Song Home, Garōdman, and then these gifts will be given you by the Good Mind (within you), and with blessings for the cause of the Righteous Order (in His hosts).

16 (And one of you, the greatest, has indeed attained to that wisdom which is thus blessed with a promise), Kavi Vistāspa has reached it in the Realm of our great cause (of devotion 1), and moved in his toil by the chants of the Good Mind (who speaks in the Māthra); yea, he hath attained to that wisdom which the bountiful Ahura conceived in accordance with Asha, thus to teach us salvation.

17 (And not alone amidst our princes hath sanctity been marked), Frashastra, the Hvōgva, hath presented a blest and an endeared form (his child); and may Ahura Mazda, who has the Sovereign Power, grant her (to us), who is so much to be beloved. And for the (progress of the) good Religion do ye, O ye people! receive her with desire, and for the gaining of Asha; (she will help the great cause).

18 Yea, that (holy) wisdom, O Gāmāspa the Hvōgva! these (pious throngs) are choosing through their Righteousness as the (true) splendours of riches (these pious men who are) gaining the kingdom where the Good Mind (doth govern). And grant me also, O Mazda! that which these with glad wishes receive from Thy grace.

19 (And this prayer is already and beforehand heard.) This established Sovereign Power the heroic (Kavi Vistāspa has given), O Maidhyō-māh the Spítāma. He who is wise through the Religion, and who seeks (the true) life, he is granting it to us; yea, he has pronounced the laws of Ahura our Maker, and declared that which is for (our) life's actions (beyond all other things) best.

20 And, that gift of blessedness for you, all (the Bountiful Immortals) with one consent in sympathy to help us (are disposed) to grant; (and may they likewise make) the Holy Order (firm) for us through the Good Mind (in our folk); and may they reveal to us the words with which Piety likewise (speaks her truths). And receiving sacrifice with homage (from our praises), may they seek for us Ahura Mazda's grace.

21 (Yea, this Kavi Vistāspa) the man of Aramaiti is bounteous, and with understanding in his words and his actions. (And as a reward) may Ahura give him that Righteousness which is blest, (but) with the Religion (alone), and that Sovereign Power which is established through the Good Mind (in His folk). And this same blessing would I pray from His grace.

22 For Ahura Mazda knoweth the man whose best gift for the sacrifice is given unto me, and from the motive of Righteousness; (and in thankfulness for all, and in prayer for yet still further grace), I will worship (the eternal ones); yea, I will worship those who have ever lived, and who still live, and by their own (holy) names, and to their (thrones) will I draw near with my praise!

THE GĀTHA (Ā) VAHISTĀ ĪSTIV (VAHISTŌISTI(Ī)).

1 That best prayer has been answered, the prayer of Zarathustra Spítāma, that Ahura Mazda might grant him those boons, (the most wished-for) which flow from the good Order, even a life that is prospered for eternal duration, and also those who deceived him (may He likewise thus grant him) as the good Faith's disciples in word and in deed.

2 And may Kavi Vistāspa, and the Zarathustrian Spítāma 6, and Frashastra too with them, offer propitiation to Mazda in thought, word, and deed, and Yasna confessions as they render Him praise, making straight paths (for our going), even that Faith of the Saoshyant which Ahura will found.

(The master of the feast.)

3 And him will they give Thee, O Pourukista, Haëkat-aspid and Spítāmi! young (as thou art) of the daughters of Zarathustra, him will they give thee as a help in the Good Mind's true service, of Asha's and Mazda's, as a chief and a guardian. Counsel well then (together), with the mind of Aramaiti, most bounteous and pious; and act with just action.

(She answers.)

4 I will love and vie with him, since from (my) father he gained (me). For the master and toilers, and for the lord-kinsman (be) the Good Mind's bright blessing, the pure for the pure ones, and to me (be) the insight (which I gain from his counsel). Mazda grant it, Ahura for good conscience for ever.

(The priestly master of the feast.)

5 Monitions for the marrying I speak to (you) maidens, to you, I who know them; and heed ye my (sayings): By these laws of the Faith which I utter obtain ye the life of the Good Mind (on earth and in heaven). (And to you, bride and bridegroom), let each one the other in Righteousness cherish; thus alone unto each shall the home-life be happy.

6 [Thus real are these things, ye men and ye women!] from the Lie-demon protecting, I guard o'er my (faithful), and so (I) grant progress (in weal and in goodness). And the hate of the Lie (with the hate of her) bondsmen I pray from the body, (and so would expel it). For to those who bear Vayu, (and bring him to power), his shame mars the glory. To these evil truth-harmers by these means he reaches. Ye thus slay the life mental (if ye follow his courses).

7 But yours be the recompense, (O ye righteous women!) of this great cause. For while lustful desire heart-inflamed from the body there beyond goeth down where the spirit of evil reaches (to ruin, still) ye bring forth the champion to help on the cause, (and thus conquer temptation). So your last word is 'Vayu'; (ye cry it in triumph).

8 And thus let the sinners by these means be foiled; and consumed be they likewise. Let them shriek in their anger. With good kings let (our champion) deliver the smiter (as a captive in battle), giving peace to our dwellings, and peace to our hamlets. Let him charge those deceivers, chaining death as the strongest; and swift be (the issue).

9 Through false believers the tormentor makes Thy helpers refusers 4; (those who once helped our heroes shall no longer give succour). The estranged thus desires, and the reprobate wills it, with the will that he harbours to conquer our honour. Where is then the Lord righteous who will smite them from life, and (beguile) them of license? Mazda! Thine is that power, (which will banish and conquer). And Thine is the Kingdom; and by it Thou bestowest the highest (of blessings) on the right-living poor!

THE YASNA.

YASNA I

THE SACRIFICE COMMENCES.

1 I announce I and I (will) complete (my Yasna) to Ahura Mazda, the Creator, the radiant and glorious, the greatest and the best, the most beautiful (to our conceptions), the most firm, the wisest, and the one of all whose body is the most perfect, who attains His ends the most infallibly, because of His Righteous Order, to Him who disposes our minds aright, who sends His joy-creating grace afar; who made us, and has fashioned us, and who has nourished and protected us, who is the most bounteous Spirit!

2 I announce and I (will) complete (my Yasna) to the Good Mind, and to Righteousness the Best, and to the Sovereignty which is to be desired, and to Piety the Bountiful, and to the two, the Universal Weal and Immortality, to the body of the Kine, and to the Kine's Soul, and to the Fire of Ahura Mazda, that one who more than (all) the Bountiful Immortals has made most effort (for our succour)!

3 And I announce and I (will) complete (my Yasna) to the Asnya, the day-lords of the ritual order, to Hāvani the holy, the lord of the ritual order; and I celebrate, and I (will) complete (my Yasna) to Sāvanghi and to Visya, the holy lord(s) of the ritual order. And I announce and (will) complete (my Yasna) to Mithra of the wide pastures, of the thousand ears, and of the myriad eyes, the Yazad of the spoken 6 name, and to Rāman Hvāstra.

4 I announce and (will) complete (my Yasna) to Rapithwina, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Frādātshu, and to Zantuma, the holy lord(s) of the ritual order; and I celebrate and complete (my Yasna) to Righteousness the Best, and to Ahura Mazda's Fire.

5 I announce and complete (my Yasna) to Uzayéirina the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Frādāt-vīra and to Dahvyuma, the holy lord(s) of the ritual order, and to that lofty Ahura Napātāpām (the son of waters), and to the waters which Ahura Mazda made.

6 I announce and complete (my Yasna) to Aiwisrūthrima (and) Aibigaya, the holy lord(s) of the ritual order, and to Zarathustrōtēma, and to him who possesses and who gives that prosperity in life which furthers all. And I celebrate and complete (my Yasna) to the Fravashis of the saints, and to those of the women who have many sons, and to a prosperous home-life which continues without reverse throughout the year, and to that Might which is well-shaped and stately, which strikes victoriously, Ahura-made, and to that Victorious Ascendency (which it secures).

7 I announce and I complete (my Yasna) to Ushahina, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Beregaya (and) Nmānya, the holy lord(s) of the ritual order, and to Sraosha (who is Obedience) the blessed, endowed with blessed recompense (as a thing completed), who smites with victory, and furthers the settlements, and to Rashnu, the most just, and to Arstāt, who advances the settlements, and causes them to increase.

8 And I announce and I complete (my Yasna) to the Māhya, the monthly festivals, lords of the ritual order, to the new and the later moon, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to the full moon which scatters night.

9 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to the Yāirya, yearly feasts, the holy lords of the ritual order. I celebrate and complete (my Yasna) to Maidyō-zarema, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Maidyō-shema, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Paitishahya, and to Ayāthrima the advancer, and the spender of the strength of males 6, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Maidhyāirya, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Hamaspāthmādhaya, the holy lord of the ritual order; yea, I celebrate and complete my Yasna to the seasons, lords of the ritual order.

10 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to all those who are the thirty and three 7 lords of the ritual order, which, coming the nearest, are around about Hāvani, and which (as in their festivals) were incultured by Ahura Mazda, and were promulgated by Zarathustra, as the lords of Asha Vahista, who is Righteousness the Best.

11 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to the two, to Ahura I and to Mithra, the lofty, and the everlasting, and the holy, and to all the stars which are Spenta Mainyu's creatures, and to the star Tistrya, the resplendent and glorious, and to the Moon which contains the seed of the Kine, and to the resplendent Sun, him of the rapid steeds, the eye of Ahura Mazda, and to Mithra the province-ruler. And I celebrate and complete my Yasna to Ahura Mazda (once again, and as to him who rules the month), the radiant, the glorious, and to the Fravashis of the saints.

12 And I announce and complete my Yasna to thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son! together with all the fires, and to the good waters, even to all the waters made by Mazda, and to all the plants which Mazda made.

13 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to the Bounteous Māthra, the holy and effective, the revelation given against the Daēvas; the Zarthustrian revelation, and to the long descent of the good Mazdayasnian Faith.

14 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to the mountain Ushi-darena, the Mazda-made, with its sacred brilliance, and to all the mountains glorious with sanctity, with their abundant Glory Mazda-made, and to that majestic Glory Mazda-made, the unconsumed Glory which Mazda made. And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to Ashi the good, the blessedness (of the reward), and to Kisti, the good religious Knowledge, to the good Erethe (Rectitude?), and to the good Rasātāt (persisting zeal?), and to the Glory and the Benefit which are Mazda-made.

15 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to the pious and good Blessing of the religious man, the holy, and to the curse of wisdom, the swift and redoubted Yazad of potency (to blight).

16 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to these places and these lands, and to these pastures, and these abodes with their springs of water(?), and to the waters, land, and plants, and to this earth and to yon heaven, and to the holy wind, and to the stars, moon, and sun, and to the eternal stars without beginning 1, and self-disposing, and to all the holy creatures of Spenta-Mainyu, male and female, the regulators of the ritual order.

17 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to that lofty lord who is the ritual Righteousness 3 (itself), and to the lords of the days in their duration, and of the days during daylight, to the moons, the years, and the seasons which are lords of the ritual order at the time of Hāvani.

18 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to the Fravashis of the saints, the redoubted, which overwhelm (the evil), to those of the saints of the ancient lore, to those of the next of kin, and to the Fravashi of (mine) own soul!

19 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to all the lords of the ritual order, and to all the Yazads, the beneficent, who dispose (of all) aright, to those both heavenly and earthly, who are (meet) for our sacrifice and homage because of Asha Vahista, (of the ritual Order which is 'the best').

20 O (thou) Hāvani, holy lord of the ritual order, and Sāvanghi, Rapithwina, and Uzayēirina, and Aiwiśrūthrima, (and) Aibigaya, (thou that aidest life!) if I have offended you, and thou, O Ushahina, holy lord of the ritual order!

21 If I have offended thee, whether by thought, or word, or deed, whether by act of will, or without intent or wish, I earnestly make up the deficiency of this in praise to thee. If I have caused decrease in that which is Thy Yasna, and Thy homage, I announce (and celebrate) to thee (the more for this)!

22 Yea, all ye lords, the greatest ones, holy lords of the ritual order, if I have offended you by thought, or word, or deed, whether with my will, or without intending error, I praise you (now the more) for this. I announce to you (the more) if I have caused decrease in this which is your Yasna, and your praise.

23 I would confess myself a Mazda-worshipper, of Zarathustra's order, a foe to the Daēvas, devoted to the lore of the Lord, for Hāvani, the holy lord of the ritual order, for (his) sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and praise, for Sāvanghi, and for Visya, the holy lord of the ritual order, for (his) sacrifice, homage, propitiation and praise, and for the sacrifice, homage, propitiation and praise of the lords of the days in, their duration, and of the days during daylight for those of the monthly festivals, and for those of the yearly ones, and for those of the seasons!

THE SACRIFICE CONTINUES.

1 I desire to approach 1 the Zaothras 2 with my worship. I desire to approach the Baresman with my worship. I desire to approach the Zaothra conjointly with the Baresman in my worship, and the Baresman conjointly with the Zaothra. Yea, I desire to approach this Zaothra (here), and with this (present) Baresman, and I desire to approach this Baresman conjoined with this Zaothra with my praise; and I desire to approach this Baresman with praise provided with its Zaothra with its girdle, and spread with sanctity.

2 And in this Zaothra and the Baresman I desire to approach Ahura Mazda with my praise, the holy lord of the ritual order, and the Bountiful Immortals, (all) those who rule aright, and who dispose of all aright, these also I desire to approach and with my praise.

3 And in this Zaothra, with this Baresman I desire to approach the Asnya with my praise. I desire to approach the Hāvani with my praise, the holy lord of the ritual order, and Sāvanghi and Visya, the holy lords of the ritual order. And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach Mithra with my praise, of the wide pastures, of the thousand ears, and of the myriad eyes, the Yazad of the spoken name, and Rāman Hvāstra with him, the holy lord of the ritual order.

4 And in this Zaothra and with the Baresman I desire to approach Rapithwina with my praise, the holy lord of the ritual order; and Frādātšhu and Zantuma, the holy lords of the ritual order; and in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach toward Righteousness the Best with my praise, and with him the Fire, Ahura Mazda's son.

5 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach Uzayēirina with my praise, and Frādāt-vīra and Dahvyuma 1, the holy lords of the ritual order; and with them that lofty lord, the kingly and brilliant Apām-napāt, of the fleet horses, and likewise the water Mazda-made and holy,

6 And Aiwiśrūthrima, (and) Aibigaya, the holy lord(s) of the ritual order, and Frādāt-vispām-hugaiti, and Zarathustrōtema, the holy lord, and the good, heroic, and bountiful Fravashis of the saints, and the women who have many sons, and a peaceful and prosperous home-life that continues without reverse throughout the year, and Force well-shaped and stately, and the Victorious-blow Ahuragiven, and the Victorious Ascendency (which it secures).

7 And Ushahina, the holy lord of the ritual order, Beregya and Nmānya, the holy lords of the ritual order, and Sraosha, Obedience, the blessed and the stately, who smites with the blow of victory, furthering the settlements, the holy lord of the ritual order, and Rashnu, the most just, and Arstāt, who furthers the settlements, and causes them to increase.

8 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the Māhya, the monthly festivals with my praise, the new moon and the waning moon (the moon within), the holy lords of the ritual order, and the full moon which scatters night,

9 And the Yearly festivals, Maidhyō-zaremaya, the holy lord of the ritual order, and Maidhyō-shema, and Paitishahya, and Ayāthrima, the promoter, who spends the strength of males, and Maidhyāirya and Hamaspathmaēdhaya, and the seasons, the holy lords of the ritual order.

10 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach all the lords of the ritual order with my praise, the three and thirty who come the nearest round about our Hāvani, who are those lords (and seasons) of Righteousness the Best, which were inculcated by Mazda, and spoken forth by Zarathustra.

11 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach Ahura and Mithra with my praise, the lofty, eternal, and the holy two; and I desire to approach the stars, moon, and sun with the Baresman plants, and with my praise, and with them Mithra the governor of all the provinces, and Ahura Mazda the radiant and glorious, and the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the saints, 12 And thee, the Fire, Ahura Mazda's son, the holy lord of the ritual order, with all the fires! And I desire to approach the good waters in this Zaothra with this Baresman with my praise, all best waters, Mazda-made and holy, and all the plants which are Mazda-made and holy.

13 And I desire to approach the bounteous Māthra in this Zaothra with this Baresman, and with my praise, the most glorious as it is, and with it the law instituted against the Daēvas; yea, I desire to approach the Zarthustrian law with my praise, and (with it) its long descent, and the good Mazdayasnian Religion (as complete).

14 And I desire to approach Mount Ushi-darena in this Zaothra, with this Baresman with my praise, Mazda-made, and glorious with sanctity, the Yazad-(mount). And I desire to approach all the mountains with my praise, glorious with sanctity as they are, and with abundant glory, Mazda-made, and holy lords of the ritual order; and I desire to approach the mighty kingly Glory Mazda-made and unconsumed; yea, (even) the mighty unconsumed Glory Mazda-made. And I desire to approach Ashi Vanguhi (the good blessedness) in my praise, the brilliant, lofty, powerful, and stately, saving by inherent power. Yea, I desire to approach the Glory Mazda-made with my praise; and I desire to approach the Benefit conferred by Mazda.

15 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the Blessing, pious and good, and the pious and holy man who utters it, and the mighty and redoubted Curse of the wise, the Yazad.

16 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach these waters with my praise, and these lands and plants, and these places, districts, and pastures, and these dwellings with their springs of water, and this land-ruler, who is Ahura Mazda.

17 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach all the greatest lords with my praise, the day-lords, and the month-lords, those of the years, and of the seasons, and the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the saints.

18 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach all the holy Yazads with my praise; yea, even all the lords of the ritual order, Hāvani at his time, and Sāvanghi at his time, and all the greatest lords of the ritual at their proper times.

THE YASNA ADVANCES TO THE NAMING OF THE OBJECTS OF PROPITIATION.

1 With a Baresman brought to its appointed place accompanied with the Zaothra at the time of Hāvani, I desire to approach the Myazda-offering with my praise, as it is consumed, and likewise Ameretātāt (as the guardian of plants and wood) and Haurvatāt (who guards the water), with the (fresh) meat, for the propitiation of Ahura Mazda, and of the Bountiful Immortals, and for the propitiation of Sraosha (who is Obedience) the blessed, who is endowed with sanctity, and who smites with the blow of victory, and causes the settlements to advance.

2 And I desire to approach Haoma and Parahaoma with my praise for the propitiation of the Fravashi of Spītāma Zarathustra, the saint. And I desire to approach the (sacred) wood with my praise, with the perfume, for the propitiation of thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son!

3 And I desire to approach the Haomas with my praise for the propitiation of the good waters which Mazda created; and I desire to approach the Haoma-water, and the fresh milk with my praise, and the plant Hadhānaēpata, offered with sanctity for the propitiation of the waters which are Mazda-made.

4 And I desire to approach this Baresman with the Zaothra with my praise, with its binding and spread with sanctity for the propitiation of the Bountiful Immortals. And I desire with (?) my voice the thoughts well thought, and the words well spoken, and the deeds well done, and the recital of the Gāthas as they are heard. And I desire to approach the well-said Māthras with my praise, and this (higher) lordship with this sanctity, and this exact regulation (of the Ratu), and the reverential prayer for blessings (spoken at the fitting hour); and I desire to approach them for the contentment and propitiation or the holy Yazads, heavenly and earthly, and for the contentment of each man's soul.

5 And I desire to approach the Asnya with my praise, the lords of the ritual order, and the Hāvani and Sāvanghi and Visya, the holy lords of the ritual order. And I desire to approach with the Yast of Mithra of the wide pastures, of the thousand ears, of the myriad eyes, the Yazad of the spoken name, and with him Raman Hvāstra.

6 And I desire to approach Rapithwina with my praise, the holy lord of the ritual order, and Frādāt-šhu and Zantuma, and Righteousness the Best, and Ahura Mazda's Fire.

7 And I desire to approach Uzayēirina, and Frādāt-vīra and Dahvyuma* with my praise, with that lofty Ahura Napāt-apām, and the waters Mazda-made,

8 And Aiwiśrūthrima, and Aibigaya, and Frādāt-vispām-hugaiti, and Zarathustrōtema with the Yast of the Fravashis of the saints, and of the women who have many sons, and the year long unchanged prosperity, and of Might, the well-shaped and stately, smiting victoriously, Ahura-made and of the Victorious Ascendency (which it secures).

9 And I desire to approach Ushahina, Beregya, and Nmānya with the Yast of Sraosha (Obedience) the sacred, the holy, who smites with the blow of victory, and makes the settlements advance, and with that of Rashnu, the most just, and Arstāt who furthers the settlements, and causes them to increase.

10 And I desire to approach the monthly festivals, the lords of the ritual order, and the new moon and the waning moon, and the full moon which scatters night,

11 And the yearly festivals, Maidhyō-zaremaya, Maidhyō-shema, Paitishahya, and Ayāthrima the breeder who spends the strength of males, and Maidhyāirya, and Hamaspathmaēdhaya, and the seasons, lords of the ritual order,

12 And all those lords who are the three and thirty, who approach the nearest at the time of Hāvani, who are the Lords of Asha called Vahišta (and whose services were) inculcated by Mazda, and pronounced by Zarathustra, as the feasts of Righteousness, the Best.

13 And I desire to approach Ahura and Mithra, the lofty and imperishable two, the holy, and with the Yast of those stars which are the creatures of Spenta Mainyu, and with the Yast of the star Tistrya, the radiant, the glorious, and with that of the moon which contains the seed of cattle, and with that of the resplendent sun, the eye of Ahura Mazda, and of Mithra, province-lord of the provinces, and with that of Ahura Mazda (as He rules this day) the radiant, the glorious, and with that of the Fravashis of the saints, (who rule this month),

14 And with thy Yast, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son! with all the fires, and to the good waters with the Yast of all the waters which are Mazda-made, and with that of all the plants which Mazda made.

15 And I desire to approach with the Yast of the Māthra Spenta, the holy, the effective, the law composed against the Daēvas, the Zarthustrian, and with that of the long descent of the Religion which Mazda gave.

16 And I desire to approach with the Yast of Mount Ushi-darena, Mazda-made, and of all, glorious with sanctity, and abundant in brilliance, and with that of the Kingly Glory,

THE GRAND BIBLE

Mazda-made; yea, with that of the unconsumed glory which Mazda made, and with that of Ashi Vanguhi, and Kisti Vanguhi, and with that of the good Erethe, and the good Rasastât, and the good Glory, and of the Benefit which Mazda gave.

17 And I desire to approach with the Yast of the good and pious Blessing of the pious man and of the saint, and with that of the awful and swift Curse of the wise, the Yazad-curse,

18 And to these places, regions, pastures, and abodes, with their water-springs, and with that of the waters, and the lands, and the plants, and with that of this earth and yon heaven, and with that of the holy wind and of the stars, moon, and sun, and with that of the stars without beginning, self-determined and self-moved, and with that of all the holy creatures which are those of Spenta Mainyu, male and female, regulators of the ritual order,

19 And with that of the lofty lord who is Righteousness (himself, the essence of the ritual), and with that of the days in their duration, and of the days during daylight, and with that of the monthly festivals, and the yearly festivals, and with those of the several seasons which are lords of the ritual at the time of Hâvani.

20 And I desire to approach the meat-offering with a Yast, and Haurvatât (who guards the water), and Ameretatât (who guards the plants and wood), with the Yast of the sacred flesh for the propitiation of Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed and the mighty, whose body is the Mâthra, of him of the daring spear, the lordly, the Yazad of the spoken name.

21 And I desire to approach both Haoma and the Haoma-juice with a Yast for the propitiation of the Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitâma, the saint, the Yazad of the spoken name. And I desire to approach the wood-billets with a Yast, with the perfume for the propitiation of thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son! the Yazad of the spoken name.

22 And I desire to approach with a Yast for the mighty Fravashis of the saints, the overwhelming, the Fravashis of those who held to the ancient lore, and of those of the next of kin.

23 And I desire to approach toward all the lords of the ritual order with a Yast, toward all the good Yazads, heavenly and earthly, who are (set) for worship and for praise because of Asha Vahista (of Righteousness the Best).

24 I will confess myself a Mazdayasnian, of Zarathustra's order, a foe to the Daëvas, devoted to the lore of the Lord of Hâvani, the holy lord of the ritual order, for sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and for praise, and for Sâvanghi and Visya, the holy lord(s) of the ritual order, and for the sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and praise of the day-lords of the days in their duration, and of the days during daylight, and for the month-regulators, and the year-regulators, and for those of the (several) seasons, for their sacrifice, and homage, their propitiation, and their praise.

(The Zaothar speaks): As the Ahû to be (revered and) chosen, let the priest speak I forth to me.

(The Ratu responds): As the Ahû to be (revered and) chosen, let him who is the Zaothar speak I forth to me.

(The Zaothar again): So let the Ratu from his Righteousness, holy and learned, speak forth!

YASNA 4

THE OFFERING TAKES PLACE.

1 These good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, these Haomas, meat-offerings, and Zaothras, this Baresman spread with sanctity, this flesh, and the two, Haurvatât (who guards the water) and Ameretatât (who guards the plants and wood), even the flesh, the Haoma and Haoma-juice, the wood-billets, and their perfume, this sacred lordship and chieftainship, and the timely prayer with blessing, and the heard recital of the Gâthas, and the well-said Mâthras, these all we offer, and make known with celebrations (here).

2 Yea, these do we announce with celebrations, and we present them to Ahura Mazda, and to Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, and to the Bountiful Immortals, and to the Fravashis of the saints, and to their souls, and to the Fire of Ahura Mazda, the lofty lord of the entire creation of the holy, for sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and praise.

3 Yea, further, we present (them to the Bountiful Immortals with an especial gift) these thoughts well thought, these words well spoken, these deeds well done, these Haomas, Myzadas, Zaothras, and this Baresman spread with sanctity, the flesh, and Haurvatât (who guards the water), and Ameretatât (who guards the plants and wood), even the flesh, Haoma and Parahaoma, the wood-billets, the perfume, and this their lordship and their sanctity, and this chieftainship, this prayer for blessing, the heard recital of the Gâthas, and the well-said Mâthras.

4 We offer with our celebrations, and we announce them (of a verity) to the Bountiful Immortals, those who exercise their rule aright, and who dispose (of all) aright, the ever-living, ever-helpful, the male divinities among their number who dwell with the Good Mind I, [and the female ones as well].

5 And we announce them in our celebrations as more propitious for this house, and for the furtherance of this house, of its herds, and of its men, of those now born, and of those yet to be born, the holy, yea, for the furtherance of that house of which these (men) are thus.

6 And we present these offerings to the good Fravashis of the saints who are mighty and overwhelming for the succour of the saints.

7 Yea, we present these hereby to the Creator Ahura Mazda, the radiant, the glorious, and the heavenly spirit, for the sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and praise of the Bountiful Immortals (all).

8 And we present these hereby to the Day-lords of the ritual order, to Hâvani, to Sâvanghi, and to Visya, the holy lords of the ritual order, for sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and for praise, and to Mithra of the wide pastures, and the thousand ears, and the myriad eyes, the Yazad of the spoken name,

9 And to Rapithwina, Frâdat-fshu, and Zantuma, the holy lords of the ritual order, and to Righteousness the Best, and to Ahura Mazda's Fire,

10 And to Uzayêirina, Frâdat-vîra, and Dahvyuma I, the holy lords of the ritual order, and to that lofty lord Napât-apâm, and to the water Mazda-made,

11 And to Aiwiwârithrima, the life-furtherer, and to Frâdat-vispâm-hugyâiti and Zarathustrôtema, the holy lords of the ritual order, and to the Fravashis of the saints, and to the women who bring forth many sons, and to the Prosperous home-life which endures without reverse throughout the year, and to Force, well-shaped and stately, and to the Blow of victory which Mazda gives, and to the Victorious Ascendency which it secures, for their sacrifice, homage, their propitiation, and their praise,

12 And to Ushahina, with Beregya and Nmânya, and Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, smiting with the blow of victory and furthering the settlements, and to Rashnu, the most just, and to Arstât, furthering the settlements, and causing them to increase.

13 And these we announce and we present hereby to the Month-lords of the ritual order, to the new moon and the waning moon (the moon within), and to the full moon which scatters night, the holy lord of the ritual order, for (their) sacrifice, homage, their propitiation, and their praise.

14 And these we announce hereby and we present to the Yearly festivals, to Maidhyô-zaremaya, Maidhyô-shema, Patishahya, and to Ayâthrima, to Maidhyâiryâ, Hamaspath-maëdhaya, and to the Seasons as holy lords of the ritual order, for sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and for praise.

15 And these we announce and we present hereby to all those lords who are the three and thirty lords of the ritual order, who approach the nearest around about our Hâvani, and which are the festivals of Righteousness the Best, inculcated by Mazda, and uttered forth by Zarathustra for their sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and praise.

16 And these we announce and we present to Ahura and to Mithra, the lofty, and imperishable, and holy two, to the stars, the creatures of Spenta Mainyu, and to the star Tistrya, the radiant, the glorious, and to the Moon which contains the seed of cattle, and to the resplendent Sun, of the swift horses, Ahura Mazda's eye, and to Mithra, the lord of provinces, for their sacrifice, homage, their propitiation and their praise; yea, these we present hereby to Ahura Mazda (as he rules this day) and to the Fravashis of the saints (as they rule this month), for their sacrifice, homage, their propitiation and their praise.

17 And these we announce hereby to thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son! with all the fires for thy sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and praise, and to the good waters for the sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and praise of all the waters Mazda-made, and to all the plants which Mazda made,

18 And to the Mâthra Spenta, the holy, the effective, the law against the Daëvas, the Zarathustrian statute, and to the long descent of the good Mazdayasnian religion.

19 And these we announce and we present hereby to Mount Ushi-darena, Mazda-made, brilliant with sanctity, and to all the mountains shining with their holiness, abundantly luminous, and Mazda-made, and to the Kingly glory, the unconsumed glory Mazda-made, and to the good Blessedness, and the good Religious-knowledge, and the good Rectitude, and to the good Rasastat, and to the Glory and the Benefit which Mazda created.

20 And these we offer and present to the pious and good Blessing of the pious, and to the swift and dreadful Yazad, the Curse of wisdom.

21 And to these places, pastures, and dwellings with their springs of water, their rivers, to the lands and to the plants, to this earth and yon heaven, to the holy wind, to the stars, moon, and sun, to the stars without beginning, self-disposed, and to all the holy creatures of the Spenta Mainyu, male and female (the rulers as they are of the ritual order).

22 And these we announce and we present hereby to that lofty lord who is Asha, the ritual righteousness itself, to the Day-lords, and the Month-lords, the Year-lords, and the Seasons who are the lords of the ritual at the time of Hâvani, and for their sacrifice, homage, their propitiation and their praise.

23 Yea, these we announce and we present to Sraosha, the blessed and mighty, whose body is the Mâthra, him of the daring spear, the lordly one, and to the holy Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitâma, the saint. And these we announce and we present to thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son! for thy sacrifice, homage, thy propitiation, and thy praise.

24 And these we announce and we present to the Fravashis of the saints, the mighty and overwhelming, of the saints of the ancient lore, and of the next of kin.

25 And these we announce and we present hereby to all the good Yazads, earthly and heavenly, who are (meet) for sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and for praise, because of Asha Vahista (who is Righteousness the Best). We worship the Bountiful Immortals who rule aright, and who dispose of all aright.

26 And that one of beings (do we worship) whose superior (service) in the sacrifice Ahura Mazda knows, and from his righteousness (which he maintains, and those of all female beings do we worship) whose (higher service is thus likewise known; yea all) male and female beings do we worship (who are such)!

THE SACRIFICE CONTINUES WITH FULLER EXPRESSION.

1 We worship the Creator Ahura Mazda with our sacrifice, and the Bountiful Immortals who rule aright, and who dispose of all aright.

2 And we worship the Asnya with our sacrifice, and Hâvani, Sâvanghi and Visya, the holy lords of the ritual order, and Mithra of the wide pastures, of the thousand ears, and myriad eyes, the Yazad of the spoken name, and we worship Râman Hvâstra.

3 And we worship Rapithwina with our sacrifice, and Frâdat-fshu, and the Zantuma, and Righteousness the Best, and the Fire, Ahura Mazda's son, holy lords of the ritual order.

4 And we worship Uzayêirina, and Frâdat-vîra, and Dahvyuma, the holy lord of the ritual order, and that kingly Ahura, the radiant Napât-apâm, of the fleet horses, and the water holy, and Mazda-made.

5 And we worship Aiwiwârithrima and Aibigaya in our sacrifice, the holy lord of the ritual order, and Frâdat-vispâm-hugyâiti and the Zarathustrôtema, the holy lord of the ritual order, and the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the saints, and the women who bring forth many sons, and the Prosperous home-life which endures without reverse throughout the year, and Force which is well-shaped and stately, and the Blow which brings the victory, which is Ahura-given, and the Victorious Ascendency (which it secures).

6 And we worship Ushahina with our sacrifice, and Beregya, and Nmânya, and Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed and the stately who smites with victory, and makes the settlements advance, and Rashnu, the most just, and Arstât who makes the settlements advance and causes them to increase, the holy lords of the ritual order.

7 And we worship the Mâhya in our sacrifice, the new moon and the waning moon (the moon within) and the full moon which scatters night, the holy lord of the ritual order.

8 And we worship the Yearly festivals in our sacrifice, Maidhyô-zaremaya, Maidhyô-shema, Patishahya, and Ayâthrima, the furtherer (or breeder), the spender of virile strength, and Maidhyâiryâ, the holy lord of the ritual order, and Hamaspathmaëdhaya, and the Seasons (in which they are).

9 And we worship with our sacrifice all the lords of the ritual order, who are the thirty and three who approach the nearest around about us at Hâvani, who are the lords of Righteousness the Best, and whose observances were inculcated by Ahura Mazda, and uttered forth by Zarathustra.

10 And we worship Ahura and Mithra with our sacrifice, the lofty, and imperishable, and holy two, and the stars, moon, and sun, among the plants of the Baresman, and Mithra, the province-lord of all the provinces, even Ahura Mazda, the radiant, the glorious, and the good, valiant, and bountiful Fravashis of the saints.

11 And we worship thee, the Fire, Ahura Mazda's son, together with all the fires, and the good waters, the best and Mazda-made, and holy, even all the waters which are Mazda-made and holy, and all the plants which Mazda made.

12 And we worship the Mâthra Spenta with our sacrifice, the glorious and of a truth, the law revealed against the Daëvas, the Zarathustrian law, and we worship with our sacrifice its long descent, and the good Mazdayasnian Religion.

13 And we worship Mount Ushi-darena, the Mazda-made, the glorious Yazad, shining with holiness, and all the mountains that shine with holiness, with abundant brilliance, Mazda-made, the holy lords of the ritual order. And we worship the mighty Kingly glory Mazda-made, the mighty glory, unconsumed and Mazda-made, and the good Sanctity, the brilliant, the lofty, the powerful and the stately, delivering (men) with its inherent power. Yea, we worship the Glory, and the Benefit which are Mazda-made.

14 And we worship the pious and good Blessing with our sacrifice, and the pious man, the saint, and that Yazad, the mighty Curse of wisdom.

15 And we worship these waters, lands, and plants, these places, districts, pastures, and abodes with their springs of water, and we worship this lord of the district with our sacrifice, who is Ahura Mazda (Himself).

16 And we worship all the greatest lords, the Day-lords in the day's duration, and the Day-lords during daylight, and the Month-lords, and the Year-lords.

17 And we worship Haurvatât (who guards the water) and Ameretatât (who guards the plants and the wood), and Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed and the stately, who smites with the blow of victory, and makes the settlements advance, the holy lord of the ritual order.

18 And we worship Haoma with our sacrifice and the Haoma-juice. And we worship the sacred Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitâma the saint. And we worship the wood-billets, and the perfume and thee, the Fire, Ahura Mazda's son, the holy lord of the ritual order.

19 And we worship the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the saints.

20 And we worship all the holy Yazads, and all the lords of the ritual order at the time of Hâvani, and Sâvanghi, and all the greatest lords at their (proper) time. (The YêNhê hâtâm follows.)

21 The Ratu. As an Ahû (revered and) to be chosen, the priest speaks forth to me. The Zaoatar. So let the Ratu from his Righteousness, holy and learned, speak forth!

YASNA 7

PRESENTATION OF OFFERINGS BY THE PRIEST WITH THE OBJECT OF PROPITIATION NAMED.

1 With a complete and sacred offering I I offer and I give this meat-offering, and (with it) Haurvatât (who guards the water), and Ameretatât (who guards the plants and the wood), and the flesh of the Kine of blessed gift, for the propitiation of Ahura Mazda, and of the Bountiful Immortals (all, and) for the propitiation of Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, endowed with sanctity, who smites with the blow of victory, and who causes the settlements to advance.

2 And I offer the Haoma and Haoma-juice with a complete and sacred offering for the propitiation of the Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitâma the saint, and I offer the wood-billets with the perfume for Thy propitiation, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son!

3 And I offer the Haomas with a complete and sacred offering for propitiation [to the good waters] for the good waters Mazda-made. And I offer this Haoma-water with scrupulous exactness and with sanctity, and this fresh milk, and the plant Hadhânapâta uplifted with a complete and sacred offering for the propitiation of the waters which are Mazda-made.

4 And I offer this Baresman with its Zaothra (and with its binding) for a girdle spread with complete sanctity and order for the propitiation of the Bountiful Immortals, and I offer with my voice the thoughts well-thought, the words well-spoken, and the deeds well-done, and the heard recital of the Gâthas, the Mâthras well-composed and well-delivered, and this Lordship, and this Sanctity, and this ritual mastership, and the timely Prayer for blessings, with a complete and sacred offering for the propitiation of the holy Yazads, heavenly and earthly, and for the contentment of the individual soul!

5 And I offer to the Asnya with a complete and sacred offering, as lords of the ritual order, and to Hâvani, and to Sâvanghi and Visya, holy lords of the ritual order, and to Mithra of the wide pastures, of the thousand ears, and myriad eyes, the Yazad of the spoken name, and to Raman Hvâstra.

6 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to Rapithwina, the holy lord of the ritual order; and I offer to Frâdat-fshu and to the Zantuma, and to Asha Vahista (who is Righteousness the Best) and to Ahura Mazda's Fire.

7 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to Uzayêirina, Frâdat-vîra, and to the Dahyuma, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to that lofty Ahura Napât-apâm, and to the waters which Mazda created.

8 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to Aiwisrûthrima, the life-furtherer, and to Frâdat-vispâm-hugyâiti, and to the Zarathustrôtema, and to the Fravashis of the saints, and to the women who have many sons, and to the Prosperous home-life which endures (without reverse) throughout the year, and to Force, the well-shaped and stately, and to the Blow which smites with victory Ahura-given, and to the Victorious Ascendency (which it secures).

9 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to Ushahina, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Beregya, and Nmânya, and to Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, endowed with sanctity, who smites with the blow of victory, and makes the settlements advance, and to Rashnu the most just, and to Arstât who furthers the settlements and causes them to increase.

10 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to the Mâhya, lords of the ritual order, to the new and the waning moon (the moon within), and to the full moon which scatters night, holy lords of the ritual order.

11 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to the Yearly festivals, the lords of the ritual order, to Maidhyô-zaremaya, and Maidhyô-shema, to Paitishahya, and to Ayâthrima the furtherer (the breeder), the spender of the strength of males, and to Maidhyairya and Hamaspathmâdhaya, holy lords of the ritual order, and I offer with sanctity to the several seasons, the lords of the ritual order.

12 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to all those lords who are the thirty and three, who approach the nearest round about our Hâvani, and who are the lords of Asha (the ritual by-eminence), of Righteousness who is (the Best), whose observances are inculcated as precepts by Mazda, and uttered forth by Zarathustra.

13 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to Ahura and Mithra, the lofty and imperishable, and holy two, and to the stars which are the creatures of Spenta Mainyu, and to the star Tistrya, the radiant, the glorious, and to the Moon which contains the seed of cattle in its beams, and to the resplendent Sun of the fleet horses, the eye of Ahura Mazda, and to Mithra, the lord of the provinces. And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to Ahura Mazda, the resplendent, the glorious, (who rules this day), and to the Fravashis of the saints (who name the month).

14 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son! together with all the fires, and to the good waters, even to the waters which are Mazda-made, and to all the plants which Mazda made.

15 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to the Mâthra Spenta, the holy, the effective, revealed against the Daêvas, the Zarathustrian law, and to the long descent of the good Religion, of the Mazdayasnian faith.

16 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to Mount Ushi-darena, the Mazda-made, brilliant with holiness, and to all the mountains shining with holiness, of abundant brightness, and which Mazda made, and to the Royal glory unconsumed and Mazda-made. And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to Ashi Vanguhi, and to Kisti Vanguhi, and to Ereteh, and to Rasâtât, and to the Glory (and the) Benefit which Mazda made.

17 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to the good and pious Prayer for blessings of the pious man, and to that Yazad, the swift and dreadful Curse of the wise.

18 And I offer with a complete and sacred blessing to these places, districts, pastures, and abodes with their springs of water, and to the waters and the lands, and the plants, and to this earth and yon heaven, and to the holy wind, and to the stars, and the moon, even to the stars without beginning (to their course), the self-appointed, and to all the holy creatures of Spenta Mainyu, be they male or female, regulators (as they are) of the ritual order.

19 And I offer with a complete and sacred blessing to that lofty lord who is Righteousness (the Best), and the Day-lords, the lords of the days during their duration, and to those of the days during daylight, and to the Month-lords, and the Year-lords, and to those of the seasons, the lords who are lords of the ritual, and at the time of Hâvani.

20 And I offer the Myazda meat-offering with a complete and sacred offering, and Haurvatât (who guards the water), and Ameretatât (who guards the wood), and the flesh of the Kine of blessed gift, for the propitiation of Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, whose body is the Mâthra, him of the daring spear, the lordly, the Yazad of the spoken name.

21 And I offer the Haoma and the Haoma juice for the propitiation of the Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitâma the saint, the Yazad of the spoken name. And I offer the wood-billets with the perfume for Thy propitiation, the Fire's, Ahura Mazda's son, the Yazad of the spoken name.

22 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to the Fravashis of the saints, the mighty and overwhelming, to those of the saints of the ancient lore, and to those of the next of kin.

23 And I offer with a complete and sacred offering to all the lords of the ritual order, and to all the good Yazads heavenly and earthly who are (meet) for sacrifice and homage because of Asha who is Vahista (of Righteousness who is the Best).

24 May that approach to us, and with a sacred blessing (O Lord!) whose benefits the offerers are seeking for. Thy praisers and Mâthra-speakers, O Ahura Mazda! may we be named; we desire it, and such may we be. What reward, O Ahura Mazda! adapted to myself Thou hast appointed unto souls, 25 Of this do Thou Thyself bestow upon us for this world and for that of mind; (yea, do Thou bestow) so much of this as that we may attain to Thy ruling protection and to that of Righteousness for ever.

26 We sacrifice to the Ahuna-vairyra, and to the veracious word correctly uttered, and to the good and pious prayer for blessings, and to the dreadful curse of the wise, the Yazad, and to Haurvatât and Ameretatât, and to the flesh of the Kine of blessed gift, and to the Haoma and Haoma-juice, and to the wood-billets, and the perfume, for the praise of the pious and good prayer for blessings.

The YêNhê hâtâm.

27. (To that one) of beings do we sacrifice whose superior (fidelity) in the sacrifice Ahura Mazda knows through his Righteousness (within him, yea, even to those female saints do we sacrifice) whose (superior sanctity is thus known. We sacrifice to all) both males and females whose (superiority is such). (The Ratu speaks.) As an Ahû (revered and) to be chosen, he who is the Zaoatar speaks forth to me. (The Zaoatar.) So let the Ratu from his Righteousness, holy and learned, speak forth!

YASNA 8

OFFERING OF THE MEAT-OFFERING IN PARTICULAR.

THE FAITHFUL PARTAKE.

1 A blessing is Righteousness (called) the Best. It is weal; it is weal to this (man). When toward Righteousness Best there is right. I offer the Myazda (of the) meat-offering with a complete and sacred offering; and I offer Haurvatâtât (who guards the water), and Ameretatât (who guards the plants and the wood), and the flesh of the blessed Kine; and I offer the Haoma and the Haoma juice, the wood-billets and the perfume for the praise of Ahura Mazda, and of the Ahuna-vairyra, the veracious word, and for that of the pious and beneficent Prayer for blessings, and for the redoubted Curse of the wise, and for the praise of the Haoma, and of the Mâthra of the holy Zarathustra; and may it come to us with sacred fulness (to accept and to recompense our gift).

2 (The Ratu speaks.) Eat, O ye men, of this Myazda, the meat-offering, ye who have deserved it by your righteousness and correctness!

3 O ye Bountiful Immortals, and thou, the Mazdayasnian law, ye just men and just women, and ye Zaothras, whoever among these Mazdayasnians would call himself a Mazdayasnian desiring to live in the practice of the liberality of Righteousness [for by sorcery the settlements of Righteousness are ruined], do ye cause (such an one) to be (still further) taught, (ye), who are the waters, the plants, and the Zaothras!

4 And whoever of these Mazdayasnians, adults, when he invokes with earnestness, does not adhere to these words, and (so) speaks, he approaches to that (word) of the magician; (but, as against that magician's word) 'a blessing is Righteousness (called) the Best.'

5 May'st Thou, O Ahura Mazda! reign at Thy will, and with a saving rule over Thine own creatures, and render Ye the holy (man) also a sovereign at his will over waters, and over plants, and over all the clean and sacred (creatures) which contain the seed of Righteousness. Strip ye the wicked of all power!

6 Absolute in power may the holy be, bereft of all free choice the wicked! Gone (may he be), met as foe, carried out from the creatures of Spenta Mainyu, hemmed in I without power over any wish!

7 I will incite, even I who am Zarathustra, the heads of the houses, villages, Zantus, and provinces, to the careful following of this Religion which is that of Ahura, and according to Zarathustra, in their thoughts, their words, and their deeds.

8 I pray for the freedom and glory of the entire existence of the holy (man) while I bless it, and I pray for the repression and shame I of the entire existence 2 of the wicked.

9 Propitiation to Haoma who brings righteousness (to us) for sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and for praise. (The Zaoatar?) As the Ahû to be (revered and) chosen, the Zaoatar speaks forth to me. (The Ratu.) As an Ahû to be (revered and) chosen, the Zaoatar speaks forth to me. (The Zaoatar.) So let the Ratu from his Righteousness, holy and learned, speak forth!

YASNA 9

THE HÔM YAST.

(The Haoma-yast has claims to antiquity (owing to its subject, but not to its dialect), next after the Srôs-yast.

H(a)oma = Soma, as a deity, flourished not only before the Gâthas, but before the Riks of the Veda, in Aryan ages before Iranian and Indian came two peoples.)

1 At the hour of Hâvani. H(a)oma came to Zarathustra, as he served the (sacred) Fire, and sanctified (its flame), while he sang aloud the Gâthas. And Zarathustra asked him: Who art thou, O man! who art of all the incarnate world the most beautiful in Thine own body of those whom I have seen, (thou) glorious [immortal]?

2 Thereupon gave H(a)oma answer, the holy one who driveth death afar: I am, O Zarathustra H(a)oma, the holy and driving death afar; pray to me, O Spitâma, prepare me for the taste. Praise toward me in (Thy) praises as the other [Saoshyants] praise.

3 Thereupon spake Zarathustra: Unto H(a)oma be the praise I. What man, O H(a)oma! first prepared thee for the corporeal world? What blessedness was offered him? what gain did he acquire?

4 Thereupon did H(a)oma answer me, he the holy one, and driving death afar: Vivanghant was the first of men who prepared me for the incarnate world. This blessedness was offered him; this gain did he acquire, that to him was born a son who was Yima, called the brilliant, (he of the many flocks, the most glorious of those yet born, the sunlike-one of men 3), that he made from his authority both herds and people free from dying, both plants and waters free from drought, and men could eat imperishable food.

5 In the reign of Yima swift of motion was there neither cold nor heat, there was neither age nor death, nor envy demon-made. Like fifteen-yearlings walked the two forth, son and father, in their stature and their form, so long as Yima, son of Vivanghant ruled, he of the many herds!

6 Who was the second man, O H(a)oma! who prepared thee for the corporeal world? What sanctity was offered him? what gain did he acquire?

7 Thereupon gave H(a)oma answer, he the holy one, and driving death afar: Áthwya 1 was the second who prepared me for the corporeal world. This blessedness was given him, this gain did he acquire, that to him a son was born, Thraëtaona 2 of the heroic tribe,

8 Who smote the dragon Dahāka 3, three jawed and triple-headed, six-eyed, with thousand powers, and of mighty strength, a lie-demon of the Daēvas, evil for our settlements, and wicked, whom the evil spirit Angra Mainyu made as the most mighty Drug(k) [against the corporeal world], and for the murder of (our) settlements, and to slay the (homes) of Asha!

9 Who was the third man, O H(a)oma! who prepared thee for the corporeal world? What blessedness was given him? what gain did he acquire?

10 Thereupon gave H(a)oma answer, the holy one, and driving death afar: Thrīta, [the most helpful of the Sāmas], was the third man who prepared me for the corporeal world. This blessedness was given him, this gain did he acquire, that to him two sons were born, Urvākhshaya and Keresāspa, the one a judge confirming order, the other a youth of great ascendant, ringlet-headed, bludgeon-bearing.

11 He who smote the horny dragon swallowing men, and swallowing horses, poisonous, and green of colour, over which, as thick as thumbs are, greenish poison flowed aside, on whose back once Keresāspa cooked his meat in iron caldron at the noonday meal; and the deadly, scorched, upstart, and springing off, dashed out the water as it boiled. Headlong fled affrighted manly-minded 3 Keresāspa.

12 Who was the fourth man who prepared thee, O H(a)oma! for the corporeal world? What blessedness was given him? what gain did he acquire?

13 Thereupon gave H(a)oma answer, he the holy, and driving death afar: Pourushaspa was the fourth man who prepared me for the corporeal world. This blessedness was given him, this gain did he acquire, that thou, O Zarathustra! wast born to him, the just, in Pourushaspa's house, the D(a)ēva's foe, the friend of Mazda's lore, (14) famed in Airyēna Vaēgah; and thou, O Zarathustra I didst recite the first the Ahuna-vairya, four times intoning it, and with verses kept apart [(Pāzand) each time with louder and still louder voice].

15 And thou didst cause, O Zarathustra! all the demon-gods to vanish in the ground who aforesaid flew about this earth in human shape (and power. This hast thou done), thou who has been the strongest, and the staunchest, the most active, and the swiftest, and (in every deed) the most victorious in the two spirits' world.

16 Thereupon spake Zarathustra: Praise to H(a)oma. Good is H(a)oma, and the well-endowed, exact and righteous in its nature, and good inherently, and healing, beautiful of form, and good in deed, and most successful in its working, golden-hued, with bending sprouts. As it is the best for drinking, so (through its sacred stimulus) is it the most nutritious for the soul.

17 I make my claim on thee, O yellow one! for inspiration I. I make my claim on thee for strength; I make my claim on thee for victory; I make my claim on thee for health and healing (when healing is my need); I make my claim on thee for progress and increased prosperity, and vigour of the entire frame, and for understanding, of each adorning kind, and for this, that I may have free course among our settlements, having power where I will, overwhelming angry malice, and a conqueror of lies.

18 Yea, I make my claim on thee that I may overwhelm the angry hate of haters, of the D(a)ēvas and of mortals, of the sorcerers and sirens, of the tyrants, and the Kavis, of the Karpans, murderous bipeds, of the sanctity-destroyers, the profane apostate bipeds, of the wolves four-footed monsters, of the invading host, wide-fronted, which with stratagems advance.

19 This first blessing I beseech of thee, O H(a)oma, thou that drivest death afar! I beseech of thee for (heaven), the best life of the saints, the radiant, all-glorious. This second blessing I beseech of thee, O H(a)oma, thou that drivest death afar! this body's health (before that blest life is attained). This third blessing I beseech of thee, O H(a)oma, thou that drivest death afar! the long vitality of life.

20 This fourth blessing I beseech of thee, O H(a)oma, thou that drivest death afar! that I may stand forth on this earth with desires gained I, and powerful, receiving satisfaction, overwhelming the assaults of hate, and conquering the lie. This fifth blessing, O H(a)oma, I beseech of thee, thou that drivest death afar! that I may stand victorious on earth, conquering in battles, overwhelming the assaults of hate, and conquering the lie.

21 This sixth blessing I ask of thee, O H(a)oma, thou that drivest death afar! that we may get good warning of the thief, good warning of the murderer, see first the bludgeon-bearer, get first sight of the wolf. May no one whichsoever get first the sight of us. In the strife with each may we be they who get the first alarm!

22 H(a)oma grants to racers who would run a course with span both speed and bottom (in their horses). H(a)oma grants to women come to bed with child a brilliant offspring and a righteous line. H(a)oma grants to those (how many!) who have long sat searching books, more knowledge and more wisdom.

23 H(a)oma grants to those long maidens, who sit at home unwed, good husbands, and that as soon as asked, he H(a)oma, the well-minded.

24 H(a)oma lowered Keresāni, dethroned him from his throne, for he grew so fond of power, that he treacherously said: No priest behind I (and watching) shall walk the lands for me, as a counsellor to prosper them, he would rob everything of progress, he would crush the growth of all!

25 Hail to thee, O H(a)oma, who hast power as thou wilt, and by thine inborn strength! Hail to thee, thou art well-versed in many sayings, and true and holy words. Hail to thee for thou dost ask no wily questions, but questionest direct.

26 Forth hath Mazda borne to thee, the star-bespangled girdle, the spirit-made, the ancient one, the Mazdayasnian Faith. So with this thou art begirt on the summits of the mountains, for the spreading of the precepts, and the headings of the Māthra, (and to help the Māthra's teacher), 27 O H(a)oma, thou horse-lord, and thou clan-lord, thou tribe-lord, and chieftain of the land, and thou successful learned teacher, for aggressive strength I speak to thee, for that which smites with victory, and for my body's saving, and for manifold delight!

28 Bear off from us the torment and the malice of the hateful. Divert the angry foe's intent! What man soever in this house is violent and wicked, what man soever in this village, or this tribe, or province, seize thou away the fleetness from his feet; throw thou a veil of darkness o'er his mind; make thou his intellect (at once) a wreck!

29 Let not the man who harms us, mind or body, have power to go forth on both his legs, or hold with both his hands, or see with both his eyes, not the land (beneath his feet), or the herd before his face.

30 At the aroused and fearful Dragon, green, and belching forth his poison, for the righteous saint that perishes, yellow H(a)oma, hurl thy mace! At the (murderous) bludgeon-bearer, committing deeds unheard of, blood-thirsty, (drunk) with fury, yellow H(a)oma, hurl thy mace!

31 Against the wicked human tyrant, hurling weapons at the head, for the righteous saint that perishes, yellow H(a)oma, hurl thy mace! Against the righteousness-disturber, the unholy life-destroyer, thoughts and words of our religion well-delivering, yet in actions never reaching, for the righteous saint that perishes, yellow H(a)oma, hurl thy mace!

32 Against the body of the harlot, with her magic minds o'erthrowing with (intoxicating) pleasures, to the lusts her person offering, whose mind as vapour wavers as it flies before the wind, for the righteous saint that perishes, yellow H(a)oma, hurl thy mace!

1 Let the Demon-gods and Goddesses fly far away from hence, and let the good Sraosha make here his home! [And may the good Blessedness here likewise dwell], and may she here spread delight and peace within this house, Ahura's, which is sanctified by H(a)oma, bringing righteousness (to all).

2 At the first force of thy pressure, O intelligent! I praise thee with my voice, while I grasp at first thy shoots. At thy next pressure, O intelligent! I praise thee with my voice, when as with full force of a man I crush thee down.

3 I praise the cloud that waters thee, and the rains which make thee grow on the summits of the mountains; and I praise thy lofty mountains where the H(a)oma branches spread 2.

4 This wide earth do I praise, expanded far (with paths), the productive, the full bearing, thy mother, holy plant! Yea, I praise the lands where thou dost grow, sweet-scented, swiftly spreading, the good growth of the Lord. O H(a)oma, thou growest on the mountains, apart on many paths, and there still may'st thou flourish. The springs of Righteousness most verily thou art, (and the fountains of the ritual find their source in thee)!

5 Grow (then) because I pray to thee on all thy stems and branches, in all thy shoots (and tendrils) increase thou through my word!

6 H(a)oma grows while he is praised, and the man who praises him is therewith more victorious. The lightest pressure of thee, H(a)oma, thy feeblest praise, the slightest tasting of thy juice, avails to the thousand-smiting of the D(a)ēvas.

7 Wasting doth vanish from that house, and with it foulness, whither in verity they bear thee, and where thy praise in truth is sung, the drink of H(a)oma, famed, health-bringing (as thou art). [(Pāzand) to his village and abode they bear him.]

8 All other toxicants go hand in hand with Rapine of the bloody spear, but H(a)oma's stirring power goes hand in hand with friendship. [Light is the drunkenness of H(a)oma (Pāzand).] Who as a tender son caresses H(a)oma, forth to the bodies of such persons H(a)oma comes to heal.

9 Of all the healing virtues, H(a)oma, whereby thou art a healer, grant me some. Of all the victorious powers, whereby thou art a victor, grant me some. A faithful praiser will I be to thee, O H(a)oma, and a faithful praiser (is) a better (thing) than Righteousness the Best; so hath the Lord, declaring (it), decreed.

10 Swift I and wise hath the well-skilled Deity created thee; swift and wise on high Haraiti did He, the well-skilled, plant thee.

11 And taught (by implanted instinct) on every side, the bounteous birds have carried thee to the Peaks-above-the-eagles, to the mount's extremest summit, to the gorges and abysses, to the heights of many pathways, to the snow-peaks ever whitened.

12 There, H(a)oma, on the ranges dost thou grow of many kinds. Now thou growest of milky whiteness, and now thou growest golden; and forth thine healing liquors flow for the inspiring of the pious. So terribly away from me the (death's) aim of the curser. So terrify and crush his thought who stands as my maligner.

13 Praise be to thee, O H(a)oma, (for he makes the poor man's thoughts as great as any of the richest whomsoever.) Praise be to H(a)oma, (for he makes the poor man's thoughts as great as when mind reacheth culmination.) With manifold retainers dost thou, O H(a)oma, endow the man who drinks thee mixed with milk; yea, more prosperous thou makest him, and more endowed with mind.

14 Do not vanish from me suddenly like milk-drops in the rain; let thine exhilarations go forth ever vigorous and fresh; and let them come to me with strong effect. Before thee, holy H(a)oma, thou bearer of the ritual truth, and around thee would I cast this body, a body which (as all) may see (is fit for gift and) grown.

15 I renounce with vehemence the murderous woman's 5 emptiness, the Gaiṇi's, hers, with intellect dethroned I. She vainly thinks to foil us, and would beguile both Fire-priest and H(a)oma; but she herself, deceived therein, shall perish. And when she sits at home, and wrongly eats of H(a)oma's offering, priest's mother will that never make her, nor give her holy 3 sons!

16 4To five do I belong, to five others do I not; of the good thought am I, of the evil am I not; of the good word am I, of the evil, not. To Obedience am I given, and to deaf disobedience, not; to the saint do I belong, and to the wicked, not; and so from this on till the ending shall be the spirits' parting. (The two shall here divide.)

17 Thereupon spake Zarathustra: Praise to H(a)oma, Mazda-made. Good is H(a)oma, Mazda-made. All the plants of H(a)oma praise I, on the heights of lofty mountains, in the gorges of the valleys, in the clefts (of sundered hill-sides) cut for the bundles bound by women. From the silver cup I pour Thee to the golden chalice over. Let me not thy (sacred) liquor spill to earth, of precious cost.

18 These are thy Gāthas 6, holy H(a)oma, these thy songs, and these thy teachings 1, and these thy truthful ritual words, health-impacting, victory-giving, from harmful hatred healing giving.

19 These and thou art mine, and forth let thine exhilarations flow; bright and sparkling let them hold on their (steadfast) way; for light are thine exhilaration(s), and flying lightly come they here. Victory-giving smiteth H(a)oma, victory-giving is it worshipped; with this Gāthic word we praise it.

20 Praise to the Kine; praise and victory (be) spoken to her! Food for the Kine, and pasture! 'For the Kine let thrift use toil; yield thou us food.'

21 We worship the yellow lofty one; we worship H(a)oma who causes progress, who makes the settlements advance; we worship H(a)oma who drives death afar; yea, we worship all the H(a)oma plants. And we worship (their) blessedness, and the Fravashi of Zarathustra Spītāma, the saint .

YASNA 11

PRELUDE TO THE H(A)OMA-OFFERING 5.

1 Three clean creatures (full of blessings) curse betimes while yet invoking, the cow, the horse, and then H(a)oma. The cow cries to her driver thus: Childless be thou, shorn of offspring, evil-famed, and slander-followed, who foddered I fairly dost not use me, but fattest me for wife or children, and for thy niggard selfish meal.

2 The horse cries to his rider thus: Be not spanner 2 of the racers; stretch no coursers to full-speed; do not stride across the fleetest, thou, who dost not pray me swiftness in the meeting thick with numbers, in the circuit thronged with men.

3 H(a)oma speaks his drinker thus: Childless be thou, shorn of offspring, evil-famed, and slander-followed, who holdest me from full outpouring, as a robber, skulls in-crushing. No head-smiter am I ever, holy H(a)oma, far from death.

4 Forth my father gave an offering, tongue and left eye chose Ahura, set apart for H(a)oma's meal.

5 Who this offering would deny me, eats himself, or prays it from me, this which Mazda gave to bless me, tongue with left eye (as my portion).

6 In his house is born no fire-priest, warrior ne'er in chariot standing, never more the thrifty tiller. In his home be born Dahākas, Mūrakas of evil practice, doing deeds of double nature.

7 Quick, cut off then H(a)oma's portion, gift of flesh for doughty H(a)oma! Heed lest H(a)oma bind thee fettered, as he bound the fell Turanian Frangrasyan (the murderous robber) fast in iron close-surrounded in the mid-third of this earth! 8. Thereupon speak Zarathustra; Praise to H(a)oma made by Mazda, good is H(a)oma Mazda-made.

9 Who to us is one hereupon to thee (becomes) two, to be made to three, for the five 5-making of the four, for the seven-making of the sixth, who are your nine in the decade (?), who serve you and with zeal

10 To thee, O holy H(a)oma! bearer of the ritual sanctity, I offer this my person which is seen (by all to be) mature, (and fit for gift); to H(a)oma the effective do I offer it, and to the sacred exhilaration which he bestows; and do thou grant to me (for this), O holy H(a)oma! thou that drivest death afar, (Heaven) the best world of the saints, shining, all brilliant.

11 (The Ashem Vohū, etc.)

12-15 May'st Thou rule at Thy will, O Lord!

16 I confess myself a Mazdayasnian of Zarathustra's order.

17 I celebrate my praises for good thoughts, good words, and good deeds for my thoughts, my speeches, and (my) actions. With chanting praises I present all good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, and with rejection I repudiate all evil thoughts, and words, and deeds.

18 Here I give to you, O ye Bountiful Immortals! sacrifice and homage with the mind, with words, deeds, and my entire person; yea, (I offer) to you the flesh of my very body (as your own). And I praise Righteousness. A blessing is Righteousness (called) the Best, etc.

YASNA 12 (SP. 13).

THE MAZDAYASNIAN CONFESSION 4.

1 I drive the Daēvas hence; I confess as a Mazda-worshipper of the order of Zarathustra, estranged from the Daēvas, devoted to the lore of the Lord, a praiser of the Bountiful Immortals; and to Ahura Mazda, the good and endowed with good possessions, I attribute all things good, to the holy One, the resplendent, to the glorious, whose are all things whatsoever which are good; whose is the Kine, whose is Asha (the righteous order pervading all things pure), whose are the stars, in whose lights the glorious beings and objects are clothed.

2 And I choose Piety, the bounteous and the good, mine may she be. And therefore I loudly (deprecate all robbery and violence against the sacred) Kine, and all drought to the wasting of the Mazdayasnian villages.

3 Away from their thoughts do I wish to lead (the thought of) wandering at will, (away the thought of) free nomadic pitching of the tent, for I wish to remove all wandering from (their) Kine which abide in steadfastness upon this land; and bowing down in worship to Righteousness I dedicate my offerings with praise so far as that. Never may I stand as a source of wasting, never as a source of withering to the Mazdayasnian villages, not for the love of body or of life.

4 Away do I abjure the shelter and headship of the Daēvas, evil as they are; aye, utterly bereft of good, and void of virtue, deceitful in their wickedness, of (all) beings those most like the Demon-of-the-Lie, the most loathsome of existing things, and the ones the most of all bereft of good.

5 Off, off, do I abjure the Daēvas and all possessed by them, the sorcerers and all that hold to their devices, and every existing being of the sort; their thoughts do I abjure, their words and actions, and their seed (that propagate their sin); away do I abjure their shelter and their headship, and the iniquitous of every kind who act as Rakhshas act. Thus and so in very deed might Ahura Mazda have indicated to Zarathustra in every question which Zarathustra asked, and in all the consultations in which they two conversed together.

6. Thus and so might Zarathustra have abjured the shelter and the headship of the Daēvas in all the questions, and in all the consultations with which they two conversed together, Zarathustra and the Lord. And so I myself, in whatsoever circumstances I may be placed, as a worshipper of Mazda, and of Zarathustra's order, would so abjure the Daēvas and their shelter, as he who was the holy Zarathustra abjured them (once of old).

7 To that religious sanctity 3 to which the waters appertain, do I belong, to that sanctity to which the plants, to that sanctity to which the Kine of blessed gift, to that religious sanctity to which Ahura Mazda, who made both Kine and holy men, belongs, to that sanctity do I. Of that creed which Zarathustra held, which Kavi Vistāspa, and those two, Frashastra and Gāmāspa; yea, of that religious faith which every Saoshyant who shall (yet come to) save (us), the holy ones who do the deeds of real significance, of that creed, and of that lore, am I.

8 A Mazda-worshipper I am, of Zarathustra's order; (so) do I confess, as a praiser and confessor, and I therefore praise aloud the well-thought thought, the word well spoken, and the deed well done;

9 Yea, I praise at once the Faith of Mazda, the Faith which has no faltering utterance I, the Faith that wields the felling halbert, the Faith of kindred marriage, the holy (Creed), which is the most imposing, best, and most beautiful of all religions which exist, and of all that shall in future come to knowledge, Ahura's Faith, the Zarathustrian creed. Yea, to Ahura Mazda do I ascribe all good, and such shall be the worship of the Mazdayasnian belief!

YASNA 13 (SP. 14).

INVOCATIONS AND DEDICATIONS.

1 I address (my invocation to) Ahura Mazda. And I invoke (among guardian beings) the chief of the house-lord, and the chief of the Vis-lord, and the chief of the Zantu-lord. And I invoke the chief of the province-lord. And the chief of women I invoke, the Mazdayasnian Faith, the blessed and good Parendi, her who is the holy one of human-kind. And I invoke this (holy) earth which bears us.

2 And I invoke the friendly and most helpful person's 6 lord, the Fire of Ahura Mazda, and also the most energetic lords of holy men, those who are most strenuous in their care of cattle and the fields, and the chief of the thrifty tiller of the earth. And I invoke the steady settler of sanctity, (and) the chief of the charioteer.

3 And I invoke the chief of the fire-priest by means of the most imposing sciences of the Mazdayasnian Faith. And I invoke the chief of the Atharvan, and his pupils I invoke; yea, the lords of each of them. I invoke these lords, and I summon the Bountiful Immortals here, and the Prophets who shall serve us, the wisest as they are, the most scrupulous in their exactness (as) they utter words (of doctrine and of service), the most devoted (to their duties likewise), and the most glorious in their thoughts. And I invoke the most imposing forces of the Mazdayasnian Faith, and the fire-priests I invoke, and the charioteers, the warriors, and the thrifty tillers of the soil.

4 And to You, O Ye Bountiful Immortals! Ye who rule aright, and dispose (of all) aright, I offer the flesh of my very frame, and all the blessings of my life. Thus the two spirits thought, thus they spoke, and thus they did;

5 And therefore as Thou, O Ahura Mazda! didst think, speak, dispose, and do all things good (for us), so to Thee would we give, so would we assign to Thee our homage; so would we worship Thee with our sacrifices. So would we bow before Thee with these gifts, and so direct our prayers to Thee with confessions of our debt.

6 By the kinship of the good kindred, by that of Righteousness the good (Thy righteous servant's nature) would we approach Thee, and by that of the good thrift-law, and of Piety the good.

7 And we would worship the Fravashi of the Kine of blessed gift, and that of the holy Gaya Maretan, and we would worship the holy Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitāma, the saint. Yea, that one of beings do we worship whose better (service) in the sacrifice Ahura Mazda knows; (even those women do we worship) whose (better service thus is known). Yea, both (holy) men and women (do we worship whom Ahura Mazda knows). As the Ahū is excellent, so is our Ratu, one who rules from the Righteous Order, a creator of mental goodness, and of life's actions done for Mazda; and the Kingdom is to Ahura which to the poor (may offer) nurture. A blessing is the Right called the best, there is weal, there is weal to this (man), when toward Righteousness Best (he does) right.

8 We worship the Ahuna-vairyā; and we worship Asha Vahista the best, the bountiful Immortal. And we sacrifice to the Hā fraoreti, even to the confession and laudation of the Mazdayasnian Faith!

YASNA 14 (SP. 15).

DEDICATIONS.

1 I will come to You, O Ye Bountiful Immortals! as a praiser and a priest, and an invoker and sacrificer, as a memorising reciter and a chanter, for Your sacrifice and homage, which are to be offered to You, the Bountiful Immortals, and for our dedication and sanctification; (yea, for ours) who are the holy prophets (destined to benefit the saints).

2 And to You, O Ye Bountiful Immortals! would I dedicate the flesh of my very body, and all the blessings of a prospered life.

3 In this Zaothra with this Baresman, I desire to approach the holy Yazads with my praise I, and all the holy lords of the ritual order at their times, Hāvani at his time, and Sāvanghi and Visya at their times. I confess myself a Mazdayasnian, and of Zarathustra's order.

5 The Zaothra speaks: As an Ahū (revered and) chosen, the Zaothra speaks forth to me. The Ratu speaks: As an Ahū (revered and) to be chosen, the Zaothra speaks forth to me. The Zaothra: So let the Ratu from his Righteousness, holy and learned, speak forth!

YASNA XV (SP. XVI).

THE SACRIFICE CONTINUES.

1 With precept, praise, and with delight produced by grace, I call upon the Bountiful Immortals the good, and also therewith the beautiful by name; and I sacrifice to them with the blessing of the good ritual, with the earnest blessings of the good Mazdayasnian Faith.

2 Whose best gift from his Righteousness is mine in the offering Ahura this knoweth; who have lived, and live ever, by their names these I worship, while I draw near with praises. The Good Kingdom is to be chosen, that lot which most of all bears on (our blessings).

3 Let Sraosha (Obedience) be here present for the sacrifice of Ahura Mazda, the most beneficent, the holy, who is so dear to us as at the first, so at the last; yea, let him be present here.

4 As the Ahū (revered and) to be chosen, the Atarevakhsha thus speaks forth to me. (Response): So let the Ratu from his righteousness, holy and learned, speak forth!

YASNA 16 (SP. 17).

THE SACRIFICE CONTINUES WITH INCREASED FULNESS OF EXPRESSION.

1 We worship Ahura Mazda, the holy lord of the ritual order, who disposes (all) aright, the greatest Yazad, who is also the most beneficent, and the one who causes the settlements to advance, the creator of good creatures; yea, we worship Him with these offered Zaothras, and with truthfully and scrupulously delivered words; and we worship every holy Yazad of the heaven (as well)!

2 And we worship Zarathustra Spitāma in our sacrifice, the holy lord of the ritual order with these Zaothras, and with faithfully delivered words; and we worship every holy earthly Yazad as we worship him; and we worship also the Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitāma, the saint. And we worship the utterances of Zarathustra and his religion, his faith and his lore.

3 And we worship the former religions of the world devoted to Righteousness which were instituted at the creation, the holy religions of the Creator Ahura Mazda, the resplendent and glorious. And we worship Vohu Manah (the Good Mind), and Asha Vahista (who is Righteousness the Best), and Kshathra-vairyā, the Kingdom to be desired, and the good and bountiful Aramaiti (true piety in the believers), and Haurvatāt and Ameretatāt (our Weal and Immortality).

4 Yea, we worship the Creator Ahura Mazda and the Fire, Ahura Mazda's son, and the good waters which are Mazda-made and holy, and the resplendent sun of the swift horses, and the moon with the seed of cattle (in his beams 1); and we worship the star Tistrya, the lustrous and glorious; and we worship the soul of the Kine of blessed endowment,

5 And its Creator Ahura Mazda; and we worship Mithra of the wide pastures, and Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, and Rashnu the most just, and the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the saints, and the Blow-of-victory Ahura-given (as it is). And we worship Rāman Hvāstra, and the bounteous Wind of blessed gift,

6 And (its) Creator Ahura Mazda, and the good Mazdayasnian Religion, and the good Blessedness and Arstāt. And we worship the heaven and the earth of blessed gift, and the bounteous Māthra, and the stars without beginning (to their course), self-disposing as they are.

7 And we worship the glorious works of Righteousness in which the souls of the dead find satisfaction and delight [(Pāzand) which are the Fravashis of the saints], and we worship (Heaven) the best world of the saints, shining, all glorious.

8 And we worship the two, the milk-offering and the libation, the two which cause the waters to flow forth I, and the plants to flourish, the two foes who meet the Dragon demon-made; and who are set to meet, to defeat, and to put to flight, that cheat, the Pairika, and to contradict the insulting malice of the Ashemaogha (the persecuting heretic) and that of the unholy tyrant full of death.

9 And we worship all waters and all plants, and all good men and all good women. And we worship all these Yazads, heavenly and earthly, who are beneficent and holy.

10 And we worship thee (our) dwelling-place who art the (earth, our) bounteous Aramaiti, and Thee, O Ahura Mazda, O holy Lord of this abode! which is the home of healthy herds and healthy men, and of those who are both endowed with health and lover(s) of the ritual right. (Response of the individual worshipper. Wherefore whichever of persons, or whatever of bodily influences, is most helpful and preserving in that abode (thus owned by Mazda) let this meet me in mine abode, and there may it abide for summer and for winter. (Or let that one meet me in all my house, in whom are what of influences are the most mighty power for the body and the person's life; yea, let that one meet me there, and there abide for summer and for winter (for my help!))

YASNA 17.

TO THE FIRES, WATERS, PLANTS, etc.

1-11 We worship thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son! We worship the fire Berezi-savangha (of the lofty use), and the fire Vohu-fryāna (the good and friendly), and the fire Urvāzista (the most beneficial and most helpful), and the fire Vāzista (the most supporting), and the fire Spenista (the most bountiful), and Nairyā-sangha the Yazad of the royal lineage, and that fire which is the house-lord of all houses and Mazda-made, even the son of Ahura Mazda, the holy lord of the ritual order, with all the fires.

12 And we worship the good and best waters Mazda-made, holy, all the waters Mazda-made and holy, and all the plants which Mazda made, and which are holy.

13 And we worship the Māthra-spenta (the bounteous word-of-reason), the Zarathustrian law against the Daēvas, and its long descent.

14 And we worship Mount Ushi-darena which is Mazda-made and shining with its holiness, and all the mountains shining with holiness, and of abundant glory, and which Mazda made—.

15 And we worship the good and pious prayer for blessings, (16) and these waters and (these lands), (17) and all the greatest chieftains, lords of the ritual order;

18 And I praise, invoke, and glorify the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the saints, those of the house, the Vis, the Zantuma, the Dahvyuma, and the Zarathustrōtēma, and all the holy Yazads!

YASNA 18

1 Grant me, Thou who art maker of the Kine, plants and waters, Immortality, Mazda! Grant, too, Weal, Spirit bounteous—.

YASNA 19

ZAND OR COMMENTARY ON THE AHUNA-VAIRYA FORMULAS 5.

(As the Ahū is excellent, so (is) the Ratu (one who rules) from the righteous Order, a creator of mental goodness and of life's actions done for Mazda; and the Kingdom (is) for Ahura which to the poor shall offer a nurturer.)

1 Zarathustra asked of Ahura Mazda: O Ahura Mazda, Thou most bounteous Spirit! maker 1 of the corporeal worlds, the holy One! which was that word which Thou did'st declare to me, (2) which was before the sky, and before the water, before the earth, and before the cattle, before the plants, and before the fire, and before the holy man, and the Demon-gods (the Daēvas), before the Khrāfstra-men, and before all the incarnate world; even before all the good creatures made by Mazda, and which contain (and are) the seed of righteousness?

3 Thereupon Ahura Mazda said: It was this piece 3, the Ahuna-vairya, O Spitama Zarathustra! which I pronounced as thine (4) before the sky, and before the waters, before the land, and before the cattle and the plants, and before the fire, Ahura Mazda's son, before the holy man, and before the Daēvas, and Khrāfstra-men, and before the entire corporeal world, even before the good creatures made by Mazda, which contain (and are) the seed of righteousness.

5 It was these part(s) of the Ahuna-vairya, O Spitama Zarathustra! which especially belongs to me, and when each is intoned aloud without the (needless) repetition 1 of verses and of words, and without their omission, it is worth a hundred of their other stanzas, even although they are prominent in the ritual, and likewise equally as well recited without additions or omissions; nay, further, when it is intoned imperfectly but added to, and with omissions, it is even then in effect equivalent (not to a hundred indeed, but) to ten other (stanzas) that are prominent.

6 And whoever in this world of mine which is corporeal shall mentally recall, O Spitama Zarathustra! a portion of the Ahuna-vairya, and having thus recalled it, shall undertake it, or beginning to recite it with the undertone, shall then utter it aloud, or chanting it with intoning voice, shall worship thus, then with even threefold (safety and with speed) I will bring his soul over the Bridge of Kinvat, I who am Ahura Mazda (I will help him to pass over it) to Heaven (the best life), and to Righteousness the Best, and to the lights of heaven.

7 And whoever, O Spitama Zarathustra! while undertoning the part(s) of the Ahuna-vairya (or this piece the Ahuna-vairya), takes ought therefrom, whether the half, or the third, or the fourth, or the fifth, I who am Ahura Mazda will draw his soul off from the better world; yea, so far off will I withdraw it as the earth is large and wide; [and this earth is as long as it is broad].

8 And I pronounced this saying which contains its Ahū and its Ratu before the creation of this heaven, before the making of the waters, and the plants, and the four-footed kine, before the birth of the holy biped man, before this sun with its body made for the acquisition of the creation of the Bountiful Immortals.

9 And the more bountiful of the two Spirits (Ahura) declared to me (Zarathustra) the entire creation of the pure, that which exists at present, that which is in the course of emerging into existence, and that which shall be, with reference to the performance and realisation 'of the actions of a life devoted to Mazda.'

10 And this word is the most emphatic of the words which have ever been pronounced, or which are now spoken, or which shall be spoken in future; for (the eminence of) this utterance is a thing of such a nature, that if all the corporeal and living world should learn it, and learning should hold fast by it, they would be redeemed from their mortality!

11 And this our word I have proclaimed as a symbol to be learned, and to be recited, as it were, to every one of the beings under the influence of and for the sake of Righteousness the Best.

12 And 'as' (the worshipper has) here spoken it forth, when he has thus 'appointed' the 'Lord and regulator,' so (by thus reciting these authoritative words), he acknowledges Ahura Mazda (as prior to, and supreme) over, those creatures who have 'the mind' 3 as their first. 'As' he acknowledges Him as the greatest of them all, 'so' he assigns the creatures to Him (as to their originator).

13 As he undertones the third sentence, he thereby announces that 'all the amenities of life appertain to the 'good' Mazda, (and come) from Him. As he recites 'dazda mananghō,' 'the creator of mind,' he acknowledges Him as superior and prior to mind; and as he makes Him the one who indicates (the truth) to mind, (saying) 'mananghō of mind,' which means that by this much he makes Him (its director), and then he makes Him 'the lord of actions.'

14 And when he acknowledges Him for the creatures thus, 'O Mazda!' he acknowledges Him (as their ruler) when he assigns the creatures to Him thus. He then assigns the Kingdom to Ahura, saying: 'Thine, O Mazda! is the Kingdom.' And he assigns a nourisher and protector to the poor, saying: Yim drigubō dadat vāstārem; that is, as a friend to Spitama. This is the fifth sentence, (and it concludes) the entire recital and word, (even) the whole of this word of Ahura Mazda.

15 He who is the best (of all) Ahura Mazda, pronounced the Ahuna-vairya, and as He pronounced it as the best, so He caused it to have its effect, (He, ever) the same, (as He is). The evil one at once arose (to oppose Him), but He (Ahura) repelled that wicked one with His interdict, and with this repelling renunciation: Neither our minds are in harmony, nor our precepts, nor our comprehensions, nor our beliefs, nor our words, nor our actions, nor our consciences, nor our souls!

CATECHETICAL ZAND 7.

16 And this saying, uttered by Mazda, has three stages, or measures, and belongs to four classes (of men as its supporters), and to five chiefs (in the political world, without whom its efficiency is marred), and it has a conclusion ending with a gift. (Question.) How are its measures (constituted)? (Answer.) The good thought, the good word, and the good deed.

17 (Question.) With what classes of men? (Answer.) The priest, the charioteer (as the chief of warriors), the systematic tiller 1 of the ground, and the artisan. These classes therefore accompany the religious man throughout his entire duty with the correct thought, the truthful word, and the righteous action. These are the classes and states in life which give attention to the rulers, and fulfil the (laws) of religion; (yea, they are the guides and companions of that religious man) through whose actions the settlements are furthered in righteousness.

18 (Question.) How are the chiefs (constituted)? (Answer.) They are the house-chief, the village-chief, and the tribe-chief, the chief of the province, and the Zarathustra as the fifth. That is, so far as those provinces are concerned which are different from, and outside of the Zarathustrian regency, or domain. [Rāgha which has four chiefs (only) is the Zarathustrian (district)]. (Question.) How are the chiefs of this one constituted? (Answer.) They (are) the house-chief, the village-chief, the tribe-chief, and the Zarathustra as the fourth.

19 (Question.) What is the thought well thought? (Answer.) (It is that which the holy man thinks), the one who holds the holy thought to be before all other things. (Question.) What is the word well spoken? (Answer.) It is the Māthra Spenta, the bounteous word of reason. (Question.) What is the deed well done? (Answer.) It is that done with praises, and by the creatures who regard Righteousness as before all other things.

20 (Question.) Mazda made a proclamation, whom did He announce? (Answer.) Some one who was holy, and yet both heavenly and mundane. (Question.) What was His character, He who made this sacred enunciation? (Answer.) He who is the best (of all), the ruling one. (Question.) Of what character (did He proclaim him the coming one)? (Answer.) As holy and the best, a ruler who exercises no wanton or despotic power 4.

21 We sacrifice to the (several) part(s) of the Ahuna-vairya. We sacrifice to the memorised recital of the Ahuna-vairya, and its regular chanting and its use in the full Yasna.

YASNA 20.

ZAND, OR COMMENTARY, ON THE ASHEM VOHŪ.

1 A blessing is Righteousness (called) the best; there is weal, there is weal to this man when the Right (helps) the Righteousness best, (when the pious man serves it in truth). Ahura Mazda spake forth: Ashem vohū vahistem asti. To this Asha, the holy ritual sanctity, one attributes the qualities of 'good' and 'best,' as one attributes property to an owner; thus this sentence vohū vahistem asti is substantiated (at once).

2 Ustā asti ustā ahmāi; by this attribution of blessedness (the praiser) assigns every person (or thing) of a sacred nature to every holy person, and as one usually and regularly assigns every person or thing that is holy to every holy man.

3 Yyat ashāi vahistai; by these words the worshipper ascribes the entire Māthra (to Asha Vahista), and ascribes all to the Māthra, as one ascribes the kingdom to Righteousness, and as one ascribes righteousness to the invoking saint; yea, as one ascribes righteousness to us who are the prophets (who shall help and bless the people). The three maxims of the sentences (are thus fulfilled). And every word (in its detail), and the entire utterance in its proclamation, is the word of Ahura Mazda.

CATECHETICAL ADDITION 5.

4 Mazda has made a proclamation. (Question.) Whom did He announce? (Answer.) That holy one who is both heavenly and earthly. (Question.) Of what character is He who has thus announced Him? (Answer.) He is the best, and the one who is exercising sovereign power. (Question.) Of what character is the man whom He announced? (Answer.) The holy and the best, the one who rules with no capricious tyranny. We sacrifice to the (several) part(s) of the Asha Vahista (prayer). We sacrifice to the heard-recital of the Asha Vahista, to its memorising, its chanting, and its sacrificial use !

YASNA 21.

CATECHETICAL ZAND, OR COMMENTARY UPON THE YĒNHĒ HĀTĀM 2.

(The YēNhē. (To that one) of beings do we offer, whose superior (fidelity) in the sacrifice Ahura Mazda recognises by reason of the sanctity (within him); yea, even to those female saints also do we sacrifice) whose (superior fidelity is thus likewise known; thus) we sacrifice to (all, to both) the males and females (of the saints!)

1 A word for the Yasna by Zarathustra, the saint. YēNhē, &c. Here the worshipper indicates and offers the Yasna (which is the sacrificial worship) of Mazda as by the command (or as the institution) of Ahura. Hātām. Here the worshipper offers the sacrificial worship as if with the beings who are among those who are destined to live.

2 Yaunghām. Here he indicates and offers the sacrificial worship of those holy females who have Āramaiti at their head, as homage to the Immortals. These are the three sentences which comprehend all the Yasnian speech. (Question.) To whom is this Yasna addressed? (Answer.) To the Bountiful Immortals (in the course of the Yasna).

3 Thereupon spake Mazda: Salvation to this one, whosoever he may be! May the absolute ruler Ahura grant it. (Question.)

4 Whom did He answer with this answer? (Answer.) He answered: The state of salvation; and with this answer, 'the state of salvation,' he answered every saint who exists, every one who is coming into existence, and every one who shall exist in the future. (Question. Who answered thus? Answer.) The best One. (Question. What did He answer?) (Answer.) The best thing. (That is,) the best One, Mazda, answered the best and the holy (answer) for the better and the holy man.

5 We sacrifice to this piece, the YēNhē hātām, the prominent and holy Yast.

YASNA 22

THE SACRIFICE CONTINUES.

1 With the Baresman brought hither together with the Zaotra, for the worship of the Creator Ahura Mazda, the resplendent, the glorious, and for that of the Bountiful Immortals, I desire to approach this Haoma with my praise, offered (as it is) with punctilious sanctity (or, for a blessing), and this fresh milk, and this plant Hadhānāpata.

2 And, as an act of worship to the beneficent waters, I desire to approach these Zaotras with (my) praise offered (as they are) with punctilious sanctity, having the Haoma with them, and the flesh, with the Hadhānāpata. And I desire to approach the Haoma-water with my praise for the beneficent waters; and I desire to approach the stone mortar and the iron mortar with my praise.

3 And I desire to approach this plant for the Baresman with my praise, and the well-timed prayer for blessings, that which has approached (to accept our homage), and the memorised recital and the fulfilment of the good Mazdayasnian Faith, and the heard recital of the Gāthas, and the well-timed and successful prayer for blessings, that of the holy lord of the ritual order. And I desire to approach these wood-billets and their perfume with my praise,—thine, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son! Yea, I desire to approach all good things with my praise, those which Mazda made, and which have the seed of sanctity (within them), (4) for the propitiation of Ahura Mazda and of the Bountiful Immortals, and of Sraosha the blessed, and of Ahura Mazda's Fire, the lofty ritual lord!

20 And I desire to approach this Haoma with (my) praise, that which is thus lifted up with sanctity, and this milk (fresh as it is, and as if) living and lifted up with sanctity, and this plant the Hadhānāpata lifted up with sanctity.

21. And I desire to approach these Zaothras with (my) praise for the beneficial waters, these Zaothras which have the H(a)oma with them and the milk with them, and the Hadhānāpata, and which are lifted up with sanctity. And I desire to approach the Haoma-water with (my) praise for the beneficial waters, and the two mortars, the stone one and the iron one, (22) and I desire to approach this branch for the Baresman with my praise, and the memorised recital and fulfilment of the Mazdayasnian law, and the heard recital of the Gāthas, and the well-timed and persistent prayer for blessings (uttered) by the holy lord of the ritual order, and this wood and perfume, even thine, O Fire, Ahura Mazda's son, and all good objects Mazda-made (23) for the propitiation of Ahura Mazda, the resplendent, the glorious, and of the Bountiful Immortals, and of Mithra of the wide pastures, and of Rāman Hvāstra, (24) and of the resplendent sun, immortal, radiant, of the fleet horses, and of Vayu, (of predominant influence and) working on high, set over the other beings in the creation [(Pāzand); that is for thee thus (O Vayu) when thine influence is that which appertains to Spenta Mainyu], and for the propitiation of the most just knowledge Mazda-given, and of the holy and good Religion, the Mazdayasnian Faith; (25) for the propitiation of the Māthra Spenta, (the bounteous) and holy, and the effective, instituted against the Daēvas, the Zarathustrian law, and of the long descent of the good Mazdayasnian Faith [the holding in mind and devotion to the Māthra Spenta, and knowledge of the Mazdayasnian Religion] for the propitiation of the understanding which is innate and Mazda-made, and of that which is heard by the ear: (26) and for thy propitiation, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son! [(Pāzand); (yea) thine, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son] with all the fires, and for the propitiation of Mount Ushi-darena, the Mazda-made, radiant with sanctity; (27) and of all the holy Yazads, spiritual and earthly, and of the holy Fravashis, the redoubted and overwhelming, those of the ancient lore, and those of the next of kin and of the Yazad of the spoken name!

THE FRAVASHIS OF THE SAINTS; PRAYERS FOR THEIR APPROACH 3.

1 I desire to approach with my praise 4 those Fravashis which have existed from of old, the Fravashis of the houses, and of the villages, of the communities, and of the provinces, which hold the heaven in its place apart, and the water, land, and cattle, which hold the children in the wombs safely enclosed apart so that they do not miscarry.

2 And I desire to approach toward the Fravashi 1 of Ahura Mazda, and with my praise, and for those of the Bountiful Immortals, with all the holy Fravashis which are those of the heavenly Yazads. And I desire to approach the Fravashi of Gaya Maretan (the life-man) in my worship with my praise, and for that of Zarathustra Spītāma, and for those of Kavi Vistāspa, and of Isat-vāstra, the Zarathustrian, with all the holy Fravashis of the other ancient counsellors as well.

3 And I desire in my worship to approach toward every holy Fravashi whosoever it may be, and whosoever dead upon this earth (its possessor may have lain), the pious woman, or the girl of tender years, the maiden diligent (among the cattle) in the field (who) may have dwelt (here; yea, all) which are now worshipped from this house, which are attentive to, and which attain to (our) good Yasnas and (our) homage.

4 Yea, I desire to approach the Fravashis of the saints with my praise, redoubted (as they are) and overwhelming, the Fravashis of those who held to the ancient lore, and the Fravashis of the next-of-kin; and I desire to approach toward the Fravashi of mine own soul in my worship with my praise; and I desire therewith to approach toward all the lords of the ritual, and with praise; and I desire to approach all the good Yazads with my praise, the heavenly and the earthly, who are met for sacrifice and homage, because of Righteousness the Best!

YASNA 24.

1 (And having approached these Haomas with our worship), we present them to Ahura Mazda; (yea, we present) these Haomas, Myazdas, Zaothras, and the Baresman spread with punctilious sanctity, and the flesh, and the milk, fresh as if living, and lifted up with punctilious sanctity, and this branch the Hadhānāpata likewise lifted up with sanctity.

2 (And having approached these Zaothras in our worship), we present them to the good waters having the Haoma with them, and the milk, and the Hadhānāpata, and lifted up with scrupulous sanctity; and (with them) we present the Haoma-water to the good waters, and both the stone and the iron mortar.

3 And we present this plant of the Baresman, and the timely prayer for blessings, which has approached in the due course of the ritual, and the recollection and practice 1 of the good Mazdayasnian Religion, and the heard recital of the Gāthas, and the timely prayer for blessings which has approached as the prayer of the holy lord of the ritual order; and these wood-billets, and the perfume, (even) thine, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son! and all good objects Mazda-made, which have the seed of righteousness, we offer and present.

4 And these we present hereby to Ahura Mazda, and to Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed (and Righteous), and to the Bountiful Immortals; and to the Fravashis of the saints, even to the souls of the saints, and to the Fire of Ahura Mazda, the lofty lord of entire holy creation, for sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and for praise.

5 And these we present hereby to the Fravashi of Zarathustra Spītāma, the saint, for sacrifice, propitiation, and for praise, and to that of the people 1 who love Righteousness, with all the holy Fravashis of the saints who are dead and who are living, and to those of men who are as yet unborn, and to those of the prophets who will serve us, and will labour to complete the progress and renovation of the world.

6 And we present these Haomas, Myazdas, Zaothras, and the Baresman spread with sanctity, and the flesh, and the milk (fresh as if) living, and lifted up with sanctity, and the Hadhānāpata branch.

7 And we present these Zaothras to the beneficial waters having the Haoma with them, and the flesh, and the Hadhānāpata lifted up with sanctity, and the Haoma-water, to the good waters, with the stone and iron mortars, (8) and this plant of the Baresman, (and) the timely Prayer and the recollection and practice of the good Mazdayasnian Faith, and these wood-billets, and the perfume, thine, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son! and all objects which are Mazda-made, and which have, and are, the seed of Righteousness, these we offer and present.

9 (Yea,) we present these hereby to the Bountiful Immortals who rule aright, and who dispose of all aright, the ever-living, ever-helpful, who abide with the Good Mind (of the Lord and of His folk)!

YASNA 25.

1 And we worship the Bountiful Immortals with our sacrifice, who rule aright, and who dispose of all aright; and we worship this Haoma, this flesh and branch,

2 And these Zaothras for the good waters, having the Haoma with them, and the flesh with them, and Hadhānāpata, and lifted up with sanctity, and we worship the Haoma-water for the beneficial waters; and we worship the two, the stone mortar and the iron mortar;

3 And we worship this plant for the Baresman and the well-timed prayer for blessings which has approached (in its proper place within the ritual course), and also both the remembrance and the practice of the good Mazdayasnian Religion, and the heard recital of the Gāthas, and the well-timed prayer for blessings of the holy lord of the ritual order which has approached, and these wood-billets with the perfume, (even) thine, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son! and we worship all good objects which are Mazda-made, and which contain (and are) the seed of Righteousness.

4 And we worship Ahura Mazda with our sacrifice, the resplendent, the glorious, and the Bountiful Immortals who rule aright, and who dispose (of all) aright, and Mithra of the wide pastures and Rāman Hvāstra; and we worship the shining sun, the resplendent, the immortal, of the fleet horses.

5 And we worship the holy wind which works on high, placed higher than the other creatures in the creation; and we worship this which is thine, O Vayu! and which appertains to the Spenta Mainyu within thee; and we worship the most true religious Knowledge, Mazda-made and holy, and the good Mazdayasnian law.

6 And we worship the Māthra Spenta verily glorious (as it is), even the law pronounced against the Daēvas, the Zarathustrian law, and its long descent; yea, we worship the good Mazdayasnian Religion, and the Māthra which is heart-devoted and bounteous (imparting heart's devotion to the saint); yea, we worship the Mazdayasnian Religion maintained in the understanding of the saint; and we honour that science which is the Māthra Spenta, and the innate understanding Mazda-made, and the derived understanding, heard with ear, and Mazda-made.

7 Yea, we worship thee, the Fire, Ahura Mazda's son! the holy lord of the ritual order; and we worship all the Fires, and Mount Ushi-darena (which holds the light) Mazda-made and holy, the Yazad mount, brilliant with sanctity.

8. And we worship every holy spiritual Yazad; and every holy earthly Yazad (who exists)!

YASNA 26.

THE FRAVASHIS; SACRIFICE AND PRAISE TO THEM.

1 I praise, invoke, and weave my hymn to the good, heroic, and bountiful Fravashis of the saints; (and having invoked these, then) we worship the Nmānyas, and the Vīsyas, and the Zantumas, and the Dahyumas, and the Zarathustrōtemas.

2 And of all these prior Fravashis, we worship here the Fravashi of Ahura Mazda, which is the greatest and the best, the most beautiful and the firmest, the most wise and the best in form, and the one that attains the most its ends because of Righteousness.

3 And (having invoked them) hither, we worship the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the holy ones, those of the Bountiful Immortals, the brilliant, of effective glance, the lofty, the devoted, the swift ones of the creatures of Ahura who are imperishable and holy.

4 And (having invoked them) hither, we worship the spirit and conscience, the intelligence and soul and Fravashi of those holy men and women who early heard the lore and commands (of God), and loved and strove after Righteousness, the ritual truth; and we worship the soul of the Kine of blessed gift.

5 And (having invoked it) hither, we worship the Fravashi of Gaya Maretan the holy, and the sanctity and Fravashi of Zarathustra Spītāma the saint; and we worship the Fravashi of Kavi Vistāspa the holy, and that of Isat-vāstra the Zarathustrian, the saint.

6 And (having invoked them) hither; we worship the life, conscience, intelligence, soul and Fravashi of the next of kin, of the saints male and female who have striven after the ritual truth, which are those of the dead and living saints, and which are those also of men as yet unborn, of the future prophets who will help on the renovation, and complete the human progress, with them all.

7 And (having invoked them) hither, we worship the souls of the dead [(Pāzand) which are the Fravashis of the saints]; and of all the next of kin who have passed away in this house, of the Aēthrapaitis (the teachers) and of the disciples; yea, of all holy men and women;

8 And we worship the Fravashis of all the holy teachers and disciples; and of all the saints both male and female.

9 (And having invoked them) hither we worship the Fravashis of all the holy children who fulfil the deeds of piety; and we worship the Fravashis of the saints within the province; and those of the saints without the province.

10 We worship the Fravashis of (those) holy men and holy women; we worship all the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the saints from Gaya Maretan (the first created) to the Saoshyant, the victorious.

11 Yea, we worship all the Fravashis of the saints, and we worship the souls of the dead [(Pāzand) which are the Fravashis of the saints]!

YASNA 27

PRELUDE TO THE CHIEF RECITAL OF THE AHUNA-VAIRYA.

1 This is to render 1 Him who is of all the greatest, our lord 2 and master (even) Ahura Mazda. And this to smite the wicked Angra Mainyu, and to smite Aēshma of the bloody spear, and the Mazainya Daēvas, and to smite all the wicked Varenya Daēvas.

2 And this is to further Ahura Mazda, the resplendent, the glorious, to further the Bountiful Immortals, and the influences of the star Tistrya, the resplendent, the glorious, (and) to the furtherance of the holy man, and of all the (bountiful and) holy creatures of the Bounteous Spirit.

3-6 The Haomas are crushed, O Mazda, Khshathra, and Asha, O ye Lords! Good is Sraosha who accompanies the sacrifice with the great glory, and may he be present affording strenuous help.

7 We are offering saving acts of wisdom and of worship with the sacred gift of the Ahuna-vairya intoned with sanctity, and of the two mortars here brought forward with holy act, and with that of the correctly uttered words likewise; and therefore may they be to us the more saving in their wise significance

8-13 As the Ahū is excellent, so is the Ratu (one who rules) from (his) sanctity, a creator of mental goodness, and of life's actions done for Mazda; and the Kingdom (is) for Ahura, which to the poor may offer a nurturer.

14 (What is Your Kingdom, Your riches; how may I be Your own in my actions, to nourish Your poor, O Mazda? Beyond; yea, beyond all we declare You, far from Daēvas and Khrafstra-accursed mortals!)

15 We worship the Ahuna-vairya. We worship Asha Vahista, the most beautiful, the Bountiful Immortal.

YASNA 35.

YASNA HAPTANGHĀITI.

PRAISE TO AHURA AND THE IMMORTALS; PRAYER FOR THE PRACTICE AND DIFFUSION OF THE FAITH.

1 We sacrifice to Ahura Mazda, the holy Lord of the ritual order, and to the Bountiful Immortals, who rule aright, who dispose of all aright; and we sacrifice to the entire creation of the clean, the spiritual and the mundane, with the longing blessing of the beneficent ritual, with the longing blessing of the benignant Religion, the Mazdayasnian Faith.

2 We are praisers of good thoughts, of good words, and of good actions, of those now and those hereafter I [(Pazand) of those being done, and of those completed]. We implant them (with our homage, and we do this) the more, and yet the more since we are (praisers) of the good (from whom they spring).

3 That, therefore, would we choose, O Ahura Mazda! and thou, O Righteousness the beautiful! that we should think, and speak, and do those thoughts, and words, and deeds, among actual good thoughts, and words, and actions, which are the best for both the worlds;

4 And together with these gifts and actions which are thus the best, we would pray for the Kine (which represents the pure creation), that she may have comfort and have fodder from the famed, and from the humble, from the potent and the weak.

5 To the best of good rulers (is) verily the Kingdom, because we render and ascribe it to Him, and make it thoroughly His own (?), to Mazda Ahura do we ascribe it, and to Righteousness the Best.

6 As thus both man or woman knows (the duty), both thoroughly and truly, so let him, or her, declare it and fulfil it, and inculcate it upon those who may perform it as it is.

7 We would be deeply mindful of Your sacrifice and homage, Yours, O Ahura Mazda! and the best, (and we would be mindful) of the nurture of the Kine. And that let us inculcate and perform for You according as we may, and (for) such (praisers as we are).

8 Under the shelter of the ritual Order let us do so in the active fulfilment of its (precepts) toward every one of the (clean) and better creatures which are fit to live, with a gift for both the worlds.

9 Yea, those words and sayings, O Ahura Mazda! we would proclaim as Righteousness, and as of the better mind; and we would make Thee the one who both supports (us in our proclamation) of them, and who throws still further light upon them (as they are).

10 And by reason of Thy Righteous Order, Thy Good Mind, and Thy Sovereign Power, and through the instrumentality of our praises of Thee, O Ahura Mazda! and for the purpose of (still further) praises, by Thy spoken words, and for (still further) spoken words, through Thy Yasna, and for (still further) Yasnas (would we thus proclaim them, and make Thee the bestower of our light).

YASNA 36.

TO AHURA AND THE FIRE.

1 We would approach You two, O (Ye) primeval ones in the house 2 of this Thy holy Fire, O Ahura Mazda, Thou most bounteous Spirit! Who brings pollutions to this (Thy flame) him wilt Thou cover with pollutions (in his turn).

2. But as the most friendly do Thou give us zeal, O Fire of the Lord! and approach us, and with the loving blessing of the most friendly, with the praise of the most adored. Yea, may'st thou approach to aid us in this our greatest (undertaking) among the efforts of our zeal.

3 The Fire of Ahura Mazda art thou verily; yea, the most bounteous one of His Spirit, wherefore Thine is the most potent of all names (for grace), O Fire of the Lord!

4. And therefore we would approach Thee, (O Ahura!) with the help of Thy Good Mind (which Thou dost implant within us), with Thy (good) Righteousness, and with the actions and the words inculcated by Thy good wisdom!

5 We therefore bow before Thee, and we direct our prayers to Thee with confessions of our guilt, O Ahura Mazda! with all the good thoughts (which Thou dost inspire), with all the words well said, and the deeds well done, with these would we approach Thee.

6. And to Thy most beautiful body do we make our deep acknowledgments, O Ahura Mazda! to those stars (which are Thy body); and to that one, the highest of the high, [such as the sun was called!]

YASNA 37.

TO AHURA, THE HOLY CREATION, THE FRAVASHIS OF THE JUST, AND THE BOUNTIFUL IMMORTALS.

1 Thus therefore do we worship Ahura Mazda, who made the Kine (the living creation), and the (embodied) Righteousness (which is incarnate in the clean), and the waters, and the wholesome plants, the stars, and the earth, and all (existing) objects that are good.

2 Yea, we worship Him for His Sovereign Power and His greatness, beneficent (as they are), and with priority among the Yazads who abide beside the Kine (and care for her protection and support).

3 And we worship Him under His name as Lord, to Mazda dear, the most beneficent (of names). We worship him with our bones, and with our flesh, (with our bodies and our life). And we worship the Fravashis of the saints, of holy men, and holy women;

4 And Righteousness the Best do we worship, the most beautiful, the Bountiful Immortal and that which is endowed with light in all things good.

5 And we worship the Good Mind (of the Lord), and His Sovereign Power, and the Good Faith, the good law of our thrift, and Piety the ready mind (within Thy folk!)

YASNA 38.

TO THE EARTH AND THE SACRED WATERS.

1 And now we worship this earth which bears us, together with Thy wives, O Ahura Mazda! yea, those Thy wives do we worship which are so desired from their sanctity.

2. We sacrifice to their zealous wishes, and their capabilities, their inquiries (as to duty), and their wise acts of pious reverence, and with these their blessedness, their full vigour and good portions, their good fame and ample wealth.

3. O ye waters! now we worship you, you that are showered down, and you that stand in pools and vats, and you that bear forth (our loaded vessels?) ye female Ahuras of Ahura, you that serve us (all) in helpful ways, well forded and full-flowing, and effective for the bathings, we will seek you and for both the worlds!

4. Therefore did Ahura Mazda give you names, O ye beneficent I ones! when He who made the good bestowed you. And by these names we worship you, and by them we would ingratiate ourselves with you, and with them would we bow before you, and direct our prayers to you with free confessions of our debt. O waters, ye who are productive, and ye maternal ones, ye with heat that suckles the (frail and) needy (before birth), ye waters (that have once been) rulers of (us) all, we will now address you as the best, and the most beautiful; those (are) yours, those good (objects), of our offerings, ye long of arm to reach our sickness, or misfortune, ye mothers of our life!

YASNA 39.

TO THE SOUL OF THE KINE, &c.

1 And now we sacrifice to the Kine's soul, and to her created body, and we sacrifice to the souls of cattle who are fit to live 1 (for us), and whose (we?) are, such as are the same to them.

2 And we worship the souls of those beasts which are tame and broken in, and of wild herds, and the souls of the saints wherever they were born, both of men and of women, whose good consciences are conquering in the strife against the Daévas, or will conquer, or have conquered.

3 And now we worship the Bountiful Immortals (all) the good, and both those male, and those female (by their names). The males among them do we worship, ever living, and ever helpful, who dwell beside the pious, and the females thus the same.

4 As Thou, O Ahura Mazda! hast thought and spoken, as thou hast determined, and hast done these things (effecting) what is good, therefore do we offer to Thee, therefore do we ascribe to Thee our praises, and worship Thee, and bow ourselves before Thee; and therefore would we direct our prayers to Thee, Ahura! with confessions of our sin.

5 And we thus draw near to Thee together with the good kinship of our kindred, with that of Righteousness the blessed, and the good law of thrift and energy and the good Piety, the ready mind (within Thy folk!)

YASNA 40.

PRAYERS FOR HELPERS.

1 And now in these Thy dispensations, O Ahura Mazda! do Thou wisely act for us, and with abundance with Thy bounty and Thy tenderness 1 as touching us; and grant that reward which Thou hast appointed to our souls, O Ahura Mazda!

2 Of this do Thou Thyself bestow upon us for this world and the spiritual; and now as part thereof (do Thou grant) that we may attain to fellowship with Thee, and Thy Righteousness for all duration.

3 And do Thou grant us, O Ahura! men who are righteous, and both lovers and producers of the Right as well. And give us trained beasts for the pastures, broken in for riding, and for bearing, (that they may be) in helpful companionship with us, and as a source of long enduring vigour, and a means of rejoicing grace to us for this.

4 So let there be a kinsman lord for us, with the labourers of the village, and so likewise let there be the clients (or the peers 5). And by the help of those may we arise. So may we be to You, O Mazda Ahura! holy and true 6, and with free giving of our gifts.

YASNA 41.

A PRAYER TO AHURA AS THE KING, THE LIFE, AND THE REWARDER.

1 Praises, and songs, and adorations do we offer to Ahura Mazda, and to Righteousness the Best; yea, we offer and we ascribe them, and proclaim them.

2 And to Thy good Kingdom, O Ahura Mazda! may we attain for ever, and a good King be Thou over us; and let each man of us, and so each woman, thus abide, O Thou most beneficent of beings, and for both the worlds!

3 Thus do we render Thee, the helpful Yazad, endowed with good devices, the friend of them (who worship Thee) with (well-adjusted) ritual; so may'st Thou be to us our life, and our body's vigour, O Thou most beneficent of beings, and that for both the worlds!

4 Aye, let us win and conquer long life, O Ahura Mazda! in Thy grace, and through Thy will may we be powerful. May'st Thou lay hold on us to help, and long, and with salvation, O Thou most beneficent of beings!

5 Thy praisers and Māthra-speakers may be called, O Ahura Mazda! so do we wish, and to this may we attain. What reward most meet for our deserving Thou hast appointed for the souls, O Ahura Mazda! (6) of that do Thou bestow on us for this life, and for that of mind. Of that reward (do Thou Thyself grant this advantage), that we may come under Thy protecting guardianship, and that of Righteousness for ever. We sacrifice to that brave Yasna, the Yasna Haptanghāiti, the holy, the ritual chief!

YASNA 42.

A SUPPLEMENT TO THE HAPTANGHĀITI 5.

1 We worship You, O Ye Bountiful Immortals! with the entire collection of this Yasna, Haptanghāiti (as we sum up all). And we sacrifice to the fountains of the waters, and to the fordings of the rivers, to the forking of the highways, and to the meetings of the roads.

2 And we sacrifice to the hills that run with torrents, and the lakes that brim with waters, and to the corn that fills the corn-fields; and we sacrifice to both the protector and the Creator, to both Zarathustra and the Lord.

3 And we sacrifice to both earth and heaven, and to the stormy wind that Mazda made, and to the peak of high Haraiti, and to the land, and all things good.

4 And we worship the Good Mind (in the living) and the spirits of the saints. And we sacrifice to the fish of fifty-fins 1, and to that sacred beast the Unicorn which stands in Vouru-kasha, and we sacrifice to that sea of Vouru-kasha where he stands, (5) and to the Haoma, golden-flowered, growing on the heights; yea, to the Haoma that restores us, and aids this world's advance. We sacrifice to Haoma that driveth death afar, (6) and to the flood-streams of the waters, and to the great flights of the birds, and to the approaches of the Fire-priests, as they approach us from afar, and seek to gain the provinces, and spread the ritual lore. And we sacrifice to the Bountiful Immortals all!

YASNA 52 (SP. 51).

A PRAYER FOR SANCTITY AND ITS BENEFITS.

1 I pray for benedictions for a benefit, and for the good, even for the entire creation of the holy (and the clean); I beseech them for the (generation which is) now alive, for that which is just coming into life 1, and for that which shall be hereafter. And (I pray for that) sanctity which leads to prosperity, and which has long afforded shelter, which goes on hand in hand with it, which joins it in its walk, and of itself becoming its close companion as it delivers forth its precepts, (2) bearing every form of healing virtue which comes to us in waters, appertains to cattle, or is found in plants, and overwhelming all the harmful malice of the Daévas, (and their servants) who might harm this dwelling and its lord, (3) bringing good gifts, and better blessings, given very early, and later (gifts), leading to successes, and for a long time giving shelter. And so the greatest, and the best, and most beautiful benefits of sanctity fall likewise to our lot (4) for the sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and the praise of the Bountiful Immortals, for the bringing prosperity to this abode, and for the prosperity of the entire creation of the holy, and the clean, (and as for this, so) for the opposition of the entire evil creation. (And I pray for this) as I praise through Righteousness, I who am beneficent, those who are (likewise of a better mind). 5-8. (See Y. 8, 5-8.) (For Y. 53, see Gāthas, pp. 190-194.)

YASNA 54 2 (SP. 53).

THE AIRYEMĀ-ISHYŌ.

1 Let the Airyaman, the desired friend and peers-man, draw near for grace to the men and to the women who are taught of Zarathustra, for the joyful grace of the Good Mind, whereby the conscience may attain its wished-for recompense. I pray for the sacred reward of the ritual order which is (likewise so much) to be desired; and may Ahura Mazda grant it, (or cause it to increase).

2 We sacrifice to the Airyemā-ishyō, the powerful; the victoriously smiting, the opponent of assaulting malice, the greatest of the sentences of the holy ritual order. And we sacrifice to the bounteous Gāthas that rule supreme in the ritual, the holy (and august). And we sacrifice to the Praises of the Yasna which were the productions of the world of old.

YASNA 55 (SP. 54).

THE WORSHIP OF THE GĀTHAS AS CONCLUDED, AND THAT OF THE STAOTA YĒSNYA AS BEGINNING.

1 We present hereby and we make known, as our offering to the bountiful Gāthas which rule (as the leading chants) within (the appointed times and seasons of) the Ritual, all our landed riches, and our persons, together with our very bones and tissues, our forms and forces, our consciousness, our soul, and Fravashi.

2 That which Gāthas (may) be to us, which are our guardians and defenders, and our spiritual food, yea, which (may) be to our souls both food and clothing, such as these Gāthas to us, guardians, and defenders, and (spiritual) food, even such they are, both food and clothing to the soul. And (may) they be to us (for this our offering) abundant givers of rewards, and just and righteous ones, for the world beyond the present, after the parting of our consciousness and body.

3 And may these (Praises of the Offering) come forth, and appear for us with power and victorious assault, with health and healing, with progress, and with growth, with preparation and protection, with beneficence and sanctity, and abounding with gifts toward him who can understand; yea, let them appear (with free liberality to the enlightened), let them appear as Mazda, the most beneficent, has produced them, He the one who is victorious when He smites, and who helps the settlements advance, for the protection, and the guarding of the religious order of the settlements which are now being furthered, and of those which shall bring salvation to us, and for the protection of the entire creation of the holy (and the clean).

4 And may'st thou, (O Asha! who abidest within the Gāthas 1), give to every holy man who comes with this prayer for a blessing, and endeavouring to help himself, according to his good thoughts, and words, and deeds.

5 We are therefore worshipping both the (divine) Righteousness and the Good Mind, and the bountiful Gāthas, that rule as the leading chants within (the times and the seasons of) the holy ritual order.

6 And we worship the Praises of the Yasna which were the production of the ancient world, those which are (now) recollected and put in use, those which are now learned and taught, those which are being held (in mind, and so) repeated, those remembered and recited, and those worshipped, and thus the ones which further the world through grace in its advance. And we worship the part(s) of the Praises of the Yasna, and their recitation as it is heard, even their memorised recital, and their chanting, and their offering (as complete).

YASNA 56 (SP. 55).

INTRODUCTION TO THE SRÔSH YAST.

1 Let Sraosha (the listening Obedience) be present here for the worship of Ahura Mazda, the most beneficent, and holy, of him) who is desired by us as at the first, so at the last; and so again may attentive Obedience be present here for the worship of Ahura Mazda, the most beneficent and the holy who (is so) desired by us.

2 (Yea, let Sraosha (the attentive Obedience) be present here for the worship of the good waters, and for the Fravashis of the saints which are so desired by us, [and for (their) souls], as at the first, so at the last. And thus again may Sraosha (the listening Obedience) be present here for the worship of the good waters, and for the Fravashis of the saints, which are so desired by us, [(and) for (their) souls].

3 Let Sraosha (the listening Obedience) be present here for the worship of the good waters; yea, let the good Obedience be here for the worship of the good and bountiful Immortals who rule aright, and dispose (of all) aright, the good, and for the worship of the good Sanctity, or Blessedness, who is closely knit with the Righteous Order, to perfect us, and to incite us. May Sraosha (Obedience) be here present for the worship of the good waters, he the good and the holy, as at the first, so at the last.

4 And so again may Sraosha, (Obedience) the good, be present here for the worship of the good waters, and of the good I and bountiful Immortals, and of Blessedness the good who is closely knit with the Righteous Order to perfect and to incite us. Yea, we worship Sraosha the blessed and the stately, who smites with victory, and who furthers the settlements in their advance, the holy lord of the ritual order.

YASNA 57 (SP. 56).

THE SROSH YAST.

1 A blessing is Righteousness (called) the Best, etc. Propitiation be to Sraosha, Obedience the blessed, the mighty, the incarnate word of reason, whose body is the Māthra, him of the daring spear, devoted to the Lord, for (his) sacrificial worship, homage, propitiation, and praise.

2 We worship Sraosha, (Obedience) the blessed, the stately, him who smites with the blow of victory, and who furthers the settlements, the holy, (ruling) as the ritual lord. Him do we worship, who in the creation of Mazda the first adored Ahura, with the Baresman spread, who worshipped the Bountiful Immortals (first), who worshipped both the protector and the Creator, who are (both) creating all things in the creation.

3 For his splendour and his glory, for his might, and the blow which smites with victory, I will worship him with the Yasna of the Yazads, with a Yasna loud intoned, him Obedience the blessed, with the consecrated waters, and the good Blessedness, the lofty, and Nairyasangha, the stately; and may he draw near to us to aid us, he who smites with victory, Obedience the blessed!

4 We worship Sraosha, Obedience the blessed, and that lofty Lord who is Ahura Mazda Himself, Him who has attained the most to this our ritual, Him who has approached the nearest to us in our celebrations. And we worship all the words of Zarathustra, and all the deeds well done (for him), both those that have been done (in times gone by), and those which are yet to be done (for him in times to come).

5 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed and the stately, him who smites with the blow of victory, who prospers the settlements, the holy ritual lord, (6) who first spread forth the Baresman, and the three bundles, and the five bundles, and the seven bundles, and the nine, till it was heaped for us knee-high, and to the middle of the thighs, for the Bountiful Immortals, for their worship, and their homage, and their propitiation, and their praise. For his splendour and his glory, for his might, and the blow which smites with victory, I will worship him with the Yasna of the Yazads, with a Yasna loud intoned, him Obedience the blessed, with the consecrated waters.

7 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, the stately, who smites with the blow of victory, who furthers the settlements, the holy ritual chief.

8 Who first chanted the Gāthas, the five Gāthas of Zarathustra, the Spītāma, the holy (with the fashion) of their metres, and after the well-constructed order of their words, together with the Zand which they contain, and the questions which they utter, and the answers which they give, for the Bountiful Immortals, for their sacrifice and homage, their propitiation, and their praise. For his splendour and his glory, for his might

9 10. We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed and the stately, who smites with the blow of victory, and who furthers the settlements, the holy ritual chief, (10) who for the poor among (our) men and women built a mighty house, who after sunset, and with his levelled battle-axe, smites Aēshma bloody wounds, and having struck the head, casts him lightly (to the earth), as the stronger (smites) the weaker. For his splendour and his glory, for his might

11, 12 We worship Sraosha, Obedience the blessed and the stately, him who smites with the blow of victory, who furthers the settlements, the holy ritual chief, as the energetic, and the swift, the strong, the daring (and redoubted) hero, (12) who comes back from all his battles (and comes from them) a conqueror, who amid the Bountiful Immortals sits as companion at their meeting. For his splendour and his glory, for his might

13 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, who is the strongest and most persistent of the youths, the most energetic, and the swiftest, of all the youths strikes most with terror from afar. [Be ye desirous, O ye Mazdayasniāns! of the Yasna of Obedience the blessed.]

14 Far from this house, this village, and this tribe, and from this country, the evil and destructive terrors (shall) depart. In the dwelling of that man in whose abode Obedience the blessed, who smites victoriously, is satisfied and welcomed, there is that holy man who thus contents him (most) forward in the thinking better thoughts, in the speaking truthful (ritual) words, and in the doing holy deeds. For his splendour and his glory, for his might

15 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed and the stately, who is the conqueror of the Kayadha, and the Kāidhya, who was the smiter of the Lie-demon of the Daēvas, the one veritably powerful, the destroyer of the world, who is the guardian and watchman over all the migrations of the tribes.

16-18 Who sleeplessly and vigilant guards the creatures of Ahura, who sleeplessly and with vigilance saves them, who with halberd raised on high guards all the corporeal world after setting of the sun, (17) who has never slept in quiet since the two Spirits made the worlds, [the bounteous and the evil one], who guards the homes of Asha, who battles all the days long and the nights with all the Daēvas [(Pāzand) the Māzānian], (18) nor terror-stricken does he turn in affright before (their power); but before him all the Daēvas turn in affright against their will, and rush to darkness is their fear. For his splendour and his glory, for his might

19, 20 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, whom Haoma worshipped on the highest height of high Haraiti, he Haoma, the reviver, and the healer, the beautiful, the kingly, of the golden eye, (20) of the gracious words of the warning and the guarding words, who intones our hymns on every side, who possesses understanding and of every brilliant form, which abounds in many an explanation and revelation of the word, who has the first place in the Māthra. For his splendour and his glory, for his might

21, 22 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, whose house stands with its thousand pillars, as victorious, on the highest height of high Haraiti, self-lighted from within, star-studded from without, (22) to whom the Ahuna-vairya has come, the axe of victory, and the Haptanghāiti, and the Fshshōmāthra which smites with victory, and all the Yasna sections. For his splendour and his glory, for his might 23 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, by whose might and victorious power, and wise conduct, and (full) knowledge, the Bountiful Immortals descend upon this earth of seven quarters.

24 Who as teacher of the law will stride forth upon this earth with its dwellers in the body, and ruling as he will. And in this Religion, Ahura Mazda has been confessed 3 with faith, and the Good Mind likewise with Him, and Righteousness the Best, and Kshathra-vairya, and Piety the Bounteous, and the Universal Weal and Immortality; and the question to the Lord is asked, and Mazda's lore (is written).

25 O Sraosha (Obedience), thou blessed one, and stately! protect us for the lives; yea, for both, (for that) of this world which is corporeal, and for the world of mind, against unhappy death, and the remorseless Wrath of rapine, against the hosts with ill-intent, who lift their bloody spears against us; yea, against their assaults whom the Wrath-demon will set on, and Vīdhātu, demon-made.

26 Therefore may'st thou, O Sraosha, the blessed and the stately! grant swiftness to our teams, soundness to our bodies, and abundant observation 2 of our foes, and their smiting (as we mark them), and their sudden death. For his splendour and his glory, for his might

27-29 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, whom four racers draw in harness, white and shining, beautiful, and powerful 3, quick to learn, and fleet, obeying before speech, heeding orders from the mind, with their hoofs of horn gold-covered, (28) fleetier than (our) horses, swifter than the winds, more rapid than the rain-(drops as they fall); yea, fleetier than the clouds, or well-winged birds, or the well-shot arrow as it flies, (29) which overtake these swift ones all, as they fly after them pursuing, but which are never overtaken when they flee, which plunge away from both the weapons (hurled on this side and on that) and draw Sraosha with them, the good Sraosha and the blessed; which from both the weapons (those on this side and on that) bear the good Obedience the blessed, plunging forward in their zeal, when he takes his course from India on the East, and when he lights down in the West. For his splendour and his glory, for his might

30-32 We worship Obedience the blessed and the stately, who though lofty and so high, yea, even to the girdle, yet stoops to Mazda's creatures, (31) who thrice within the day, and three times of a night, will drive on to that Karshvar Hvaniratha, called the luminous, as he holds in both the hands and poizes his knife-like battle-axe, which flies as of itself, and to cleave the Daēvas' skulls, (32) to hew down Angra Mainyu, the wicked, and to hew down Rapine of the bloody spear, to hew down the Daēvas of Mazendran, and every Demon-god. For his splendour and his glory, for his might 33 We worship Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed and the stately, him who smites with victory, both here and not here, and on this entire earth. And we worship all the (gifts) of Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, the mighty, and the strong, whose body is the Māthra. Yea, we worship (all the martial gifts) of Sraosha (Obedience) the mighty, both armed with shielding armour, and a warrior strong of hand, skull-cleaver of the Daēvas, conquering the endowments of the conqueror, the holy conqueror of the conqueror, and (his) victorious powers, and the Ascendancy which it bestows, and we worship this Ascendancy of Sraosha's (the same which conquers theirs); and that of Arsti do we praise as well.

34. And every house by Sraosha guarded do we worship, wherein the blessed friendly Sraosha is befriended and made welcome, where, the holy man is far advanced in holy thoughts, and righteous words and deeds. For his splendour and his glory, for his might, which smites with victory, I will worship him with the Yasna of the Yazads, with a Yasna loud-intoned, him Obedience the blessed, with the consecrated waters, and the good Blessedness, the lofty, and Nairyasangha, the stately, and may he come to us to aid us, he who smites with victory, Obedience the blessed!

YASNA 58 (SP. 57).

THE FSHUSHŌ-MĀTHRA.

1 (Introduction.) (To the increase of our homage and praise of God) we offer this service which, as our defence, may shield us, which is worship with its beneficent results; and Blessedness is with it of a verity, and Piety as well. [(Pāzand) and of this worship the results here mentioned are the well-thought thought, the word well spoken, and the deed well done]; and let this our worship shelter us from the Daēva and from the evil-minded man.

2 And to this worship do we confide our settlements and persons for protection and care, for guarding, and for oversight;

3 And in this worship will we abide, O Ahura Mazda! and with joy. In this worship do we exercise our choices; and to it will we approach, and to it will we belong; yea, to revering worship will we confide our settlements and persons for protection, and for care, for guarding, and for oversight, to such worship as is the praise of such as You.

MĀTHRA.

4 The owner of herds is the righteous (one), and he is victorious when he strikes, and thus he is the best; [(Pāzand) we therefore offer (this) service (for herd-owners)] for the herd-owner is the father of the Kine by the help of him who follows the ritual order; and he is the father of the holy man as well, and of the sanctified creation. He is in verity the bestower of blessings, and to him, O Ye Bountiful Immortals! we render, (and his do we make) Your greatness, Your goodness, and Your (spiritual) beauty, and let this man, the cattle-owner, approach to guard over us; and may he be our watchman together with the Righteous Order, and with store for our nourishment and full generous liberality, together with sharing of the goods, with gentleness, and with Ahura Mazda's sacred Fire!

5 O Ye Bountiful Immortals! as Ye have made us, so do Ye save us, holy men, and saintly women (as we are, and steadfast in the faith) 1. Save us, O Ye Bountiful Immortals! Ye who rule aright and who dispose (of all) aright, for none other do I know, save You; then with Your Righteousness do Ye save us.

6 And we offer hereby our thoughts, and words, and actions, our herds, and men, to the Bountiful Spirit. And may the creative stars of Ahura Mazda, the Creator, shine down on us, and round about us 3 with full herds and healthy settlements, with healthy herds and healthy men, and with all in vigour, and endowed with the blessing of the Lord.. Praise to Thee, O Fire of Ahura Mazda! may'st thou come to (us in) the greatest one of the engrossing interests for the help of the great (effort), for the joy-producing grace of the great (interest of our cause); grant us both Weal and Deathlessness!

8 We sacrifice to the entire collection of the Praises of the Yasna, with the careful structure of their language which has reached the most its object. And we offer (our homage) in our celebrations to Thy body, O Ahura Mazda! the most beautiful of forms, these stars, and to that one, the highest of the high [(Pāzand) such as the sun was called]. Yea, we worship the Praises of the Yasna which were the production of the world of old.

YASNA 59 (SP. 58).
MUTUAL BLESSINGS.

1-17 (See Y. 17, 1-17.) 18-27. (See Y. 26, 1-10.)

28. We worship Verethraghna, the Ahura-made, the victorious blow; and we worship the Saoshyant, who smites with victory; and we sacrifice to this Baresman with its Zaothra and its girdle (which is its band) and which is spread with sanctity. And we sacrifice to (our) own soul(s), and to (our) own Fravashi(s).

29. (See Y. 17, 19.)

30 (The Ratu speaks): O thou good (servant of the Lord)! may that be thine which is better than the good; mayest thou acquire that which is (thine) own in the Zaothra; may'st thou attain to that reward which the Zaothra has been obtaining, who is far advanced in his good thoughts, and words, and deeds.

31 (The Zaothra speaks): May that happen to you (likewise) which is better than the good, and may that not happen which is worse than the evil, and may that likewise not be my lot.

32 As (our) Ahū (is) excellent, so (is our) Ratu (one who rules) from his Righteousness, a creator of mental goodness, and of life's actions done for Mazda, and the Kingdom (is) to Ahura which to the poor will offer a nurturer. A blessing is Asha called the Best, &c. We sacrifice to the Ahuna-vairyā; we sacrifice to Asha Vahista the most beautiful, the Bountiful Immortal. And we sacrifice to the Fshūshō-māthra, the by-spoken. And we sacrifice to the entire collection of the Praises of the Yasna; (yea), to the Yasna Praises which were instituted in the world of yore.

YASNA 60 (SP. 59).

PRAYERS FOR THE DWELLING OF THE SACRIFICER.

1 Thus that better than the good may he approach, who shows to us straight paths of profit appertaining to this bodily life and to the mental likewise, in the eternal realms where dwells Ahura; yea, may he approach it, who is Thy worthy servant, and good citizen, O Great giver Lord!

2 May these blessings approach this house, which are the wise perceptions of the saints, the sacred blessings bestowed through the ritual, their guileless characteristics, together with their recognition of what is due; and may the Righteous Order appear for this village, and the Divine Sovereign Power, together with the benefit and glorious welfare (which ensues).

3 And with these the long enduring prominence of this Religion of Ahura's, the Zarathustrian Faith. And may the Kine 4 be now with greatest speed within (the farm-yard of) this house, most speedily may the rewarded sanctity and the strength of the holy man be here, most speedily as well Ahura's lore.

4. And may the good and heroic and bountiful Fravashis of the saints come here, and may they go hand in hand with us with the healing virtues of (their) blessed gifts as wide-spread as the earth, as far-spread as the rivers, as high-reaching I as the sun, for the furtherance of the better men, for the hindrance of the hostile, and for the abundant growth of riches and of glory.

5 May Sraosha (Obedience) conquer disobedience 3 within this house, and may peace triumph over discord here, and generous giving over avarice, reverence over contempt, speech with truthful words over lying utterance. May the Righteous Order gain the victory over the Demon of the Lie.

6 As in this (house) the Bountiful Immortals seek for good Yasnas and good praises from the blessed Sraosha (who governs here), and as they seek for (one) good sacrifice and act of homage (more especially their own) which is a good offering 5 (to them) for (our) salvation, and a good offering in praise, together with a long continued offering of the entire self, (7) let not then (their) brilliant glory 7 ever desert this house, nor the bright abundance, nor an illustrious 8 offspring legitimately born, nor that long continued companionship which is the furtherance of that good blessedness which teaches concerning glory 1. 8-10 (= Y. 8, 5-7).

11 In order that our minds may be delighted, and our souls the best, let our bodies be glorified as well, and let them, O Mazda! go likewise openly (unto Heaven) as the best world of the saints as devoted to Ahura, (12) and accompanied by Asha Vahista (who is Righteousness the Best), and the most beautiful! And may we see Thee, and may we, approaching, come around about Thee, and attain to entire companionship with Thee! And we sacrifice to the Righteous Order, the best, the most beautiful, the bounteous Immortal!

YASNA 61 (SP. 60).

1 Let us peal 4 forth the Ahuna-vairyā in our liturgy between the heaven and earth, and let us send forth the Asha Vahista in our prayer the same, and the YēNêhâtām. And let us send forth in our liturgies between the heaven and earth the pious and good prayer of the pious man for blessings, (2) for the encounter with, and for the displacement of Angra Mainyu with his creatures which are likewise evil as he is, for he is filled with death (for those whom he has made). Aye, let us send that petition forth for the encounter with, and for the dislodgment of the Kahvaredha and of the individual Kahvaredhas the male, and the female (to the last individual of each), (3) and for the encounter with, and the dislodgment of the Kayadhas, and of the individual Kayadhians, male and female, and of the thieves and robbers, of the Zandas, and the sorcerers, of the covenant breakers, and of those who tamper with the covenants.. Yea, we send it forth for the encounter with, and for the overthrow of the murderers of the saints, and of those who hate and torment us for our Faith, and of those who persecute the ritual, and the tyrant full of death. Yea, let us peal them forth for the encounter with, and the overthrow of the wicked, O Zarathustra Spitama! whoever they may be, whose thoughts, and words, and works are not congenial to the holy ritual laws.

5 And how shall we drive the Demon of the Lie from hence from us? Aye, how shall we, the prophets who are yet to serve and save (thy people), drive the Drug from hence, so that we, having power over her as being utterly without power, may drive her hence with blow from the seven Karshvars, for the encounter with, and for the dislodgment of the entire evil world?

YASNA 62 (SP. 61).

TO THE FIRE.

1 I offer my sacrifice and homage to thee, the Fire, as a good offering, and an offering with our hail of salvation, even as an offering of praise with benedictions, to thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son! Meet for sacrifice art thou, and worthy of (our) homage. And as meet for sacrifice, and thus worthy of our homage, may'st thou be in the houses of men (who worship Mazda). Salvation be to this man who worships thee in verity and truth, with wood in hand, and Baresman ready, with flesh in hand, and holding too the mortar.

2 And may'st thou be (ever) fed with wood as the prescription orders. Yea, may'st thou have thy perfume justly, and thy sacred butter without fail, and thine andirons regularly placed. Be of full-age as to thy nourishment, of the canon's age as to the measure of thy food, O Fire, Ahura Mazda's son!

3 Be now aflame within this house; be ever without fail in flame; be all ashine within this house; be on thy growth within this house; for long time be thou thus to the furtherance of the heroic (renovation), to the completion of (all) progress, yea, even till the good heroic (millennial) time when that renovation shall have become complete.

4 Give me, O Fire, Ahura Mazda's son! a speedy glory, speedy nourishment, and speedy booty, and abundant glory, abundant nourishment, abundant booty, an expanded mind, and nimbleness of tongue for soul and understanding, even an understanding continually growing in its largeness, and that never wanders 3, and long enduring virile power,

5 An offspring sure of foot, that never sleeps on watch [not for a third part of the day, or night], and that rises quick from bed, and likewise a wakeful offspring, helpful to nurture, or reclaim, legitimate, keeping order in men's meetings, (yea,) drawing men to assemblies through their influence and word, grown to power, skillful, redeeming others from oppression, served by many followers, which may advance my line (in prosperity and fame), and (my) Vis, and my Zantu, and (my) province, (yea, an offspring) which may deliver orders to the Province as (firm and righteous rulers).

6 And may'st thou grant me, O Fire, Ahura Mazda's Son! that whereby instructors may be (given) me, now and for evermore, (giving light to me of Heaven) the best life of the saints, brilliant, all glorious. And may I have experience of the good reward, and the good renown, and of the long forecasting preparation of the soul.

7 The Fire of Ahura Mazda addresses this admonition to all for whom he cooks the night and morning (meal). From all these, O Spitama! he wishes to secure good care, and healthful care (as guarding for salvation), the care of a true praiser.

8 At both the hands of all who come by me, I, the Fire, keenly look: What brings the mate to his mate (thus I say to him), the one who walks at large, to him who sits at home? [We worship the bounteous Fire, the swift-driving charioteer.]

9 And if this man who passes brings him wood brought (with good measure that is) with sacred care, or if he brings the Baresman spread with sanctity, or the Hadhānāpata plant, then afterwards Ahura Mazda's Fire will bless him, contented, not offended, and in (its) satisfaction (saying thus).

10 May a herd of kine be with thee, and a multitude of men, may an active mind go with thee, and an active soul as well. As a blest soul may'st thou live through thy life, the nights which thou shall live. This is the blessing of the Fire for him who brings it wood (well) dried, sought out for flaming, purified with the earnest blessing of the sacred ritual truth.

11 We strive after the flowing on of the good waters, and their ebb as well, and the sounding of their waves, desiring their propitiation; I desire to approach them with my praise. 12 = Y. 3, 24, 25.

(See Y. 46, 3; Y. 50, 6-11.)

YASNA 65 (SP. 64).

TO ARDVI SŪRA ANĀHITA, AND THE WATERS.

1 I will praise the water Ardvi Sūra Anāhita, the wide-flowing (as it is) and healing in its influence, efficacious against the Daēvas, devoted to Ahura's lore, and to be worshipped with sacrifice within the corporeal world, furthering all living things 1 (?) and holy, helping on the increase and improvement of our herds and settlements, holy, and increasing our wealth, holy, and helping on the progress of the Province, holy (as she is)?

2. (Ardvi Sūra Anāhita) who purifies the seed of all male beings, who sanctifies the wombs of all women to the birth, who makes all women fortunate in labour, who brings all women a regular and timely flow of milk, (3) (Ardvi Sūra Anāhita) with a volume sounding from afar, which is alone equal in its bulk to all the waters which flow forth upon earth, which flows down with mighty volume from high Hukairyā to the sea Vouru-kasha.

4. And all the gulfs in Vouru-kasha are stirred (when it falls down), all the middle doth well up when Ardvi Sūra Anāhita rushes in, when she plunges foaming in to them, she, whose are a thousand tributaries, and a thousand outlets, and each as it flows in, or rushes out, is a forty days' ride in length to a rider mounted well.

5 And the (chief) outlet to this one water (Ardvi Sūra Anāhita) goes apart, dividing to all the seven Karshvars. And this outlet to my river, Ardvi Sūra Anāhita, bears off its waters always in summer and in winter. This my river purifies the seed of men, and wombs of women, and women's milk 4.

6 Let the saints' Fravashis now draw near, those of the saints who live, or have lived, of those born, or yet to be born; yea, let them come near which have borne these waters up stream from the nearest ones (that lie below as the outlet pours away 1).

7 Let not our waters be for the man of ill intent, of evil speech, or deeds, or conscience; let them not be for the offender of a friend, not for an insulter of a Magian, nor for one who harms the workmen, nor for one who hates his kindred. And let not our good waters (which are not only good, but) best, and Mazda-made, help on the man who strives to mar our settlements which are not to be corrupted, nor him who would mar our bodies, (our) uncorrupted (selves), (8) nor the thief, or bludgeon-bearing ruffian who would slaughter the disciples, nor a sorcerer, nor a burier of dead bodies, nor the jealous, nor the niggard, nor the godless heretic who slays disciples, nor the evil tyrant among men. Against these may our waters come as torments. As destructive ways these come, may they come to him who has done those first (foul evils), as to him who does the last 3.

9 O waters! rest still within your places while the invoking priest shall offer. Shall not the invoker make offering to these good waters, and with the inculcated words? (And how shall this be done?) Shall he not be tongue-fettered, if he offers else than with the ritual? Shall (not) the words be so delivered as the Aêthrapaiti teaches? Where shall the blessings be (inserted)? Where the supplications with confessions? Where the gifts of those that offer?

10. (It shall be only thus) as Ahura Mazda showed before to Zarathustra, and as Zarathustra taught the corporeal worlds (the men on earth)! Thou shalt pray the first petition to the waters, O Zarathustra, and after that thou shalt offer the Zaothras to the waters, sanctified, and sought out with pious care; and thou shalt pronounce these words (as follows, thus): (11) O ye waters, I beseech of you this favour; and grant ye me this great one in whose bestowal ye flow down to me for the bettering (of my state), with a never-failing truth. O ye waters, I beseech of you for wealth of many kinds (which gives) power (to its holder 1), and for an offspring self-dependent whom multitudes will bless, and for whose wasting, or defeat, or death, or vengeful punishment, or overtaking, no one prays.

12. And this do I beseech of you, O waters, this, O ye lands, and this, ye plants! This wealth and offspring I beseech of You, O Ye Bountiful Immortals, who rule aright, who dispose (of all) aright, O Ye good beings, male and female, givers of good things; and this I beseech of you, O ye beneficent, mighty, and overwhelming Fravashis of the saints, and this (of thee), O Mithra of the wide pastures, and this of thee, O blest and stately Sraosha; and of thee, O Rashnu the most just, and of thee, O Fire, Ahura Mazda's son; and of thee, O lofty lord, the royal Apâm-napât, of the fleet horses; ayê, of You all, ye Yazads, bestowers of the better gifts and holy.

13. And this do ye therefore grant me, O ye holy waters, and ye lands!

14 And grant me likewise what is still greater than this all, and still better than this all, and more beautiful, and more exceeding precious (and that is, Immortality and Welfare 1), O Ye Yazads, holy and ruling mightily, and powerful at once, and grant it speedily according to this Gâthic (?) word: (Yea), by veritable grace let that be done for us which is most promotive of our weal.

15. And according to this further word again: Grant me, Thou who art maker of the Kine, the plants, and the waters, Immortality and likewise Weal, O Ahura Mazda, Thou most bounteous Spirit. And grant me these two eternal gifts through Thy Good Mind in the doctrine.

16-18 (See Y. 15, 2; Y. 561, 3-4.)

YASNA 66 (SP. 65).

TO THE AHURIAN ONE 5.

1 I am now offering this Zaothra here with sanctity 6, together with the Haoma and the flesh, and the Hadhânaêpata lifted up with sacred regularity as to thee, O Ahurian One, for the propitiation of Ahura Mazda, of the Bountiful Immortals, of Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, and of the Fire of Ahura Mazda, the ritual's lofty lord. 2. Y. 7, 5-19. 3. Y. 22, 28, 24-27.

YASNA 67 (SP. 66).

1-4 (See Y. XXIII, 1-4, replacing 'I desire to approach with sanctity' by 'I offer with sanctity'; see also Y. 7, 24.) 5-7. (See Y. 38, 3-5.)

YASNA 68 (SP. 67).

TO THE AHURIAN ONE, AND THE WATERS.

1 We offer this to thee, O Ahurian (daughter) of Ahura! as a help for life. If we have offended thee, let this Zaothra then attain to thee (for satisfaction), for it is thine with its Haoma, and its milk, and its Hadhânaêpata.

2. And may'st thou approach to me for milk and for libation, O Zaothra! as health, for healing, and for progress, for growth and in preparation for ceremonial merit, for good renown, for equanimity, and for that victory which makes the settlements advance.

3 Yea, we worship thee with sacrifice, O thou Ahurian (daughter) of Ahura with the Zaothras of the good thought; and we worship, O Ahura, one with the Zaothras of the good word and deed (4) for the enlightenment of the thoughts, and words, and actions, for preparation for the soul, for the settler's advance, and to prepare the saints endowed with ritual merit.

5 And grant me, O thou Ahurian One! Heaven, and to have an offspring manly and legitimate, who may promote my house, my village, my tribe and province, and the authority thereof.

6 We sacrifice to thee, O thou Ahurian one! And we sacrifice to the sea Vouru-kasha, and to all waters upon earth, whether standing, or running, or waters of the well, or spring-waters which perennially flow, or the drippings of the rains, or the irrigations of canals. With this hymn from the (spirit of) the Yasna do we worship thee, and with the homage which it offers, as it is the most legitimate Yasna, and homage of them (all) because of Righteousness the Best. We sacrifice to the good waters, and to the best, which Mazda created. 8. And we sacrifice to the two, to the milk and to the libation, which make the waters flow, and the plants sprout forth, opposing therein the Dragon Daêva-made, for the arrest of that cheat the Pairika, and to contradict the insulting malice of the Ashemaogha (the disturber and destroyer of our Faith), and of the unholy tyrant full of death, and of the human Daêva (worshipper) of hateful malice (and intent).

9 And may'st thou hear our sacrificial chants, O thou Ahurian (daughter) of Ahura! Yea, be propitiated by our Yasna, O Ahurian one! and so may'st thou be present at our Yasna; may'st thou come to us to help, as we chant our full-offered Yast, with the full offering of Zaothras.

10. If any man shall sacrifice to you, O ye good waters, the Ahurian ones of Ahura! with the best and most fitting Zaothras offered piously, (11) to that man ye give both splendour and glory, with health and vigour of the body and prominence of form last), the best life of the saints, shining, all glorious.

12 And to me also do ye now give it, to me who am offering this Yasna as a priest. (Response) And to us Mazdayasnians who are likewise offering sacrifice, do ye grant; yea, to him ye give possessions which entail abundant glory, and a legitimate scion, and a long enduring life, and (Heaven at the) (both the desire and knowledge of the path that is correct), to us colleagues, and disciples, Aêthrapaitis and Aêthryas, men and women as well as children, and maidens of the field, (13) who think good only, for the overwhelming of oppression and of malice in the raids of the invader, and in face of foes who hate. Grant to us both the desire of, and the knowledge of that straightest path, the straightest because of Righteousness, and of (Heaven) the best life of the Saints, shining, all glorious. As the Ahû is excellent, so is the Ratu (one who rules) from the Righteous Order, a creator of mental goodness and of life's actions done for Mazda. And the kingdom (is) for Ahura, which to the poor may offer nurture.

14 (The Zaothra speaks): I beseech with my benediction for a safe abode, for a joyful and a long abode for the dwellers in this village from whence these Zaothras (which I offer come). And I pray in my benediction for a safe abode, and a quiet and a joyful one, and a long abiding to every Mazdayasnian village, and for a succour even with my wants, for a succour with salutations of salvation, and for one with praises, O Fire 4! and for thee, O Ahurian one of Ahura! do I ask the fullest Yast.

15 And I pray for Râman Hvâstra for this Province, and for healthfulness and healing. And I pray for it with my blessing for you pious men, for all. And I pray for him who is saintly with (true) goodness, whosoever he may be, between heaven and the earth, for a thousand healing remedies, and for ten thousand of the same.

16-19 (See Y. 8, 5-8.)

20. Thus may it happen as I pray.

21. And by this may I gain (that) blessing, the good Blessedness (our sanctity rewarded). And we address, and we invoke religious zeal and capability, and the waters with our Yasna thus: O ye good waters! since (they are) yours, do ye, as you are asked, grant splendour and grant glory, ye who are well able so to give; and do ye, O ye waters! grant (once more) that helpful blessing which was gained from you of old!

22 Praise (be) to Ahura Mazda, and to the Bountiful Immortals. Praise (be) to Mithra of the wide pastures. Praise to the fleet-horsed sun. Praise to (the star which so we name, and with this sun) Ahura Mazda's eyes. Praise to the Kine (the herds of blessed gift). Praise to Gaya (Maretan) and to the Fravashi of Zarathustra (first of) saints; yea, praise to the entire creation of the holy (and the clean), to those now living, and to those just passing into life, and to those of days to come.

23 And do Thou then Ahura, as in answer to these our prayers and songs of praise, cause us to prosper to salvation through Thy Good Mind, the Sovereign Power, and Thy Righteous Order (in Thy ritual and law)!

YASNA 69 (SP. 68).

This chapter is composed of fragments: see Y. 15, 2; and Y. 51, 1 and 22.

YASNA 70 (SP. 69).

TO THE BOUNTIFUL IMMORTALS, AND THE INSTITUTIONS OF RELIGION.

1 I would worship these (the Bountiful Immortals) with my sacrifice, those who rule aright, and who dispose (of all) aright, and this one (especially) I would approach with my praise, (Ahura Mazda). He is thus hymned (in our praise-songs). Yea, we worship in our sacrifice that deity and lord, who is Ahura Mazda, the Creator, the gracious helper, the maker of all good things; and we worship in our sacrifice Zarathustra Spîtâma, that chieftain (of the rite).

2 And we would declare those institutions established for us, exact (and undeviating as they are). And I would declare forth those of Ahura Mazda, those of the Good Mind, and of Asha Vahista (who is Righteousness the Best), and those of Kshatrapa-vairya (the Realm to be desired), and those of the Bountiful Âramaiti (the Piety within us), and those of Weal and Immortality, and those which appertain to the body of the Kine, and to the Kine's soul, and those which appertain to Ahura Mazda's Fire, and those of Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, and of Rashnu the most just, and those of Mithra of the wide pastures, and of (the good and) holy Wind, and of the good Mazdayasnian Religion, and of the good and pious Prayer for blessings, and those of the good and pious Prayer which frees one from belying, and the good and pious Prayer for blessing against unbelieving words.

4 (And these we would declare) in order that we may attain unto that speech which is uttered with (true) religious zeal, or that we may be as prophets of the provinces, that we may succour him who lifts his voice (for Mazda), that we may be as prophets who smite with victory, the befriended of Ahura Mazda, and persons the most useful to Him, holy men (indeed) who think good thoughts, and speak good words, and do good deeds.

5 That he may approach us with the Good Mind, and that (our souls) may advance in good, let it thus come; yea, 'how may my soul advance in good? let it thus advance.'

6 We praise the flood and ebb of the good waters, and their roar, and that high Ahura, the royal Apâm-napât, the glittering one, of the fleet horses; and this for the sacrifice, and homage, and propitiation, and praise of the entire holy creation; and may Sraosha (Obedience) be here (to aid us).

7. (Yea), we sacrifice to Sraosha, Obedience the blessed.

YASNA 71 (SP. 70).

THE YASNA CONCLUDING.

1 Frashastra, the holy, asked the saintly Zarathustra: Answer me, O thou most eminent Zarathustra, what is (in very truth) the memorised recital of the rites? What is the completed delivery of the Gâthas?

2 Upon this Zarathustra said: (It is as follows.) We worship Ahura Mazda with our sacrifice (as) the holy lord of the ritual order; and we sacrifice to Zarathustra likewise as to a holy lord of the ritual order; and we sacrifice also to the Fravashi of Zarathustra, the saint. And we sacrifice to the Bountiful Immortals, (the guardians) of the saints.

3 And we sacrifice to (all) the good heroic and bounteous Fravashis of the saints, of the bodily (world on earth), and of the mental (those in Heaven). And we worship that one of ritual lords who attains the most his ends; and we sacrifice to that one of the Yazads, lords of the ritual order, who is the most strenuous, who gains the most, who reaches most to what he seeks, even that well-timed Prayer which is the prayer of that holy ritual lord, and which has approached the nearest (to us for our help).

4 We sacrifice to Ahura Mazda, the holy lord of the ritual order, and we worship His entire body 1, and we worship the Bountiful Immortals all; and we worship all the ritual lords. And we sacrifice to the entire Mazdayasnian Faith. And we worship all the sacred metres.

5 And we worship the entire bounteous Mâthra, even the entire system of the Faith set up against the Daêvas; and we worship its complete and long descent. And we sacrifice to all the holy Yazads, heavenly and earthly; and we worship all the good, heroic, and bountiful Fravashis of the saints.

6. And we worship all the holy creatures which Mazda created, and which possess the holy institutions, which were established holy in their nature, which possess the holy lore, and the holy sacrifice, which are holy, and for the holy, and to be worshipped by the holy. And we worship all the five Gâthas, the holy ones, and the entire Yasna [its flow and its ebb, and the sounding (of its chants)].

7, 8 And we sacrifice to all the Praises of the Yasna, and to all the words which Mazda spake, which are the most fatal to evil thoughts, and words, and deeds; and which designate the evil thought, and word, and deed, and which then cut down and fell every evil thought, and word, and deed. [(Pâzand.) One would think of it as when the fire cuts, sucks out, and consumes the dry wood which has been sanctified and carefully selected (for its flame).] And we sacrifice to the strength, the victory, the glory, and the speed of all these words (as they go forth for their work).

9. And we sacrifice to all the springs of water, and to the water-streams as well, and to growing plants, and forest-trees 1, and to the entire land and heaven, and to all the stars, and to the moon and sun, even to all the lights without beginning (to their course). And we sacrifice to all cattle, and to the aquatic beasts, and to the beasts that live on land, and to all that strike the wing, and to the beasts that roam the plains, and to those of cloven hoof.

10 And to all Thy good and holy female (creatures) in the creation do we sacrifice, (O Thou who art) Ahura Mazda 3 the skilful maker! on account of which Thou hast made many things and good things (in Thy world). And we sacrifice to those male creatures in the creation which are Thine and which are meet for sacrifice because of Asha Vahista (of Righteousness the Best). And we sacrifice to all the mountains brilliant with holiness, and to all the lakes which Mazda created, and to all fires. And we sacrifice to all the truthful and correctly spoken words, even those which have both rewards and Piety within them. Yea, we worship (you) for protection and shielding, for guarding and watching; and may ye be to me for preparation. I call upon the Gâthas here, the bountiful holy ones, ruling in the ritual order; yea, we sacrifice to you, (O ye Gáthas!) for protection and shielding, for guarding and watching. Mine may ye be as a preparation. For me, for (mine) own soul I call on (you), and we would worship (you) for protection and for shielding, for guarding and for watching.

12. And we sacrifice to Weal, the complete welfare, holy and ruling in its course in the ritual order; and we sacrifice to Deathlessness (the immortal being of the good), holy, and ruling in the ritual order. And we sacrifice to the question of the Lord, and to His lore, the holy chiefs, and to the heroic Haptanghāiti, the holy lord of the ritual order.

13, 14 (Frasha.) Let the holy Zarathustra himself seek out a friend and a protector. And I say to thee (O Zarathustra!) to make to thee a friend holy beyond the holy, and truer than the true, for that is the better thing; for he is evil who is the best to the evil, and he is holy to whom the holy is a friend, for these are the best of words, those which Ahura Mazda spoke to Zarathustra. And do thou, O Zarathustra! pronounce these words at the last ending of (thy) life.

15. For if, O Zarathustra! thou shalt pronounce these words at the last ending of (thy) life I, Ahura Mazda, will keep your soul away from Hell. Yea, so far away shall I hold it as is the breadth and extension of the earth [(Pázand) and the earth is as wide as it is long].

16 As thou dost desire, O holy (one)! so shalt thou be, holy shalt thou cause (thy) soul to pass over the Kinvat Bridge; holy shalt thou come into Heaven. Thou shalt intone the Gátha Ustavaiti, reciting the salvation hail.

17 We sacrifice to the active man, and to the man of good intent, for the hindrance of darkness, of wasting of the strength and life, and of distraction. And we sacrifice to health and healing, to progress and to growth, for the hindrance of impurity, and of the diseases of the skin.

18 And we sacrifice to the (Yasna's) ending words, to those which end the Gáthas. And we sacrifice to the bounteous Hymns themselves which rule in the ritual course, the holy ones.

And we sacrifice to the Praise-songs of the Yasna which were the products of the world of yore; yea, we sacrifice to all the Staota-Yésnya hymns. And we sacrifice to (our) own soul and to (our) Fravashi.

(19-21 See Y. 6, 14-16.)

22. I praise, invoke, and I weave my song to the good, heroic, bountiful Fravashis of the saints, to those of the house, and of the village, the district and the province, and to those of the Zarathustrótemas.

23. And we sacrifice to the Fire, Ahura Mazda's son, the holy ritual chief. And we sacrifice to this Baresman having the Zaothra with it, and its girdle with it, and spread with sanctity, the holy ritual chief. And we sacrifice to Apám-nápát, and to Nairya-sangha, and to that Yazad, the wise man's swift Curse. And we sacrifice to the souls of the dead, [which are the Fravashis of the saints].

24. And we sacrifice to that lofty Lord who is Ahura Mazda Himself.

25 And we pray (again) for the Kine (once more) with these gifts and (ceremonial) actions which are the best.

26-28. (See Y. 8, 5-7.)

VISPARAD 1.

I announce, and (will) complete (my Yasna) to the lords of the spiritual creatures, and to the lords of the earthly creatures, to the lords of those which live under the waters, and to the lords of those which live upon land, to the lords of those which strike the wing, and to the lords of those which roam (wild) upon the plains, to the lords of those of (home-beasts) of the cloven hoof, holy lords of the ritual order.

2 I announce, and I (will) complete (my Yasna) to the Yearly festivals, the lords of the ritual order, to Maidhyô-zaremaya, the milk-giver, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Maidhyô-shema, the pasture-giver, and to Paitishahya, the corn-giver, and to Ayáthrima, the furtherer or breeder, the spender of the seed of males, and to Maidhyáirya the cold, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to Hamaspathmaédhaya, the especial time for ritual deeds, holy lords of the ritual order.

3 I announce, and I (will) complete (my Yasna) to the settlements of the future one, when the future shall produce them as it were anew, and I celebrate and will complete (my Yasna) to the Praises of the Yasna collected, completed, and much-offered, and to the Myzadas of the saints of the ritual, male and female.

4 And I announce, and will complete (my Yasna) to the Seasons, the lords of the ritual order, and to the heard recital of the Ahuna-vairya, and to Righteousness the Best, to him who has our praise, and to the YêNhé hâtám, the frequent chant of sacrifice, the holy, and ruling in the ritual order.

5 And I announce and complete (my Yasna) to the Gátha Ahunavaiti, the holy, ruling in the ritual order, and to those women who bring forth many sons of many talents, Mazda-given, and holy lords of the ritual order, and to that (chant) which has its Ahú and its Ratu (before it in the Yasna). And I celebrate, and will complete (my sacrifice) to the Yasna Haptanghāiti, holy, and ruling in the ritual order, [and to the water Ardvī Anáhita].

6 And I announce, and I (will) complete (my Yasna) to the Gátha Ustavaiti, the holy, ruling in the ritual order, and to the mountains which shine with holiness, the abundantly brilliant and Mazda-made, the holy lords of the ritual order. And I announce, and (will) complete (my Yasna) to the Gátha Spentā-mainyu, the holy, ruling in the ritual order; and I celebrate and will complete (my Yasna) to Verethraghna (the blow of victory) Ahura-given, the holy lord of the ritual order.

7 And I announce, and (will) complete (my Yasna) to the Gátha Vohu-khshathra, holy, ruling in the ritual order, and to Mithra of the wide pastures, and to Ráman Hvástra, the holy lords of the ritual order. And I celebrate and will complete my Yasna to the Gátha Vahistóisti, the holy, ruling in the ritual order. And I celebrate and will complete my Yasna to the good and pious Prayer for blessings, the benediction of the pious, and to that Yazad, the redoubted and swift Curse of the wise, the holy lord of the ritual order.

8 And I announce, and (will) complete (my Yasna) to the Airyemá-ishyó, the holy lord of the ritual order, and to the Fshúshô-máthra, and to that lofty lord Hadhaokhdha, the holy lord of the ritual order.

9 And I announce, and (will) complete (my Yasna) to the questions asked of Ahura, and to the lore of Ahura, to the Ahurian Dahvyuma (Dahyuma), and to the Ahurian Zarathustrótema, holy lords of the ritual order, and to the farm-house with its pastures which give pasture to the Kine of blessed gift, and to the holy cattle-breeding man.

VISPARAD 2.

1 In this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the lords of (the ritual) which are spiritual with my praise; and I desire to approach the earthly lords (as well). And I desire to approach the lords of the water with my praise, and the lords of the land; and I desire to approach with my praise those chiefs which strike the wing, and those which wander wild at large, and those of the cloven hoof, who are chiefs of the ritual (in their turn).

2 In this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the holy Yearly festivals with my praise, the lords of the ritual order, Maidhyô-zaremaya, the milk-giver, and Maidhyô-shema, the pasture-giver, and Paitishahya, the corn-giver, and Ayáthrima the breeder, the spender of the seed of males, Maidhyáirya, the cold, Hamaspathmaédhaya, the especial time for ritual duties, the holy lords of the ritual order.

3 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the future one of the settlements with my praise, the holy lord of the ritual order, when the future one shall produce (them as it were) anew. And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach all these chieftains of the ritual with my praise whom Ahura Mazda mentioned to Zarathustra for sacrifice and homage because of Asha Vahista (of Righteousness the Best).

4 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach Thee 1, the lord, with my praise, Thou who art Ahura Mazda, the spiritual lord and regulator of the spiritual creatures [the lord and regulator of the spiritual creation]. And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach thee, Zarathustra Spítáma, with my praise, the terrestrial (lord and regulator) of the terrestrial creation, [the lord and regulator of the terrestrial creation].

5 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the man who recites the ritual rites with my praise, who is maintaining thus the thought well thought, and the word well spoken, and the deed well done, and Piety the bountiful, even him who maintains the Máthra of the Saoshyant, by whose actions the settlements are advanced in the righteous order.

6 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the (yearly) Seasons with my praise, the holy lords of the ritual order, and the Ahuna-vairya as it is recited, and Asha Vahista when he is lauded, and the YêNhé hâtám, the frequent chant of sacrifice.

7 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the Gátha Ahunavaiti with my praise. And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to worship those women with my praise who are well-portioned, and of good parentage, and who are stately in their growth; yea, I desire to approach that chant in my praise which has the Alva and the Ratu, [for He is verily the one who has the Ahú and the Ratu, that is, Ahura Mazda]. And I desire to approach the heroic Yasna Haptanghāiti in my praise, the holy, and ruling in the ritual order; and Ardvī Súra Anáhita, the holy, and ruling in the ritual order.

8 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the Gátha Ustavaiti with my praise, the holy, and ruling in the ritual order; and I desire to approach those mountains with my praise which shine with holiness, abundantly glorious, Mazda-made, the holy lords of the ritual order, and the Gátha Spentā-mainyu, and Verethraghna, the blow of victory, Mazda-given, the holy lord of the ritual order, and the Victorious Ascendency (which it bestows).

9 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the Gátha Vohu-khshathra with my praise, the holy, and ruling in the ritual order, and Mithra of the wide pastures, and Ráman Hvástra, and the Gátha Vahistóisti, and the pious and good prayer for blessings, and the pious and holy man, and that Yazad, the redoubted and swift curse of the wise.

10 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the Airyemá-ishyó with my praise, and the Fshúshô-máthra, and that lofty lord, the Hadhaokhdha, holy lord(s) of the ritual order.

11 And in this Zaothra with this Baresman I desire to approach the question asked of Ahura, and the lore of the Lord (which he reveals in answer), and the farm-house of the man possessed of pastures, and the pasture produced for the Kine of blessed gift, and the holy cattle-breeding man.

VISPARAD 3.

BEGINNING OF THE HAOMA OFFERING; ROLL-CALL OF THE PRIEST.

1 (The Zaothar speaks.) (I call for) the Hávanan, and would have him here. (The Ratu answers.) I will come (and fulfil his duties). (The Zaothar speaks.) I would have the Átarevakhsha here. (The Ratu answers.) I will come (and fulfil the services which fall to his charge). (The Zaothar.) I would have the Frabaretar. (The Ratu.) I will come (and fulfil the services which fall to his charge). (The Zaothar.) I would have the Áberet present. (The Ratu.) I will come (for him). (The Zaothar.) I would have the Ásnatar. (The Ratu.) I will come (and do the duties which he serves). (The Zaothar.) I would have the Raéthwiskar to be here. (The Ratu.) I will come (for him). (The Zaothar.) I would have the Sraoshávareza present, the wisest one, the most correct and veracious in his speech. (The Ratu.) I will come.

2 (The Zaothar.) I would have the Fire-priest to be here, and the warrior, and the thrifty tiller of the earth, and the house-lord, and the lords of the Vis and the Zantu.

3 And I summon the youth of holy thoughts, words and works, and of good conscience; (yea), the youth of good speech, given (in marriage) to his kin. And I summon the province-ranger, and the itinerant of many arts, and the house-mistress.

4 And I summon the woman advanced in her holy thoughts, and words, and deeds, and well subordinated, whose ruler is her lord, the holy one, who is (as) the bounteous Áramaiti; (yea), I summon even Thy wives, O Ahura! And I summon likewise the holy man advanced in his good thoughts, and words, and deeds, who is learned in pious lore, and innocent of the Kayadha, and by whose deeds the settlements are furthered in the righteous order.

5 Yea, we summon you, whoever you may be, if only chiefs of the Mazdayasnians; and we summon the Bounteous Immortals, and the pious Saoshyants (the prophets for our help), the most correct and truthful in their speech, the most zealous, the most glorious in their thoughts, the greatest ones, and the powerful; and we summon the Fire-priests, and the warriors, and the diligent husbandman of the Mazdayasnian Faith.

6 (The Zaothar.) As an Ahú to be (revered and) chosen, the Átarevakhsha (announcing) speaks forth to me. (The Ratu.) So let the Ratu from his righteousness, holy and learned, speak forth. (The Ratu.) As an Aha to be (revered and) chosen, the Zaothar (announcing) speaks forth to me. (The Zaothar.) So let the Ratu from (his) righteousness, holy and learned, speak forth. (The Ratu.) Thou art the announcer for us, O Fire-priest! [(Pázand.) It is the Zaothar (who is meant).] (The Zaothar.) I will come as this Zaothar, and recite the Staota Yésnya with memorised intoning, chanting, and praise.

VISPARAD 4 (SP. 5).

1 (Yea.) we sacrifice to the thoughts of the mind, and to the good wisdom, and to the good and blessed sanctity, and to the good religious knowledge, and to good health (of soul and body). [At their (several) seasons, and with the presence of seasonable circumstances, they are hymned.]

2 Confession is to be made for the Kine; we, Zarathustrian Mazdayasnians, celebrate at the sacrificial time for the Myazda-offering, at the time for the Ratufriti, the prayer for blessings, for the sacrificial worship, homage, propitiation, and praise of the entire creation of the holy (and the clean).

VISPARAD 5 (SP. 6).

1 I come to You, O Ye Bountiful Immortals! as a praiser priest, and invoker, as a memoriser, reciting (Your ritual), and as a chanter for Your sacrifice and homage, Your propitiation, and Your praise; (yea, for Yours) the Bountiful Immortals, and for our preparation, (O ye holy Saoshyants!) and for your well-timed prayer for blessings, and your sanctification, and for our victorious smiting of our foes, beneficial (as it is) for our souls, for ours, the Saoshyants, (with you), and holy.

2 And I make my offering to You, O Ye Bountiful Immortals, who rule aright, and who dispose (of all) aright! (Yea), I offer You the flesh of my very body, and all the blessings of my life as well.

3 And I confess my belief in Thee, O Ahura Mazda! and as a Mazdayasnian of the order of Zarathustra, and in accordance with his Faith.

VISPARAD 6 (SP. 7).

1 In accordance with the precept, with praise, and with the joyful reception of grace, with Zaothras intelligently offered, with sacrificial words correctly spoken, I call the good Amesha Spenta by their names of beauty; yea, I worship the Bountiful Immortals by their beautiful names, with the blessing of the ritual Order, with the longing blessing of Righteousness the good.

VISPARAD 7 (SP. 8).

1 We worship the (sacrificial) words correctly uttered, and Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, and the good Ashi, (the best order of our rites), and Nairyasangha. And we worship the victorious Peace as the unprostrated and unmoved. And we sacrifice to the Fravashis of the saints, and to the Kinvat Bridge, and to the Garô Nãmâna of Ahura, even Heaven, the best world of the saints, the shining and all glorious!

2 And we sacrifice to that better path that leads to that Best World (as well). And we worship Arstât (Justice) the good, which helps the settlements to advance and flourish, benefiting them thereby, that Arstât which is the Mazdayasnian Faith; and (with her) we worship Rashnu the most just, and Mithra of the wide pastures. And we worship Parendi the wealthy, wealthy with a wealth of thoughts, with a throng of words, and with a breadth of actions, [for she makes our persons agile (for good thoughts and words and actions)].

3 And we worship that virile defensive Heroism which possesses men who think beforehand, and heroic men, which is fleetier than the fleet, stronger than the strong, which comes to him who is endowed by God, which, when especially made theirs by men, produces one who is a freer of the body. And we worship Sleep, the Mazda-made, the gladdener of the herd and men.

4 And we worship those things in the creation of the holy which are the ancient institutions, those formed before the sky, the water, the land, the plants, and the Kine of blessed gift. And we worship the sea Vouru-kasha, and the stormy wind which is made by Mazda, and the shining heaven, of old created, the first-made earthly object of (all) the earthly world.

5 And we worship thee, the Fire, O Ahura Mazda's son! the holy lord of the ritual order, and this Baresman, having the Zaothra with it, and the girdle with it, spread out with sanctity, the holy ritual chief, and we worship Apâm-napât (the son of waters).

VISPARAD 8 (SP. 9).

1 With this word be Thou approached, with the proper word be Thou present here, Thou who art Ahura Mazda, the holy, together with the good Yazads who are the Bountiful Immortals, who rule aright, and dispose (of all) aright, together with fifty, and a hundred, and a thousand, and ten thousand, and millions, and yet more.

2 And to Him who rules the best let the Kingdom be!

VISPARAD 9 (SP. 10) 3.

1-3 (I desire to offer my homage and my praise) to the offered Haomas and Zaothras, and to those also which shall yet be offered, which smite victoriously, and are foes of hatred, and following in company (as they do) with the healing virtues of sanctity, following also in company with those of Kisti (religious knowledge), and with the remedies of Mazda, and with those of Zarathustra and the Zarathustrôtêma, and to the offered Haomas and Zaothras which accompany those remedies which belong to the holy disciple well versed in good devices, and accompanying those of the itinerant also versed in good devices, and accompanying those likewise of the good Mazdayasnian Faith, and those of the pious and beneficent Prayer for blessings, and of the pious and good veracity, and of the pious word against unbelief, for information and explanation, for preparation and devotion, for the libation and complete offering, for the complete recital of the liturgy memorised as well; and to those Haomas which are pungent, bounteous, holy, and offered with sanctity (and for a blessing), to those which are yet to be offered with sanctity, and which are now being celebrated, and which are likewise in the future to be celebrated, to those which are being pressed with sanctity, and to those which are yet to be pressed, (to these I desire to approach, and to express my homage and my praise).

4. And I desire to express my homage and my praise to the strength of the strong, and to the victorious blow of the mighty, to the powerful Rectitude and Blessedness, to Kisti and the Priority for the powerful Ascendency, and to these powerful Yazads which are the Bountiful Immortals, who rule aright, and dispose of all aright, ever-living, ever-helpful, who, male and female, dwell together with the Good Mind,

(to these I desire in my homage and my praises to approach); (yea, I desire to approach for homage and praises toward) our Universal Weal and Immortality, to the body of the Kine, and to the Kine's Soul. (And I desire to approach) the Fire of the spoken name, and toward that farm-house which is sanctified and which has fields and comfort, and mercy (for the poor); as a praiser with praise for the sacrifice, homage, which is this praise of Ahura Mazda, of the Bountiful Immortals, and of the holy and lofty Lord, for the sacrifice, and homage of the Lord that most attains his ends, and which is this praise of that blessedness which has approached us, and of that well-timed prayer for blessings offered in the ritual, which is likewise the praise of the Mâthra Spenta (the bounteous word of reason), and of the Mazdayasnian Religion, and the Praises of the Yasnas, which is also that of all the lords of the ritual, and of all the well-timed prayers for blessings, for the sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and glorification of the entire creation of the holy (and the clean).

VISPARAD 10 (SP. 11) 2.

1 I desire to approach the Arezahis with my praise, and the Savahis, and Fradadhafshu, and Vidadhafshu, and Vourubaresti, and Vouru-garesti, and this Karshvar which is Hvaniratha.

2 And I desire to approach the stone mortar with my praise, and the iron mortar, and the cup that holds the Zaothra, and the hair (which stays the spilling), and Thy Baresman spread with sanctity. And I desire to approach the Ahuna-vairyu with my praise, and the ritual prayers beside Ahuna, and the standing offices of the Mazdayasnian Faith.

VISPARAD 11 (SP. 12).

1 To Ahura Mazda would we present our offered Haomas and that which is lifted up, as the most beneficial to Verethraghna (the blow of victory) which furthers the settlements; and that which is offered to the good and holy king, and that which is offered to the holy ruler which rules according to, or in the ritual, and we make known our Haomas to the Bountiful Immortals, and to the good waters; and we present our Haomas each to (our) own soul; and we announce our Haomas in our celebration to the entire creation of the holy (and the clean).

2-5 Yea, we present these Haomas and Haoma-implements, and these spread mats, and these Myzadas, these stones, the first in the creation, the stone mortar brought here with the yellow Haoma in it, and the iron mortar brought here with the yellow Haoma in it, this Haoma-water, and this Baresman spread with sanctity, these bodies, and (their) forces, these striving Zaothras (that seek to find Thy grace), this holy Haoma, and the flesh, and the holy man, and the saint's innate thoughts, even the Saoshyants' innate thoughts. And we present this fresh milk as an offering, now lifted up with sanctity, and this Hadhânaëpata plant, lifted up with sanctity; and we offer, and present these Zaothras with our celebration, having the Haoma with them, and the milk, and the Hadhânaëpata, to the good waters and offered up with piety. And we present the Haoma-water in our celebrations to the good waters, and both the stone and the iron mortar, and this branch for the Baresman, and the prayer for blessings uttered at the fitting moment which has approached (for our help in its order with the prayers), and the recollection and practice of the good Mazdayasnian law, and the heard recital of the Gâthas, the well-timed prayer for blessings as it comes uttered by the saint (and for our help), and ruling (while it is spoken) as a ritual lord, and these wood-billets, and the perfume even Thine, the Fire's, O Ahura Mazda's son! and all good objects (which are ours), and Mazda-made, and which have the seed of sanctity (or are that seed).

6 Yea, these we make known and we announce in this our celebration to Ahura Mazda (as our gift), and to Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, and to Ashi (who is the recompense), and to Rashnu the most just, and to Mithra of the wide pastures, and to the Bountiful Immortals, and the Fravashis of the saints, and to their souls, and to the Fire of Ahura Mazda, the lord, and to the lofty lord (the Apâm-napât?), and to the Myzada, the lord, and to the well-timed prayer for blessings as it rules in the order of our prayers, for the sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and adoration of the entire creation of the holy (and the clean).

7 Yea, these we make known in this our celebration hereby for the Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitâma, the saint, for its sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and praise, and to the (Fravashi) of Anghuyu who hath loved righteousness, together with all the holy Fravashis of the saints, of those now dead, and of those of the living, and of those of men unborn, of the prophets that shall serve us, bringing on the renovation of the completed world.

(The verses 8-11 are identical with verses 2-5)

12 Yea, we would make these known hereby in our celebrations to the Bountiful Immortals, who rule aright, and who dispose (of all) aright, the ever-living, ever-helpful, who are good (?), and bestowers of the good, who dwell with the Good Mind [(Pâzand) for they who are the Bountiful Immortals abide with the Good Mind, they who rule aright, and dispose (of all) aright, for thence they are regulated, and thence they arose, (namely,) from the Good Mind].

13, 14 And we make known these our celebrations as the more promotive for this house, for the furtherance of this house, and as benefits for this house, because of the increase of this household, as overcoming the restrictions which impede this household, and as overcoming the harmful malice which may mar this house, to bless its herds, and its retainers, born, and yet to be born, for the saints of the house as it was aforesaid, of it as it stands here now, and to which we likewise now belong as the Saoshyants of the provinces, [which (is that we are Saoshyants) for the saints who do good deeds, and of the female saints who do good deeds, and of the saints who do the deeds conspicuously good, and of the females likewise thus, of the saints who do good deeds upon good deeds, and of the females thus the same]

15 And we make these known in our celebrations to the good Fravashis of the saints which are formidable and overwhelming in their aid.

16 And we make these known in our celebrations hereby to Sraosha (Obedience) the blessed, and to the good Blessedness, and to Nairyasangha, and to the victorious Peace, and to Ahura Mazda's Fire, and to the lofty lord, for sacrifice, homage, propitiation, and for praise, to the entire creation of the holy and the clean.

(The verses 17, 18 are identical with Visp. X, 1, 2)

19, 20 Yea, we make that known which is lifted up in offering, and which is the Avesta as the holy Ahura Mazda directed that it should be said, and as Zarathustra, the holy, directed, and as I, the priest, who am acquainted with their sacrifice and homage, am now letting it be known. I who understand the lawful and legitimate Avesta, and the ritual precepts for Your sacrifice, homage, and propitiation, O Ye who are the Bountiful Immortals, and for our preparation, and for the success of our well-uttered prayer for blessings, for victory, sanctification, and the well-being of our souls, (of ours), for (we are) the holy Saoshyants.

21 Yea, we make these known in our celebrations here, and we offer them to Him who is Ahura Mazda, of all the greatest, the master and the Lord.

VISPARAD 12 (SP. 14).

1 For the offered Haomas which have been offered in libation to that lofty Lord Ahura Mazda and to the holy Zarathustra Spitâma (produce) abundance in cattle and in men; and this abundance is (as) the good Sraosha, who accompanies (us) with the great splendour of sanctity, and may he I be here with energetic effort (to aid us in our worship).

2 We offer the wise offerings of the Ahuna-vairyu intoned with sanctity and yet to be intoned, possessing their many teachings of religious wisdom (as they do), and those of the two mortars which pour the Haomas out, and which are pushed forward with precision, and are now in the course of being thus advanced once more.

3 (And so we teach as well the many teachings of the religious wisdom) contained in the words correctly spoken, in the Zarathustrian utterances, and in the ceremonies correctly practised, and the Baresmans spread exactly, and the Haomas pressed correctly, and the praise, Yasnas, and the doctrines of the Mazdayasnian Religion with their recitations, and their movements.

4 For thus they may become to us more full of devices and of wisdom, and so we offer these wise ritual deeds in the creation, so we impart them with their many points of meaning while we (ourselves) still ponder them as those which Ahura Mazda, the holy One, delivered, which have (as if) their nourishment from Vohu Manah and their growth from the Righteous Order, which are the greatest of all beings, the best, and the most beautiful for thus shall these be to us the more full of wisest meaning, and more full of incitation, and may we be among those (who are) of Spenta Mainyu's world in that we are imparting (to the chosen) these precepts of the wisest meaning and these incitations which are contained therein.

5 And full of wisest meaning be ye two to us, O (thou) stone mortar, and (thou) the iron one, as ye are now turned, and as ye are now being advanced, ye two mortars of the house, [and of the village, of the tribe, and of the province, and ye who are in this house (itself), this village, tribe, and province]; yea, in those which are ours, Mazdayasnians, who are steadfast in our worship, who appear with our wood-billets and our perfumes, and with our supplicated blessings [(Pâzand) for so may they be to us, the more full of wisest teaching].

VISPARAD 13 (SP. 15).

1 According to the ritual we worship Ahura Mazda; according to the ritual we worship the Bountiful Immortals; and we sacrifice to the sacrificial word correctly spoken, and to every Mâthra (as to a sacred word of reason). And we sacrifice to Zarathustra, him who is especially the possessor of the Mâthra; and we sacrifice to the 'blessings for the saints'; and we worship the 'hail' addressed to the Bountiful Immortals.

2 Also we worship the three principal (chapters) uttered (in the Yasna) without addition or omission; and we worship the three principal ones without addition or omission; we worship the three commencing ones entire without addition or omission. And we worship the entirety of the three principal ones without addition or omission; and their Hās, their metrical lines, their words, and their word-structure [and their recital, memorising, chanting, and their steadfast offering].

VISPARAD 14 (SP. 16) 3.

1 (We worship Ahura Mazda, the holy Lord of the ritual order; and we sacrifice to the Gātha Ahunavaiti) with its measures, and word-structure, and its Zand, with its questions and counter-questions, with its words and its metric feet. And we sacrifice to these as well-recited, and now in the course of being recited; as well-worshipped, and now in the course of being used in worship.

2 (Yea, we sacrifice to it) in its own 'wisdom', in its own 'clearness', in its own 'loving intention', in its sovereignty, and its own ritual order, and its 'acquired boon', which is also that given by Ahura Mazda for the promotion of piety, for that thought which originates from the 'heart-devoted self'.

3 (Sp. Chapter XVII.) Also we worship the Ahuna-vairyā, the holy lord of the ritual order, the holy lord with its Ahū and its Ratu [(Pāzand); for He is the one with the title Ahū and Ratu, who is Ahura Mazda].

4 And we sacrifice to the constituent parts of the Gātha Ahunavaiti, to its chapters, and its metrical lines, its words, and word-structure, [and to its heard-recital, and memorised recital, its continuous and its steadfast offering].

VISPARAD 15 (SP. 18).

1. Hold your feet in readiness, and your two hands, and your understandings, O ye Zarathustrian Mazdayasnians! for the well-doing of lawful deeds in accordance with the sacred Order, and for the avoidance of the unlawful and evil deeds which are contrary to the ritual. Let the good deeds for the furtherance of husbandry be done here. Render ye the needy rich.

2 Let Sraosha (Obedience) be present here for the worship of Ahura Mazda, the most helpful, and the holy, who is so desired by us in the pronunciation, and for the service, and the pondering of the Yasna Haptanghāiti, for the heart's devotion to it, for its memorisation, and its victorious and holy recital (or for the victorious saint), without addition or omission, which has been intoned, and which shall yet be uttered as great, powerful, smiting with victory, separate from harmful malice, for the pronunciation of victorious words for Ahura Mazda's Fire.

VISPARAD 16 (SP. 19).

1 And we worship the Fire here, Ahura Mazda's son, and the Yazads having the seed of fire in them, and the Rashnus having the seed of fire in them; and we worship the Fravashis of the saints. And we worship Sraosha who smites with victory, and the holy man, and the entire creation of the holy (and the clean).

2. And we worship the Blessedness and the Fravashi of Zarathustra Spitāma, the saint. And we worship the saints and their blessed Fravashis (as of one). And we worship all their Fravashis (as considered each apart), and those of the saints within the Province, and those of the saints without the Province; yea, we worship the Fravashis of holy men and holy women (wherever they may be, those devoted to the Order of the Faith). And we sacrifice to those whose (service) for us in the Yasna Ahura Mazda, the holy, has known as the better, and of these Zarathustra is the living chief and master. And we sacrifice to the fields and the waters, the lands and the plants, and to the constituent parts of the Yasna Haptanghāiti, its chapters, its metred lines, its words, and word-structure.

VISPARAD 17 (SP. 20).

And we strive after the good thoughts, words, and deeds incalculated in the Yasna Haptanghāiti. A blessing is the Right (called) the Best, (there is) weal; (there is) weal for this (man) when toward Righteousness Best (there is) right.

VISPARAD 18 (SP. 21).

1. We worship Ahura Mazda with the usta. And we worship the Amesha Spenta with the usta, and the holy man, the saint. And we worship the prior world of the holy (and of the clean) with an usta, and the state of weal and salvation for the holy man (the saint).

2. And we worship that life-long state of blessedness (for the holy) which is the evil man's calamity; yea, we worship his eternal salvation, and with the salvation prayer. And we sacrifice to every saint who exists, who is now coming into existence, and who shall exist in future.

VISPARAD 19 (SP. 22).

1 We worship Ahura Mazda the bountiful; and we worship the Bountiful Immortals (saying the Spenta). And we sacrifice to the bountiful saint, and to the bountiful anticipative understanding. Also we sacrifice to the good and bountiful Āramaiti (the ready mind). And we worship her together with the bountiful creatures in the creation of the pure. And we sacrifice to the holy creatures who have intelligence as their first, (to those foremost in their mind). And we worship the omniscient understanding, and Him who is Ahura Mazda (Himself).

2. And we sacrifice to the shining sun, which is the highest of the high; yea, we worship the sun together with the Bountiful Immortals, and the Māthras with their good ceremonies. Also we sacrifice to the glorious achievements, and to this glory (which we have gained). And we sacrifice to the herds which have the Fire and its blessings. Also we worship the holy benefit which is so widely diffused, and that wisdom which is the bounteous Āramaiti, whose are the laws of the Righteous Order, and of those holy creatures who have Righteousness as their first.

VISPARAD 20 (SP. 23).

1, 2 (Homage to the Gātha Vohu-khshathra! We sacrifice to the Vohu-khshathra), (the good kingdom) even the Khshathra-vairyā, the kingdom to be desired; and we sacrifice to the iron-founding, and to the (sacrificial) words correctly spoken which smite (the foe) with victory, and which hold the Daēvas subject. And we worship that reward and that health, that healing and that progress, that growth and that victorious smiting which are between the Vohu-khshathra and the Vahistōisti, (and which are acquired by us) by the memorised recital of the good thoughts, good words, and good deeds, for the withstanding of evil thoughts, and words, and deeds; yea, for the undoing of all treacherous thoughts (directed) against me, and of all false words, and unfair deeds.

3. [And we sacrifice to the later Yasna, the heroic Haptanghāiti, (and which as it recurs becomes) the holy ritual chief.]

VISPARAD 21 (SP. 24).

1, 2 We strive earnestly, and we take up our Yasna and our homage to the good waters, and to the fertile fruit-trees (which bear as of themselves), and to the Fravashis of the saints; yea, we take up our Yasna, and our homage earnestly to those beings which are (so) good, the waters, and the trees, and the Fravashis of the saints, and to the Kine, and to Gaya (Maretan), and to the Māthra Spenta (the bounteous word-of-reason), the holy, which works (within and for us with effect), to these we take up our Yasnas and our homage with earnest zeal, and to Thee, O Ahura Mazda! and to thee, O Zarathustra, we do the same; and to thee, O lofty lord (the Apām-napāt), and to the Bountiful Immortals.

3 And we sacrifice to the listening (that hears our prayers) and to that mercy, and to the hearing of (our spoken) homage, and to that mercy which is (shown in response to our offered) praise. And we sacrifice to the frārāiti vidushē, which is contained in the piece hvādaēnāis ashaonis; and we sacrifice to 'the good praise which is without hypocrisy, and which has no malice (as its end)'; and we sacrifice to the later Yasna and to its offering; and we sacrifice to the chapters of the later Yasna, and to its metrical lines, its words, and word-structure.

VISPARAD 22 (SP. 25).

With this chant (fully) chanted, and which is for the Bountiful Immortals and the holy Saoshyants (who are the prophets who shall serve us), and by means of these (ceremonial) actions, which are (of all) the best, we desire to utter our supplications for the Kine. It is that chant which the saint has recognised as good and fruitful of blessed gifts, and which the sinner does not know. May we never reach that (ill-luck that the sinner) may outstrip us (in our chanting), not in the matter of a plan (thought out), or of words (delivered), or ceremonies (done), nor yet in any offering whatever when he approaches (us for harm).

VISPARAD 23 (SP. 24).

1 We worship Ahura Mazda as the best (worship to be offered in our gifts). We worship the Amesha Spenta (once more, and as) the best. We worship Asha Vahista (who is Righteousness the Best). And we sacrifice to those (prayers) which are evident as the best; that is, the Praises of the Yasnas. Also we sacrifice to that best wish, which is that of Asha Vahista, and we worship Heaven, which is the best world of the saints, bright and all-glorious; and we sacrifice likewise to that best approach which leads to it.

2 And we sacrifice to that reward, health, healing, furtherance, and increase, and to that victory which is within 1 the two, the Ahuna-vairyā and the Airyemā-ishyō, through the memorised recital of the good thoughts, words, and deeds. (which they enjoin).

THE SADDAR

The One Hundred Precepts or Zarathustra's 100 Commandments from Sacred Books of the East, volume 24.
Translation: Edward William West, 1885
Estimated Range of Dating:

(The Sad-dar or Saddar, literally Hundred Doors or chapters is a Persian book about precepts, commandments, and basic laws of the Zoroastrian Faith. The hundred chapters are guidelines that Zoroastrians should follow. Sanskrit cognate is Shat-Dwar (Shat=Hundred, Dwar=Door)

"As its name implies the Sad Dar is a treatise on 'a hundred subjects' connected with the Zoroastrian religion. The word dar, literally 'door, or gate,' being also applied to the chapters of a book, and to the 'matters, or subjects,' of which it treats.

This work is not a Pahlavi text, being written in Persian with an admixture of about four per cent of Arabic words; it is, however, more quoted than any other work by the Parsi compilers of the Persian Rivayats, or religious 'traditions,' in the seventeenth century. In one of its recensions it is also found written in Avesta characters, and the Avesta-Persian sentences alternate with an old Gujarati translation, in imitation of the Pazand-Sanskrit versions of Pahlavi texts compiled by Neryosang.

In consideration of the existence of this pseudo-Pazand recension, together with the general acceptance of the work as an important authority, and its being a convenient summary of many of the religious customs handed down by Pahlavi writers, this work may be offered as a suitable appendix to the true Pahlavi texts, connecting them with the Persian writings that are too modern to be accepted as authorities in religious matters. It may ... be concluded that the prose Sad Dar had the reputation of being a very old work in the early part of the sixteenth century." (from introduction by E. W. West)

Text:

INTRODUCTION.

1 In the name of Ahura Mazda, the Lord, the greatest and wise, the all-ruling, all knowing, and almighty.

2 This is a book (kitab), about the proper and improper, which is extracted from the good and pure religion of the Mazda-worshippers.

3 What is expedient (vajib) is this, for every one to know and keep this in practice.

4 And it is not desirable that he become independent (hali) of this for a single hour (sa'hat).

5 Because, when one becomes independent, the sin for each one mayeth become abundant; and when it is brought into practice the reward become abundant.

6 On this occasion (vaqt) I, a servant of the religion -- like the mobed Eran-shah, son (bin) of Yazad-yar, son of Tishtar-yar, son of Adarbad, son of Mahraspand -- have sent a reward to their souls, unto every one who readeth and is bound by duty.

7 Thus much (in qadar), which hath come written, is a good work they know, whosoever are superior; but it is not possible for every one inferior to know of this.

8 If it were more (ziyadat) it is proper, but if (imma) less than this it is not proper to know; while, in gratitude for the benefits (shukr-i ni'mat) of the sacred being, they become increasing in action, and the sacred being, the most high (ta'halai), maketh benefits occur on the spot on that account.

9 And, secondly, the kindness (lutf) and generosity (karm) of the sacred being, the most high, are manifest from this, that he created us with each member (alat) complete (tamam), and did not keep anything from the maternal nature.

10 And whatever was necessary for use he gaveth us.

11 At the head, likewise, he appointed a master, which is the wisdom for the purpose that they may keep these members in action.

12 May the peace of the sacred being, the most high, be on the souls of those acquainted with the religion of the pure Zarathustra, the Spitaman, and of those who are pure and virtuous.

13 For the souls of those persons it is desirable that every duty they perform they shall perform through the authority (dasturi) of the wisdom of the high-priests.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 1

Necessity of unwavering faith in the religion.

1 The first subject is this, that it is necessary that they become steadfast in the religion, and do not introduce any hesitation (shakk) and doubt into the heart.

2 And that they make a statement ('haqiqat) with confidence ('ihtiqaq), that the good religion, the true and perfect, which the Lord sent into the world ('halq), is that which Zarathustra hath brought; which is this I hold.

3 Every time that mankind are like this, and do not introduce any hesitation and doubt into the heart, of every duty and good work that others have done, from the days of Zarathustra until these days, and of whatever one doth after this until the resurrection, there is a share for that person.

THE GRAND BIBLE

4 When the soul, on the fourth night, arriveth at the head of the Chinwad bridge, the angel Mihr and the angel Rashn maketh up its account ('hisab) and reckoning.

5 And, if the good works it hath done be deficient in quantity, of every duty and good work that those of the good religion have done in the earth of seven regions they appoint it a like portion (nazib), till the good works become more in weight; and the soul arriveth righteous in the radiant locality of heaven. 6 For it is declared in revelation, that of the duty and good work which they perform in doubt -- that is (ya'hni), they entertain a suspicion like this, that 'I do not know that this faith, which I possess, is better in comparison with other faiths' -- no merit whatever cometh to their souls.

7 Therefore, the first (avval) thing is to become steadfast in the religion; and this is the chief of all good works.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 2

Sin not to be committed.

1 The second subject is this, that it is necessary to make an effort (gahd), so that they may not commit any sin.

2 If even a trifling sin occureth it is not desirable to assume that this small quantity doth not possess harm hereafter.

3 For it is said in revelation, that if such be the quantity of sin that the sin is one filament of the hair of the eyelashes more in weight than the good works are, that person arriveth in hell.

4 And if such a quantity of good works be in excess, he arriveth righteous in the radiant locality of heaven.

5 Therefore, even if a sin be trifling it is not desirable to commit it; and it is requisite to refrain, so that they may not commit it, and may become without doubt as to the religion.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 3

Advantage of perseverance in industry.

1 The third subject is this, that it is necessary for man that he be continuously employed (mashjuhl) on his own work, and then the work becometh his own.

2 For it is declared in revelation, that every one who hereafter becometh employed on his own work, if in the midst of that work any trouble and discomfort happen to him, obtaineth in that other world twelve recompenseth for every single instance.

3 If he becometh employed on iniquity (fasad), and in the midst of that work any trouble and harm happen to him, he so obtaineth in that other world only torment ('huqubat) and punishment.

4 Similarly (maThalam), if any one be himself going, employed on his own work, and a robber falleth upon him on the road, and carrieth off his property (qumash), or he be slain, they give him back in that other world four things for each one of whatever they have carried off.

5 If he be slain he becometh righteous, any sin that he hath committed goeth clean away from him, and they convey him to heaven.

6 But (amma) if he becometh faulty (batil) in any duty, and a robber falleth upon him on the road, and carrieth off his wealth (mal), or he be slain, when he descendeth to that other world all the property that other carried off from him becometh just as though it were his who hath carried it off from that person; and, besides, there occur, as a substitute ('hivaz) for that property, the punishment and torment they give him.

7 And if he be slain it is just as though he who hath carried it off from that person were one who had innocently slain that person who arriveth in hell as retribution (mukafat) for sin.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 4

No one should despair of the mercy of Ahura Mazda.

1 The fourth subject is this, that it is not desirable for any one that he should become hopeless of the pity (ra'hmat) and forgiveness of Ahura Mazda, and fix his heart outwardly on this, that our sin is excessive and it is not possible to arrive in heaven.

2 Because it happeneth that a small quantity of duty and good work is performed, and it may be that for that quantity Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, may have pity on him and may make him arrive in heaven.

3 For it is declared in revelation, that one time when Zarathustra was in conversation with the sacred being, the most high, he saw a man whose whole body was in hell, and one foot -- the right one -- was outside of hell.

4 Zarathustra inquired of the sacred being, the most high, thus: 'What person hath this man been?'

5 Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, gave a reply (javab) thus: 'He hath been a king, and possessed the sovereignty of thirty-three towns, and was conducting that sovereignty many years.

6 And he never did any virtuous action, but was committing much oppression, lawlessness, and violence (thulm).

7 By chance (qazara) he was one day going on the chase, and arrived out at a place (mauza'h) and saw a goat that was tied.

8 A morsel of hay was placed very far off, and that goat was hungry.

9 Owing to this the goat was trying to eat the hay, but did not reach the hay.

10 This the king saw, and kicked his foot at that hay and cast it in front of the goat.

11 Now, in recompense for that, that one foot of his is outside of hell, and the remaining (baqi) limbs are in hell.'

12 Therefore, although a sin hath happened to any one, it is not necessary for him to become hopeless.

13 And whoever hath the power (taqat) is to endeavor to perform good works, so that there may be an atonement for the sin thereby; because the sacred being, the good and propitious, is kind to every one.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 5

Advantage of Navazud and Geti-kharid.

1 The fifth subject is this, that it is necessary for all those of the good religion that they make a thorough effort, so that they celebrate the ritual and become Navazud.

2 For in our religion there is no good work more ample than this.

3 And it is declared in revelation, that, although much duty and good work be performed, it is not possible to attain to the supreme heaven (garothman), except on that one occasion when the Navazud ceremony is performed, or they have celebrated a getig-kharid.

4 And on any occasion ('hal), if they are not able to perform it with their own hands, it is requisite to order it; and then it is inevitably necessary that the celebration of the Getig-kharid should be in the same manner as they would have performed it with their own hands.

5 Man and woman are both equal in this good work; therefore, it is not proper to neglect this duty, for it is the chief of all the good works of the religion.

6 Because it is declared in revelation, that on the day that they are performing the Navazud ceremony, or are celebrating a Getig-kharid on his account, three times the soul of that person arriveth at heaven, and they show it a place therein, and offer it a profuse greeting (miTHar).

7 The explanation (tafsir) of the Gahs is this, that a Gah -- that is, that his own place -- becometh visible to him in heaven that day.

8 And if one doth not perform a Navazud ceremony, or doth not order the celebration of a Getig-kharid, it is the same as when a poor (gharib) man maketh for a town, and doth not obtain a spot where he mayeth alight in that place.

9 Although it is his own town he is in this trouble.

10 Therefore, it is not possible to bring to hand a place in heaven through any good work, except by the performance of the Navazud ceremony, or by ordering the celebration of a Getig-kharid.

11 And a Getig-kharid is this, that heaven is purchased in the world, and one's own place brought to hand in heaven.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 6

The six indispensable good works.

1 The sixth subject is this, that of the many good works there are those which, when they accomplish them, obtain great ('hathim) rewards; and if one doth not perform them severe punishment seisseth upon one at the head of the Chinwad bridge.

2 One is the celebration of the season festivals [Gahambars]; the second is keeping the days of the guardian spirits [fravashis]; the third is attending to the souls of fathers, mothers, and other relations; the fourth is reciting the Kharshed Niyayesh [Sun Litany] three times every day; the fifth is reciting the Mah Niyayesh [Moon Litany] three times every month, once when it becometh new, once when it becometh full, and once when it becometh slender; and the sixth is celebrating the Rapithwin ceremony once every year.

3 If not able to celebrate them oneself, it is requisite to order them, so that they may celebrate them every single time.

4 These six good works are things indispensable unto every one.

5 When any one of them is not performed -- be it that which, if omitted at its own time, it is not possible to accomplish, or if it be, that one time one omiteth an occasion, and another time they accomplish twice as much -- one should consider that as an advantage, which occureth in retribution for it, or as atonement for the transgression.

6 Because they call the transgression of each of these six a bridge-sin; that is, every one through whom a transgression of these may have arisen they keep back, at the head of the Chinwad bridge, till punishment for it happeneth to him, and no good work is possible in this place, which is torment and punishment for him.

7 Therefore it is necessary to make an effort, that they may be performed each one at its own time, so that they may obtain a recompense, and not a severe punishment.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 7

Why we should recite certain formulas after sneezing.

1 The seventh subject is this, that, when a sneeze ('hatsat) cometh forth from any one, it is requisite to recite one Yatha-ahu-vairyo and one Ashem-vohu.

2 Because there is a fiend in our bodies, and she is an adversary who is connected with mankind, and striveth so that she may make misfortune ('hillat) and sickness predominant (mustauli) over mankind.

3 And in our bodies there is a fire which they call a disposition -- in Arabic they say tabi'hat -- and they call it the sneezing instinct (gharizi).

4 It is connected with that fiend, and they wage warfare, and it keepeth her away from the body of man.

5 Then, as the fire becometh successful over that fiend, and puteth her to flight (hazimat), a sneeze cometh because that fiend cometh out.

6 Afterwards, because it is necessary, they recite these inward prayers and perform the benediction (afirin) of the fire, so that it may remain for a long period while thou art keeping this fiend defeated.

7 When another person heareth the sneeze, it is likewise requisite for him to utter; the said prayers, and to accomplish the benediction of that spirit.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 8

Why high-priests must be obeyed.

1 The eighth subject is this, that it is necessary to maintain the religion by rule (dastur), and to practice obedience to the commands of the high-priests; and every duty that people perform they should perform by their authority.

2 For it is declared in the good religion, that, if they accomplish as many good works as the leaveth of trees, or the sand-grains of the desert, or the drops (qatrah) of rain, which they do not perform by command of the high-priests, or to their satisfaction, no merit whatever attaineth to their souls, and for the good works they have done they obtain sin as a recompense.

3 While such a one is living it is not proper to call him righteous, and when he dieth he doth not attain to heaven, and not a single archangel cometh near him.

4 He doth not make his escape from the hands of the demons and Ahriman, and he doth not obtain a release from hell.

5 Because duties and good works attain to the soul on those occasions when they perform them with the authority of the high-priests and those acquainted with the religion, and when they give them one-tenth of those good works.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 9

The sin of unnatural intercourse to be punished, by any one, by death on the spot.

1 The ninth subject is this, that it is necessary to practice abstinence from committing or permitting unnatural intercourse.

2 For this is the chief of all sins in the religion: there is no worse sin than this in the good religion, and it is proper to call those who commit it worthy of death in reality.

3 If any one cometh forth to them, and shall see them in the act, and is working with an ax, it is requisite for him to cut off the heads or to rip up the bellies of both, and it is no sin for him.

4 But it is not proper to kill any person without the authority of high-priests and kings, except on account of committing or permitting unnatural intercourse.

5 For it says in revelation that unnatural intercourse is on a par with Ahriman, with Afrasiyab, with Dahak [Zohak], with Tur-i Bradrok-resh who slew Zarathustra, with Malkos who will arise, with the serpent Srobovar which existed in the days of Sam Nariman, and as many sins as are theirs.

6 And Ahriman, the evil one, becometh more joyful, owing to this practice, than owing to the other sins which have made high-priests necessary; for the soul itself of that person becometh extinct.

7 And when they commit the sin with women, it is just the same as that with men.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 10

Reasons for wearing the sacred thread-girdle and tying it with four knots.

1 The tenth subject is this, that it is incumbent on all those of the good religion, women and men, every one who attaineth to fifteen years, to wear the sacred thread-girdle [kustij].

2 Because the sacred thread-girdle is to be a girding of the loins and to preserve obedience (ta'hat) to the Lord, may he be honoured and glorified ('hazza va jalla)!

3 The first person who set the wearing of this sacred thread-girdle in view was Jamshed.

4 And it may be the whole (jumlah) of the demons and fiends who are made extinct by the glory of wearing the sacred thread-girdle.

5 Every one who hath tied the sacred thread-girdle round the waist is out of the department of Ahriman, and is established in the department of Ahura Mazda.

6 And also, while he keepeth the sacred thread-girdle on the waist, there is a share for him of all those duties and good works which they perform in the earth of seven regions.

7 It is like that which occureth when they are performing hamazor and hama asho, and have put on this sacred threadgirdle [kusti] on that account, or when, similarly, some one in Cashmere, or Eranvej, or Kangedz, or the enclosure formed by Jam [Jamshed], performeth a good work, and we are not able to perform it with hama zor, then they and we, who wear the sacred thread-girdle on the waist, are mutually connected and equally meritorious, one with the other.

THE GRAND BIBLE

8 As no good work attaineth to him who doth not wear a sacred thread-girdle -- excepting that which he performeth himself -- it is therefore necessary that any one of mankind should not put it away from the waist on any occasion, so that the associated good works of those of the good religion may attain to him.

9 And those four knots, with which they tie it on, are on this account, that it may give four attestations.

10 The first knot is that which preserveth constancy (qarar), and giveth attestation as to the existence, unity, purity, and matchlessness of the sacred being, the good and propitious.

11 The second knot is that which giveth attestation that is the good religion of the Mazda-worshippers which is the word of the sacred being.

12 The third knot is that which giveth attestation as to the apostleship and mission (rasuli) in the just ('haqq) Zarathustra, the Spitaman.

13 The fourth knot is that which adduceth more pleasantly, giveth assurance (iqrar), and openly accepteth that I should think of good, speak of good, and do good.

14 And from the whole I become established; and the pure, good religion is this, that I persist in those views.

15 And, again, when the archangels [Amahraspands] came meeting Zarathustra they likewise wore the sacred thread-girdle on the waist; and the distinctive characteristic (farq) amid the laws of the sacred being is the wearing of the sacred thread-girdle.

16 It is incumbent both on woman and on man, and it is altogether (albatath) improper when they do not wear it.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 11

Why a household fire should be properly maintained.

1 The eleventh subject is this, that it is necessary to maintain the fire-place properly, and to keep watch, so that the fire shall not die out, and that nothing polluted and impure shall attain to the fire; and it is necessary to make a menstruous woman avoid being within three steps of it.

2 Because every time that they maintain a fire properly, which is within a dwelling, every fire which is in the earth of seven regions becometh pleased with those persons, and, when they ask a favour, or beg a necessity ('hajjat), it becometh quickly operative.

3 And every time that one doth not maintain it properly, every fire which is in the earth of seven regions receives injury from that person, and the necessity he begs doth not become operative.

4 If any one doth not maintain the fire-place properly, if he giveth a hundred dinars to the fire [Adar] Gushnasp there is no acceptance of it, and that sin doth not depart from him.

5 For it is declared in revelation, that the creator Ahura Mazda hath given sovereignty in heaven to Ardwhisht, the archangel, and hath spoken thus: 'As to every one with whom thou art not pleased, do not let him escape into heaven.'

6 And this is also declared in revelation, that, every time that they do not maintain the fire properly, pregnancy becometh scarcer for the women, fewer male children are born, and honour ('hurmat) in the vicinity of the king becometh less for the men, and there is no approbation (qabul) of their words.

7 For every single fire which dieth out in a dwelling a loss of three dirhams and two dangs falleth on the property of that person, or it becometh the loss of this dwelling, or it doth not reach him from the place whence wealth cometh to him.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 12

Why the clothing of a corpse should be scanty and old, though many people must follow the bier.

1 The twelfth subject is this, that, when any one dieth, an order is necessary that how much soever scantier clothing they are able to make a beginning of, the better they act.

2 Beside (illa) something become old and washed, anything new is not proper for the purpose that they may let it go upon a dead body.

3 For in the commentary of the Vendidad it asserts that, if they shall pass on to a dead body as much as a woman's spindle maketh for a single thread, with the exception of that which is unavoidable, for every single thread a black snake hangs, in that other world, on to the liver of that person who hath made a beginning of the clothing.

4 Likewise, that dead person becometh his antagonist ('hazm), and hangeth similarly upon his skirt, and speaketh thus: 'This clothing, which thou hast put on my body, devoureth me, having become worms and noxious creatures.'

5 My name was put upon a sacred cake, the fourth day, with a Yasht, so that there might be alike a benefit therefrom for my soul, and it might be alike unnecessary for thee to bear this torment ('haDhab).'

6 Owing to that, many sorrows come to that person, and he hath no advantage from it.

7 Therefore, it is necessary to act with caution (i'htiyat), so that, how much soever the clothing be scantier, they may make a beginning of it.

8 And as many as shall be able to walk after the bier (tabut) and corpse shall walk.

9 Because every step that they go after a corpse is a good work of three hundred stirrs; and every stir is four dirhams, in such manner that three hundred stirrs are a thousand and two hundred dirhams.

10 For every single step there is thus much good work.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 13

Why ceremonies in honour of the souls of the departed should be properly celebrated.

1 The thirteenth subject is this, that it is necessary to maintain the souls of fathers, mothers, and relations properly.

2 And, when any day of theirs occurs, it is necessary to make an endeavor, so that they may accomplish the ceremonial (yazishn), the sacred feast (myazd), the consecration of the sacred cakes (dron), and the benedictions (afrinagan).

3 For it is declared in revelation, that, every time that any day of theirs occur, they will bring with themselves 9999 guardian spirits of the righteous, like that case when any one goeth home himself, and bringeth people (qaum) in hospitality.

4 And, when they utter the consecration of the sacred cakes and sacred feast and the benedictions, those people become joyful and utter blessings on that house and master of the house, and on the house-mistress and any persons who are in that house.

5 But if they do not celebrate the sacred feast, the consecration of the sacred cakes, the ceremonial, and the benedictions, the spirits will remain for them in that place from dawn as long as the period of a day, and are maintaining a hope that 'perhaps they will have us in remembrance.'

6 Then, if they do not bring them into remembrance, the souls turn upwards from that place, go very quickly on high, and will say, 'O creator Ahura Mazda! they do not know that we are such as we are, and that it is necessary for them to come into this world, and in this world they will not give any one acquittal.'

7 For them there is need of the good works in consecrating the sacred cakes and celebrating the sacred feast and benedictions; there is no need of them for such as we.

8 Yet (va likin), if they would have maintained a place for the duty of those days, we should have turned away from them misfortunes of various kinds; but, as they have not maintained observance of us in the day's duty, we are not able to come in friendship to this house.'

9 Thus much they say, and turn away in anger, and go away from that place.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 14

How nail-parings should be treated, and why.

1 The fourteenth subject is this, that, when the nails are pared according to custom (ba-'hilar), it is necessary that they put the parings into a paper.

2 And it is further necessary to take the Srosh-baj inwardly, and to utter three Yatha-ahu-vairyos.

3 And for the speaking of this -- to say with each Yatha-ahu-vairyuo the Avesta is this: -- Paiti te, meregha Asho-zushta! imau srva vaedhayemi, imau srva awaedhayemi; imause te srva, meregha Asho-zushta! hyare arshatayasca, kareatayasca, thanvareca, ishavasca ereziyo-parena, asnaca fradakhshanya paiti daevo-Mazainyano; asha vohu manangha ya sruye pare magano.

4 Afterwards, one completes the Baj in the manner that it was taken inwardly.

5 At those two Yatha-ahu-vairyos, with which one completeth the Baj, at each one, he maketh lines ('hattha) in a little dust in the midst of the nail-parings.

6 And, if he doth not know this Baj, on uttering the Srosh-baj and those three Yatha-ahu-vairyos he is to furrow three lines, with the nail-cutter, around the nail-parings, and then he is to complete the Baj with those Yatha-ahu-vairyos, and to put the dust, with the end of the nail-cutter, into the midst of the nail-parings, and carry them to a desert spot.

7 It is necessary that he should carry a hole down through four finger-breadths of earth, and, having placed the nail-parings in that spot, he puts the soil overhead.

8 For Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, hath created a bird which they call Asho-zushat, and they call it the bird of Vohuman. 9. They also call it the owl, and it eats nails.

10 It is altogether necessary that they do not leave them unbroken, for they would come into use as weapons (sila'h) of wizards.

11 And they have also said that, if they fall in the midst of food, there is danger of pulmonary consumption.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 15

How we should salute anything agreeable, and why.

1 The fifteenth subject is this, when one sees anything that is welcome to the eyes, it is requisite to say 'in the name of the sacred being.'

2 Because, if they do not say 'in the name of the sacred being,' and an injury happeneth to that thing, or a disaster occur, one becometh a sinner; so far is notorious (ma'hlum).

SAD DAR CHAPTER 16

A pregnant woman and new-born infant require the protection of a fire or burning lamp, with other precautions.

1 The sixteenth subject is this, that, when a woman becometh pregnant in a house, it is necessary to make an endeavor so that there may be a continual fire in that house, and to maintain a good watch over it.

2 And, when the child becometh separate from the mother, it is necessary to burn a lamp for three nights and days -- if they burn a fire it would be better -- so that the demons and fiends may not be able to do any damage and harm; because, when a child is born, it is exceedingly delicate for those three days.

3 For it is declared in revelation, that, when Zarathustra, the Spitaman, became separate from his mother, every night, for three nights, a demon came on, with a hundred and fifty other demons, so that they might effect the slaughter (halak) of Zarathustra, and, when they had beheld the light of the fire, they had fled away, and had not been able to do any damage and harm.

4 During forty days it is not proper that they should leave the child alone; and it is also not proper that the mother of the infant should put her foot over a threshold in the dwelling, or cast her eyes upon a hill, for it is bad for her menstruation.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 17

Why a toothpick must be cut free from bark.

1 The seventeenth subject is this, that when they cut a toothpick ('hilar), or a splinter which they wish to apply to the root of the teeth, it is necessary that they retain no bark.

2 For if a small quantity of bark be on it when they apply it to the teeth, and they cast it away, if a pregnant woman puts her foot upon it, the danger of that may be that the child cometh to harm.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 18

People should marry early, to benefit by children's good works; and a childless man must have an adopted son.

1 The eighteenth subject is this, that it is necessary for mankind to make an endeavor, so that they may espouse a wife in their youth and beget a child.

2 And for women, in like manner, it is necessary that there should be a longing (raghbat) for espousing a husband.

3 Because it is declared in revelation, that every duty and good work a child performeth becometh the father's and mother's, just like those which they have performed with their own hands.

4 The meaning (ma'hni) of pur ('a son') is that which signifies pul ('a bridge'), for by this bridge they arrive at that other world.

5 If there be no child for any one they call him one with a severed bridge, that is, the way for him to that other world is severed, and he is not able to attain to that world.

6 At the head of the Chinwad bridge he shall remain; although he hath performed much duty and good works he is not able to make a passage over the Chinwad bridge, and they do not make up his account and reckoning.

7 And every archangel [Amahraspand] that cometh forward to that place first asketh these words, that is, 'Hast thou brought thy own substitute visibly into the world, or not?'

8 When he hath not brought it, they will pass over him, and his soul will remain, in that place, full of anguish and grief (gham).

9 A similitude (miTHal) of it is like that which happeneth when any one may be in a wilderness, and there may be fear of wild animals and creatures, and near to him may be his own town, but a river of water is in front, and it is not possible to make a passage over that river, as a bridge is fallen in, and he is not able to arrive at that town, but he is always upon the bank (sart) speaking thus: 'Would that the bridge would become perfect!'

10 The duty as to children is in this aggregate.

11 Therefore, the creator Ahura Mazda hath granted unto men that, if there be any one to whom sickness from heaven may occur, and there be no provision of a child for him, he hath commanded him that he should make some one a son of his own, as a friend of his soul, and should receive a child, because every duty can be delegated.

12 That person is in place of a child, and every duty and good work that he performeth shall be just like that which is performed by one's own hand.

13 And, finally, if any one departeth from the world (dunya) and possesseth no adopted child, it is incumbent on the priests and high-priests and his relations to appoint his adopted son, and it is necessary to bring some one in sight on that account, so that his soul may spring away from the torment of hell.

THE GRAND BIBLE

14 Because, every time that his relations do not pay attention to this, when they proceed to that other world, the soul of that person hangeth about them and speaketh thus: 'I left with you something that I had collected and borne trouble for in many years, and you seized upon it, and put it into your own expenditure ('harj), and did not seek for mercy (safqat) on me my soul.'

15 In the same manner as I have remained, delayed (mauqf) in this place, I will not let you pass; so that you will make no passage over the Chinwad bridge till the sacred being takes my rights away from you.'

16 Then the angel Rashn and the angel Mihr make up their reckoning, and, as to whatever those persons have seized upon from the other's property, for every single dinar the account maketh four, and they take away the equivalent.

17 And, as in that world there are no gold and silver, they take away from their souls the good works that they have done, and they give them to the soul of this other.

18 Still, while others do not appoint the adopted son, they are not able to pass over the Chinwad bridge, nor to arrive at their own station.

19 There is no duty whatever more incumbent on relations than this duty, and every time that they appoint an adopted son for any one it is just as though they have made the deceased alive; and there are no limit ('hadd) and end (nihayat) of their good works.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 19

Advantage of attending to agriculture.

1 The nineteenth subject is this, that the performance of agriculture is like that when some one is performing the ceremonial of the sacred beings, and it is necessary to maintain much respect for agriculturists; it is also necessary to keep trouble and strife far from them.

2 For it is declared in revelation, that, as to every one who replants a shrub, while that shrub or tree exists at the place, every good work that every one, who eateth of that shrub, doth in that state of repletion becometh the agriculturist's, just like those which are done by his own hand.

3 If any one orders it, just as that good work occurth much new repose (ra'hat) and comfort reach his soul.

4 As to corn and grain ('hubub) and whatever they sow, it is just like this, because, as regards every one who eateth wheat, barley, and other grains, and performeth duty and good works, they become those of the sower of those grains, just as those which are performed by his own hand.

5 Because, for the life of mankind a crop was necessary, the creation of a creator after the sacred being, the most high, owing to the work of the agriculturist.

6 For everyone who eateth anything dieth, therefore, as regards that person by whose work the life of mankind is established, it is necessary to consider him valuable and precious.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 20

Advantage of feeding the worthy.

1 The twentieth subject is this, that it is incumbent on those of the good religion that they continually give something to the worthy to eat, on account (jihāt) of that which it sayeth in revelation thus: 'When thou givest things to some one that he may eat, every duty and good work that he performeth in that state of repletion become those of that person, who hath given that bread or food to him, just like those which he hath performed with his own hand.'

2 And if he commiteth a sin, he who may have given food to him is innocent.

3 But it is necessary that he be of the good religion and worthy; they should give something to one of a different religion only in case of extreme necessity (zarurat), lest it become as a sin.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 21

How grace must be said before and after eating, and why.

1 The twenty-first subject is this, that, when they eat bread, it is necessary that one should recite the Itha-at-yazamaide and three Ashem-vohus, especially (ba-'hazzatam) in the benediction-ceremonies (afirinagan).

2 For it is declared in the good religion of the Mazda-worshippers, that, when they wish to celebrate the sacred feast (myzad) and benediction-ceremonies, it is necessary that all persons who are seated at the feast should take up the inward prayer.

3 For each man an angel is stationed, on the right-hand side, and two angels for the priests

4 But when they eat chatteringly, or relate the news ('hadith), the angels depart from them, and a demon seizes on the place of each angel.

5 And in former times the custom ('hadat) of the people would have been in this manner, that, if any one should have come to the door in the middle of the feast, that person whose Afrinagan-precinct it might have been, or whoever should have gone to the expense of that Afrinagan, would have had words with that intruding person, and would have also spoken thus: 'As thou hast brought my feast to harm, give me back whatever hath been the cost.'

6 And in one place in revelation it is declared that from eating chatteringly itself is the sin, for every one who is chattering during the eating of bread is just like him who is smiting and harassing the angels of the spiritual existences.

7 Therefore, if there be any one who is not able to consecrate a sacred cake, it is necessary to eat bread with the inward prayer of Ahura Mazda, that is, the archangels.

8 And, if he doth not altogether know it, he reciteth the Itha-at-yazamaide and three Ashem-vohus, and eateth up the bread.

9 Afterwards he maketh his mouth clean, and, four Ashem-vohus and two Yatha-ahu-vairyos being spoken out, he is then to utter words.

10 For, every time that this custom (qa'hidat) is carried on in a place, through the first Ashem-vohu so much good work hath arisen that it hath propitiated the sacred being, the good and propitious; through the second Ashem-vohu so much good work hath arisen that it hath revered and propitiated Srosh, the righteous; through the third Ashem-vohu so much good work hath arisen that it hath revered and propitiated Hordad and Amurdad, the archangels; and through the fourth Ashem-vohu so much good work hath arisen that whatever the creator Ahura Mazda hath created becometh revered and propitiated.

11 And with each mouthful (luqmah) that is eaten, while the inward prayer subsists, they proclaim a blessing for Hordad and Amurdad, the archangels.

12 But, if it be eaten without the inward prayer, as demons are in that place, they say, 'Thou mightest have eaten the poison of a serpent.'

13 Therefore, take notice as to which is the better of these two.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 22

Advantage of performing Jadangoi.

1 The twenty-second subject is this, that the performance of Jadangoi ('intercession') is like that when some one is occasioning the ceremonial of the sacred beings.

2 Therefore, it should be expedient that it be continuous, and that they perform Jadangoi as regards the priests and high-priests and the worthy.

3 For, in the commentary of the Hadokht Nask, it sayeth that every one who performeth Jadangoi, and extracts anything from a person on their account, and conveyeth it to them, is as much without dishonesty ('hiyanat), towards them, as he who may have given to them out of his own property.

4 And in the spiritual existence they take account of that profit for him, and just as they make out the account of the good work of that person who may have given it, even so much is his good work.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 23

Tethered animals must be restrained.

1 The twenty-third subject is this, that it is requisite to restrain a tethered animal from misbehaviour, and to keep watch over one's own creatures, especially at the time when they have eaten meat.

2 Therefore, if they have eaten meat and they commit an assault, every offense that the animal ('haivan) commiteth may be that person's whose meat may be eaten.

3 For example, if a horse lashes out a kick (lakad) at any one, the offense may be that person's whose food may be eaten and caused the offense.

4 Therefore it is necessary to make an endeavor that they shall commit no offense whatever, especially at a time when they have eaten meat.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 24

Why and how Hom juice must be given to a new-born child.

1 The twenty-fourth subject is this, that when an infant is born from its mother it is necessary that they give it the consecrated Haoma juice, on this account, that understanding ('haql), wisdom, and knowledge may more abundantly get to it, and the want (ablat) of them may come more scantily upon it.

2 If, at that time, they do not perform the consecration, they should take forth a little Haoma for it, and recite a Yatha-ahu-vairyoy, and put a trifle of water into it, and make Haoma-juice of that, and give it to the infant, and afterwards milk.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 25

Why promises must not be broken.

1 The twenty-fifth subject is this, that any agreement and promise (qaul) they make with any one it is necessary so far to perform and bring to pass.

2 Although many things may go to harm by means (sabab) of it, it is not desirable to perform that agreement with duplicity.

3 Because, in our religion, they call this a Mihr-druj ('breach of promise'), and in revelation it decrees, as to any one who commiteth a Mihr-druj, that the way to heaven becometh closed for him, and that person himself goeth discomfited out of this world, so that a warning ('halamat) becometh quite manifest unto him.

4 And a Mihr-druj is attached in such a manner that, if fortune (tali'h) may have befallen any one happily, or an insufficient quantity of his life ('humr) may have remained, the Mihr-druj extendeth to his children without opposition ('hilaf).

5 And every household that becometh extinct, or race whose issue fails, or any of the great misfortunes that happen to mankind -- from which misfortune one obtaineth release with difficulty -- may all be owing to the fact that they have committed a Mihr-druj.

6 If committed by oneself, it is declared, in one place in revelation, that the glorified Zarathustra, the Spitaman, inquired of Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, thus: 'Of any of the sins that mankind commit which is the worst?'

7 Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, decreed thus: 'No sin whatever is worse than this, that two persons make a covenant with one another in such a manner that no one whatever is between them, except me who am Ahura Mazda; and, afterwards one of those two persons deviates from it, and says, "I have no knowledge ('habar) of it," and no one whatever is a witness, for that other person, except me.'

8 No sin whatever is worse than that, and that person himself will not go out of this world until retribution overtaketh him, and in that other world his punishment is more severe than all; so that person becometh unfortunate in both worlds.

9 And it is the same if this covenant be with a righteous person or a wicked one.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 26

Every man of fifteen years must select a patron spirit and a priestly guide whom he must obey.

1 The twenty-sixth subject is this, that the wise and the ancients say that when a man becometh fifteen years of age it is necessary that he taketh one of the angels as his own protection, that he taketh one of the wise as his own sage, and that he taketh one of the high-priests and officiating priests as his own high-priest.

2 So that, if, any time, a bereavement (astanah) approacheth, he may beg a favour from the archangels, in order that it may furnish an escape from that bereavement.

3 And, any time any affair cometh forward, and he hath to have opinion (rai) and advice (masvarat), he holdeth a consultation with that sage, while the sage telleth him his opinion (tadbir).

4 And, if any question as to proper and improper cometh forward, he speaketh with that high-priest, so that he may tell him in reply.

5 When the instructions of these three persons are brought to pass, carrying out the commands of the sacred being is accomplished.

6 Especially the instructions of the high-priests, because their satisfaction is connected with the satisfaction of the sacred being; and the high-priests possess so much dignity (martabat) in the presence of the sacred being, the good and propitious, that they are quite able to forgive any trivial one of the sins of mankind, and Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, quickly forgives that sin for the high-priest.

7 Therefore, carrying out the commands of the high-priests becometh incumbent on every one; and the fulfillment of this maxim is better than that of a whole assemblage of maxims.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 27

When it is doubtful whether an action be right or wrong a high-priest must be consulted.

1 The twenty-seventh subject is this, that is, if any affair cometh forward, that they should thoroughly understand whether it be a good work, or a sin.

2 In that manner it becometh better that they make an evasion on the spot, until a time when they make it known with accuracy that that affair is a sin or a reward.

3 If they perform any affair without knowing this, although it be a good work, it becometh a sin for them.

4 For it is declared in revelation, that, except that which they inquire of the high-priests, no affair whatever is proper to perform.

5 Whatever wisdom there be for any one from his own head is only one; then, as two wisdoms are more than one, it therefore maketh it expedient to inquire of the high-priests.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 28

Why the Avesta must be properly learnt and remembered.

1 The twenty-eighth subject is this, that, when they teach the Avesta, it is in like manner necessary that they teach it properly and truly, and recite it with deliberation and composure (sakini).

2 And it is necessary for those who are taught to recite it connectedly, and to keep it ever in remembrance.

3 For it is declared in revelation, that the sacred being hath decreed thus: 'As to every one who puteth the Avesta away from his memory, I will put his soul as far from heaven as the width of the earth.'

THE GRAND BIBLE

4 And in the commentary of the Avesta it is related that, in former times, as to any one who had been taught the Avesta and had put it away from his memory, until the time he had again made it easy, they would have given him bread like that which they give to the dogs.

5 And in another place I have read that they would have given bread to him on the point of a spear.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 29

Why liberality must extend only to the worthy.

1 The twenty-ninth subject is this, that, when they provide any munificence (sa'havat) or liberality, it is necessary that they provide it for the worthy; and one is to consider thus: 'Is this person, to whom I am giving this thing, worthy or not?'

2 Therefore it is necessary to make an effort, so that they may not give to the unworthy.

3 For in revelation, as regardeth that person who provides any munificence for the unworthy, they call it a vain work and a gift without advantage; and day by day it is the punishment and torment of that person.

4 And, whatever they give to the unworthy, they have made that thing extinct.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 30

Water must not be poured away, or drunk, in the dark.

1 The thirtieth subject is this, that it is not proper to pour away water at night, especially from the northern side (janib) which would be the worst.

2 Therefore, if it become a necessity in the end (ba-'hatam), it is requisite to recite one Yatha-ahu-vairyo, and, when they make a light ready ('hazir), to pour away the water gently.

3 In like manner it is not proper to swallow water at night, because it is a sin.

4 But, if a necessity arises, it is necessary to make a light ready, and one first eateth some morsels of food (ta'ham) so that the sin may be less.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 31

Dogs must be fed and well-treated.

1 The thirty-first subject is this, that, every time they eat bread, it is necessary to withhold three morsels from their own bodies, and to give them to a dog.

2 And it is not desirable to beat a dog.

3 For, of the poor no one whatever is poorer than a dog, and it is necessary to give a tethered animal bread, because the good work is great.

4 And in revelation it is declared in this manner, that, if a dog is asleep upon the road, it is not proper that they put a foot violently on the ground, so that he cometh awake.

5 And, in former times, an allowance (raitib) of bread would have been made every day for the sake of the dogs, three times in summer and twice in winter, on this account, that one wishes them to come to the assistance of his soul at the Chinwad bridge.

6 In the worldly existence they are the guard of men and cattle.

7 If there had not been a dog they would not have been able to keep a single sheep.

8 Every time that he barketh, just as his bark goeth forth, the demons and fiends run away from the place.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 32

Why a hen or cock must not be killed for crowing.

1 The thirty-second subject is this, that, when a hen utters a crow in a house, or the cock croweth unseasonably, it is desirable that they do not kill it, and do not consider it a bad habit (a'h'l).

2 Because it is uttering that crow for the reason that a fiend hath found a way into that house, and the hen or the cock, alone, doth not possess the power (taqat) that would keep the fiend away from that house, and the hen is going to give the cock assistance, and uttereth the crow.

3 Therefore, if any time the chance (itifaq) happeneth in that manner, it is requisite to bring another cock, so that they may drive away that fiend through the assistance of one another.

4 And if a cock croweth unseasonably it is likewise not desirable to kill it, because the reason may be this which I have stated.

5 For it is declared in the good religion, that there is a fiend whom they call Sej [Av. itheyjo], and, in every house where an infant existeth, that fiend striveth that she may cause some misfortune to come upon that house.

6 So it is necessary that they should keep a cock on the watch for her, so that it may smite that fiend and force her to the road away from that house.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 33

Why search must be made where a corpse is supposed to be buried.

1 The thirty-third subject is this, that, when there is a place and any risk or fear exists that a corpse is concealed beneath the ground, one is to make it apparent and visible, because it is a great good work.

2 For it is declared in the good religion, that, when they conceal a corpse beneath the ground, Spandarmad, the archangel, shuddereth; it is just as severe as a serpent or scorpion would be to any one in private sleep, and it is also just like that to the ground.

3 When thou makest a corpse beneath the ground as it were apparent, thou makest the ground liberated from that affliction.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 34

Animals must not be often killed, and some never; also certain parts should be consecrated.

1 The thirty-fourth subject is this, that it is greatly necessary to refrain from much slaughter of animals and the cattle species.

2 Because it says in revelation that, for every one who slaughters many animals and cattle, every fiber of the hair of a goat cometh, in that other world, like a sharp sword, and adheres in the soul of that person.

3 And there are several things the slaughter of which is very bad, and the sin very abundant, as the lamb, the kid, the ploughing ox, the war horse, the swallow bird that catcheth the locust, and the cock; and of the whole of these the sin is most as regardeth the cock.

4 If it cometh a necessity, it is proper to kill a cock that doth not crow, and it is necessary to consecrate their heads.

5 Any head of an animal, not consecrated, it is not desirable to eat, so that it cometh so far a righteous gift.

6 If one be not able to consecrate the head, it is requisite to consecrate one kidney as a substitute (badal) for it.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 35

Prayers to be used when washing the face.

1 The thirty-fifth subject is this, that, when they wish to wash the face, they should recite one Ashem-vohu, and set the mouth firmly closed, so that the water, not staying away from it, shall not go into the mouth.

2 And, as one washes over the face, they should recite the Kem-na-mazda, so that the fiend Nasrusht may become smitten.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 36

Necessity of the Barashnom for both men and women.

1 The thirty-sixth subject is this, that it is strictly incumbent on mankind, on man and woman, to perform the Barashnom ceremony, because mankind feed on menstruous matter in the womb of the mother.

2 For that reason it is necessary to perform the Barashnom once, so that one may become pure from that pollution.

3 For if one cometh fifteen years of age, and doth not perform the Barashnom, whatever he puts a hand on, the glory and purity of that thing will diminish; and it is not proper that they put hand on a sacred cake or any thing washed with ceremony.

4 In revelation it says, if any one who hath not performed the Barashnom shall die, the demons make him as though he were a corpse kept one month in the hot season.

5 And, when the soul arriveth at the head of the Chinwad bridge, the archangels and angels complain of the stench of that soul, and are not able to make up its account and reckoning.

6 It remaineth at the Chinwad bridge and is not able to pass; it experienceth much repentance and hath no advantage from it.

7 If it be necessary for any one to perform the Barashnom of the head, and he be able to do it, but doth not do it, if he performeth the ceremonial ablution of the head a thousand times, it doth not become pure from that pollution, and that is the pollution of Nasrusht, which is amid the veins and sinews, and the flesh and bones; it doth not become pure through any other thing except through the liquid consecrated by the religious formula [nirang].

8 And as to that person, also, who performeth the Barashnom for mankind, it is necessary that he be a man, a friend of the soul, a truthful speaker, and an abstainer, because through chastity and modesty (masturi) he cometh employed.

9 If complaint of any perfidy in him is publicly diffused, in that disgrace (malamat) it is necessary that the high-priests should dislocate his joints one by one, and it is requisite that they give him as food to the dogs.

10 So that by this action they may make a man observe more chastely and continently, that this result ('hazil) of sin may not occur.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 37

Why the ten days of the guardian spirits [farohars] must be celebrated.

1 The thirty-seventh subject is this, that, when the days of the guardian spirits come on, it is necessary that all persons, among their own food and devotion, should order and provide the sacred cakes and ceremonial, the sacred feast and benedictions (Afrinagan).

2 For these ten days it is incumbent on every one; and those are better which they prepare in their own houses, because the souls go every one to its own house.

3 And they should have an ear for them, so that they may prepare the sacred cakes and feast and benedictions.

4 Those ten days any one of all the souls -- that are in this way in every house where they provide the feast more abundantly -- proclaims, as to that master of the house, that family, and the whole who are in that house, and the year's affairs of every kind, that they are very good, and their entry (da'hl) and coming in are very good.

5 And every single good work, on account of which we have spoken of the souls of the departed, cometh just like those we have done for our own souls.

6 And, when they pass away from this worldly existence, those souls come again, meeting them, and cause gladness, maintain their courage, and also render them honour in the presence of the creator Ahura Mazda, and speak thus: 'These righteous souls did not put us away from remembrance while they were in the world, and we have been satisfied with them; now we are unanimous that thou shouldst provide them equal shares of those good works of ours, and make their souls attain to the position of the righteous.'

7 They utter these words, and give those souls confidence, while they make out their account.

8 Afterwards, with them, they make the passage of the Chinwad bridge, till they arrive at their own position, and then they return.

9 Therefore it is necessary to make an effort, so that they may maintain the guardian spirits properly, and the souls of their fathers and mothers and relations may exist with honor from them.

10 For if they retire with dissatisfaction they utter a curse, and, as the soul departs from this world, they administer reproaches to it, and speak thus: 'Thou thinkest that they wish continually to make a way for thee to that place, but it is not necessary for thee to come into this world.'

11 Now, hadst thou performed duty and good works on our behalf, and hadst thou recollected us, we would also have come to thy assistance, and would have released thee from this fearful position.'

12 And that soul experiences much repentance, and hath no advantage whatever from it.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 38

We must not drink from the same cup as those of a different religion, until it is purified.

1. The thirty-eighth subject is this, that, so far as effort and endeavor prevail, it is requisite to abstain from the same cup as those of a different religion, and it is not desirable to drink the water of any goblet of theirs.

2. And if the goblet be of copper or of tin, it is requisite to wash it with water, so that it may be proper to drink the water.

3. If the goblet be of earthenware or wooden, it is altogether improper.

4. Because, when any one drinks with a stranger, it maketh his heart inclined (mail) towards him, for it would be a sin; and, on account of the sin committed, he cometh bold, and his soul hath an inclination for wickedness.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 39

The sacred fire and its attendant must be properly maintained (see Chap. 92).

1 The thirty-ninth subject is this, that it is necessary to properly maintain the sacred fire which they have established in a town or village.

2 And at night it is necessary to make it blaze up once, and by day twice.

3 For it is declared in revelation, that, if there had been no sacred fire, no one would have been able to go from town to town; because it is owing to the glory of the sacred fire that no one on the roads is able to commit an excess upon any one else.

4 It is necessary that they should present the whole of the firewood; and, as to the person who maketh it blaze, they should give him bread and a salary (nafaqah).

5 For, every time that that fire is satisfied, and they maintain it properly, every fire that may exist in the earth of seven regions cometh satisfied with that person.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 40

Parents and priests must be obeyed and not vexed.

1 The fortieth subject is this, that it is not desirable to distress one's priest, or father, or mother; and, if people perceive much trouble, disquietude, and harm arising from them, it is certainly not desirable that they should give them back a reply with any aggravation.

2 Because their satisfaction is connected with the satisfaction of the sacred being, and every time that people distress them they have distressed Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious.

THE GRAND BIBLE

3 It is not possible for any duty or good work to extend to the spiritual existences while one doth not make those guardians satisfied, and it is not possible (mumkin) that any one should repay these three persons all their dues.

4 In the commentary of the Hadokht Nask it says: -- Ma azarayoish, Zarathustra! ma Pourushaspem, ma Dughdhovam, ma aethrapaitish, 'it is not desirable that thou, O Zarathustra! shouldst distress thy father, or mother, or priest.'

5 Therefore, three times every day it is indispensable for one to fold his arms in the presence of these three persons, and to say: 'What is your will (murad)? So that I may think and speak and do it. 6. If what was not proper hath come from me of myself, it is necessary that you make a righteous gift on our behalf.'

SAD DAR CHAPTER 41

The care and prayers necessary for menstruous women.

1 The forty-first subject is this, that it is greatly requisite to avoid a menstruous woman, while they give her bread and food moderately.

2 As soon as she is not able to eat they should not give her more, and in the same manner as regards water, on this account, that whatever remnant cometh from that menstruous woman doth not come to any use.

3 When they wish to provide bread they put the hand into the sleeve, or they place something on the top of the sleeve, and it is necessary that her bare hand should not come forth again in any place.

4 Because every drop of water that trickles on to a limb of a menstruous woman becometh a sin of three hundred stirs.

5 And it is requisite for a menstruous woman to avoid everything that is washed with ceremony by fifteen steps.

6 It is also necessary for her to be at least three steps distant from a righteous man, and on whatever her eye casts a look it diminishes the glory of that thing.

7 And on every woman the twelve ceremonials, atoning for the offense of menstruation, are incumbent.

8 One on account of the offense that hath occurred as regards the spiritual existence.

9 The second on account of the offense that hath occurred as regards the stars.

10 The third on account of that which hath occurred as regards the sun.

11 The fourth on account of that which hath occurred as regards the moon.

12 The fifth on account of that which hath occurred as regards the spirit of fire.

13 The sixth on account of that which hath occurred as regards the spirit of water.

14 The seventh on account of that which hath occurred as regards the spirit of earth.

15 The eighth on account of that which hath occurred as regards the spirit of the wind.

16 The ninth on account of that which hath occurred as regards Hordad.

17 The tenth on account of the offense that hath occurred as regards Amurdad.

18 The eleventh on account of the offense that hath occurred as regards meal-time (hurdak gah).

19 The twelfth on account of the offense that hath occurred as regards bodily refuse and dead matter.

20 Therefore it is incumbent on every one in this manner; if any one be more opulent eighteen ceremonials are indispensable, and if she hath silver in excess (ba-ghayat) there should be twenty-one, and in one place I have read that twenty-four are indispensable; but, for lesser people, this that I have noted is necessary.

21 That which they provide in their lifetime is better; and, just as would occur when any one plants a tree anew, and is eating the fruit of it every year, even so much is that good work increasing every year.

22 If she shall live ten years, or if a hundred years, even so long it is becoming every year much more.

23 If they provide it after her lifetime, that which would be the increase departs; and in her lifetime, also, that cureth which every one, who hath done a duty on his own account, hath seen, that the thing itself which others accomplish after his lifetime is very different; so that she should provide it with her own hands, not after her decease (vafat).

SAD DAR CHAPTER 42

Why slander and seduction, sins producing accusers, are specially injurious.

1 The forty-second subject is this, that it is necessary to practice strict abstinence from that sin which affects accusers.

2 That would be when any one slandereth (buhtanad), or any one commiteth a rape on the wife of some one, or causes a woman to occupy a separate bed from her own husband.

3 These are sins for which there is no retribution, except when thou beggest forgiveness of that person whom thy sin hath assailed.

4 Afterwards, they keep back the soul, at the Chinwad bridge, till the time when its antagonist arriveth and exacts justice from it; then it obtaineth release.

5 Every time that any one applieth a falsehood or a slander to some person, so that people are afterwards telling that falsehood again, and it vexeth the heart of that person, they are bringing punishment ever anew on the soul of that former one.

6 The sin doth not depart through the performance of duties and good works, so long as he doth not make his antagonist satisfied.

7 This is a grave sin, and it is requisite to be careful that they do not commit it.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 43

Noxious creatures must be killed, especially five kinds.

1 The forty-third subject is this, that it is necessary to make an endeavor to kill noxious creatures and reptiles (hasharat) of the earth; because, in revelation, it is put forth as a great good work.

2 Especially these five things: One is the frog in the water, the second is the snake and scorpion, the third is the ant (marchish) that flieth, the fourth is the common ant (morchah), and; the fifth is the mouse.

3 Therefore, every time that they bring a frog up, out of the water, and make it dry, and, after (ba'hd) that, kill it, it is a good work of a thousand and two hundred dirhams in weight.

4 And every time that they kill a snake, and recite the Avesta that is appointed for that occasion, it is just as though they have slain an apostate (ashmogh).

5 For every one who killeth a flying ant (marchish) it is as much good work as for any one who is reciting inward prayer for ten days.

6 Among the creatures of Ahriman nothing whatever is more harmful than this; for, if it dieth in the air (hava) it becometh a gnat, if it dieth in the dust it becometh a worm, if it dieth in the water it becometh a leech, if it dieth among the excavators of flesh it becometh a venomous snake (mar-i afhai), and if it dieth in dung it becometh creeping things.

7 For every one who killeth a corn-dragging ant it is as much good work as for any one who reciteth the Ahura Mazda Yasht.

8 And for every one who killeth many noxious creatures it is as much good work as for a priest who performeth the ceremonial of the sacred beings; both good works are equal.

9 For every one who killeth a mouse it is as much good work as if four lions are killed.

10 Therefore, it is incumbent on every one to make an effort to kill a noxious creature.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 44

Walking barefoot is a sin, and why.

1 The forty-fourth subject is this, that it is not desirable for those of the good religion, so far as they are able to manage it, to put a bare foot upon the ground, because it is a sin, and injury occureth to Spandarmad, the archangel.

2 And they call that the sin of running about uncovered.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 45

How repentance must be accomplished for every sin.

1 The forty-fifth subject is this, that it is continually necessary that people should keep in remembrance the accomplishment of repentance (taubat).

2 Every time that a sin leapeth from control it is necessary to act so that they go before the priests, high-priests, and spiritual chiefs, and accomplish repentance.

3 And in accordance with the sin should be the good work, just as though the good work were due to that occasion when they accomplish it.

4 While mankind are living, it becometh every year a further benefit.

5 Sin is also, in like manner, going on to a head every year; and when they accomplish repentance, so that it may not increase further, it is just like a tree that becometh withered, and they extirpate its further growth.

6 And that repentance is better which they accomplish before high-priests and spiritual chiefs, and when they accomplish the retribution that the high-priest orders every sin that exists departs from them.

7 The repentance that high-priests accomplish they likewise call repentance.

8 If there be no high-priest it is necessary to go before some persons who are commissioned by high-priests; and if those, also, do not exist, it is necessary to go to a man who is a friend of the soul, and to accomplish the repentance.

9 At the time when one shall depart from the world it is incumbent on sons and daughters and relations, that they give repentance into the mouth of the afflicted one, and that they give the Ashem-vohu into his mouth.

10 For the high-priests have said that, when they have accomplished repentance because they have committed many sins, they do not arrive in hell, but they administer punishment to them at the head of the Chinwad bridge, and afterwards conduct them to their own place.

11 Repentance is that when they accomplish repentance of the sin which they have committed, and do not commit that sin a second time; if they do commit it, that first sin then cometh back.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 46

The proper age for tying on the sacred thread-girdle (kusti).

1 The forty-sixth subject is this, that, when people become fourteen years of age, it is necessary to tie on the sacred thread-girdle [kusti], because the high-priests have said that it is likewise necessary to take into account those nine months that they have been in the womb of the mother.

2 For in our religion there is no duty better than wearing the sacred thread-girdle [[kusti]], and it is incumbent on man and woman.

3 And, in former days, if any one should have become completely fifteen years of age, and should not have worn the sacred thread-girdle, they would have done for him by stoning, as bread and water are forbidden (haram) for him.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 47

Ceremonies must be celebrated after the death of a child of seven, to liberate its soul from those of its parents.

1 The forty-seventh subject is this, that, when a child of seven years shall die, an order is necessary that it is requisite to perform a ceremony (yasht) for Srosh on account of it, and to consecrate the sacred cake of the fourth night.

2 For it sayeth in revelation that the souls of children go with the souls of their fathers and mothers; if the father is fit for heaven the child goeth to heaven with him, if he be fit for hell it arrives in hell, if the mother be fit for heaven it reacheth heaven with her, if she be fit for hell it reacheth hell with her.

3 Therefore, every time that they accomplish the ceremony for Srosh, the soul of that child becometh separated from the souls of its father and mother, and goeth to heaven, and is imploring intercession (shifa'hat) for its father and mother in the presence of the sacred beings in that other world.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 48

A cooking-pot must not be more than two-thirds full, for fear of boiling over.

1 The forty-eighth subject is this, that, when they boil a cooking-pot, it is necessary to make the water two parts of one-third each, that one-third of the pot may be empty; so that, if at any time the pot shall boil, the water shall not go to the top.

2 For if they do not act so, and the water, owing to not stopping, goes into the fire, it is a sin of a thousand and two hundred dirhams in weight; therefore it is necessary to keep watch that this sin doth not arise.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 49

A fire must be cold before the ashes are removed.

1 The forty-ninth subject is this, that, when one gathereth up a fire, it is requisite to leave it for a time, so that the ash-bed (bum) of the fire may become cold; afterwards, one is to take it up and carry it to the precinct of fire.

2 It is not proper that they carry the ash-bed (zamin) of a hot fire to the precinct of fire; so far is notorious.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 50

How the morning ablutions must be performed.

1 The fiftieth subject is this, that, every day at dawn, when they rise up from sleep, it is not proper to wash the hands first with water.

2 The ceremonial ablution is to wash the hands, face, nose, eyes, and feet thoroughly, either with fruit (mivah) or some grass upon which no water hath come; afterwards, to make them dry, and to wash them three times with water in such a manner that it becometh wet from the face as far as the ear.

3 It is necessary to keep the mouth closed, so that the water shall not go into the mouth; for if a drop, owing to not stopping, goes into the mouth, it is a sin of three hundred stirs.

4 Afterwards, one is to wash the hands three times with water, as far as the upper arms; first the right hand, and afterwards the left hand; and, in like manner, he is to wash the right foot and left foot.

5 Then they recite the Kem-na-mazda, for, every time that they wish to recite anything as an inward prayer, it is necessary that the hands be washed with ceremonial ablution, and, if they are not, the Avesta is not accepted, and the fiend of corruption (masa) doth not rush away, and it becometh a tanapuhr sin.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 51

Why it is necessary to send a child to school.

1 The fifty-first subject is this, that it is incumbent on every one to send a child to school, and to teach it something.

2 Because every duty and good work that a child performeth is just as though the father and mother had performed it with their own hands.

3 Therefore it is necessary to make an effort, so that they may teach them something good, and make them aware of good works and sin; for they are doing that on account of their own souls, so that those children may be courageous in doing good works.

4 If they are not taught, they then perform less duty and good works, and less reacheth the souls of the father and mother.

5 And it also happeneth that if they do not deliver children to school, and do not teach them anything, and they become bold in committing sin, that sin becometh fixed on the necks of the father and mother.

6 Therefore they have decided rightly who teach them something, especially what is proper and improper according to revelation; because the chief principle is this, whether, through the duty of this world, a good or bad result is coming hereafter.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 52

Why a sacred cake must be consecrated every year on the day Hordad of the month Farvardin.

1 The fifty-second subject is this, that it is incumbent on every one that, every year when the month Frawardin cometh on, he is to provide a sacred cake on the day Hordad, and whatever they are able to bring to hand, a little of everything, they are to place by that sacred cake, and to consecrate it with the dedicatory formula Ayaranamcha, so that the affairs of that year may be better through that day's provision and the entry and coming in of guests.

2 For it is declared in revelation, that, every year, when the day Hordad of the month Frawardin cometh on, they allot a daily provision for mankind, and whatever one wisheth to pass to the lot of mankind in that year they write down that day.

3 Therefore, when they shall consecrate this sacred cake, the archangel Hordad is making intercession for that person.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 53

Any one travelling twelve leagues must have a sacred cake consecrated before he goes and every Warharan day during his absence.

1 The fifty-third subject is this, that, when, in former times, any one wished to go on a journey (safar) that might have been at least twelve leagues (parasang), they would have consecrated a sacred cake, so that no affliction might happen in that journey, and affairs might be according to their wish, and employments (sughl) cheerful.

2 And it is still incumbent on every one that, when they wish to go on a journey, they are to consecrate this sacred cake.

3 And, while the person is on the journey, he should order the consecration of this sacred cake, in his house, every Warharan day, so that that person may arrive in safety (salamat) at his house.

4. The dedicatory formula is this -- Amahe hutashtahe -- and is known to the priest himself.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 54

If a man's serving wife hath a son, he may adopt it; but if only a daughter, he must adopt a relation's son.

1 The fifty-fourth subject is this, that if any one hath a serving wife, and if the acquisition of a male child resulteth from her, it is suitable for adoption by that person, and the bride is not severed for that person.

2 But if it be a female child it is necessary that the man should not be negligent (ghafil) in appointing an adopted son for his own sake.

3 He should himself appoint a son of some relation, who is a friend of the soul, so that the bride may not be severed for his soul.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 55

When a sacred cake cannot be consecrated at a Navazud, bread must be eaten with the Ahura Mazda Baj.

1. The fifty-fifth subject is this, that when a Navazud ceremony is performed, and it happeneth that it is not possible to consecrate a sacred cake, it is necessary that one should eat bread with the Ahura Mazda inward prayer; and, afterwards, he should complete the prayer Just as when they complete it as regards the sacred cake, so that the sin may be less.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 56

Precautions and prayers necessary when evacuating water.

1 The fifty-sixth subject is this, that, when any one wishes to make an evacuation of water, it is necessary that he should not make the evacuation of water while standing on his feet.

2 Because, in the commentary of the Vendidad, it is said, concerning that, that it is a serious sin.

3 When they squat for evacuating water it is necessary that it extend only from the heel as far as the end of the toes; for, if it be more, every drop is a Tanapuhr sin.

4 And, when they wish to squat for the evacuation of water, they are to utter one Yatha-ahu-vairyo; and, when the action is over, they are to recite the Ashem-vohu three times, the Humatanam twice, the Hukhshathrotamai three times, the Yatha-ahu-vairyo four times, and the Ahunem-vairim to the end.

5 Because, every time that they act like this, they are pleasant in the eyes and hearts of mankind, and their words are more approved in the vicinity of kings.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 57

A hedgehog must not be injured, and why.

1 The fifty-seventh subject is this, that it is not proper to kill a hedgehog; and, everywhere that they see it, it is necessary to take it up and carry it into the wilderness (sa'hra), so that it may go into a hole, which is ever considered a great good work.

2 Because, when a hedgehog is in their nest, some ants will die; it will also catch and eat thousands of snakes and other harmful creatures, and it eateth all noxious creatures.

3 Therefore, owing to the whole of this, these words are expedient.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 58

Advantages of a ceremony for the living soul.

1 The fifty-eighth subject is this, that it is ever necessary that those of the good religion should make an effort that they may celebrate a ceremony for their living souls.

2 For the soul, for which they have celebrated a ceremony, just as much good work as it then becometh each year, it is twice as much good work the second year.

3 So that, in this manner, the merit of the ceremony for the living soul is increasing just so much every year, while the man is living.

4 And, after that, this also occurth, that, if at the time when that person becometh an immortal soul there be no one at hand -- Srosh being the angel when the ceremony for the living soul is celebrated -- Srosh, the righteous, receiveth the soul by himself, and is keeping watch over it during the three days, and doth not forsake it, so that no danger or harm happeneth to it.

5 And the fourth night he is a helper, with the angel Rashn, at the Chinwad bridge, while they make up its account and reckoning, and it goeth to its own place.

6 And this ceremony for the living soul is appointed for the reason that, just in the manner that, when an infant becometh separated from the mother, a midwife (qabilat) is necessary for it, so that they may keep watch over it, and just in the manner that she taketh up the infant from the ground -- and, at the time when it is born it is ever necessary that there be a woman present ('hazirat), or they may perform work for the infant at a time fit for the demon -- in this same manner, when the soul is becoming separated from the body it is like an infant (tifl), and doth not know any way to its place.

7 When they celebrate a ceremony for the living soul, and have propitiated the righteous Srosh, the righteous Srosh becometh like the midwife, so that he receiveth that soul by himself and keepeth watch that it is out of the hands of Ahriman and the demons.

8 When they do not celebrate a ceremony for the soul when living, but, after that, the priests perform it before Srosh, it is like that which occurth when a woman bringeth forth a child, and after that they set her before the midwife.

9 And it happeneth that while some one is coming in, who taketh up that child and wrappeth it up, it hath perished.

10 Therefore, as she doth the needful which they should do earlier by the hand of some one, in this same manner it maketh it incumbent on every one to celebrate a ceremony for his own living soul, so that it may be free (iman) from these misfortunes.

11 And that, if his decease occurth in any place where there may be no one who will celebrate a ceremony for his soul, since a ceremony for the living soul is celebrated, there are no arrears for him, and he is free.

12 And, in many things, it is that ceremony for the living soul which is expedient, especially in these times when the priests have remained few in number; and, when it is celebrated by one's own hands, it is a great duty.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 59

The only Niyayesh for women is obedience to their husbands.

1 The fifty-ninth subject is this, that, in the good and pure religion of the Mazda-worshippers, they have not commanded the women to perform the Niyayeshes.

2 And their Niyayeshes are these, that three times every day, at dawn, mid-day prayer, and evening prayer, they stand back in the presence of their own husbands, and fold their arms and speak thus: 'What are thy thoughts, so that I may think them; what is necessary for thee, so that I may speak it; and what is necessary for thee, so that I may do it?'

3 For, any command, and whatever the husband ordereth, it is requisite to go about that day.

4 And, certainly, without the leave (riza) of the husband she is to do no work, so that the Lord may be pleased with that wife.

5 For the satisfaction of the sacred being is in a reverence (yasth) for the satisfaction of the husband; so that every time that they perform work by command of the husband they call them righteous in the religion; and if not, what do they call them?

SAD DAR CHAPTER 60

Steadfastness in the religion leads to heaven, and helping others to be steadfast is the best good work.

1 The sixtieth subject is this, that we are keeping the good and pure religion of the Mazda-worshippers with us, so that escape from hell may be possible for our souls.

2 And we are completely united in hope, and through investigation (ta'hqiq) we fully understand that, when we are steadfast in the good religion, we arrive in heaven.

3 And we know that arrival in heaven occurth through virtuous actions, and through them we are saved; so that we think of good, speak of good, and do good.

4 And no doing of good is better than that which offers itself when a difficult duty cometh before one of the good religion as his soul wisheth to depart.

5 Since it cometh to thee, do thou give help to that which hath escaped his hand, so that he may come out of that hindrance; and do thou not forsake him so that he relinquisheth the religion.

6 For after that, while he is in the religion, and while his children, after him, are in the religion, every duty and good work that he doth -- and his children -- is just like those which are done by thine own hand.

7 And it is just like that with regard to poll-tax, it is also indispensable to give it in semblance of help, so that they may give that person his release ('halaz), and he may stay in his own place, and the advantage of a good work (THavab) may come to that other person.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 61

Evils of falsehood.

1 The sixty-first subject is this, that it is requisite to abstain strictly from speaking falsehood; so that, every time that mankind indulge in the speaking of falsehood with fondness, it is not proper to do so; and falsehood is the chief of all sins.

2 Zarathustra inquired of Ahura Mazda thus: 'Who is a liar like?'

3 Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, said: 'A liar is a cooperator with Ahriman.'

4 In revelation it sayeth that there is no hereafter (a'hirat) for the speakers of falsehood, and in the midst of mankind they are contemptible ('haqir).

5 If such a man be powerful (mu'thashim), and there be no avoiding ('haDHar) him in the vicinity of mankind, they do not have any respect for him, and he is clearly (farzam) an evil liar.

6 Although he possesseth much wealth, it will all depart from his hands, and, finally ('haqibat), begging of mankind occurth to him, and his progeny also becometh scanty.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 62

Advantages of truth in word and action.

1 The sixty-second subject is this, that it is necessary to take early to the speaking of truth and doing of justice, and to maintain oneself therein, for nothing whatever is better among mankind than truth.

2 Owing to truth Ahura Mazda created this world and that other world, and truth hath remained on the spot, and on account of truth it becometh pure.

3 And the accursed Ahriman, being devoid of anything good, doth not issue from that which is owing to truth.

4 It is requisite to occasion the resurrection owing to truth; and, as to every place where truth is not taken up, the glory in that place hath found a way out, and as to every household where much of this resides, it is on account of truth, and Ahriman doth not find a way into that place.

5 It is said in revelation that one truthful man is better than a whole world ('halam) speaking falsehood; and Gavah of Isfahan -- when he kept his stand upon the truth, and was speaking words with truth until the time when Dahak [Zohak], who possessed the whole realm, and the whole of the demons and mankind have been afraid of him, through the truth of the words spoken -- was bold with them in every speech, and became victorious (muthaffar) over them by reason of the true words that he was speaking.

6 The accursed Ahriman, when he perceived the spirit of truth, had fallen senseless three thousand years.

7 From fear of truth he never managed to hold up his head, and from fear of truth he did not manage to come into this world.

8 And everything that thou testest thy gaze (nathar) upon therein, that hath remained on the spot when thou seekest again an examination of it, hath remained through truth.

9 And the interpretation of the Ashem-vohu is in truth, and, for that reason, they recite the Ashem-vohu frequently.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 63

Regarding the sin of adultery.

1 The sixty-third subject is this, that it is necessary to practise strict abstinence from adultery on this account, that through every one who beguileth the wife of another, and committeth iniquity with her, that woman becometh, in a moment, unlawful as regards her husband.

2 And, after that, every time her husband cometh round about her, it is just as though she had gone near to a strange man.

3 The righteous bestowal of herself on her own husband, in this situation, is always worse than his going with women of a different religion, on this account, that, if that wife becometh pregnant, it is just as though one of the good religion had fallen away into a different religion, and thereby that man becometh worthy of death.

4 And it also happens, when that wife becometh pregnant, that she may effect the slaughter of the infant, from fear of a bad reputation.

5 Then, for that person whose child it is, it is just as though he had effected the slaughter of the child with his own hand; therefore, he is worthy of death.

6 If the infant be born, and it remaineth in the religion, every sin that that child of his committeth is, for that person, just as though it were committed by his own hand.

7 And if a woman of those of the good religion committeth adultery, she becometh in a condition unlawful as regardeth her husband; and if an infant be born it is illegitimate.

8 And the sin owing to this will depart at the time when that person goeth near to her husband and shall say: 'What is there in me befitting thy wife?'

9 A calamity (ak) hath occurred, and a crime (hata) hath come into my body; thou knowest if thou wilt exercise forgiveness (hafu) and if not, when if is not for me, do thou kill me; my blood is lawful (halal) unto thee.'

10 If he shall kill her, her sin will depart owing to this; otherwise, this sin will not depart from her in any manner (navai).

11 And one calls this sin a sin affecting antagonists, and, so long as the antagonist doth not become satisfied, the sin floweth on, and they keep his soul back at the head of the Chinwad bridge, till the time that its antagonist shall arrive and himself accomplisheth his antagonism, and they give him back a reply.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 64

Penalties for theft with and without violence.

1 The sixty-fourth subject is this, that it is necessary to practice great abstinence from committing theft and seising anything from mankind by force.

2 For it is declared in revelation that, as to every one who stealeth one dirham away from another, when they really know it, it is necessary to take two dirhams away from him, one dirham being that which was carried off, and one dirham as the fine of him who committed the theft.

3 It is also requisite to cut off one ear, and it is necessary to strike ten blows with a stick, and to detain him one period in prison.

4 And if he shall steal another dirham, in the same manner one is to take away two dirhams, to cut off the other ear, to strike twenty blows with a stick, and to detain him two periods in prison.

5 And if he shall steal three dirhams and two dangs, it is requisite to cut off his right hand.

6 If he shall steal five hundred dirhams, it is requisite to put him to death.

7 On the spot the punishment is this, and among the spirits it brings punishment on the soul itself.

8 And, if the other person, doth not know it, they take away twice as much good work, among the spirits, from that thief, and give it to the soul of this person.

9 If the thief possesseth no good works, they give the compensation from the constantly-beneficial treasury, and exhibit the punishment on the soul of that thief.

10 As to that person who hath seised anything from another by force, among the spirits they seise back four things as compensation for every single one.

11 And if, on the spot where people capture him, he maketh it convenient to return four things in compensation for one, when they have fully understood, as they capture that person who is committing highway-robbery, that he maketh it convenient, they may kill him at once.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 65

Duties of thanksgiving and doing good.

1 The sixty-fifth subject is this, that every one is to practise thanksgiving continually, and it is requisite that he maintaineth it through good and bad; and he is to keep in view the benefits of Ahura Mazda.

2 Because the creator Ahura Mazda demands two things from mankind, the one is that one should not commit sin, and the other is that one should practise thanksgiving.

3 And how much soever more grateful mankind become, through virtue and worthiness as regardeth him, they grant more abundant daily provision for the grateful than that which is for other persons.

4 And as to every one who is not grateful to him, the bread that he eateth becometh unlawful, and it is not proper for any one to do good in connection with him.

5 And it is declared in revelation that when an unthankful person dieth, wherever they deposit his corpse, the archangel Spandarmad is trembling like a sheep that sees a wolf.

6 And as to a bird that eateth that corpse, on whatever tree it resteth and settleth, it maketh that tree wither away, and the person who sitteth down in the shadow of the tree becometh ill.

7 There are different things that it is necessary for those of the good religion to make predominant over themselves.

8 One is to exercise liberality in connection with the worthy; the second is to do justice; the third is to be friendly unto every one; and the fourth is to be sincere and true, and to keep falsehood far from themselves.

9 And these four habits ('hazlat) are the principles (azl) of the religion of Zarathustra, and it is necessary, when thou listenest to them thyself, that thou dost not listen to any one else.

10 Because the creator Ahura Mazda says, 'O Zarathustra! if thou wilt that thou become pure and saved, and that thou arrive at the place of the pure, do thou accomplish these two duties: --

11 One is this, that thou prefer the friendship of the spiritual existence to that of the worldly one, and consider the things of the world as contemptible and those of the spirit precious; on this account the glory of the world is sought with scorn, and do not thou let the spirit escape.

12 The second is this, that thou speak truly with every one and act justly with me, that is, whatever thou dost not approve for thyself do not approve for any one else; when thou hast acted in this manner thou art righteous.'

SAD DAR CHAPTER 66

All women must have the duwazdah homast celebrated.

1 The sixty-sixth subject is this, that it is incumbent on all women to order the days (ayyam) of the duwazdah homast (Dvazdah-homast), because the whole of any sin that may have arisen during menstruation, and at other times, becometh cleared away thereby.

2 And in the commentary of the Vendidad it says that every one becometh sanctified in the days of the duwazdah homast, and all sins become cleared away from her, like that which occurheth at harvest time, when a great wind cometh on and carrieth it off; just like this the sin departs from her, and the person becometh clean and pure.

3 And, for women, there is no duty more indispensable than this; for it is declared in revelation that, when they celebrate a duwazdah homast, it is a good work of a hundred thousand tanapuhrs, and if it be the days of the duwazdah homast it is a good work of a thousand thousand tanapuhrs, and when they celebrate it by day it is a good work just like this.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 67

Why women must abstain from adultery.

1 The sixty-seventh subject is this, that it is necessary for women to practise great abstinence from committing adultery.

2 For it is declared in revelation, as to every woman who hath lain with a strange man, thus: 'What is it necessary to call her, and why is the explanation that she is of one nature with all wizards and sinners?'

3 And in the commentary of the Vendidad it says "every woman who consorteth with two strange men is the first down upon me, who am Ahura Mazda.

4 For if she taketh a look into a river of water it will make it diminish, if she taketh a look at a tree or shrub the fruit of the trees becometh scanty, and if she speaketh a word with a righteous man it will make the glory of the man diminish."

5 Zarathustra inquired of Ahura Mazda, "What occurheth on her account?'

6 The creator Ahura Mazda spake thus: "It is necessary to kill her sooner than a biting serpent and similar creatures and wild beasts, because she is more harmful to my creatures."

7 Therefore, since she is like this, it is necessary for women to keep themselves with great effort, so that they may not become unlawful unto their own husbands.

8 For, every time that one of them giveth herself four times to another person, she is, after that, unlawful as long as she may be in the house of her husband, and new sin is increasing in connexion with her soul.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 68

Precautions to be taken by menstruous women.

1 The sixty-eighth subject is this, that for a menstruous woman who casteth an eye upon a fire it is a sin of twelve dirhams in weight; and if she goeth within three steps of the fire it is a sin of a thousand and two hundred dirhams in weight for her; and when she putteth her hand to the fire it is a sin of fifteen tanapuhrs for her.

2 In like manner, if she taketh a look at running water it is a sin of twelve dirhams in weight for her; if she goeth within fifteen steps of running water it is a sin of fifteen dirhams in weight for her; and when she sitteth down in running water it is a sin of fifteen tanapuhrs for her.

3 And when she walketh in the rain, through every drop that droppeth upon her limbs there ariseth a sin of one tanapuhr for her.

4 If she cometh to a Khwarshed Niyayesh, to observe it, it is not proper for her to speak a word with a righteous man.

5 It is not proper for her to put a bare foot on the ground.

6 It is not proper for her to eat any food with a bare hand; it is not proper for her to eat bread when satisfied.

7 It is not proper for two menstruous women to eat together; it is not proper for them to sleep so.

8 And so long as three days have not elapsed it is not proper to wash the hands, and three days after that, if she hath perceived herself clean, it is requisite to remain another day, and so until the lapse of nine days, when, if she hath perceived herself clean, it is not necessary to remain to the end of another interval of time.

9 If menstruation occurheth for twenty-nine days, it is necessary to consider that she is menstruous a second time, and during three other days it is not proper to wash again, and it is necessary to exercise care, just like that which I first wrote about.

10 If she be doubtful whether menstruation is come to her, it is requisite for her to strip off her dress, and then to take notice if she hath become menstruous, or if the dress that is stripped off be clean.

11 If she hath an infant to feed with her milk, one putteth away the dress from the infant, and giveth it to the mother till it hath fed on the milk, and then it is proper to give it to other persons.

12 It is pure, but when the mother washeth her head she also washes the head of the infant.

13 And it is necessary for a menstruous woman that she should not pass by the end of anything ceremonially washed, for, if it be a thousand cubits (gaz) in length, she maketh the whole of it polluted, and it becometh unclean.

14 With any one who holds a sacred-twig stand she should not speak a word; and if a priest holdeth the sacred twigs in his hand, and a menstruous woman speaketh some (ba'hze) words from afar, or he walketh within three steps of a menstruous woman, she maketh it unclean.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 69

Allowing the sun to shine on a fire, even through holes, is sinful.

1 The sixty-ninth subject is this, that it is not proper that sunshine should fall on a fire, for, every time that sunshine falleth upon a fire, it is a sin.

2 If thou expose a fire to the sun it is a sin of three stirs; and, if thou set down anything on the top of the fire, it is necessary that it should not have any hole -- so that the light (nur); and strength of the fire might become less -- so far as thou knowest.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 70

Precautions to be observed in carrying the dead.

1 The seventieth subject is this, that, as to any persons, when they carry a corpse to the appointed place, it is necessary that two suits of clothes be put on, on account of this work.

2 It is requisite for those clothes to be on, and it is necessary to make a dog gaze at the corpse twice, once at the time when life becometh separated from it, and once at the time when they wish to take it up.

3 Then it is necessary that both those persons be connected, and each of them is to tie a cord on one of his own hands, so that the hand may go away from that of the other one.

4 And, when they are moving, it is necessary for him to be prepared and not to speak a word with any one.

5 And if it be a pregnant woman they are to take her up by four persons, because there are two corpses.

6 When, avoiding dead matter, one cometh again upon it, he has, in the end, to wash with ceremonial ablution, and that is requisite for the reason that he may not thereby be rapidly a cause of wickedness or death for any one.

7 And if one doth not show a dog to the corpse, and they take it up, how many soever there be, the whole of them become polluted.

8 In the commentary of the Vendidad it is asserted, that every one who takes up a corpse that a dog hath not seen is polluted and worthy of death, and never becometh clean; his soul also would be wicked.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 71

Punishment for eating dead matter as medicine.

1 The seventy-first subject is this, that, forasmuch as it is not desirable for any one to eat dead matter for the sake of medicine and remedy, let them beware (zinhar) when they eat it.

2 For it asserteth, in the commentary of the Vendidad, that it is requisite to demolish the habitation, house, and abode of any one who hath eaten dead matter, and to fetch his heart out of his body, and it is necessary to scoop out his eyes.

3 And along with these torments, which they accomplish on him, his soul is in hell till the resurrection.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 72

Bringing dead matter to water or fire is a deadly sin.

1 The seventy-second subject is this, that when any one carrieth dead matter to water, or to fire, he is worthy of death.

2 And it asserteth in revelation, that any year when the locust cometh profusely, it cometh for the reason that dead matter is brought to water and fire.

3 And, in like manner, the winter is colder, and the summer is hotter.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 73

Any cow, goat, or fowl that eats dead matter is impure, and its produce cannot be used, for a year.

1 The seventy-third subject is this, that, when a cow or a goat hath eaten dead matter, in any place, nothing whatever of its flesh, or milk, or hair, should come into use for one year.

2 After that one year it is clean: and, if it be pregnant, its young one is likewise not clean for one year.

3 And if a domestic fowl hath eaten dead matter, its flesh and eggs are, in like manner, not clean for one year.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 74

Cultivators must be careful that irrigation water is not defiled with dead matter.

1 The seventy-fourth subject is this, that at dawn, when they rise up from sleep, it is first necessary to throw something on the hands, that is the hand-cleansing.

2 Afterwards, they are to wash the hands quite clean with water, in such manner that they are to wash the hands three times from the forearm (sa'hid) to the end of the hand; and the face is washed from behind the ears to below the chin and up to the crown of the head; and one washeth the feet three times thoroughly, as far as the leg (saq); then one reciteth the Kemna-mazda.

3 If it be a place where there is no water, and the risk be that the time for the Niyayesh should pass by, it is requisite to cleanse the hands three times with dust, and to perform the Niyayesh.

4 Afterwards, when one arriveth at water, he is to wash the hands and face a second time, and to accomplish the Niyayesh.

5 Before the time when one throweth something on the hands it is not proper to wash the hands and face, and it is a tanapuh sin; it is also not possible to work at anything whatever with the hands and face not washed.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 76

Period of purification after childbirth.

1 The seventy-sixth subject is this, when a woman brings forth, it is necessary that she should not wash her head for twenty-one days, nor put her hand again on anything, nor walk on a terrace-roof, nor put her foot on a threshold in her habitation.

2 And after the twenty-one days, if she seeth herself in such a state that she is able to wash her head, she washeth her head.

3 And, after that, until the coming on of the fortieth day, it is requisite to abstain from the vicinity of a fire and anything that is wooden or earthen; it is also requisite to abstain from everything of her cooking and pot-boiling.

4 Afterwards, when it is forty days, she is to wash her head, and it is proper for her to do every kind of work.

5 Till the lapse of a second forty days it is not proper for her husband to make an approach to her, for it is a great sin, and it is possible that she may become pregnant a second time, as within a period of forty days women become very quickly pregnant.

6 And if after the first forty days she seeth herself impure, unless she knoweth with accuracy that it hath come from the infant, it is necessary to consider if she be menstruous.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 77

Purification and precautions after still-birth.

1 The seventy-seventh subject is this, that, when a woman's infant is still-born, it is necessary to give her first something washed with ceremony and brought with fire-ashes, so that it may make the heart within her pure.

2 After that, for three days, it is altogether improper to give her water, or anything in which there is water or salt.

3 And these three days are from period to period, in such a manner that, if the duty of mid-day prayer hath occurred, they extend till the mid-day prayer itself, and she is to pass over one other hour and it is then proper to swallow water.

4 After that, till the lapse of forty days, she is to sit apart again, and, afterwards, to undergo the Barashnom ceremony.

5 On the infant's becoming a four-months' child, whenever it is still-born it is a dead body, for the reason that so long as it doth not reach the fourth month life doth not come to it.

6 And if after three months this affair occureth, one is to exercise great caution (i'htiyat) and to insist strictly on this matter.

7 For our religion hath reiterated on this matter that, if one be polluted and do not keep himself pure so long as he is living he never becometh clean from that pollution.

8 That, if he wash his head ten thousand times in ceremonial ablution, he certainly doth not any way become pure from it.

9 Because this pollution is not from without; it is from within every bone and vein and tendon; and water maketh clean only anything that is on the skin.

10 Impurity which is in the bones, except through the liquid consecrated by the religious formula, doth not otherwise become clean.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 78

Why meat must not be eaten for three days after a death in the house.

1 The seventy-eighth subject is this, that in every habitation where any one departeth, passing away from the world, it is necessary to endeavor that they may not eat and not consecrate fresh meat for three days therein.

2 Because the danger is that some one else may depart, passing away; so the relations of that former person should not eat meat for three days.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 79

Advantages of liberality.

1 The seventy-ninth subject is this, that it is necessary to make an effort that they may exercise munificence and liberality towards the good and the worthy.

2 For the exercise of liberality is grand, in such manner as it is better and pleasanter, in like manner, for the ground on which a liberal man walketh, better for the wind that bloweth upon a liberal man, better for the horse on which a liberal man sitteth, better, in like manner, for the cow and goat that a liberal man eateth, and pleasanter for the sun and moon and stars that shine upon a liberal man.

3 To such an extent is a liberal and munificent man precious ('haziz), that Ahura Mazda speaketh thus: 'I have wished that I might give a recompense to a munificent man, if it be suitable for him, but I have not found any recompense and happiness that are suitable for him, except a blessing.'

4 And virtuous men and the united archangels are perpetually uttering blessings on account of the liberal man who maintains no refusal of his own things to a stranger.

5 For it is declared in revelation, that the creator Ahura Mazda spake to Zarathustra, the Spitaman, thus: 'I have created the supreme heaven of heavens for the sake of any of the liberal who provide for the worthy and give them something; and gloomy hell is for all those persons who give anything to the unworthy.'

6 In like manner it is declared in revelation, that there are thirty-three ways to heaven, besides that of the souls of the liberal.

7 If the soul be of any one else, it is not able to arrive in heaven by that way.

8 Besides this happy way, a soul of the liberal is able to arrive in heaven by means of the thirty-three ways.

9 For no one is it easier to arrive in heaven than for the liberal.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 80

Different values of Ashem-vohu on different occasions.

1 The eightieth subject is this, that there is a time when thou recitest one Ashem-vohu, and the merit of it may be as much as that of ten.

2 There is a time when thou recitest one Ashem-vohu, and the merit of it may be as much as that of a hundred.

3 A time may be when thou recitest one, and the merit of it may be as much as that of a thousand.

4 A time may be when the merit of one Ashem-vohu may be as much as that of ten thousand.

5 A time may be when the merit of one Ashem-vohu is as much as the value (qimat) of this world and that other world.

6 As for that Ashem-vohu whose nature is as much as ten, that is when they recite it as they eat bread.

7 That which is, from nature, as much as a hundred is when they recite it after eating.

8 That which is so much by nature that, having turned side over side, they recite it correctly may be a merit of a thousand.

9 That which is of the nature of ten thousand is that which thou recitest when thou risest up from sleep.

10 And that whose nature is as much as this world and that other world is when they recite it at the time of the dissolution of life; for, if he be not able to recite it himself, friends and relations give it into his mouth.

11 If he be fit for hell he becometh fit for the ever-stationary, if he be fit for the ever-stationary he becometh fit for heaven, and if he be fit for heaven he becometh fit for the supreme heaven.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 81

Ahura Mazda admonishes Zarathustra not to postpone today's duties and good works till tomorrow.

1 The eighty-first subject is this, that every duty and good work, which it is requisite to perform, they should accomplish while within that day, and not postpone for the morrow.

2 For it is declared in revelation, that the creator Ahura Mazda spake to Zarathustra thus: 'O Zarathustra! I have created no one better than thee in the world, and after thee I shall likewise not create one; thou art my chosen one, and I have made this world apparent on account of thee.

3 And all these people ('haliaq) whom I have created, and the whole of these monarchs who have existed and do exist, have always maintained the hope that I should create thee in their days, so that they should accept (qabul kunand) the religion, and their souls should attain to the supreme heaven.

4 Nevertheless I have created thee at the present time, in the middle period; for it is three thousand years from the days of Gayomard till now, and from now till the resurrection are the three thousand years that remain; therefore, I have created thee in the middle.

5 For whatever is in the middle is more precious and better and more valuable, in the same manner as the heart is in the middle of the whole body and is unquestionably (la-jarm) very precious, in the same manner as the land of Eran [Iran] is more valuable than other lands, for the reason that it is in the middle.

6 And the country of Eran, which is in the fourth climate (iqlim), is better than other places, for the reason that it is in the middle. 7. Therefore, I have created thee in the middle, in the manner of what is precious, and I have given thee the apostleship, and have sent thee to a monarch, a friend of knowledge and a friend of religion.

8 Afterwards, I have sent thee, with thus much preciousness, to the people; and the knowledge of the good works that mankind perform in life, and have not been able to bring to hand without trouble (mi'hnat), I have made clear and plain unto thee; and I have made thee aware of the whole of knowledge.

9 I have taught it to thee in the Avesta, in a language that no one in the world considers plain and easy; and I have told thee its interpretation (zand) in a language that is more current among mankind, and thou likewise hast more eloquence (faz'h) therein.

10 'While thou hast all this greatness that I have given to thee, O Zarathustra! I enact a precept for thee, that "every good work which thou art able to do today do not postpone for tomorrow, and accomplish with thine own hand the counsel of thine own soul."

11 Do not be proud (gharrah) on the score that it is still the time of youth, and it is quite possible to do it hereafter, while thou thinkest thus: "I will do it after this."

12 For there have been many people whose remaining life was one day, and they have been taken away in the presence of fifty years' work.'

13 Therefore, make an effort, so that thou mayest not postpone today's duty for tomorrow.

14 Because Ahriman, the evil wicked one, hath entrusted two fiends with this matter, the name of one is Tardy (der) and the name of the other is Afterwards (pas).

15 Both these fiends are united, and they make an effort and exertion with man, so that his duty falleth back behindhand.

16 For, as to every duty and good work which cometh forward, that fiend whose name is Tardy speaketh thus: 'Thou wilt live long, and it is possible to perform this duty at all times;' and that fiend whose name is Afterwards says: 'Pass on now; it is possible to perform it afterwards.'

17 And these two fiends united keep the soul away from its own duty, till the end arriveth; all duties have fallen back behindhand, and it hath to experience regret ('hasarat) and penitence.

18 It hath no benefit through duty and good works, and departeth from this world.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 82

The sacred thread-girdle must be re-tied when dressing before moving from the spot.

1 The eighty-second subject is this, that, when thou risest up from the bed-clothes, it is necessary to tie the sacred thread-girdle [kustij] again at that same place, and it is not desirable to put forth a step without the girdle.

2 For it is declared in revelation, that every single step which one putteth forth without the sacred thread-girdle [kustij] is a Farman sin, and through four steps it becometh a tanapuh sin which would be a weight of a thousand and two hundred dirhams.

3 Therefore, it is necessary to keep watch over oneself, as regardeth this sin, and to tie on the sacred thread-girdle [kustij].

SAD DAR CHAPTER 83

Proper fasting is from sin, not from food.

1 The eighty-third subject is this, that it is requisite to abstain from the keeping of fasts.

2 For, in our religion, it is not proper that they should not eat every day or anything, because it would be a sin not to do so.

3 With us the keeping of fast is this, that we keep fast from committing sin with our eyes and tongue and ears and hands and feet.

4 Some people are striving about it, so that they may not eat anything all day, and they practise abstinence from eating anything.

THE GRAND BIBLE

5 For us it is also necessary to make an effort, so that we may not think, or speak, or commit any sin; and it is necessary that no bad action should proceed from our hands, or tongue, or ears, or feet, which would be a sin owing to them.

6 Since I have spoken in this manner, and have brought forward the fasting of the seven members of the body, that which, in other religions, is fasting owing to not eating is, in our religion, fasting owing to not committing sin.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 84

Prayers before sleeping and when restless.

1 The eighty-fourth subject is this, when they wish to sleep, it is requisite to utter one Yatha-ahu-vairyo and one Ashem-vohu, and to accomplish repentance one is to speak thus: 'I am sorrowing for, and repentant and in renunciation of all that sin which I have spoken and was imagined by me, and hath assailed me; of these actions I am in renunciation.'

2 Afterwards one is to lie down; and every time that one acts in the manner that I have mentioned, and weareth the sacred thread-girdle [kusti] on the waist -- while he is equally sharing the whole of the good works which they are performing in all the world during that night, and he is of similar merit -- every single breath that he inhaled and exhaled is a good work of a weight of three dirhams.

3 And when he turneth from side to side he should, in like manner recite one Ashem-vohu.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 85

Advice must always be asked of the wise and relations.

1 The eighty-fifth subject is this, that, in every matter that cometh forward, it is necessary to inquire of the wise and relations, so as to have their advice, and not to transact any business according to one's own idea and opinion.

2 For it is declared in revelation, that the sacred good and propitious, spake to Zarathustra thus: 'As to every business that thou wishest to transact, do thou receive wisdom and knowledge at one place with the wise who reply, and cast away what is unconsidered, so that Ahriman may not reach it midway, and injury ('halal) may not occur to that business.'

3 In like manner the archangel Spandarmad, at the time when her gaze passed on to Minachihar, issued to him this admonition and precept (vazyiat), and said: 'O Minochihar! although there be deliberation in an affair, this may be no reason for it as regardeth the spirits; although a horse may be good, there may be no resource except a whip for it; and although one may be a wise man, there should be no retreat on his part from having advice, so that his business may become complete.'

SAD DAR CHAPTER 86

Water-dogs must not be killed.

1 The eighty-sixth subject is this, that it is not proper to kill a beaver [lit. 'water dog']; but, if they see it in any place, it is necessary to take it up and carry it to running water.

2 For, in the commentary of the Vendidad it is ranked as a great sin for the killer; and, as to every one who kills a beaver, the source of his seed becometh exhausted.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 87

Ceremonies to be celebrated after a death.

1 The eighty-seventh subject is this, that, when any one departs from the world, it is necessary to make an effort, in those three days, so that they may continuously perform the ceremonial of Srosh and make the fire blaze, and may recite the Avesta; because the soul is three days in this world.

2 The fourth night it is requisite to consecrate three sacred cakes; one with a dedication to Rashn and Ashtad, one with a dedication to the spirit Ram, and one with a dedication to the righteous guardian spirit; and one is to consecrate a dress and something as a righteous gift for that soul.

3 It is necessary that the dress be new and of uniform quality (jins), and such as turban, shirt, vest, girdle, trousers, shoes (pasandil), and mouth-veil.

4 Since they give those among the spirits a counterpart of those garments, therefore, whatever is more beautiful, and more surpassing in grandeur for the soul in that place, is necessary where that place is, because our fathers and mothers and the whole of our relations are in that place.

5 And since the souls recognise and ask after one another in that world, they are, therefore, more joyful on account of every one whose dress and grandeur are more surpassing.

6 In a similar manner, when the dress is old and ragged, they are ashamed, and exhibit heaviness of heart.

7 They call that dress a righteous gift because they consecrate it; and it is necessary to give it to the priests and high-priests, as it is a righteous gift on account of their position.

8 And it is suitable for them to keep it for the reason that the souls are nearer to them; people should also make an effort that the dress may be stitched like the dress of a priest.

9 The sacred beings make up the account and reckoning for the soul when the priest reciteth frasasti ahuraha mazdau and removeth the Frasast from this side to that side.

10 The soul passeth over the Chinwad bridge when, on the fourth night, it arriveth from the world at the Chinwad bridge.

11 First it goeth to the abode of fire (atash-gah); afterwards, one step reacheth to the star station, the second step reacheth to the moon station, the third step to the sun station, and with the fourth step it reacheth the Chinwad bridge, and they convey it to its own place.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 88

Polluted wood must not be used or burnt.

1 The eighty-eighth subject is this, that, as to any piece of wood on which they carry a corpse, or on which they wash it, and that which may be defiled with blood and impurity, that on which menstuous defilement, or a bare limb, is deposited by a menstuous woman, and that on which they impale a human being, it is necessary to avoid the whole of these pieces of wood, and not to work with them again, because one's dress becometh impure; and it is not proper to burn them.

2 It is necessary to put them in a place where any one, who pulleth them up and stirreth them, will not bring them into the use of mankind.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 89

Any one eating dead matter, or polluting another with it must be purified.

1 The eighty-ninth subject is this, that Ahura Mazda keeps watch when any one, through imposition ('hilat) and unawares, eats dead matter, or giveth it to one of the good religion, or throws dead matter upon one of the good religion.

2 While his will and command are, that it is necessary that such a person should undergo the Barashnom ceremony, and accomplish repentance before the spiritual chiefs and high-priests.

3 So that, after that, one may indicate to him the sin in these actions, and he may perform the retribution which the high-priest mentioneth, in order that, owing to this, his sin may depart.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 90

Nothing is to be given to a sinner.

1 The ninetieth subject is this, that it is not proper that they should give anything to a sinful person or one worthy of death, because it is like that they have placed in the jaws of a destructive serpent (azhdaha).

2 And, if this be food which he devoureth and they give, they pass into the committing of sin; and that person who may have given food to him is a participator with him.

3 In eating food, if there be no danger and fear of them, it is not desirable to give anything to them, for it would be a great sin.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 91

How to purify articles of various materials when polluted by dead matter.

1 The ninety-first subject is this, that is, in what mode it is necessary to wash everything that becometh polluted by dead matter?

2 Gold one is to wash over once with ceremonial ablution to make it dry once with dust, and to wash it over once with water.

3 Silver (nuqrah) one is to do twice; copper, tin, lead, and brass articles three times; steel four times; stone articles six times; turquoise, ruby (yaqut), amber, carbuncle, cornelian ('haqiq), and, like these, whatever is from a mine (ma'hdan) are all to be washed six times in the manner which I have stated.

4 Afterwards they are clean in that manner, when every single time one washeth them over with ceremonial ablution, maketh them dry with dust, and washeth it off; and just like this on the occasion of the other times -- up to three times, or four, or six -- as far as whatever is ordered.

5 For pearls two modes are ordered, but the conclusion is this, that they should wash them six times, just like stone articles.

6 The whole of wooden and earthen ware it is requisite to throw away.

7 All clothing of the body it is requisite to wash six times in the manner that I have stated, and, after that, to put them in a place where the sun and moon must shine on them for six months; after that they are fit for a menstuous woman.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 92

The sacred fire must be properly maintained, and attendant provided (see Chap. 39).

1 The ninety-second subject is this, that it is necessary to properly maintain the sacred fire and some one who will work with assiduity (kahdan) to provide maintenance and sympathy for it.

2 And the supply of its firewood is entirely in such a manner that they burn this year the firewood of last year.

3 At midnight they make it blaze up, and put incense upon it in such a manner that the wind carries off its scent.

4 The demons and fiends rush away, because there is the glory of the sacred fire that we are able to make a living existence in the midst of this people.

5 For, if no fiend and the glory of the archangels and the day of the sacred fire had not existed, it would not have been possible to produce the living existence any day.

6 And, therefore, it maketh it expedient that they supply a fire-attendant to maintain the firewood and fire, so that a seeking for its safety ('hafiyat) may come into operation, and they may know a support and protection for it that would be acceptable.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 93

Slander a sin, and how to atone for it.

1 The ninety-third subject is this, that it is necessary for all those of the good religion to practise abstinence from uttering slander (ghaibat) behind one's back.

2 In the commentary of the Vendidad it states, that slander is the greatest of all sins.

3 Every one who perpetrates slander about any one is like him who hath eaten dead matter -- and the eating of dead matter is a sin that hath likewise been mentioned, before this, in this book -- but the statement is like this, while they do not indicate any punishment for it in this world, it doth not go without it in that other world.

4 Therefore it is necessary for those of the good religion to make an effort, so that they may guard themselves from this slander.

5 In order that they may show thy soul, when resigning life, the satisfaction (jiza) for the sin, it states, in the commentary of the Vendidad, as to any one by whom slander is perpetrated, if the injured person goeth before him and beggeth a righteous gift from him, and he provideth a righteous gift for that person, the sin departeth from him.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 94

Benefits must be reciprocated.

1 The ninety-fourth subject is this, when a person confers a benefit or kindness upon any one, it is necessary that that latter should understand the value of it, and lay the obligation (minnat) upon himself; and, if he be able, he should provide a benefit to that amount (miqdar) for that person.

2 It is declared in revelation, that, when a person confers a benefit upon any one, Ahura Mazda giveth him ten times as much, as an equivalent.

3 And, if the other be not understanding the justice of this, it is related in the commentary of the Avesta in this manner, that it is a great sin for him.

4 And Ahriman speaketh like this, namely: 'That sinner is akin to me; in the end he will come into my hands; I will not give him into the hands of any demon, but I will inflict punishment with my own hands.'

5 And the chief priest says it is necessary for all Zarathushtrians that they keep themselves far from this sin.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 95

The merit of performing the Niyayeshes, and the sin of neglecting them.

1 The ninety-fifth subject is this, that it is necessary that it be expedient for all those of the good religion to perform the salutation of the sun [Kharshed Niyayesh] three times every day.

2 If one performeth it once, it is a good work of one tanapuh; if he performeth it twice, it is twice as much; and if he performeth it three times, it is thrice as much.

3 And if he doth not perform one repetition, it is a sin of thirty stir; if he doth not perform two repetitions, it is twice as much sin; and if he doth not perform three repetitions, it is thrice as much sin.

4 And it is the same as this with regard to the salutations of the moon and fire [Mah Niyayesh and Atash Niyayesh].

5 Therefore it is expedient, in the religion, for every one of the good religion to bring the salutations into practice.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 96

Mourning for the dead is improper.

1 The ninety-sixth subject is this, when any one departs to that other world it is not proper for others that they should utter an outcry, maintain grief, and make lamentation and weeping.

2 Because every tear that issues from the eyes becometh one drop of that river before the Chinwad bridge, and then the soul of that dead person remaineth at that place; it is difficult for it to make a passage there, and it is not able to pass over the Chinwad bridge.

3 It is therefore necessary that they recite the Avesta and celebrate the ceremonial, so that the passage of that place may become easy for it.

SAD DAR CHAPTER 97

Priests' instructions must be treated with respect.

1 The ninety-seventh subject is this, that it is expedient for those of the good religion, that they converse, according to their own ability, in the presence of officiating priests, high-priests, spiritual chiefs, and priests, and hearken cordially to whatever they say.

2 And they should understand their statements, and, during them, they should not utter any reply or question (sual).

3 For in the commentary of the Avesta it says, as to every one who bringeth altercation ('hujjat) into any statement of the elders of the religion, 'one breaketh out his tongue, or he goeth out from this world abortively (mubattala).'

SAD DAR CHAPTER 98

Priests must teach the Avesta to laymen correctly.

1 The ninety-eighth subject is this, that it is necessary for all those of the good religion, that they learn the Avesta characters in the presence of priests and teachers, so as to read, and that no error may continue in the Niyayeshes and Yashts.

2 And it is still more expedient for priests and teachers, that they teach the Avesta characters to all those of the good religion; and if a priest, while teaching, shows incompetence (taqzir), it is a great sin for him.

3 For Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, spake to Zarathustra thus: 'As to every priest and teacher who commits a blunder in teaching those of the good religion, I make him just as far from heaven as the width of the earth.'

SAD DAR CHAPTER 99

Pahlavi must be taught to priests only.

1 The ninety-ninth subject is this, 'that it is not proper for officiating priests, high-priests, spiritual chiefs, and priests, that they teach Pahlavi to every one.'

2 For Zarathustra inquired of Ahura Mazda thus: 'To whom is it proper to teach Pahlavi?'

3 And Ahura Mazda, the good and propitious, gave a reply thus: 'To every one who is of thy family (nas), an officiating priest, a high-priest, a spiritual chief, and every one who is an intelligent priest.'

4 Besides these that I have mentioned, if one teacheth it to others it is a great sin for him; and if he hath performed many duties and good works, the end for him may still be hell.'

SAD DAR CHAPTER 100

Anyone molesting a harmless person in this world will be delayed on his way to the other world.

1 The hundredth subject is this, when a person molesteth or smiteth any one who is innocent, it is a sin of one tanapuhir every day for that person, as long as he lives.

2 And, when he departeth from this world, the angel Mihr and the angel Rashn make up his account and reckoning.

3 He is full of affliction, and experienceth much regret and penitence, and hath no advantage from it.

4 It is therefore necessary to keep oneself far from this sin.

THE BOOK OF ARDA VIRAF NAMA

From The Sacred Books and Early Literature of the East, Volume VII: Ancient Persia, ed. Charles F. Horne, Ph.D., 1917
Translation: Martin Haug, 1870
Estimated Range of Dating: unknown

Introduction

The Book of Arda Viraf or Book of Arda Wiraz (sometimes called the "Arda Wiraf") is a Zoroastrian religious text of the Sasanian era written in Middle Persian. It contains about 8,800 words. It describes the dream-journey of a devout Zoroastrian (the Wiraz of the story) through the next world. The text assumed its definitive form in the 9th-10th centuries after a long series of emendations. The full title is Arda Wiraz namag, "Book of the Just Wiraz".

Due to the ambiguity inherent to Pahlavi scripts, Wiraz, the name of the protagonist, may also be transliterated as Viraf or Viraf, but the Avestan form is clearly Viraza, suggesting the correct reading is z. The Arda of the name (cf. aša, cognate with Skt. rta) is an epithet of Wiraz and is approximately translatable as "truthful, righteous, just." Wiraz is probably akin to Proto-Indo-European wiHro-, "man", see Sanskrit. vira. Finally, Namag means "book".

The date of the book is not known, but in The Sacred Books and Early Literature of the East, Prof. Charles Horne assumes that it was composed fairly late in the ancient history of Zoroastrianism, probably from the period of the Sasanian Empire (from 224 to 651), when Zoroastrianism experienced a state-sponsored revival. Most modern scholars simply state that the text's terminus ad quem was the 10th or 11th century.

Wiraz is chosen for his piety to undertake a journey to the next world in order to prove the truth of Zoroastrian beliefs, after a period when the land of Iran had been troubled by the presence of confused and alien religions. He drinks wine and a hallucinogen, soma, after which his soul travels to the next world. Here he is greeted by a beautiful woman named Den, who represents his faith and virtue. Crossing the Chinvat

Bridge, he is then conducted by "Srosh, the pious and Adar, the angel" through the "star track", "moon track" and "sun track" – places outside of heaven reserved for the virtuous who have nevertheless failed to conform to Zoroastrian rules. In heaven, Wiraz meets Ahura Mazda who shows him the souls of the blessed (ahlaw, an alternate Middle Persian version of the word arda). Each person is described living an idealised version of the life he or she lived on earth, as a warrior, agriculturalist, shepherd or other profession. With his guides he then descends into hell to be shown the sufferings of the wicked. Having completed his visionary journey, Wiraz is told by Ahura Mazda that the Zoroastrian faith is the only proper and true way of life and that it should be preserved in both prosperity and adversity.

From Horne's Introduction:

"Of its author we know nothing except what his book tells. He has sometimes been connected with a religious scholar who wrote commentaries on the Avesta during the Sasanian Empire. His book narrates a vision of heaven and hell which Viraf saw in an inspired dream or vision. Most of the brief book is given here, except where the details of hell become too bestial, too coarsely sordid for modern taste.

The entire vision is truly Dantesque; and while we do not know its age, we can say confidently that it is several centuries older than the work of Dante. So profound, even to this day, is the Parsis' faith in the reality of Viraf's vision, that when the work is read in their religious assemblies, the men weep and the women cry out in horror over its pictures of the damned. It has certainly a powerful influence in restraining the Parsis from sin."

It should be noted that hell is not an eternal punishment according to the Zoroastrian religion, but only until the renovation of the world (frashegird.)

[PART 1. INTRODUCTION.]

CHAPTER 1. [Religious disputes and the need for spiritual guidance]

IN THE NAME OF GOD

1 They say that, once upon a time, the pious Zartosht made the religion, which he had received, current in the world; (2) and till the completion of 300 years, the religion was in purity, and men were without doubts.

3 But afterward, the accused evil spirit, the wicked one, in order to made men doubtful of this religion, (4) instigated the accused Alexander, the Roman, who was dwelling in Egypt, so that he came to the country of Iran with severe cruelty and war and devastation; (5) he also slew the ruler of Iran, (6) and destroyed the metropolis and empire, and made them desolate.

7 And this religion, namely, all the Avesta and Zand, written upon prepared cow-skins, and with gold ink, was deposited in the archives, in Stakhar Papakan, (8) and the hostility of the evil-destined, wicked Ashemok, the evil-doer, brought onward Alexander, the Roman, who was dwelling in Egypt, and he burned them up. (9) And he killed several Dasturs and judges and Herbad and Mobads and upholders of the religion, and the competent and wise of the country of Iran. (10) And he cast hatred and strife, one with the other, amongst the nobles and householders of the country of Iran; (11) and self-destroyed, he fled to hell.

12 And after that, there were confusion and contention among the people of the country of Iran, one with the other. (13) And so they had no lord, nor ruler, nor chieftain, nor Dastur who was acquainted with the religion, (14) and they were doubtful in regard to God; (15) and religions of many kinds, and different fashions of belief, and skepticism, and various codes of law were promulgated in the world; (16) until the time when the blessed and immortal Ataropad-i Marspendan was born; on whose breast, in the tale which is in the Denkard, melted brass was poured. (17) And much law and justice were administered according to different religions and different creeds; (18) and the people of this religion deposited in Shaspigan were in doubt.

19 And afterward, there were other magi and Dasturs of the religion; (20) and some of their number were loyal and apprehensive. (21) And an assembly of them was summoned in the residence of the victorious Frobag fire; (22) and there were speeches and good ideas, of many kinds, on this subject: (23) that "it is necessary for us to seek a means, (24) so that some one of us may go, and bring intelligence from the spirits; (25) that the people who exist in this age shall know (26) whether these Yazishn and Dron and Afrinagan ceremonies, and Nirang prayers, and ablation and purifications which we bring into operation, attain unto God, or unto the demons. (27) and come to the relief of our souls, or not."

28 Afterward also, with the concurrence of the Dasturs of the religion, they called all the people to the residence of the Frobag fire. (29) And from the whole number they set apart seven men who had not the slightest doubt of God and the religion, (30) and whose own thoughts and words and deeds were most orderly and proper; (31) and they were told thus:

'Seat yourselves down, (32) and select one from among you, who is best for this duty, and the most innocent and respected.'

33 And afterward, those seven men sat down; (34) and, from the seven, three were selected; and from the three, one only, named Viraf; (35) and some call him the Nishapurian. (36) Then that Viraf, as he heard that decision, stood upon his feet, (37) joined his hands on his breast, and spoke (38) thus: 'If it please you, then give me not the undesired narcotic (39) till you cast lots for the Mazdayasnians and me; (40) and if the lot come to me, I shall go willingly to that place of the pious and the wicked, (41) and carry this message correctly, and bring an answer truly.'

42 And afterward, the lots of those Mazdayasnians and me were drawn; (43) the first time with the word 'well-thought,' and the second time with the word 'well-said,' and the third time with the word 'well-done'; each of the three lots came to Viraf.

CHAPTER 2. [Viraf and his preparations to visit the spiritual realm]

1 And that Viraf had seven sisters, (2) and all those seven sisters were as wives of Viraf; (3) they had also learned the religion of heart, and recited the prayers. (4) And when they heard those tidings, then they came upon them so very grievously, (5) that they clamored and shrieked. (6) and went into the presence of the assembly of the Mazdayasnians, (7) and they stood up and bowed, (8) and said thus: 'Do not this thing; ye Mazdayasnians; (9) for we are seven sisters, and he is an only brother; (10) and we are, all seven sisters, as wives of that brother. (11) Just as the door of a house, in which seven lintels were fixed, and one post below, (12) they who shall take away that post will make those lintels fall; (13) so for us seven sisters is this only brother, who is our life and maintenance; (14) every benefit from him proceeds from God. (15) Should you send him, before his time, from this realm of the living to that of the dead, (16) you will commit an injustice on us without cause.'

17 And afterward, those Mazdayasnians, when they heard those words, pacified those seven sisters, (18) and said thus: 'We will deliver Viraf to you, safe and sound, in seven days; (19) and the happiness of this renown will remain with this man.' (20) Then they became satisfied.

21 And then Viraf joined his hands on his breast before the Mazdayasnians, and said to them (22) thus: 'It is the custom that I should pray to the departed souls, and eat food, and make a will; afterward, you will give me the wine and narcotic.' (23) The Dasturs directed thus: 'Act accordingly.'

24 And afterward, those Dasturs of the religion selected, in the dwelling of the spirit, a place which was thirty footsteps from the good. (25) And Viraf washed his head and body, and put on new clothes; (26) he fumigated himself with sweet scent and spread a carpet, new and clean, on a prepared couch. (27) He sat down on the clean carpet of the couch, (28) and consecrated the Dron, and remembered the departed souls, and ate food. (29) And then those Dasturs of the religion filled three golden cups with wine and narcotic of Vishtasp; (30) and they gave one cup over to Viraf with the word 'well-thought,' and the second cup with the word 'well-said,' and the third cup with the word 'well-done'; (31) and he swallowed the wine and narcotic, and said grace whilst conscious, and slept upon the carpet.

32 Those Dasturs of the religion and the seven sisters were occupied, seven days and nights, with the ever-burning fire and fumigations; and they recited the Avesta and Zand of the religious ritual, (33) and recapitulated the Nasks, and chanted the Gathas, and kept watch in the dark. (34) And those seven sisters sat around the carpet of Viraf, (35) and seven days and nights the Avesta was repeated. (36) Those seven sisters with all the Dasturs and Herbad and Mobads of the religion of the Mazdayasnians, discontinued not their protection in any manner.

[PART 2. JOURNEY TO HEAVEN]

CHAPTER 3.

1 And the soul of Viraf went, from the body, to the Chinwad bridge of Chakat-i-Daitik, (2) and came back the seventh day, and went into the body. (3) Viraf rose up, as if he arose from a pleasant sleep, (4) thinking of Vohuman and joyful.

5 And those sisters, with the Dasturs of the religion and the Mazdayasnians, when they saw Viraf, became pleased and joyful; (6) and they said thus: 'Be thou welcome, Viraf, the messenger of us Mazdayasnians, who art come from the realm of the dead to this realm of the living.' (7) Those Herbad and Dasturs of the religion bowed before Viraf. (8) And then Viraf, as he saw them, came forward and bowed, and said thus: 'For you is a blessing from Ohrmazd, the lord, and the archangels (Amahraspandan); (9) and a blessing from the pious Zartosht, the descendant of Spitama; (10) and a blessing from Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel (Yazad), and the glorious religion of the Mazdayasnians; (11) and a blessing from the remaining pious; and a blessing from the remaining spirits of paradise who are in happiness and repose.'

THE GRAND BIBLE

12 And afterward, the Dasturs of the religion said (13) thus: 'A faithful minister art thou, Viraf, who art the messenger of us Mazdayasnians; and may thy blessing be for thee also. (14) Whatever thou sawest, relate to us truly.'

15 Then Viraf spoke thus: 'First this is to be said, (16) that to give the hungry and thirsty food is the first thing, (17) and afterward to make inquiry of him, and appoint his task.'

18 Then the Dasturs of the religion assented thus: 'Well and good.' (19) And well-cooked and savory food and broth, and cold water and wine were brought. (20) They also consecrated the ceremonial cake (dron); and Viraf muttered grace, and ate the food, and having finished the sacred repast (myzad), he said grace. (21) And he recounted the praises of Ohrmazd and the archangels; and thanks to Hordad and Amurdad, the archangels; and he muttered the benedictions (afrinagan).

22 He also directed thus: 'Bring a writer who is wise and learned.' (23) And an accomplished writer, who was learned, was brought by him, and sat before him; (24) and whatsoever Viraf said, he wrote correctly, clearly, and explicitly.

CHAPTER 4. [What the dead experience]

1 And he ordered him to write (2) thus: In that first night, Srosh the pious and Adar the angel came to meet me, (3) and they bowed to me, and spoke (4) thus: 'Be thou welcome, Arda Viraf, although thou hast come when it is not thy time.' (5) I said: 'I am a messenger.' (6) And then the victorious Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, took hold of my hand. (7) Taking the first footstep with the good thought, and the second footstep with the good word, and the third footstep with the good deed, I came up to the Chinwad bridge, the very wide and strong and created by Ohrmazd.

8 When I came up there, (9) I saw a soul of the departed, whilst in those first three nights the soul was seated on the top of the body, (10) and uttered those words of the Gatha: (11) 'Ushta ahmai yahmai ushta kahmaichit'; that is, 'Well is he by whom that which is his benefit becomes the benefit of any one else.' (12) And in those three nights, as much benefit and comfort and enjoyment came to it, (13) as all the benefit which it beheld in the world; (14) just as a man who, whilst he was in the world, was more comfortable and happy and joyful through it.

15 In the third dawn, that soul of the pious departed into the sweet scent of trees; (16) and he considered that scent which passed by his nose among the living; (17) and the air of that fragrance comes from the more southern side, from the direction of God.

18 And there stood before him his own religion and his own deeds, in the graceful form of a damsel, as a beautiful appearance, that is, grown up in virtue; (19) with prominent breasts, that is, her breasts swelled downward, which is charming to the heart and soul; (20) whose form was as brilliant, as the sight of it was the more well-pleasing, the observation of it more desirable.

21 And the soul of the pious asked that damsel (22) thus: 'Who art thou? and what person art thou? than whom, in the world of the living, any damsel more elegant, and of more beautiful body than thine, was never seen by me.'

23 To him replied she who was his own religion and his own deeds, (24) thus: 'I am thy actions, O youth of good thoughts, of good words, of good deeds, of good religion. (25) It is on account of thy will and actions that I am as great and good and sweet-scented and triumphant and undressed as appears to thee. (26) For in the world the Gathas were chanted by thee, and the good water was consecrated by thee, and the fire tended by thee; (27) and the pious man who came from far, and who was from near, was honored by thee. (28) Though I have been stout, I am made stouter through thee; (29) and though I have been virtuous, I am made more virtuous through thee; (30) and though I have been worthy, I am made more worthy through thee; (31) and though I have been seated on a resplendent throne, I am seated more resplendently through thee; (32) and though I have been exalted, I am made more exalted through thee; (33) through these good thoughts and good words and good deeds which thou practicedst. (34) They honored thee, and the pious man after thee, (35) in that long worship and communion with Ohrmazd, when thou performedst, for Ohrmazd, worship and proper conversation for a long time. (36) Peace be from it.'

CHAPTER 5. [The Chinwad bridge]

1 Afterward, the width of that Chinwad bridge became again nine javelin-lengths. (2) With the assistance of Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, I passed over easily, happily, courageously, and triumphantly, on the Chinwad bridge. (3) I had much protection from Mihr the angel, and Rashn the just, and Vai the good, and the angel Warharan the powerful, and the angel Ashtad the world-increasing, and the glory of the good religion of the Mazdayasnians; (4) and the guardian angels (fravashis) of the pious, and the remaining spirits first bowed to me, Arda Viraf. (5) I also saw, I Arda Viraf, Rashn the just, who held in his hand the yellow golden balance, and weighed the pious and the wicked.

6 And afterward, Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, took hold of my hand, (7) and said thus: 'Come on, so that we may show unto thee heaven and hell; and the splendor and glory and ease and comfort and pleasure and joy and delight and gladness and fragrance which are the reward of the pious in heaven. (8) We shall show thee the darkness and confinement and ingloriousness and misfortune and distress and evil and pain and sickness and dreadfulness and fearfulness and hurtfulness and stench in the punishments of hell, of various kinds, which the demons and sorcerers and sinners perform. (9) We shall show thee the place of the true and that of the false. (10) We shall show thee the reward of the firm believers in Ohrmazd and the archangels, and the good which is in heaven, and the evil which is in hell; (11) and the reality of God and the archangels, and the non-reality of Ahriman and the demons; and the existence of the resurrection of the dead and the future body. (12) We shall show thee the reward of the pious, from Ohrmazd and the archangels, in the midst of heaven. (13) We shall show thee the torment and punishment of various kinds, which are for the wicked, in the midst of hell, from Ahriman and the molestations of the demons.'

CHAPTER 6. [Hamistagan (Purgatory)]

1 I came to a place, (2) and I saw the souls of several people, who remain in the same position. (3) And I asked the victorious Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, thus: 'Who are they? and why remain they here?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'They call this place Hamistagan (the ever stationary); (6) and these souls remain in this place till the future body; (7) and they are the souls of those men whose good works and sin were equal. (8) Speak out to the worlds thus: 'Let not avarice and vexation prevent you from doing a very easy work, (9) for every one whose good works are three Srosho-charanam more than his sin goes to heaven; (10) they whose sin is more go to hell; (11) they in whom both are equal remain among these Hamistagan till the future body.' (12) Their punishment is cold, or heat, from the revolution of the atmosphere; and they have no other adversity.'

CHAPTER 7. [The Star Track]

1 And afterward, I put forth the first footstep to the star track, on Humat, the place where good thoughts (humat) are received with hospitality. (2) And I saw those souls of the pious whose radiance, which ever increased, was glittering as the stars; (3) and their throne and seat were under the radiance, and splendid and full of glory.

4 And I asked Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, thus: 'Which place is this? and which people are these?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This place is the star track; and those are the souls (7) who, in the world, offered no prayers, and chanted no Gathas, and contracted no next-of-kin marriage; (8) they have also exercised no sovereignty, nor rulership nor chieftainship. (9) Through other good works they have become pious.'

CHAPTER 8. [The Moon track]

1 When I put forth the second footstep, it was to Hukht of the moon track, the place where good words (hukht) find hospitality; (2) and I saw a great assembly of the pious.

3 And I asked Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, thus: 'Which place is this? and whose are those souls?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This place is the moon track; and these are those souls who, in the world, offered no prayers, and chanted no Gathas, and contracted no next-of-kin marriages; (6) but through other good works they have come hither; (7) and their brightness is like unto the brightness of the moon.'

CHAPTER 9. [The Sun track]

1 When I put forth the third footstep on Huvarsht, there where good deeds (huvarsht) are received with hospitality, there I arrived. (2) There is the radiance which they call the highest of the highest; (3) and I saw the pious on thrones and carpets made of gold; (4) and they were the people whose brightness was like unto the brightness of the sun.

5 And I asked Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, thus: 'Which place is this? and who are those souls?'

6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (7) thus: 'This is the sun track; and those are the souls who, in the world, exercised good sovereignty and rulership and chieftainship.'

[Part 3. Heaven]

CHAPTER 10.

1 I put forth the fourth footstep unto the radiance of Garothman, the all-glorious; (2) and the souls of the departed came to meet us, and they asked a blessing, and offered praise, (3) and they spoke thus: 'How hast thou come forth, O pious one? (4) From that perishable and very evil world, thou hast come unto this imperishable, unmolested world. (5) Therefore taste immortality, for here you see pleasure eternally.'

6 And after that, Adar, the angel of the fire of Ohrmazd, came forward, saluted me, (7) and said thus: 'A fine supplier art thou, Arda Viraf, of green wood, who art the messenger of the Mazdayasnians!'

8 Then I saluted, and said (9) thus: 'Thy servant, O Adar the angel, it was who, in the world, always put upon thee wood and perfume seven years old, (10) and you exclaim about my green wood!'

11 Then Adar, the angel of the fire of Ohrmazd, said (12) thus: 'Come on, that I may show thee the tank of water of the green wood which was put upon me.'

13 And he led me on to a place, and showed the blue water of a large tank, (14) and said: 'This is the water which that wood exuded, which thou puttedst upon me.'

CHAPTER 11. [God, angels, and spiritual leaders]

1 Afterward, arose Vohuman, the archangel, from a throne made of gold, (2) and he took hold of my hand; with the words 'good thought' and 'good word' and 'good deed,' he brought me into the midst of Ohrmazd and the archangels and other holy ones, (3) and the guardian angels of Zartosht Spitama, Kai-Vishtasp, Jamasp, Isadvastar the son of Zartosht, and other upholders and leaders of the religion, (4) than whom I have never seen any one more brilliant and excellent.

5 And Vohuman said (6) thus: 'This is Ohrmazd.' (7) And I wished to offer worship before him.

8 And he said to me thus: 'Salutation to thee, Arda Viraf, thou art welcome; (9) from that perishable world thou hast come to this pure, bright place.' (10) And he ordered Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, (11) thus: 'Take Arda Viraf, and show him the place and reward of the pious, (12) and also the punishment of the wicked.'

13 Then Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, took hold of my hand; (14) and I was led by them from place to place. (15) I also saw the archangels, and I beheld the other angels; (16) I also saw the guardian angels of Gayomard, Zartosht, Kai-Vishtasp, Frashoshtar, Jamasp, and other well-doers and leaders of the religion.

CHAPTER 12. [Other blessed souls]

1 I also came to a place, and saw (2) the souls of the liberal, who walked adorned, (3) and were above the other souls, in all splendor; (4) and Ohrmazd ever exalts the souls of the liberal, who are brilliant and elevated and mighty. (5) And I said thus: 'Happy art thou who art a soul of the liberal, that are thus above the other souls.' (6) And it seemed to me sublime.

7 I also saw the souls of those who, in the world, chanted the Gathas and used the prescribed prayers (yashts), (8) and were steadfast in the good religion of the Mazdayasnians, which Ohrmazd taught to Zartosht; (9) when I advanced, they were in gold-embroidered and silver-embroidered clothes, the most embellished of all clothing. (10) And it seem to me very sublime.

11 I also saw a soul of those who contract next-of-kin marriages, in material-fashioned splendor, (12) when the lofty splendor of its residence ever increased thereby. (13) And it seem to me sublime.

14 I also saw the souls of good rulers and monarchs, (15) who ever increased their greatness, goodness, power, and triumph thereby, (16) when they walk in splendor, in their golden trousers. (17) And it seemed to me sublime.

18 I also saw the soul of the great and of truthful speakers, who walked in lofty splendor with great glory. (19) And it seemed to me sublime.

CHAPTER 13.

1 I also saw the souls of those women of excellent thoughts, of excellent words, of excellent deeds, and submissive to control, who consider their husbands as lords, (2) in clothing embroidered with gold and silver, and set with jewels. (3) And I asked thus: 'Which souls are these?'

4 And Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'These are the souls of those women who, in the world, have honored water, and honored fire, and honored earth and trees, cattle and sheep, and all the other good creations of Ohrmazd. (6) And they performed the Yazishn and Dron ceremonies, and the praise and services of God; (7) and they performed the rites and praises of the angels of the heavenly existences, and the angels of the earthly existences; (8) and they practiced acquiescence and conformity, reverence and obedience to their husbands and lords; (9) and they were without doubts on the religion of the Mazdayasnians. (10) They were diligent in doing of good works, (11) and they have been abstainers from sin.' (12) And it seemed to me sublime.

CHAPTER 14.

1 I also saw the souls of performers of the Yazishn ceremony, and of those who know the scriptures by heart, splendid among the lofty and exalted among the great. (2) And it seemed to me sublime.

3 I also saw the souls of those who solemnized the whole ritual of the religion, and performed and directed the worship of God, (4) who were seated above the other souls; (5) and their good works stood as high as heaven. (6) And it seemed to me sublime.

THE GRAND BIBLE

7 I also saw the souls of warriors, whose walk was in the supreme pleasure and joyfulness, and together with that of kings; (8) and the well-made arms and equipments of those heroes were made of gold, studded with jewels, well-ornamented and all embroidered; (9) and they were in wonderful trousers with much pomp and power and triumph. (10) And it seemed to me sublime.

11 I also saw the souls of those who killed many noxious creatures (khrafstras) in the world; (12) and the prosperity of the waters and sacred fires, and fires in general, and trees, and the prosperity also of the earth was ever increased thereby; and they were exalted and adorned. (13) And it seemed to me very sublime.

14 I also saw the souls of agriculturists, in a splendid place, and glorious and thick majestic clothing; (15) as they stood, and offered praise, before the spirits of water and earth, trees and cattle; (16) and they utter thanksgiving and praise and benediction; (17) their throne also is great, and the place they occupy is good. (18) And it seemed to me sublime.

19 I also saw the souls of artisans who, in the world, served their rulers and chieftains; (20) as they saw on thrones which were well-carpeted and great, splendid and embellished. (21) And it seemed to me very sublime.

CHAPTER 15.

I also saw the souls of shepherds, by whom, in the world, quadrupeds and sheep were employed and fed, (2) and preserved from the wolf and thief and tyrannical man. (3) And at appointed times, water and grass and food were given; (4) and they were preserved from severe cold and heat; (5) and the males were allowed access at the usual time, and properly restrained when inopportune; (6) whereby very great advantage, profit and benefit, food and clothing were afforded to the men of that time: (7) Which souls walked among those who are brilliant, on a beautiful eminence, in great pleasure and joy. (8) And it seemed to me very sublime.

9 I also saw many golden thrones, fine carpets and cushions decked with rich cloth, (10) on which are seated the souls of householders and justices, who were heads of village families, and exercised mediation and authority, (11) and made a desolate place prosperous; (12) they also brought many conduits, streams, and fountains for the improvement of tillage and cultivation, and the advantage of creatures. (13) And as they stand before those who are the guardian angels of water, and of trees, and also of the pious, in great power and triumph, (14) they offer them blessings and praise, and repeat thanksgivings. (15) And it seemed to me very sublime.

16 I also saw the souls of the faithful, the teachers and inquirers, in the greatest gladness on the splendid throne. (17) And it seemed to me sublime.

18 I also saw the friendly souls of interceders and peace-seekers, (19) who ever increased thereby their brilliance, which was like the stars and moon and sun; (20) and they ever walked agreeably in the light of the atmosphere.

21 I also saw the pre-eminent world of the pious, which is the all-glorious light of space, much perfumed with sweet basil, all-bedecked, all-admired, and splendid, full of glory and every joy and every pleasure, (22) with which no one is satiated.

[Part 4. Hell]

CHAPTER 16.

1 Afterward, Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, took hold of my hand, and I went thence onward. (2) I came to a place, and I saw a great river which was gloomy as dreadful hell; (3) on which river were many souls and guardian angels; (4) and some of them were not able to cross, and some crossed only with great difficulty, and some crossed easily.

5 And I asked thus: 'What river is this? and who are these people who stand so distressed?'

6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (7) thus: 'This river is the many tears which men shed from the eyes, as they make lamentation and weeping for the departed. (8) They shed those tears unlawfully, and they swell to this river. (9) Those who are not able to cross over are those for whom, after their departure, much lamentation and weeping were made; (10) and those who cross more easily are those for whom less was made. (11) Speak forth to the world thus: 'When you are in the world, make no lamentation and weeping unlawfully; (12) 'for so much harm and difficulty may happen to the souls of your departed.'

CHAPTER 17.

I came back again to the Chinwad bridge. (2) And I saw a soul of those who were wicked, when in those first three nights so much mischief and evil were shown to their souls, as never such distress was seen by them in the world. (3) And I inquired of Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, thus: 'Whose soul is this?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This soul of the wicked wandered there where the wicked one died, over the place where the life went forth; (6) it stood at his head, and uttered the Gatha words (7) thus: 'Creator Ohrmazd! to which land do I go? and what do I take as a refuge?' (8) And as much misfortune and difficulty happen to him, that night, (9) as in the world, unto a man who lived in the world and lived in difficulty and misfortune.'

10 Afterward, a stinking cold wind comes to meet him. (11) So it seemed to that soul as if it came forth from the northern quarter, from the quarter of the demons, a more stinking wind than which he had not perceived in the world. (12) And in that wind he saw his own religion and deeds as a profligate woman, naked, decayed, gapping, bandy-legged, lean-hipped, and unlimitedly spotted so that spot was joined to spot, like the most hideous, noxious creature (khrafstar), most filthy and most stinking.

13 Then that wicked soul spoke thus: 'Who art thou, than whom I never saw any one of the creatures of Ohrmazd and Ahriman uglier, or filthier, or more stinking?'

14 To him she spoke thus: 'I am thy bad actions, O youth of evil thoughts, of evil words, of evil deeds, of evil religion. (15) It is on account of thy will and actions that I am hideous and vile, iniquitous and diseased, rotten and foul-smelling, unfortunate and distressed, as appears to thee. (16) When thou savest any one who performed the Yazishn and Dron ceremonies, and praise and prayer and the service of God; (17) and preserved and protected water and fire, cattle and trees, and other good creations; (18) thou practicest the will of Ahriman and the demons, and improper actions. (19) And when thou sawest one who provided hospitable reception, and gave something deservedly in gifts and charity, for the advantage of the good and worthy who came from far, and who were from near; (20) thou wast avaricious, and shuttest up thy door. (21) And though I have been unholy, I am made more unholy through thee; (22) and though I have been frightful, I am made more frightful through thee; (23) though I have been tremulous, I am made more tremulous through thee; (24) though I am settled in the northern region of the demons, I am settled farther north through thee; (25) through these evil thoughts, and through these evil words, and through these evil deeds, which thou practisest. (26) They curse me, a long time, in the long excretion and evil communion of the Evil spirit.'

27 Afterward, that soul of the wicked advanced the first footstep on Dush-humat and the second footstep on Dush-hukt, and the third on Dush-huvarsh; and with the fourth footstep he ran to hell.

CHAPTER 18.

1 Afterward, Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, took hold of my hand, (2) so that I went on unhurt. (3) In that manner, I beheld cold and heat, drought and stench, (4) to such a degree as I never saw, nor heard of, in the world. (5) And when I went farther, (6) I also saw the greedy jaws of hell, like the most frightful pit, descending in a very narrow and fearful place; (7) in darkness so gloomy that it is necessary to hold by the hand; (8) and in such stench that every one whose nose inhales that air will struggle and stagger and fall; (9) and on account of such close confinement no one's existence is possible; (10) and every one thinks thus: 'I am alone'; (11) and when three days and nights have elapsed he says thus: 'The nine thousand years are completed, and they will not release me!' (12) Everywhere, even the lesser noxious creatures (khrafstras) are as high as mountains, (13) and they so tear and seize and worry the souls of the wicked, as would be unworthy of a dog. (14) And I easily passed in there, with Srosh the pious, the well-grown and triumphant, and Adar the angel.

CHAPTER 19.

I came to a place, and I saw the soul of a man, (2) through the fundament of which soul, as it were a snake, like a beam, went in, and came forth out of the mouth; (3) and many other snakes ever seized all the limbs.

4 And I inquired of Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, (5) thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (7) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man, who, in the world, committed sodomy, (8) and allowed a man to come on his body; (9) now the soul suffers so severe a punishment.'

CHAPTER 20

I came to a place, and I saw the soul of a woman, (2) to whom they ever gave to eat cup after cup of the impurity and filth of men.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers such a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, having not abstained, nor lawfully withheld herself, approached water and fire during her menstruation.'

CHAPTER 21

I also saw the soul of a man, (2) the skin of whose head they ever widen out, and with a cruel death they ever kill him.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers such a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is this soul of that wicked man who, in the world, slew a pious man.'

CHAPTER 22

I also saw the soul of a man, (2) into whose jaws they ever pour the impurity and menstrual discharge of women, (3) and he ever cooked and ate his own seemingly child.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers such a punishment?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, had intercourse with a menstruous woman; (7) and every single time, it is a sin of fifteen and a half Tanapuhrs.'

CHAPTER 23

I also saw the soul of a man (2) who, because of hunger and thirst, ever cried thus: 'I shall die.' 3. And he ever tore out his hair and beard, and devoured blood, and cast foam about with his mouth.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers such a punishment?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, devoured talkatively, and consumed unlawfully, the water and vegetables of Hordad and Amurdad, and muttered no grace; (7) and through sinfulness, he celebrated no Yasht; (8) such was his contempt of the water of Hordad, and the vegetation of Amurdad. 9. Now this soul must suffer so severe a punishment.'

CHAPTER 24

I also saw the soul of a woman (2) who was suspended, by the breasts, to hell; (3) and its noxious creatures (khrafstars) seized her whole body.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers such a punishment?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, left her own husband, (7) and gave herself to other men, and committed adultery.'

CHAPTER 25

I also saw the souls of several men, and several women, (2) whose legs and necks and middle parts a noxious creature (khrafstar) ever gnawed, and separated one from the other.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by these bodies, whose souls suffer such a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked ones who, in the world, walked without shoes, (6) ran about uncovered, made water on foot, and performed other demon-service.'

CHAPTER 26

I also saw the soul of a woman (2) who ever stretched out her tongue on her neck, and she was suspended from the atmosphere.

3 And I asked thus: 'Whose soul is this?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, scorned her husband and master, and cursed, abused and defied him.'

CHAPTER 27

I also saw the soul of a man (2) whom they ever forced to measure dust and ashes, with a bushel and gallon, and they ever gave it him to eat.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers such a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, kept no true bushel, nor gallons, nor weight, nor measure of length; (6) he mixed water with wine, and put dust into grain, and sold them to the people at a high price; (7) and stole and extorted something from the good.'

CHAPTER 28

I also saw the soul of a man who was held in the atmosphere, (2) and fifty demons ever flogged him, before and behind, with darting serpents.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers such a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, was a bad ruler, (6) and was unmerciful and destructive among men, and caused torment and punishment of various kinds.'

CHAPTER 29

I also saw the soul of a man (2) whose tongue hung on the outside of his jaw, and was ever gnawed by noxious creatures (khrafstars).

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers such a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that man who, in the world, committed slander, and embroiled people one with the other; (6) and his soul, in the end, fled to hell.'

THE GRAND BIBLE

CHAPTER 30

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) whose limbs they ever break and separate, one from the other.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who made unlawfully much slaughter of cattle and sheep and other quadrupeds.'

CHAPTER 31

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) who, from head to foot, remained stretched upon a rack; (3) and a thousand demons trampled upon him, and ever smote him with great brutality and violence.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, collected much wealth; (7) and he consumed it not himself, and neither gave it, nor allowed a share, to the good; but kept it in store.'

CHAPTER 32

1 I also saw the soul of a lazy man, whom they called Davanos, (2) whose whole body a noxious creature (khrafstar) ever gnawed, and his right foot was not gnawed.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of the lazy Davanos who, when he was in the world, never did any good work; (6) but with this right foot, a bundle of grass was cast before a ploughing ox.'

CHAPTER 33

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) whose tongue a worm ever gnawed.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, spoke many lies and falsehoods; (6) and, thereby, much harm and injury were diffused among all creatures.'

CHAPTER 34

1 I also saw the soul of a woman (2) whose whole body the noxious creatures (khrafstars) ever gnawed.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, dressed her hair-curls and hair over the fire; (6) and threw hairs from, the head and scurf and hair of the body upon the fire; (7) and introduced fire under the body, and held herself on the fire.'

CHAPTER 35

1 I also saw the soul of a woman (2) who ever chewed with her teeth, and ever ate, her own dead refuse.

3 And I asked thus: 'Whose soul is this?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman, by whom, in the world, sorcery was practised.'

CHAPTER 36

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) who stood up, in hell, in the form of a serpent like a column; (3) and his head was like unto a human head, and the remaining body, unto a serpent.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, committed apostasy; (7) and he fled into hell, in the form of a serpent.'

CHAPTER 37

1 I also saw the souls of several men and several women (2) who were suspended, head downwards, in hell; (3) and snakes and scorpions and other noxious creatures (khrafstars) ever gnawed all their bodies.

4 And I asked thus: 'Of which people are these souls?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'These are the souls of those people, by whom, in the world, water and fire were not cared for, (7) and corruption was brought to water and fire, and fire was extinguished intentionally.'

CHAPTER 38

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) whom they ever gave to eat, the flesh and dead refuse of mankind, with blood and filth, and other corruption and stench.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, brought bodily refuse and dead matter to water and fire and his own body and those also of other men; (6) and he was always carrying the dead alone, and was polluted; (7) he also did not wash himself in this occupation.'

CHAPTER 39

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) who ever ate the skin and flesh of men.

3 And I asked thus: 'Whose soul is this?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, kept back the wages of laborers, and the shares of partners; (6) and now the soul must suffer severe punishment.'

CHAPTER 40

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) who ever carried a mountain on his back; (3) and in snow and cold, he had that mountain upon his back.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man, by whom, in the world, falsehood and irreverence and depreciating words were much spoken about people; (7) and now his soul ever suffers the punishment of such severe frost.'

CHAPTER 41

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) whom they gave excrement and dead refuse and corruption to eat; (3) and the demons ever beat him with stones and axes.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked [darward] man who was at the warm baths which many have frequented, (7) and he carried their bodily refuse and dead matter to water and fire and earth; (8) and the pious went in, and came out wicked [i.e. darward, impure].'

CHAPTER 42

1 I also saw the souls of several people (2) whom they cause to weep; and they ever make piteous cries.

3 And I asked thus: 'Which people are these?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'These are the souls of those who had a father in their mother; (6) and when they were born, the father did not acknowledge them; (7) and now they ever make lamentation for a father.'

CHAPTER 43

1 I also saw the soul of a man, (2) at whose feet several children fell, and ever screamed, (3) and demons, just like dogs, ever fell upon and tore him.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, did not acknowledge his own children.'

CHAPTER 44

1 I also saw the soul of a woman (2) who ever dug into a hill with her own breasts; (3) and ever held, on her head, a mill-stone like a cap.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffered so severe a punishment?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, destroyed her own infant, and threw away the corpse.'

CHAPTER 45

... committed perjury; (6) and he extorted wealth from the good, and gave it to the bad.

CHAPTER 46

... 'This is the soul of that wicked man whose wealth, in the world, was not acquired by honesty, but was stolen from the property of others; (6) and it was left by him among his own enemies, (7) and only he himself must be in hell.'

CHAPTER 47

... 'These are the souls of those people who, in the world, have been apostates and disbelievers; (6) and men were ever ruined by them, and led away from the laws of virtue to the law of evil; (7) and many religions and improper creeds were made current in the world.'

CHAPTER 48

... 'kept back the food of the dogs of shepherds and householders; or beat and killed them.'

CHAPTER 49

... 'These are the souls of those wicked, by whom, in the world, land was measured, and measured false; (8) and many people were rendered unsettled and unproductive, so that they came to want and poverty; (9) and it was ever necessary to contribute heavy taxes.'

CHAPTER 50

... 'removed the boundary-stones of others, and took them as his own.'

CHAPTER 51

... 'made false covenants with men.'

CHAPTER 52

... 'committed many breaches of promise, (6) and broke promises with the pious and with the wicked; (7) for both are promises, alike with the pious, and alike with the wicked.'

CHAPTER 53

1 And afterwards, Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, took hold of my hand; (2) and I was carried on to Chakat-i-Daitih, below the Chinwad bridge, into a desert; (3) and was shown hell in the earth of the middle of that desert, below the Chinwad bridge.

4 The groaning and cries of Ahriman and the demons and demoneses and many other souls of the wicked, came so, from that place, (5) that I was frightened, because I considered that they would shake the seven regions of the earth which heard that noise and groaning. 6. And I entreated Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, (7) thus: 'Carry me not here, but turn back'.

8 And then, Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said to me (9) thus: 'Fear not! since there is no danger whatever for thee from here.' 10. And in front, went Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel; (11) and in the rear, fearlessly, I, Arda Viraf, went on further into that gloomy hell.

1 And I saw the darkest hell, which is pernicious, dreadful, terrible, very painful, mischievous and foul-smelling. 2. And after further observation, it appeared to me (3) as a pit, to the bottom of which, a thousand cubits would not reach; (4) and though all the wood which is in the world, were all put on to the fire in the most stinking and gloomy hell, it would never emit a smell; (5) and again also, as close as the ear to the eye, and as many as the hairs on the mane of a horse, (6) so close and many in number, the souls of the wicked stand, (7) but they see not and hear no sound, one from the other; (8) everyone thinks thus: 'I am alone'. 9. And for them are the gloom of darkness, and the stench and fearfulness of the torment and punishment of hell, of various kinds; (10) so that whoever is only a day in hell, cries out (11) thus: 'Are not those nine thousand years yet completed, when they should release us from this hell?'

CHAPTER 55

1 Then I saw the souls of the wicked who died, and ever suffer torment and punishment, in that dreadful, dark place of punishment of various kinds, such as driving snow, and severe cold, and the heat of brisk-burning fire, and foul stench, and stone and ashes, hail and rain, and many other evils.

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by the body of these, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

3 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (4) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked people, by whom, in the world, mortal sin was much committed, (5) and the Warharan (most sacred) fire was extinguished, and a bridge of a rapid river was demolished; (6) and falsehood and irreverence were spoken, and much false evidence was given. 7. And their desire was anarchy; and because of their greediness and avarice and lust and wrath and envy, the innocent, pious man was slain; (8) and they have proceeded very deceitfully. 9. Now the soul must suffer such severe torment and punishment.'

CHAPTER 56

1 Then I saw the souls of those whom serpents stung and ever gnawed.

2 And I asked thus: 'Whose souls are those?'

3 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (4) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked who, in the world, have been defrauders of their God and religion.'

CHAPTER 57

... 'These are the souls of those women who, in the world, made much lamentation and weeping, and beat the head and face.'

CHAPTER 58

... 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, often washed his head and face, and dirty hands, and other pollution of his limbs, in large standing waters and fountains and streams, (6) and distressed Hordad the archangel.'

Chapter 59.

1 I also saw the soul of a woman (2) who ever wept, and ever tore and ate the skin and flesh from her own breasts.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who ever left her own infant crying on account of want and hunger.'

Chapter 60.

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) whose body remains set into a brazen cauldron; and they ever cook it. (3) One foot, which is the right one, remained outside the cauldron.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

THE GRAND BIBLE

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, among the living, lustfully and improperly, went much out to married women; (7) and his whole body became sinful. (8) But that right foot, the frog and ant, snake and scorpion, and other noxious creatures (khralfstars) were much smitten and killed and destroyed.'

Chapter 61.

1 I also saw the souls of those wicked (2) who swallowed and voided, and again swallowed and voided.

3 And I asked thus: 'What souls are those of these?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked who, in the world, believed not in the spirit, (6) and they have been unthankful in the religion of the creator Ohrmazd. (7) they have been doubtful of the happiness which is in heaven, and the torment which is in hell, and about the reality of the resurrection of the dead and the future body.'

Chapter 62.

1 I also saw the soul of a woman (2) who ever gnashed her own bosom and breasts with an iron comb.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, despised her husband and master (or guardian,) and became and remained vile; (6) being also herself untrue to him, and acted improperly with other men.'

Chapter 63.

1 I also saw the soul of a woman (2) who ever licked a hot oven with her tongue, (3) and ever burnt her own hand under the oven.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, offered defiance to her own husband and master, and became abusive; (7) she also acted disobediently, and did not grant cohabitation at his desire; (8) and she stole property from her husband, and secretly formed a hoard for herself.'

Chapter 64.

1 I also saw the soul of a woman (2) who ever came and went crying and wailing; (3) upon her head also, ever came pelting hail; (4) and under foot, hot, molten brass ever streamed; (5) and she ever gashes her own head and face, with a knife.

6 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, when the soul ever suffers so severe a punishment?'

7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (8) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, undutifully, became pregnant from other men, (9) and she effected the destruction of the infant. [i.e. abortion or infanticide] (10) Because of the pain and punishment, she fancies that she hears the cry of that infant, and she runs; (11) and such vehemence of running is occasioned, as of one who walks upon hot brass; (12) and she ever hears the cry of that infant, and gashes her own head and face with a knife, and demands the child, (13) but she sees it not till the re-establishment of the world [i.e. frashgird, cp. ch. 87.]; this punishment she must suffer.'

Chapter 65.

1 I also saw several souls (2) whose chests were plunged in mud and stench, (3) and a sharp sickle ever went among their legs and other limbs; (4) and they ever called for a father and mother.

5 And I asked thus: 'Who are these souls? (6) and what sin was committed by them, whose souls suffer so severe a punishment?'

7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (8) thus: 'These are the souls of that wicked who, in the world, distressed their father and mother; (9) and asked no absolution and forgiveness from their father and mother, in the world.'

Chapter 66.

1 I also saw the souls of a man and a woman (2) whose tongues were put out, and ever gnawed by the jaws of serpents.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by the body of these? (4) and who are those souls?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'These are the souls of that wicked who, in the world, ever committed slander, and embroiled people together.'

Chapter 67.

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) who was suspended by one leg in the darkness of hell [or hell of darkness]; (3) and he had an iron sickle in his hand, and ever gashed his own chest and armpits [or loins], (4) and an iron spike was driven into his eye.

5 And I asked thus: 'Whose soul is this? and what sin was committed by him?'

6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man, to whom a city was confided for administration; (8) and that which was proper to do and order, was not done and not ordered; (9) and deficient weights and measures of capacity and length were kept, (10) and he listened to no complaints from the poor and from travellers [lit. caravan people. see also ch. 68 and ch. 93].'

Chapter 68.

1 I also saw the souls of a man and a woman (2) whom they ever drag, the man to heaven and the woman to hell. (3) And the woman's hand was caught in the knot and sacred thread [kusti] of the man, (4) and she said thus: 'How is it when we had every benefit in union, among the living, (5) now they are dragging thee to heaven, and me to hell?'

6 And the man said thus: 'Because whatever things I received of the good and worthy and the poor, I also gave them back [meaning uncertain]; (7) and I practised good thoughts and good words and good deeds; (8) I also headed God, ad disregarded the demons; (9) and I have been steadfast in the good religion of the Mazdayasnians. (10) But you despised the good and poor and worthy and travellers; (11) you also disregarded God, and you worshipped idols; (12) and practised evil thoughts and evil words and evil deeds; (13) and you have been steadfast in the religion of Ahriman and the demons.'

14 And the woman said to the man (15) thus: 'Among the living, you yourself were completely lord and sovereign over me; (16) and my body and life and soul were yours; (17) and the food and income and clothing which I had, were from you; (18) then wherefore did you not chastise and punish me for it? (19) You have not even taught me, the reason of your goodness and excellence, (20) whereby you might have caused goodness and excellence in me, (21) and so now it would not be necessary to suffer this evil.'

22 And afterwards, the man went to heaven and the woman to hell. (23) And owing to the repentance of that woman, she was in no other affliction, in hell, but darkness and stench. (24) And that man sat in the midst of the pious of heaven, in shame from not converting and not teaching the woman, who might have become virtuous in his keeping.

Chapter 69.

1 I also saw the souls of women, (2) into both whose eyes a wooden peg was driven, (3) tied by one leg, head downwards. (4) And many frogs, scorpions, snakes, ants, flies, worms and other noxious creatures (khralfstars) went and came inside their jaws, noses, ears, posteriors and sexual parts.

5 And I asked thus: 'Whose souls are these? (6) and what sin was committed by them, whose souls suffer so severe a punishment?'

7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (8) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked women who had a husband in the world, (9) and slept and granted cohabitation [i.e. sex] with another man; (10) and the bed of the husband was kept defiled, and his body injured.'

Chapter 70.

1 I also saw the souls of women whom they threw head downwards; (2) and something like a hedgehog, which had iron spikes grown from it, was introduced into the body and dropped back; (3) and from it, a finger dropping the semen of the demons and demonesses, which is stench and corruption, ever went into the inside of the jaws and nose.

4 And I asked thus: 'Who are those souls, who suffer such a punishment?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked women who, in the world, broke promises to their husbands, (7) and they have stayed away from the husband, and been never contented, and granted no cohabitation [i.e. sex].'

Chapter 71. [Sodomy and enticing wives to adultery.]

1 I also saw the soul of a man (2) whom the fangs of serpents stung and ever gnawed; (3) and in both eyes, snakes and worms ever voided; (4) and an iron spike was grown [scraped?] upon the tongue.

5 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (7) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man, by whom sodomy was much committed; (8) and through a desire for improper lust, he debauched the wives of others. (9) And his smooth speaking deceived and seduced the wives of others, and separated them from their husbands.'

Chapter 72. [Violating menstruation taboo]

1 I also saw the souls of women, by whom their own menstrual discharge was ever devoured.

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by the body of these, whose souls suffer so severe a punishment?'

3 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (4) thus: 'These are the souls of those women who heeded not their menstruation, (5) and injured water and fire and the earth of Spandarmad and Hordad and Amurdad, (6) and looked upon the sky and the sun and the moon, (7) and injured cattle and sheep with their menstruation, (8) and kept the pious man polluted.'

Chapter 73. [Makeup]

1 I also saw the souls of women (2) who ever shed and sucked and ate the blood and filth of their ten fingers; (3) and worms ever came into both eyes.

4. And I asked thus: 'Who are these souls? (5) and what sin was committed by them who suffer so severe a punishment?'

6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (7) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked women who beautified their faces [with makeup], and kept the hair of others as ornament; (8) and they captivated the eyes of the men of God.'

Chapter 74. [Unlawfully slaughtering livestock.]

1 I also saw the souls of those who remained tied, head downwards, by one leg; (2) and a knife was driven into their hearts.

3 And I asked thus: 'Who are these souls?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked, by whom, in the world, beasts, cattle and sheep were unlawfully slaughtered and killed.'

Chapter 75. [Cruelty to animals.]

1 I also saw souls who were thrown under the feet of cattle, (2) struck by the horns, and their bellies torn, and bones broken; and they were groaning.

3 And I asked thus: 'Who are these people?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (5) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked, by whom, in the world, the mouths of beasts and ploughing cattle were muzzled; (6) and water was not given to them in the heat; and they were kept at work hungry and thirsty.'

Chapter 76. [Violating menstruation taboo and sorcery.]

1. I also saw the souls of women who ever lacerated their own breasts with their own hands and teeth; (2) and dogs ever tore and ate their bellies; (3) and both feet stood on hot brass.

4. And I asked thus: 'Whose souls are these? and what sin was committed by them?'

5. Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked women who, in the world, prepared food during menstruation, (7) and brought it before a pious man, and bade him eat. (8) They also ever resorted to sorcery; (9) and they injured the earth of Spandarmad and the pious man.'

Chapter 77. [Cruelty to animals]

1 Then I saw souls whose backs, hands, and legs had wounds, (2) and they were suspended with the posteriors to the face [This sentence can also be read: 'head downwards in melted brass'; but the form avitakt for 'melted' is unusual.]; (3) and heavy stones ever rained in their backs.

4 And I asked thus: 'Who are those? and what sin was committed by them?'

5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (6) thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked who had beasts in the world, (7) and appointed them hard work, and made the burden unlawfully heavy, (8) and gave no sufficiency of food, so they suffered through leanness; (9) and when sores ensued, they were not kept back from work, and no remedy was provided. (10) Now they (the souls) must suffer such severe punishment.'

Chapter 78. [Adultery and infanticide]

1 Then I saw the soul of a woman (2) who ever dug an iron hill with her breasts; (3) and an infant cried from that side of the hill, and the cry ever continued; (4) but the infant comes not to the mother, nor the mother to the infant.

5 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said (7) thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, became pregnant, not from her own husband, but from another person; (8) and she said thus: "I have bot been pregnant." (9) She also destroyed the infant.'

Chapter 79. [Corrupt judge.]

1-5 Then I saw the soul of a man, both whose eyes were scooped out, and his tongue cut away; and he remained suspended, in hell, by one leg; his body also was ever rained with the two brazen prongs of a fork; and an iron spike was driven into his head [or heart].

6 And I asked thus: 'What man is this? and what sin was committed by him?'

7-9 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man whose justice, in the world, was false; and he took bribes, and made false decisions.'

Chapter 80. [Falsifying measurements.]

1-3 Then I saw the souls of several who remained suspended, head downwards, in hell; and they force the blood, filth, and brains of men into their mouths, and convey excrement into their noses; and they [the tormentors?] ever cry thus: 'We keep just measures.'

4 And I asked thus: 'Who are these bodies?' and what sin was committed by them?'

5-7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked, by whom, in the world, weights and bushels and other small measures were kept short, and things were sold to men.'

Chapter 81. [Adultery and sorcery]

1-3 Then I saw the soul of a woman whose tongue was cut away, and eyes scooped out; and snakes, scorpions, worms, and other noxious creatures (khrafstars) ever devoured the brain of her head; and from time to time, she seized her own body with the teeth, and ever gnawed the flesh.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body?'

5-7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who was, in her lifetime, an adulteress. she also practised much sorcery; and much mischief emanated from her.'

Chapter 82. [Sharp tongue]

1 Then I saw the soul of a certain woman whose tongue was plucked out [Doubtful; it may mean 'whose tongues were many.'].

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this woman?'

3-5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman whose tongue, in the world, was sharp; and her husband and master was much troubled by her tongue.'

Chapter 83.

1 Then I saw the soul of a woman who ever ate her own dead refuse [nasa].

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this woman?'

3 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus:

4, 5 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, ate much meat concealed from her husband, and gave it to another person.'

Chapter 84. [Manufacturing and distributing narcotics]

1, 2 Then I saw the soul of a woman whose breasts they cut off; and her belly was torn, and the entrails given to the dogs.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this woman?'

4-6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman, by whom, in the world, poison and oil [liquor? infusion?] of opium were made and kept, and given by her to people to eat.'

Chapter 85. [Adultery]

1-3 Then I saw the soul of a woman, on whose body they construct an iron coating, and they turn back the mouth, and put it back to a hot oven.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this woman?'

5-7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who was, among the living, the wife of a well-disposed and intelligent man; and she broke her faith to her husband, and slept with a sinful and ill-disposed man.'

Chapter 86. [Khwetodas]

1, 2 Then I saw the soul of a woman, through whose body a grievous [prickly?] snake ascended, and came forth by the mouth.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, where the soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus:

5 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who violated a next-of-kin [khwetodas] marriage.'

Chapter 87. [Infant neglect]

1-3 Then I saw the soul of a woman who ever scraped her own body and face with an iron comb, and ever dug an iron hill with her breasts.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this woman?'

5-7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who, in the world, committed a crime, and through a desire for wealth, gave no milk to her own infant. 8 And now she ever makes an outcry thus: "Here let me dig into this hill, that I may give milk to that infant."'

9 Yet until the reestablishment of the world [Frashegird], she does not reach the infant.'

Chapter 88. [Improper sex and enticing wives to adultery]

1-3 Then I saw the soul of a man who remained suspended, head downward, from a gibbet, and ever had sexual intercourse; and they dropped semen into his mouth and ears and nose.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

5-7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, committed improper sexual intercourse; and deceived and seduced the wives of others.'

Chapter 89. [Uncharitable]

1-3 Then I saw the souls of those who, on account of weakness, were dashed about from side to side in hell; and they ever kept crying on account of thirst and hunger, cold and heat; and noxious creatures (khrafstars) ever bit out of the back of their legs and other limbs.

4 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by those of these souls, who suffer so severe a punishment?'

5-9 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked whose food and clothing, in the world, were consumed by themselves, and not given by them to the good and worthy; and they exercised no liberality whatever; and they kept themselves, and the people who had come and remained under their control, hungry and thirsty and without clothing; so they suffer cold and heat, hunger and thirst.'

10, 11 Now they are dead, and their wealth has remained for others; now the soul suffers so severe a punishment from their own actions.'

Chapter 90. [Lying and profanity]

1 Then I saw the souls of those whom serpents sting and ever devour their tongues.

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by those, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

3, 4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'These are the souls of those liars and irreverent [for 'untruthful'] speakers who, in the world, spoke much falsehood and lies and profanity.'

Chapter 91. [Unfair judge]

1 Then I saw the soul of a man who slew his own child and ever ate the brains.

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this body, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

3-6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that sentencing judge who made unjust decisions between applicants for justice; and plaintiffs and defendants were not looked upon, by him, favorably and justly; but through a desire of wealth and covetousness, he shouted at suitors with anger and severity.'

Chapter 92. [Kept back benefits.]

1 Then I saw the souls of those, into whose eye a wooden peg was driven.

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by the body of these, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

3, 4 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'These are the souls of those malicious ones who kept back benefits from mankind.'

Chapter 93. [Turning away travellers or charging for services]

1, 2 Then I saw the souls of those who were fallen, headlong, into hell; and smoke and heat were driven upon them from below, and a cold wind from above.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by these bodies, whose souls suffer so severe a punishment?'

4-6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'These are the souls of those who, in the world, gave no place, nor caravanserais for travellers, nor lodging, nor space, nor baking oven; or who gave them, and took hire for them.'

Chapter 94. [Starving their infants and selling the milk]

1 Then I saw the souls of those whose own breasts were placed upon a hot frying-pan, by their own hands, (2) and were ever turned from side to side.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by these women, whose souls suffer so severe a punishment?'

4-6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'These are the souls of those women who gave their infants no milk, but emaciated and destroyed them; and for worldly gain, gave milk to the infants of others.'

Chapter 95. [Starved her infant, adultery]

1, 2 Then I saw the soul of a woman who ever dug a hill with her breasts; and was ever thirsty and hungry.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this woman?'

4-7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked woman who gave her infant no milk, but left it hungry and thirsty; and herself went with a strange man through a liking for avarice, and a lust for illicit intercourse.'

Chapter 96. [Didn't sow seed]

1, 2 Then I saw the soul of a man whose tongue was cut out; and they ever drag him by the hair, and scatter about the dead refuse [probably the hair pulled out by the roots], and measure it with a bushel.

3 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by this man, whose soul suffers so severe a punishment?'

4-7 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man who, in the world, took seed, and said thus: 'I will sow it; and he sowed it not, but ate it; and the earth of Spandarmad was defrauded.'

Chapter 97. [Falsehood]

1 Then I saw the souls of a man and a woman whose tongues were cut out.

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by these bodies, whose souls suffer so severe a punishment?'

3-5 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'This is the soul of that wicked man and woman who, amongst the living, spoke much falsehood and profanity [or untruth], and deceived their own souls.'

Chapter 98. [Ate nasa, and killed an otter and other sacred animals]

1 Then I saw the souls of a woman and a man who voided and are up the excrement.

2 And I asked thus: 'What sin was committed by these bodies, whose souls suffer so severe a punishment?'

3-6 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'These are the souls of that wicked man and woman who, in the world, devoured dead refuse through sinfulness; and killed the water-otter in the water, and smote and slew other creatures of Ohrmazd.'

Chapter 99. [Disobedient to rulers, enemies of their military]

1, 2 Then I saw many more souls of wicked man and woman; and they ever suffer terrible, fearful, hurtful, harmful, painful, dark, hellish torment and punishment of various kinds.

3-5 Then I saw souls whose tongues were scraped with a wooden peg; and they ever went down, into hell, head foremost; and the demons ever ploughed their whose bodies with an iron comb.

6, 7 And I asked thus: 'Whose souls are these? and what sin was committed by them whose souls suffer so severe a punishment?'

8-11 Srosh the pious, and Adar the angel, said thus: 'These are the souls of those wicked who have been disobedient unto their rulers in the world, and have been enemies of the armies and troops of their rulers. Now they must here suffer such severe pain and torment and punishment.'

Chapter 100. [Ahriman (the devil)]

1-5 Then I saw the Evil spirit, the deadly, the world-destroyer, whose religion is evil, who ever ridiculed and mocked the wicked in hell, and said thus: 'Why did you ever eat the bread of Ohrmazd, and do my work? and thought not of your own creator, but practiced my will?' So he ever shouted to the wicked very mockingly.

Part 5. Epilogue

Chapter 101.

1-3 Afterwards, Srosh the pious and Adar the angel took hold of my hand, and brought me forth from that dark, terrible, fearful place, and carried me to the eternal light, and the assembly of Ohrmazd and the archangels.

4-9 When I wished to offer homage before Ohrmazd. And he was gracious and said thus: 'A perfect servant art thou, pious Arda Viraf, the messenger of the Mazdayasnians; go to the material world, and as thou hast seen and understood, speak truly to the worlds; for I, who am Ohrmazd, am with thee; everyone who speaks correct and true, I honor and know; so say to the wise!'

10-12 And when Ohrmazd spoke in this manner, I remained astonished, for I saw a light, but I saw nobody; I also heard a voice, and I understood that: 'This is Ohrmazd!'

13-22 And he, the creator Ohrmazd, the most munificent of spirits, said thus: 'Speak thou forth, Arda Viraf, to the Mazdayasnians of the world, thus: 'There is only one way of piety, the way of the primitive religion, and the other ways are all no ways. Take ye that one way which is piety, and turn ye not from it in prosperity, nor in adversity, nor in any way; and practice good thoughts and good words and good deeds; and remain in that same religion which, as received by him from me, Spitaman Zartosht and Vishtasp made current in the world; and hold the proper law, but abstain from the improper. And be ye aware also of this, that cattle are dust, and the horse is dust, and gold and silver are dust, and the body of man is dust; he alone mingles not with the dust, who, in the world, praises piety and performs duties and good works.'

22-25 Perfect art thou, Arda Viraf! go and prosper; since every purity and purification which you perform and keep, and everything which you keep lawfully, and the purification and ceremonial, when you perform them, in like manner, mindful of God, I know them all.'

26 And when I heard those words, I made a profound bow to the creator Ohrmazd.

27. And then, Srosh the pious, conveyed me successfully and courageously to this carpeted place.

28 May the glory of the good religion of the Mazdayasnians be triumphant!

29 Completed in health and pleasure and joy.

(The Manichaean Prophecy says: "A thousand books will be preserved ... they will come into the hand of the just and the faithful [the] Gospel and the Treasury of Life, the Pragmateia and the Book of Mysteries, the Book of Giants and the Epistles, the Psalms and [the] Prayers of my lord, his Icon and his Revelations, his Parables and his Mysteries ... How many will be lost? How many will be destroyed? A thousand lost, another thousand recovered; for they will find them at the end. They will kiss then, and say "O Wisdom of Greatness, O Armor of the Apostle of Light! When you were lost ... where did they find you?" ... And you shall find them reading them aloud, uttering the name [of each book] among them: the name of its lord .. and the name of those who gave all [for it to be written] and the name of the scribe who wrote it... and of the one who punctuated it..." (Manichaean Homilies 23.13-25.19)

When this prophecy was written down, some 1700 years ago, the author scarcely could have imagined that the recovery of his religion's precious books would come not at the hands of "the just and the faithful" but at the quite profane hands of modern academics. For more than one hundred years, archaeologists, philologists, and historians, have laboured to restore to human memory the Manichaean religion which ancient Christians, Zoroastrians and in particular Muslims worked so hard to obliterate. Now we can look back on a remarkable success story that has brought as much closer than ever before to a full understanding of the faith of Mani.

In the absence of the Manichaeans themselves, the task of retrieving their tenets and practices primarily depends upon the recovery and painstaking reconstruction of Manichaean remains. The modern scholar has at her disposal the material of 4 major discoveries and two isolated texts.

1. In the early part of the 20th century, Manichaean literary and artistic remains were recovered from Turlan and Dunhuang in China, including material in Middle Iranian, Turkic, and Chinese.

2. In the late 1920s, a third cache of texts, this time in Coptic, was found at Medinet Madi, in Egypt.

3. German sources: The leading role of German scholars with respect to both the Turlan and Medinet Madi finds resulted in the tragic loss of portions of both collections in the devastation of Berlin in World War II.

4. A fourth revelation of Manichaean materials has occurred in recent years at Kellis in the Dakhleh Oasis of Egypt, including texts in Coptic, Greek, and Syriac.

In addition to these four major finds, the Cologne Mani Codex (a Greek text from Egypt) and the Tebessa Codex (a Latin composition found in Algeria) are essential sources for the Manichaeanist.

Moreover, the anti-Manichaean literature of the Christian, Islamic, Zoroastrian, and Chinese literati traditions continues to yield valuable data, especially in light of the control supplied by normative Manichaean texts.

For more than a century, linguistic analysis of the Manichaean texts base been as important in the reconstruction of ancient languages as the developing understanding of those languages have been in permuting the recovery of the Manichaean tradition. This is a slow and arduous process. Even today, more than 50% of the surviving material remains unpublished. As the Manichaean faith was once the first true "world religion" for some hundred years, the publication of the remains of what we could call the Manichaean Bible is important, for it contributes to the understanding of our very own civilisation.

Mani and his Manichaeism

Manichaeism [Persian Ayin Mani; Chinese: Moni Jiao] was a major religion founded in the 3rd century AD by the Parthian Persian prophet Mani (c. 216–275 AD) in the Sasanian Empire. It was actually the very first "world religion" as it stretched from the west coast of Africa to the east coast of China. Mani claimed that his teaching would provide answers to all the riddles of the world, the principal aim of the cosmogonic myth was narrower, to provide answers to the primary existential questions about the origins of evil and of man, as well as about the role of man in the world. Manichaeism, like contemporary Zoroastrianism and various gnostic sects, offered a detailed cosmogonic myth, or cosmology. Mani proved to the Zoroastrians a potent competitor and was probably murdered by the Zoroastrian high priest Kerdīr in Gundeshapur. An adherent of Manichaeism was called a Manichaeian or Manichean, or Manichee, especially in older sources.

Mani (Persian; Greek: Manichaios, Latin: Manichaeus, Syriac Aramaic Mani chayya, meaning "Living Mani", was of Iranian origin and the prophet and the founder of Manichaeism, a religion of late antiquity strongly influenced by Gnosticism which was once widespread.

Mani was born near Seleucia-Ctesiphon, perhaps in the town Mardinu in the Babylonian district of Nahr Kutha, at the time still part of the Parthian Empire; according to other accounts in the town Abruymya. Mani's father Patik (Middle Persian Pattiḡ; Greek: Pattiḡios), a native of Ecbatana (now Hamadan, Iran), was a member of the Jewish Christian sect of the Elcesaites. His mother was of Parthian descent (from "the Armenian Arsacid family of Kamsarakan"); her name is reported variously, among others Maryam.

Mani the Prophet

Mani was raised in a heterodox environment in Babylon. The Elcesaites community was ostensibly Jewish Christian, though with some Gnostic features due to their Ebionite heritage, such as the belief in recurring incarnations of heavenly apostles, one of whom was a docetic Christ. At ages 12 and 24 Mani had visionary experiences of a "heavenly twin" of his (syzygos), calling him to leave his father's Baptist sect and preach the true message of Jesus in a new gospel. Mani then travelled to India (Sakas in present day Afghanistan), where he studied Hinduism and its various extant philosophies, including Buddhism. Al-Biruni says Mani only traveled to India after being banished from Persia, but this might be an error or a second journey. It is believed that his Christian roots might have been influenced by Marcion and Bardaisan.

Hippolytus considered Scythianus as a predecessor of Mani, and wrote that he brought, before Mani, "the doctrine of the Two Principles" from India. According to Epiphanius of Salamis, he was apparently trying to propagate the view "that there is something beyond the one who exists and that, so to speak, the activity of all things comes from two roots or two principles". Epiphanius further explained that Scythianus wrote four books: Mysteries, Treasure, Summaries, and a gospel (the Gospel of Scythianus). The account of Cyril of Jerusalem states that after Scythianus' death, his pupil Terebinthus went to Palestine and Judaea ("becoming known and condemned in Judaea") and Babylon. He used the name 'Buddas', which could mean he presented himself as a Buddha and may suggest a link between his philosophy and Buddhism. Terebinthus brought with him the books of Scythianus, which he presented upon his death to his lodger, a widow with a slave named Cubricus, who later changed his name to Mani (from "Manes" in Persian, meaning "discourse"). Mani is said to have studied the books, which thereby become the source of Manichean doctrine.

Returning in 242, Mani presented himself to Shapur I, to whom he dedicated his only work written in Persian, known as the Shabuhragan. Shapur was not converted to Manichaeism and remained Zoroastrian, but he favored Mani's teachings, which mixed Christianity, Buddhism and Zoroastrianism, and took him into his court. Mani is said to have performed miracles, including levitation, teleporting and healing, which helped him to gain converts in the Iranian elite. He was also famed as a painter.

Shapur's successor Hormizd I, who reigned only for one year, continued to patronize Mani, but his successor Bahram I, a follower of the Zoroastrian reformer Kartir, began to persecute the Manichaeans. He incarcerated Mani, who died in prison within a month, in 274. According to sources, he passed his last days comforting his visiting disciples, teaching that his death would have no other consequence than the return of his soul to the realm of light.

Mani's followers depicted Mani's death as a crucifixion in a conscious analogy to the crucifixion of Jesus; al-Biruni says that Bahram ordered the execution of Mani. There is a story which claims that he was flayed, and his corpse suspended over the main gate of the great city of Gundeshapur; however, there is no historical basis for this account. It is more plausible that his body was mutilated via post-mortem decapitation, and his head put on display, which may be the original source of the embellishment.

The Manuscripts

While most of Manichaeism's original writings have been lost, some translations and fragmentary texts have survived. Six of his major works were written in Syriac, and the seventh, the Shapuragan, dedicated to the Sassanid emperor Shapur I, was written in Middle Persian. While none of his books have survived in complete form, there are numerous fragments and quotations of them, including a long Syriac quotation from one of his works, as well as a large amount of material in Middle Persian, Coptic, and numerous other languages. Examples of surviving portions of his works include: the Shabuhragan (Middle Persian), the Book of Giants (numerous fragments in many languages), the Fundamental Epistle (quoted in length by Saint Augustine), a number of fragments of his Living Gospel (or Great Gospel), a Syriac excerpt quoted by Theodore Bar Koni, and his Letter to Edessa contained in the Cologne Mani-Codex. Mani also wrote the book Arzhang, a holy book of Manichaeism unique in that it contained many drawings and paintings to express and explain the Manichaeist creation and history of the world.

In 1969 in Upper Egypt a Greek parchment codex dating to c. AD 400 was discovered. It is now designated Codex Manichaicus Coloniensis because it is conserved at the University of Cologne. Combining a hagiographic account of Mani's career and spiritual development with information about Mani's religious teachings, and containing fragments of his writings, it is now considered the most reliable source of information about the historical Mani.

THE GRAND BIBLE

All other medieval and pre-medieval accounts of his life are either legendary or hagiographical, such as the account in Fihrist by Ibn al-Nadim, purportedly by al-Biruni, or were anti-Manichaean polemics, such as the 4th-century Acta Archelai. Among these medieval accounts, Ibn al-Nadim's account of Mani's life and teachings is generally speaking the most reliable and exhaustive. Notably, the (in other accounts prominent) image of the "Third Ambassador" is only represented through a brief mention of the name bashir, "messenger of good news", and the topos of "Mani the Painter" (which in other Islamic accounts almost completely replaces that of "the founder of a religion") is completely absent.

The Manichaean Teachings

From these and other sources, it is possible to derive an almost complete description of the detailed Manichaean vision. According to Mani, the unfolding of the universe takes place with three "creations". Manichaeism taught an elaborate dualistic cosmology describing the struggle between a good, spiritual world of light, and an evil, material world of darkness. Through an ongoing process that takes place in human history, light is gradually removed from the world of matter and returned to the world of light, whence it came. Its beliefs were based on local Mesopotamian religious movements and Gnosticism. It revered Mani as the final prophet after Zoroaster, Gautama Buddha, and Jesus.

Mani's teaching dealt with the origin of evil, by addressing a theoretical part of the problem of evil by denying the omnipotence of God and postulating two opposite powers. Manichaean theology taught a dualistic view of good and evil. A key belief in Manichaeism is that the powerful, though not omnipotent good power (God), was opposed by the eternal evil power (devil). Humanity, the world and the soul are seen as the by-product of the battle between God's proxy, Primal Man, and the devil. The human person is seen as a battleground for these powers: the soul defines the person, but it is under the influence of both light and dark. This contention plays out over the world as well as the human body—neither the Earth nor the flesh were seen as intrinsically evil, but rather possessed portions of both light and dark. Natural phenomena (such as rain) were seen as the physical manifestation of this spiritual contention. Therefore, the Manichaean view explained the existence of evil by positing a flawed creation in the formation of which God took no part and which constituted rather the product of a battle by the devil against God.

Manichaeism presented an elaborate description of the conflict between the spiritual world of light and the material world of darkness. The beings of both the world of darkness and the world of light have names. There are numerous sources for the details of the Manichaean belief. There are two portions of Manichaean scriptures that are probably the closest thing to the original Manichaean writings in their original languages that will ever be available. These are the Syriac-Aramaic quotation by the Nestorian Christian Theodore bar Konai, in his Syriac "Book of Scholia" (Ketba de-Skolionz, 8th century), and the Middle Persian sections of Mani's Shabuhragan discovered at Turpan (a summary of Mani's teachings prepared for Shapur I).

From these and other sources, it is possible to derive an almost complete description of the detailed Manichaean vision. According to Mani, the unfolding of the universe takes place with three "creations"

The First Creation: Originally, good and evil existed in two completely separate realms, one the World of Light, ruled by the Father of Greatness together with his five Shekhinas (divine attributes of light), and the other the World of Darkness, ruled by the King of Darkness. At a certain point, the Kingdom of Darkness notices the World of Light, becomes greedy for it and attacks it. The Father of Greatness, in the first of three "creations" (or "calls"), calls to the Mother of Life, who sends her son Original Man (Nāzā Qaḏmāyā in Aramaic), to battle with the attacking powers of Darkness, which include the Demon of Greed. The Original Man is armed with five different shields of light (reflections of the five Shekhinas), which he loses to the forces of darkness in the ensuing battle, described as a kind of "bait" to trick the forces of darkness, as the forces of darkness greedily consume as much light as they can. When the Original Man comes to, he is trapped among the forces of darkness.

The Second Creation: Then the Father of Greatness begins the Second Creation, calling to the Living Spirit, who calls to his five sons, and sends a call to the Original Man (Call then becomes a Manichaean deity). An answer (Answer becomes another Manichaean deity) then returns from the Original Man to the World of Light. The Mother of Life, the Living Spirit, and his five sons begin to create the universe from the bodies of the evil beings of the World of Darkness, together with the light that they have swallowed. Ten heavens and eight earths are created, all consisting of various mixtures of the evil material beings from the World of Darkness and the swallowed light. The sun, moon, and stars are all created from light recovered from the World of Darkness. The waxing and waning of the moon is described as the moon filling with light, which passes to the sun, then through the Milky Way, and eventually back to the World of Light.

The Third Creation: Great demons (called archons in bar-Khonai's account) are hung out over the heavens, and then the Father of Greatness begins the Third Creation. Light is recovered from out of the material bodies of the male and female evil beings and demons, by causing them to become sexually aroused in greed, towards beautiful images of the beings of light, such as the Third Messenger and the Virgins of Light. However, as soon as the light is expelled from their bodies and falls to the earth (some in the form of abortions—the source of fallen angels in the Manichaean myth), the evil beings continue to swallow up as much of it as they can to keep the light inside of them. This results eventually in the evil beings swallowing huge quantities of light, copulating, and producing Adam and Eve. The Father of Greatness then sends the Radiant Jesus to awaken Adam, and to enlighten him to the true source of the light that is trapped in his material body. Adam and Eve, however, eventually copulate, and produce more human beings, trapping the light in bodies of mankind throughout human history. The appearance of the Prophet Mani was another attempt by the World of Light to reveal to mankind the true source of the spiritual light imprisoned within their material bodies.

Manichaeism was quickly successful and spread far through the Aramaic-speaking regions. It thrived between the third and seventh centuries, and at its height was one of the most widespread religions in the world. Manichaean churches and scriptures existed as far east as China and as far west as the Roman Empire. It was briefly the main rival to Christianity before the spread of Islam in the competition to replace classical paganism. Beginning with the pagan emperor Diocletian, Manichaeism was persecuted by the Roman state and was eventually stamped out of the Roman Empire. Manichaeism survived longer in the east than in the west, and it appears to have finally faded away after the 14th century in south China, contemporary to the decline of the Church of the East in Ming China.)

THE FUNDAMENTAL EPISTLE OF MANI

Manichaeus' Epistola Fundamenti

Estimated Range of Dating: c. 270 AD

(The Fundamental Epistle or Letter of Foundation (Latin: Epistola Fundamenti) was one of the sacred writings of the Manichaean religion, written by the founder Mani (c. 210–276 AD), originally in Syriac. The exact nature of this writing's relationship with the Manichaean canon remains ambiguous. Since none of the original Syriac writings of Manichaeism remain, we only have translations of small sections of this book, made by either Manichaeans or anti-Manichaeans. One of the most well-known references to this book is found in the writings of Saint Augustine (354–430 AD), who before converting to Christianity, was a Manichaean "hearer" for a number of years. In two of his anti-Manichaean books, he quotes a few paragraphs of the Fundamental Epistle.)

Text:

Mani, by providence of God the Father, Apostle of Jesus the Christ:

These are the healthful words from the perennial and living source, he who first hears and believes them, then guards what they teach, shall never be subject to death, but will enjoy eternal and glorious life.

Happy indeed may he be deemed who has been initiated in this divine Gnosis whereby he will be liberated and abide in everlasting life!

May the peace of the invisible God and the knowledge of the Truth be with the holy and most dear brothers who believe in the heavenly precepts and at the same time fully keep them!

May also the right hand of Light guard and save you from every evil assault and from the snares of the world!

May the pity of the Holy Spirit open your heart and let you see your soul with your own eyes!

THE GOSPEL OF MANI (MANICHAEUUS)

or the Living Gospel - The Opening Words
(A fragment of a writing ascribed to Mani in Sogdian and Persian.)

Text:

The most Beloved Son, the Saviour Jesus, the head of all these gifts,

Who is a refuge for the holy and a blessing for the wise, is exalted.

May he be praised!

The Maiden of Light, the chief of all wisdom, is exalted.

May she be praised!

The Holy Religion, by the power of the Father, by the blessing of the Mother and by the wisdom of the Son, is exalted. May it be praised!

Well-being and blessing to the sons of goodness and to the speakers and hearers of the true Word!

Praise and honor to the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit and to the holy recollection!

He (Mani) teaches the word of the Living Gospel for Eye and Ear, and he preaches the fruit of righteousness.

I, Mani, the Apostle of Jesus the Friend, by the will of the Father, the true God, of Him, by whom I have become ...

Everything that is and everything that was and will be is by His Power.

The blessed ones will receive this message, the wise ones understand it, the strong ones will take on the wisdom of the wise

THE MANICHAEAN PSALMS OF THOMAS

A Manichaean Psalm-Book in Coptic

Edited by C. R. C. Allberry, 1938

Translation: Saeve Soederbergh, 1949

Estimated Range of Dating: 4th - 8th centuries A.D.

(The Psalms of Thomas (more correctly Psalms of Thom) are a set of 2nd century Judeo-Christian psalms found appended to the end of a Coptic Manichaean psalm book, which was in turn part of the Medinet Madi Coptic Texts uncovered in 1928. Published in 1938 by C. R. C. Allberry, Internet versions only comprise 12 numbered psalms.

The themes and content of the psalms bear a considerable resemblance to the Hymn of the Pearl from the Acts of Thomas. In 1949 Torgny Saeve-Soderbergh suggested that the psalms were largely based upon canonical Mandaean texts (despite Jesus being mentioned positively in two psalms), his work on the psalms demonstrating that Mandaeanism did not derive from Manichaeism, as was formerly commonly believed.

Nevertheless, considerable controversy continues as to whether the Thomas or Thom referred to could be the Apostle Thomas, Mani's disciple, also called Thomas, or the Gnostic concept of the divine twin. This is because the latter is referred to in other parts of the Coptic Manichaean Psalm-book as a distinct person from the Apostle. The enigma has since deepened with the publication of the Cologne Mani Codex in the 1970s, which showed that Mani himself came out of a baptizing Christian sect called the Elkasaites (= Elcesaites) descendants of the Ebionites.)

THOMAS PSALM 1 - CONCERNING THE LIGHT

My father, the glad light, the glad light, the glorious.

My father, the glad light, the glad and blessed light.

My father, the glad light, the glad and honoured light.

He evoked the aeons of light, he appointed them to the joy of his greatness.

He evoked the aeons of peace, in whom there is no waning or diminution.

He evoked the aeons of light, he summoned his sons and set them up in them.

He evoked the aeons of peace, he summoned his riches and set them up in them.

He evoked the aeons of rest, he summoned his angels and set them up in them.

He established dwellings of life and set up living images in them.

He set up living images in them which never perish.

He evoked clouds of brightness, dropping down dew and life,

He summoned a holy fire, giving a sweet burning.

He evoked a wind and air, breathing the breath of the living.

He evoked holy mountains, sending up fragrant roots.

They are all in agreement and concord: there is no waning or diminution in them, they are rejoicing and being glad in the glory, full, abiding in eternity.

I know not where the son of evil saw them.

He rose up saying "May I be one like them?"

Where did the son of evil see them?

He rose up saying, "May I be one like them?"

Where did the son of evil see them - the poor one who has nothing, no riches in his treasure, no eternity in his possession, no riches in his treasure?

He rose up saying, "May I be one like them?"

He caught the hand of seven companions and his twelve helpers.

He caught the hand of his seven companions, he went, he looked to them in a moment, in order that, if any should fall and come down, he might go and be one like them.

THE GRAND BIBLE

The great father therefore took the first step.

He strengthened all his angels, saying: "Assemble, all of you, and guard yourselves from the eye of the evil one which has looked up".

One of the sons of light looked from on high and saw him.

He said to his rich brethren:

"O my brethren, the sons of light, in whom there is no waning or dissolution:

I looked down to the abyss,

I saw the evil one, the son of evil,

I saw the evil one, the son of evil, desiring to wage war.

I saw their cruel armor which is ready to make the war, I saw snares set and nets cast and spread, so that the bird which should come might be caught and not escape from them.

I saw them reclining, drinking stolen wine, eating plundered flesh."

The little one passed his months until he . . .

He that is small among them that are on high stepped forth.

He armed himself and girt his loins.

The son of the brightnesses and the richesses armed himself and girt his loins.

He leapt and sped down into the abyss.

He leapt, he came into their midst that he might make war with them

He humbled the son of evil and his seven companions and his twelve ministers.

He uprooted their tent and threw it down.

He put out their burning fire.

He fettered the poor wretches that were at hand, thinking to make war.

He seized their cruel armour, that had been provided to make a war.

He broke their snares that were set.

He burst also their nets that were spread.

He let the fish out to their sea.

He let the birds fly in the air.

He let the sheep into their fold.

He rolled up his wealth, he took it.

He took it up to the land of rest.

That which the living ones took therefore was saved.

They will return again to that which is theirs.

THOMAS PSALM 2 - CONCERNING THE COMING OF THE SOUL

They that are not as I am made themselves like me.

They that are unworthy of me made me angry.

The wretches that belong not to the house of my father rose, they took arms against me, they rose, they took arms against me, making war with me, making war with me, fighting for my holy robe, for my enlightening light, that it might lighten their darkness, for my sweet fragrance, that it might sweeten their foulness, because of my brethren, the sons of light, that they might give a peace to their land, because of my sister, the hour of light, that she might be a strengthening of their building.

A part therefore went forth into my robe, it went, it lightened their darkness: my sweet fragrance went, it sweetened their stink; my brethren, the sons of light, went, they gave a peace to their land; my sister went, the hour of light, she was a strengthening of their building.

They take arms against me, making war with me, crying out against me, like men going to subdue a camp; they drew the swords against me, like men going to kill lions; they stretched their hands to the bow against me, like thieves going to attack a man, they did not stir from warring with me until they had made a wall against me:

the weak and paralyzed ones continually crept, they did not stir until they had made a wall against me: they established a watch outside me . . . the bell was made to go round because of me, my good fortune came on my behalf, the wretches thinking in their heart that I was a man for whom none would seek.

I therefore was looking towards my father, that he might send aid, looking towards my brethren, the sons of light, that they might come, tracking me.

My father therefore sent the aid to me, my brethren arose, they became one with me.

Through a cry which only my brethren uttered, their wall tottered and fell, their wall tottered and fell, their watches were unable to stop them, nor was he that goes round with the bell and cries good fortune found, against the cry which my brethren uttered.

The demons ran to the darkness, the demons ran to the darkness, trembling seized their archon entirely.

But I said to my brethren, "Suffer me yet this hour".

I was quieting my brethren that they might not destroy their firmament: for I await my robe until it comes and clothes him that shall wear it.

I will await my enlightening light until it strips itself of their darkness.

I will await my pleasant fragrance until it returns to its place.

I will await my sister, the hour of light, until she casts their corruption away.

I will await my brethren, the sons of light, until their stature is completed for them.

When therefore my shining robe comes and clothes him that shall wear it: when my pleasant fragrance strips itself of their stink and returns to its place: when my lightening light leaves the darkness: when my brethren, the sons of light, are complete in their stature: when my sister, the hour of light, goes up and sees the land of light: then I will strike my foot on the earth and sink their darkness down.

I will smite their height with my head and shake their firmament and the stars shall fall down like hail . . .

I will uproot the darkness and cast it out and plant the light in its place, I will uproot the evil and cast it out and plant the good in its place.

The world shall be full of glory, the earth shall be without suspicion, the whole world shall contain the righteous, they of the earth shall dwell in peace, there being no more rebel from henceforth, no name of sin shall be uttered again, the rich ones of light shall rejoice on every side without any grief.

That which the living ones took was saved, they will return again to that which is their own.

THOMAS PSALM 3 - CONCERNING THE FIRST MAN

The ship whose keel is the dawn, the ropes of light are they that are on it, its helmsmen are glorious ones, its crew are clothed with the dawn, they that bring the treasure of the mighty one that is upon it, immeasurable and countless, laden with the wealth of the living ones which can never be counted.

I know not where the son of evil saw it.

He took thieves and sent them to it, the thieves poured upon the ship, they drew it out into the middle of the sea, they wounded its helmsmen, they that were entrusted with the treasure, they were endangered.

They seized the treasure of the mighty one which is measureless and countless, they stole the wealth of the mighty one which is measureless and countless, they stole the wealth of the living ones which can never be counted.

The treasure which they stole from it they spread and scattered to their worlds, they took roots and fragrant grasses and planted them in their land, they filled it.

They took beryls and jewels, nailed them and fixed them to their firmament.

The hungry ate and were sated, the prostrate ones arose, the naked were clothed, they bound diadems upon their heads, the poor became rich and gloried in things that were not theirs.

The report therefore reached the mighty one that an enemy had overtaken his ship and its helmsmen were wounded and they that were entrusted with the treasure were endangered.

He called an envoy, a storehouse of life, which is the mind, he called an envoy and sent him forth unto the ship, saying, "Go to the place hither; tend its helmsmen; set them up that were entrusted with the treasure; dig up their land and upturn the fragrant roots; destroy and tumble down their firmament and cast down the jewels and the beryls; gather all the treasure of the mighty one and take it and put it aboard the ship; dishonour them, the poor ones, and cast the diadem from their head; dishonour the poor ones that glory in things that are not theirs; aid the righteous that there may be sent up to them the distilled part."

Then he armed himself and girt himself at once, the son of the lights and the richesses, he armed himself and girt his loins; he leapt and came forth unto the ship; he tended its helmsmen; he aided its faithful ones; he dug up their land with the spade; he tore up the fragrant roots and took them; he destroyed their firmament; he cast the beryls and the jewels down; he dishonoured them, the poor ones; he cast the diadem from their head; he helped his righteous that all the distilled part might be sent up to them on high; he strengthened the ship and set a bulwark on it and took it up as a gift to the mighty one; he took it up as a gift to the mighty one; peacefulness came to the land of light; the ship sent a palm forth; its helmsmen came to that which is theirs.

THOMAS PSALM 4 - CONCERNING THE FIRST MAN: THAT OF THE CROSS OF LIGHT.

The youth groaned and wept in the pit which is at the bottom of Hades; the youth groaned and wept, his cry rose up: "Hast thou not heard, O great brightness?

Has none informed you that Hades has been stirred up and rebelled and they of the abyss have put their arms upon them?"

The false gods that have rebelled have taken their armor against me.

The goddesses, the daughters of shame, have set up their armor against me; the goddesses, the daughters of shame, have set up their spears: the stinking and foul demons have prepared to make war with me."

When the mighty one heard, when they told him the word, he called an envoy, the Adamas of light, the son of the . . . ; he called the Adamas of light, the pitiless, the subduer of the rebels, saying, "Go down, go, O Adamas; succour the youth; succour the youth that is beneath the pit that is at the bottom of Hades; the demons, -- put fetters on their feet; the goddesses, -- put iron on their hands the stinking and foul devils, -- let their neck break beneath the collar; the false gods that have rebelled, -- bind them beneath the dark mountain; strengthen and encourage the youth who is beneath the pit which is Hades below; strengthen and encourage the youth, and go and come up before thy father".

The Adamas armed himself and sped down; he succoured the youth; he succoured the youth beneath the pit of Hades which is below; he put fetters on the feet of the demons; he put iron on the hands of the goddesses; the stinking and foul devils, -- he made their neck break beneath the collar; the false gods also that rebelled he bound beneath the dark mountain; he strengthened and encouraged the youth that was beneath the pit of Hades below; he strengthened and encouraged the youth; he went and came up before his father; his father said, "All hail to thee".

The rich ones of light said "Greeting and praise, receive greeting and praise, O youth, for thou hast found rest, O little one".

THOMAS PSALM 5 - THE SOUL, WHICH IS THE FIRST MAN.

O the treasure of the great ones of life, the jewel of the living mighty ones.

O the great treasure of the living ones. Who are you from the storehouses?

Who are you from the storehouses?

He cast him beneath the dark mountain, the dwelling of them of the Hebdomad.

They of the Hebdomad came, they caused the treasure to run and it came forth.

They set sixty snares for me, they spread sixty traps; they smeared madness on their snares; they put fire in their traps, the wretches thinking in their heart that I should fall into the snares and be defeated.

But they know not, they of the Hebdomad, that my eyes see the snares, my eyes see the snares, my heart marks the traps.

I joined my feet, I seized them, the traps of the

I run, they run after me me in the world; I run, they run after me, that forth to the man, for he has escaped from the snares, he has got free from the traps.

I turned back, I said the them, the weaklings, the wretches that run after me, "Go away, go, you of the ; go, attend to your snares; go, attend to your snares and let your snares attend to you.

Go, sink down in the madness and fall into the fire that is kindled; I am not of the sons of the world that I should fall into the snares and be caught.

I am a of the living ones, a lamp of light entire". I walked therefore, I . . . I walked, until I reached the bank of the Euphrates; on the bank of the river . . . there is a youth sitting, making music, the youth there sits and makes music in the scent of life which dwelt upon him.

He said, "My heart, be a mountain for me: my conscience, grow for me into a mind.

My heart, be a mountain for me.

Be and the living ones send after you how long, for they took an envoy, they sent him after me, he grasped the of my hand, he brought me up to the land of peace.

THOMAS PSALM 6 - CONCERNING THE LIVING SPIRIT

I was clothed, as I stood, in a robe without spot, a robe without spot, wherein there was no waning or diminution ever.

The living ones passed my cry my care, I arose; they grasped me to that which gave to me; the light no longer . . . they said to me, "Thou . . . the light . . . full of light; when the light therefore goes to its place the darkness shall fall and not rise again henceforth.

THOMAS PSALM 7 - THAT OF THE LIVING SPIRIT.

O wise one of the who came to subdue the rebels of the word.

He floated in great power, he appeared in great brightness; in his power and the power of his father he came, he made war with them; he subdued their camps; he hurt their height; . . . he came, he caught , he threw the diadem from his head, he threw the diadem from his head, he of the fire, he fettered the tyrants of the earth, he took from them their kingdom, he deprived them of their kingdom, he caused them to be led away to the punishment, he seized the authorities, he wrested from them their power, he cast them from the . . . of the fire, he closed the fountains of fire, he closed the fountains of fire that they might not again send up darkness, he quenched the furnaces of fire, he brought the light he set it in its place, he closed the doors of Hades that the righteous might not be shut in in them; he stopped, he hindered the course that he seized the goddesses and the gods, he wrest their vehicles from them, he took their vehicles from them, he appointed them to of the living, he blocked the troubled rivers, he distilled the clear waters, he uprooted the darkness and cast it out; he brought the light and planted it in its place; he closed all the fountains, he put the upon them.

He spread out the great sea, he built the ships and launched them on it, the ships of the great traders, the faithful men of truth, the barks of the merchants, that will convey up the distilled part to life.

He subdued the great sea, he subdued the rebels also that are in it, he sank its rebels also in it, he set guards over them to watch them, he set up them that fell, he healed them that were wounded, he awakened them that sleep, he gave memory to them that forgot, he gave the light to the eyes of the righteous, that they might go up and see the land of light, he gathered them that were scattered, he enlightened the poor ones of darkness, he appointed and made straight the course which his living father enjoined on him, he made smooth the royal road that the righteous might go upon it, the righteous might go upon it and see the land of light.

Brightness is set upon them there, a diadem is bound upon their head and they are added to the number of the angels.

He planted him a plant in the lives, he called his beloved ones, he set them up upon it that they might purify the seed and take it forth and purify . . . the seed and take it forth upon the ships and the barks.

On those ships of light therefore shall your souls go aboard.

THOMAS PSALM 8 - THAT OF THE ENVOY.

From the ranks of the kingdom, from the ranks of the exalted one, one of the sons of light [righteous Jews, a term from the Dead Sea Scrolls.] did of the darkness.

An image of light was revealed in the dwelling-place of the beasts, an image of light was revealed in the land of the foul stink balsam spread.

The worlds and they of the . . . gathered and came to see his image, they grovelled, they became mad because of his brightness, they arose that they might mark his likeness, they fell, they became mad by reason of his beauty, they arose that they might mark his beauty, they were sweetened with his fragrance, they grovelled, they bent their knees, they worshipped him, they set up their they sang to him:

"You have come in peace, O son of the brightnesses, son of the lights and richesses.

You have come in peace, O son of the brightnesses, who shall be the illuminer of our worlds.

Come and rule over our land and set peace in our city".

The demons were saying this with their mouth, yet planning evil nevertheless in their heart: Come, let us cast him into the stocks, let us set a fetter on him, let us shut him up in a cage and put him in the world and secure him.

Let us shut him up in the cage, that he may not return and the word that the demons spoke in truth, the living ones desired to set it up, they made it true, that which they planned, f or his from them.

When had gone to the iron went to their hands, they were shut up in the cage, because they loved not the truth

But the great light spoke and said to them

It is not possible that the glorious light should go to the land of the demons of the darkness.

It is not possible again that the fragrant smell should the land of the stink,

It is not possible that the image of the living man should come to the dwelling-places of the beasts.

The light shall go to the light, the fragrance shall go to the fragrance, the image of the living man shall go to the living land from which it came.

The light shall return to its place, the darkness shall fall and not rise again.

THOMAS PSALM 9 - THAT OF THE PERFECT MAN.

There was a man weeping down in the abyss: his cry was lifted up.

He said, ". to me.

Have the householders of the house taking up our burden upon them?

. in the world, while daily, his burden being thrown

I will throw the burden and dash it from me; the darkness shall fall and not rise again."

From the heights of truth the holy one did his rest:

"Bear that which the enduring one bears, that you may find that which the enduring one finds.

Strengthen yourself, stand fast. O righteous one; strengthen yourself, stand fast yet this hour.

For the lord of this house, the seducer of the whole world, has been given a number of months, a number of years are in his hand shall be ended now and thy aeons all be fulfilled.

His number shall and the world shall fall and not rise again.

Then the light shall go to the light and the darkness be blotted out from its place; he that is below the shall come up, he that is cast in the stocks shall be released.

The souls of the lawless shall suffer in the world, the men up unto him whom they have guarded.

THOMAS PSALM 10 - CONCERNING THE MOLDING OF THE

. a, a king's son, a king's son, . one that belongs to the princes.

He was the princes, they did they conveyed me from temple to temple, they took me, they cast me into two rivers, the two rivers received me, they took me, they cast me out into the great sea.

Seven full years did I spend, receiving nourishment in the sea.

At the end of the seven years I, the little one, shore, that I might come to land; when they were about to receive me blatta; when the worlds but then when I saw them I wept.

THOMAS PSALM 11 - CONCERNING HIS SON.

The lion took my fair daughter, he seized her, he took her within his lair with his great dragon also.

When they had taken her into their pit the lion roared within in his lair, in his lair, his companions also gathered, the dragon whistled and hissed, all his gathered unto him.

Lo, they with all their powers also roar out in every place, not appearing unto my daughter lest their power should be lessened.

Therefore I call up with my cry unto the mighty one, the great one of all the powers; I my father, the son whose garment is set upon the universe, saying: "If I have done wrong to the great lion, then let the lion eat me in his lair, if I have done wrong to the great dragon, let him swallow me here but if I have not done wrong to the lion from his midst, let me be able to escape from his lair and bring my daughter away from him the father of us all, the garment of the all.

I struck all their ranks, their nets also, I opened up their lair; I cast into it, I the great dragon; the serpent, his consort also, I enmeshed;

I took my daughter from them and set her high above them all; I shot at their troxos until I had thrown it beneath them all, in order that I and my daughter might together destroy all the nets, we the great lion and the dragon out of the universe, we reaching the time of the in to the land of the righteous, and that we might land which they they know it; from the midst of the second lair brought my daughter into the they also shall rejoice shall come to pass and the bride shall go to her bride-chamber.

THOMAS PSALM 12 - OF THE SAVIOUR

Jesus dug a river in the world; he dug a river, even he of the sweet name. He dug it with the spade of truth, he dredged it with the basket of wisdom, the stones which he dredged from it are like drops of incense; all the waters that are in it are roots of light and three ships sail, they voyage in the river of testing: one laden, one half-freighted, the third empty, there being nothing in it.

The ship which is full and laden goes in it, being ; it does not fear voyages

That which is half-freighted, bank bank which is empty, It arrived at the middle, it that which is all laden, it arrives; that which is empty is left behind.

Woe to it, the empty one, that comes empty to the place of the customs; it shall be asked, having nothing to give.

Woe to it, for it has nothing aboard: it shall be despoiled evilly as it deserves and sent back to the metaaggismos.

It shall suffer what the corpses suffer, for they called into his ear, he did not hear.

THE SWEET TEACHING OF THE SINLESS

An Apocryphal Epistle to Mar Ammo, Ascribed to Mani.
(A fragment of a writing ascribed to Mani, in Parthian.)

...And if someone strikes you, do not strike him back. And if someone hates you, do not hate him in return. And if someone envies you, do not envy him for your part. And if someone is angry with you, speak kindly with him always. And do not do yourself what you detest in another person. Rather, one should endure insults and other abuses from one's superiors, from one's equals and one's subordinates; nobody can make the patient denavar (devout one) waver even slightly. It is like someone throwing flowers at an elephant. Or it is like raindrops falling upon a stone; the raindrops could not melt the stone. Likewise, insults and abuses should not cause a patient denavar to waver even slightly.

There are times when the denavar should hold himself as high as Mount Sumeru. And there are times when the denavar should appear as a pupil, and there are times when he should appear as a teacher or a servant or a lord.

Likewise, in this sinful time, the pure denavar should sit down in pious meditation (andesina) and should turn away from sin and develop what is good

. (a number of lines illegible)

And I, Mar Mani, am this sinless one (nag) who is the writer and you, Mar Ammo, are the addressee. And he whose name is Akundag is Ahriman (the Devil). I have spoken these words so that everyone who pay heed to them and listen to them attentively. For everyone who hears and believes them and keep them in mind and serves through pious deeds shall find salvation from this cycle of rebirths, and shall be saved from his sins. For I, Mar Mani, and you, Mar Ammo, and all those people of old as well as all those fortunate ones that are reborn in this time, and likewise those that shall be reborn in the future, shall be saved from this cycle of rebirth through this behavior and this humility. For in this cycle of rebirths (this life) there is nothing good except for the merit accumulated by men of understanding and their pious deeds. Those who follow me, Mar Mani, and put their hope in God Ohrmizd and want the pure and righteous elect to be their leaders, they are the ones that are saved and find salvation from this cycle of rebirths and attain eternal redemption.
(Here ends the sweet teaching about the sinless.)

JESUS PSALM 1

Come, my Savior Jesus, do not forsake me.
Jesus, thee have I loved, I have given my soul armour (?);

I have not given it rather to the foul lusts of the, world. Jesus, do not forsake me.

Lo, the glorious armour wherein thou hast girded thy holy commandment, I have put it upon my limbs, I have fought against my enemies. Jesus, do not forsake me.

I, wandered into the whole world, I, witnessed all the things that are in it, I saw that all men run vainly too and fro.

Jesus, do not forsake me.

O how long is the evil genius and madness of the Darkness wherein they have been bound; for they have forgotten God, who came and gave himself up to death for them.

Jesus, do not forsake me.

When I saw these things, my Lord, I took thy hope and made myself strong upon it. Thy yoke which thou didst enjoin on me, I did not refuse it, my Lord.

Jesus, do not forsake me.

Thy excellent commandments which thou didst enjoin on me I have fulfilled them, my Savior.

Thy lamps of Light, I have not suffered my enemies to put them out.

Jesus, do not forsake me.

Now I call to thee in the anguish of my soul that thou mayest have compassion upon me; for the powers of heaven and earth desire to submerge me.

Jesus, do not forsake me.

O my prayers and my fasts and my virginity which I have perfected in thy name; for this is the hour of dread, wherein I need thee.

I beheld my judge, I was not confounded at all in my deeds that I have done. He gave me victoriously into the hands of the angels and they escorted me to his kingdom.

Jesus, do not forsake me.

My brethren, be not hesitant in doing good by night and by day; for that which a man plants the same shall he reap.

Jesus, do not forsake me.

The light-armed in the fight consume one another for a garland that passes away; and they shall be stripped of their and shall pay the penalty for that which they have done.

Jesus, do not forsake me.

He that after you is a great one; for you have conquered heaven and earth, the powers and principalities, and you shall rest yourselves in your new Aeon.

Glory and Victory to our Lord, our Light, Mani, and his holy Elect, and the soul of the blessed Mary, Theona.

JESUS PSALM 2

Come to me, my Savior, the haven of my trust.
Bestir thyself, O soul that watchest in the chains that have long endured, and remember the ascent into the air of joy; for a deadly lure is the sweetness of this flesh.

May the first that to thee persuade thy heart, and do thou fight for thyself to put senility behind thee and become new again.

Jesus, the new God, to whose hope I have hung; I have made myself strong upon his coming:

He was not born in a womb corrupted: not even the mighty were counted worthy of him for him to dwell beneath their roof, that he should be confined in a womb of a woman of low stature (?). Lo, the glory of my faith that shall help me to the end, that I have purified thee, my God.

Thy kin are these sure seals that are upon thee, O soul, by reason of which no demon can touch thee; for thou hast worshipped aright him, who has broken the goad (?) of Error, thou hast laid thy treasures in the heavens . . .

JESUS PSALM 5

Come, my Lord Jesus, the Savior of souls, who hast saved me from the drunkenness and Error of the world .

Thou art the Paraclete whom I have loved since my youth: thy Light shines forth in me like the lamp of light:

Thou hast driven away from me the oblivion of Error: Thou hast taught me to bless God and his Lights.

I have distinguished this pair of trees of this pair of kingdoms the bitter fountain and the holy essence of God.

The Light I have distinguished from the Darkness, life from death, Christ and the Church I have distinguished from the deceit of the world .

I have known my soul and this body that lies upon it, that they are enemies to each other before the creations, the of divinity and the hostile power that are distinguished always. The body of death indeed and the soul are never in accord.

The God of this Aeon has shut the heart of the unbelieving and has sunk them in his Error and the deceit of drunkenness. He has made them blaspheme against the God of Truth and his

. . . his power and his wisdom (Sophia).

If it was God who created the evil and the good and Christ and Satan.

. then who sent Jesus, that he might . . . and work among the Jews until they slew him.

When Adam and Eve were created and put in Paradise, who was it that ordered them: 'Eat not of the Tree', that they might not distinguish the evil from the good?

Another fought against him and made them eat of the Tree.

He cries out in the Law saying: 'I am God.

. no cluster falls from a tree without the Lord God; . . . to fall into a snare nor to . . . in a city; who then led Adam astray and crucified the Saviour.

The Saviour and his apostles and they that belong to the race of life revealed the Darkness and the essence of the Enemy; they wept for the body of death, the son of the great . . . this lion-faced dragon, and his mother also, Matter.

The Light has shone forth for you, o you that sleep in Hell, the knowledge of the Paraclete, the ray of Light; drink of the water of memory, cast away oblivion. He that is wounded and desires healing, let him come to the physician.

I have forsaken the world and its Error, I have loved my Savior, prayed, fasted, given alms . . . from my youth up, because of the hour of need, Come now, my Lord Jesus, and help me.

All hail, O busy soul that has finished her fight and subdued the ruling-power, the body and its affections.

Receive the garland from the hand of the Judge and the gifts of Light, and ascend to thy kingdom and have thy rest.

Glory and honour to our Father, the God of Truth.

Victory and blessing to his beloved son, Jesus, and his Holy Spirit, our Lord the Paraclete, and all his holy Elect.

Glory to the blessed soul of the blessed Mary, Theona.

JESUS PSALM 7

Jesus, the only-begotten, save me.

The body of the earth I will put off me: the old. . . I will forsake it, the fire of the of guile, the camp of the enemies through the armour of the Paraclete I will conquer them.

I have renounced thee, o devil; the angels of the . of the demons. I will strip myself of the world and the likeness of these five stars, and I will destroy the guile of the Archons which I wear and I will shine in the remembrance of the Paraclete.

O Mind that subdues the Matter, spread thy mercy upon my spirit. I will anchor in thy congregation, I, the new man, and receive all the gifts which thou hast promised me, which are the victory in thy eternal kingdom.

Jesus is the first gift that was given: Jesus is the holy flower of the Father: Jesus is the first to sit upon the luminaries: Jesus is the Perfect Man in the Pillar: Jesus is the resurrection of them that have died in the church.

Thou art he that delivered me to the fight in the beginning: thou art the second who didst give me thy right hand: thou thou art the third who didst shine forth with thy Light for me.

Thou too didst receive the victory in the fourth war.

Save me now, I beseech thee, my Lord.

I call unto thee, o victor eternal: hear my cry, o compassionate one, and let thy members cleanse me, and do thou wash me in thy holy waters and make me spotless, even as I am.

Lo, the time has drawn near, may I return to my habitations.

Thou art the way, thou art the door of life eternal, in truth the son of God, my Savior, who has taught me to wear his holy commandments .

The weapons of the enemy, I bring them to the ground, thy . being to me a landing-place.

. for ever; thou art the bend the knee to thee; the armies of the skies are looking for thee; thou also art he unto whom all generations call; thou also art the seal of every wonder; thou also art he who shall give to the victory to the soul of Mary.

JESUS PSALM 10

Christ, my bridegroom, has taken me to his bridechamber, I have rested with him in the land) of the immortal. My brethren,

I have received my garland.

My land I have beheld, my Fathers I have found, the godly have rejoiced over me, my Aeons have welcomed me.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

There is a gain, my brethren, none shall be able to take it from me: an imperishable treasure, to which thieves find not the way.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

I am like a sheep seeking for its pastor; lo, my true shepherd I have found, he has brought me to my fold again.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

Lo, the fight I have finished; lo, my ship I have brought to the shore, no storm has overwhelmed it, no wave has seized it, I was sitting marveling, like poor men that have been taken prisoner : adoration to the mercy of the Father.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

I was heading for shipwreck before I found the ship of Truth a divine tacking was Jesus who helped me.

Who then shall be able to tell of the gift that came to me?

An unspeakable grace overtook me.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

Take unto you the word of Truth, o men that love God;

The world is nothing, there is no gain in it at all.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

Men are thinking that they are at rest yet they know not that trouble is preparing for them.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

They run and burst forth until the hour overtakes them.

They have been called, they have not understood; they have gone too and fro in vanity.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

I have despised the world so as to give life unto my soul: the things of the flesh I have forsaken, the things of the Spirit I have been in accord with them.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

Since I found my Savior I have walked in his steps.

I have not hung back at all of this garland to receive it.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

O how great is the joy that is prepared for the Perfect

JESUS PSALM 21

Let me be worthy of thy bride-chambers that are full of Light.

Jesus Christ, receive me into thy bride-chambers, thou my Saviour. The body of death which I have killed it, I have made it keep far from my members indeed put me to shame. I am a maiden unspotted and holy.

Let me see thy image, my holy Father, which I saw before the world was created, before the Darkness presumed to stir up envy against thy Aeons.

Because of it I became a stranger to my kingdom, I severed its root, I went up victoriously on high.

Purify me, my bridegroom, o Saviour, with thy waters that are full of grace.

JESUS PSALM 30

Jesus Christ in whom I have believed, show thyself to me quickly and save me.

O merciful and good, full of mercy upon O First-born, Jesus, whom I have loved, do not forsake me in my tribulations

Since my youth unto thee have I given thanks; I forsook the universe, I believed in thee, I stood in thy name, O only-begotten.

Do not forsake me in my tribulations.

It is heavy upon me, the vesture wherein I stood: all men hating it and persecuting it; but thou it is to whom I gave my soul.

Do not forsake me in my tribulations.

Lo, they of the sky stand against me and they that are below multiply my tribulations; they that are with me also are filled with wrath against my soul.

As I was saying these things in tears the Saviour called me: crime, o busy champion, and give the garland of Light to me.

Who can see, my brethren, and return to the earth again and tell all men of the glory which I have received today?

THE GRAND BIBLE

I beseech you all, my brethren, my kinsmen, do not weep for me, for I have found the reward of my toil.

Glory land victory to our Lord Mani and all his Elect. Victory to the soul of the blessed Mary.

MANICHAEAN PARABLES

Translation: Walter Bruno Henning, 1932–1936
Estimated Range of Dating: 3rd - 8th centuries

PARABLES ABOUT THE AUDITORS

(A Manichaean Text in Parthian.)

... And like the highway robber who killed those sons, so you all who stretch out your hands against the earth ... and harm it in every manner ... And with your whole body you trample and injure the earth ... And you martyr and ill-treat this Living Soul from which you were born, and it cries out and laments constantly because of your hands that mistreat it.

You auditors who stand there laden with so much sin and guilt, you need absolution and grace once and for all for your many sins. Therefore ask the elect day after day for conventions(?) and absolution so that they ... may bring grace upon you.

... [eight lines missing]

They (the perfect auditors) are like a man who is ... healthy in his whole body and free from pain, and who has no pain or illness of any kind.

Yet he scratches himself a little at some limb, and he stands up restlessly and turns to it (that limb) again and again, and wonders when this sore will be healed, so that his whole body will be well and free from pain.

And again, they are comparable to a rich man who ... is not used to borrowing anything from anyone. And the necessity for something arises and he borrows a drachma from someone else. Thereafter, he constantly thinks, "When will I pay back the drachma to my creditor according to ... " Similar to that ...

PARABLE ABOUT THE FARMER

(A Manichaean text in Parthian.)

... He gathers in that wheat, and he takes it to the vessel from which it had come. And he goes to his house from which he had come, for he had accomplished the task for which he had come, and because he has reaped and gathered in what he had come for, and because that which is stored in his vessel ...

"... We want to receive ... favor and accompany him safely on even paths."

And this testimony that he has spoken is true.

Furthermore, he said, "Take heed that no one leads you astray, for many will come in my name, saying, "We are Jesus (disciples?), and his time has come." And many will deceive them.

PARABLE OF THE "PEARL-BORER"

(A Manichaean text in Sogdian.)

A merchant had many precious gems. In order to have them bored, he hired a man for hundred pieces of gold per day, and he went with him to his domicile. When he (the hired man) sat down, a lute happened to be there, and the worker looked at it.

When the merchant asked him if he knew how to play the lute, he answered, "Yes, very well." For he was skilled in this art. He (the merchant) said, "Then take it." He (the hired man) thus took it and played beautiful melodies in a correct manner for the merchant the whole day long, leaving the box with gems open and beating the time with his hand and swaying his head to it, with great joy.

In the evening, the worker said to him (the merchant), "Have my wages given to me." When the other said, "Have you done anything to earn wages?", he answered, "You hired me, and I did what you told me to do." Thus he urged him, until he received the hundred pieces of gold without any deduction, while the gems remained unbored. ... There was a quarrel, it could not be settled.

So on the next day they went before a judge for a trial. The owner of the pearls spoke thus, "My lord, when this gentleman saw me beside the bazaar, he asked me, "Hey, what work can you do?" I replied, "Sir, whatever work you may order me to do, I can do it all." When he had taken me to his house, he ordered me to play the lute. Until nightfall I played on the lute at the owner's bidding."

The judge pronounced this verdict, "You hired this man to do work for you, so why did you not order him to bore the pearls? Why did you bid him play on the lute instead? The man's wages will have to be paid in full. If again there should be any pearls to be bored, give him another hundred gold denares, and he shall then bore your pearls another day."

Thus under constraint, the owner of the pearls paid the hundred gold denares, his pearls remained unbored, left for another day, and he himself was filled with shame and contrition.

The wise give this allegorical explanation: That man who understood all arts and crafts represents the body ... The pearl-borer is the body. The hundred denares represent a life of a hundred years. The owner of the pearls is the soul, and the boring of the pearls represents piety. (Kephalaion)

That one is a righteous dēndār (elect), who saves many people from Hell, and sets them on the way to Paradise. And now I command you, Hearers, that so long there is strength in your bodies, you should strive for the salvation of your souls. Keep my instructions and my words in mind, the Straight Path and the True Mold which I have shown to you, namely, the Sacred Religion. Strive through that Mold so that you will join me in eternal life.

Thereupon all the Hearers became very joyful and happy on account of the divine words and priceless instructions which they had heard from the Apostle, the Lord Mar Mani. They paid exquisite homage, and received ...

And again the Apostle, the Lord Mar Mani spoke thus:

"The wise and soul-loving person (the auditor) should divide the day into three parts. The first part should be devoted to service of the kings and lords so that they will be content, that their majesty not be infringed, and that they do not start quarreling and scheming. The second to the pursuit of worldly affairs, to tilling and sowing, to allotments and legacies, to buying and selling, so that the house be maintained, the wife and children not be in distress, and that kinsmen, friends, and well wishers can be served ...

THE PARABLE OF THE MONK AND THE GIRL

"... I want to place the alms therein (in the vessel)."

Then the woman gave him a girl, and the monk placed the girl in it. And he went away. And that woman was visited by ... a ... hunter. He caught a wolf and brought it to ... He wanted to put it in the vessel. When he opened it, he saw the girl, and she was very beautiful. Immediately he asked the woman, "What is in the vessel?" And she answered, "A monk put his alms into it." At once the hunter took the girl out and put the wolf in ...

At night time, the monk came, thinking, "I want to take the girl ... out." When he put his hand into the vessel ... the wolf came out and ate up the monk.

This parable deals with the sinners, who, being constantly seized by ... think this ... But they go to dark Hell. Just as the monk looked for the girl and found the wolf ...

THE PARABLE ABOUT THE TWO SNAKES

(A Manichaean text in Sogdian.)

Here begins the story about the snakes "Heavy-to-carry" and "Light-to-carry".

Furthermore it was heard that there were once two snakes, and the first snake was called "Heavy-to-carry". Their bodies were equally large, and their tails were very long.

Being of one mind, they loved each other so much that one could not bear to be separated from the other. And lo, they went along a path together. After they had traversed much land, one snake glided into a depression. And the other snake proceeded along the way.

On one side of the path there were a very steep mountain, and on the other side a very deep body of water. And on the path, a trapper had set up a snare and a pitfall. Inside it was full of burning coals, and all kinds of fiery apparitions rose from it into the air.

The trapper was hiding nearby. And when the snake came to that place, it was pleased and amazed at the fiery apparition in the air. But it was not possible for it to avoid the pitfall, for, alā, it had to go ahead along this path and there was no way back. And lo, it paused, and then darted ahead, thinking, "I want to jump over the pitfall with my whole body."

But, because the pitfall was very wide and the snake's body was long and very thin in the middle, and its tail was very long, it could not cross the pitfall. Its head came across, but the tail remained behind lying across the pit, and the snake could not pull it over to its neck. So it burned there and died.

And the trapper came quickly, stretched out his hand toward the pit, cut open the head neatly, took the stone, and went away very happy.

The second snake came along and found its companion dead, its head mutilated. It cried out from the depths of its soul, "Alas! You were very dear to me." And it wept and lamented bitterly, wailed pitifully and said, "O wonderful brother, how have you died without your brother and in shame?"

When it had stopped lamenting, it thought to itself, "My brother died because he had not thought of a remedy for the body. If I, too, do not find a remedy for the body, I will also have to die." And it considered the matter carefully.

And the snake said, "Because he was a male, he could not bear the separation from his dear tail; he could not endure corruption and suffering in his body. But there is really no other way out. If I endure separation from my dear tail and endure a little pain in my body for the sake of the soul, then I will be able to jump over the pitfall."

Then it returned to the depression and found the abandoned fire of the shepherd. And it burned off as much of its tail as could be harmful to its body. And, when it had become smaller, the tailless body jumped very lightly and crossed the pitfall safely.

Of these two snakes, one is the person who loves the body, for whom bearing [...] is troublesome, but who is unconcerned about the soul. And his [...] is long. The second snake is the person for whom the soul is dearer than the body. There is very little poison in him and his attachment to the world is very weak, and the fetters binding his soul are very thin. And the pitfall, the high mountain and the deep body of water are the three trenches. The trapper is Ahriman, and the stone the soul.

Ultimately the Old Man, without good works, is the one who cannot jump over the three ditches with the tail of the body. But the chosen New Man has purged the three poisons from the body and has borne in his body the agony caused by observing the Law, and he can endure separation from his dear wife and children and from riches, and on the Final Day his soul will arise from the body and will attain the peace of Paradise ...

MANICHAEAN HYMNS AND PRAYERS

(in Parthian); Leaf from a Manichaean Book.

HYMN ON THE THIRD MESSENGER AND THE ARCHONS

(Manichaean hymn in Parthian.)

He (the third Messenger) takes the Light away from them (the demons) in many forms and fashions, by gentle means and harsh.

He releases the captives from bondage.

He purifies His own life and he exhorts them to approach the visible form and to follow its appearance.

Bright Sadvēs shows her form to the Demon of Wrath.

She seduces him with her own appearance, and he thinks it is real.

He sows his seed, ... he groans when he no longer sees her form.

Light is born in the sphere of the world; she passes it on to the higher powers.

Filth and dross flow from him to the earth. They clothe themselves in manifold forms and are reborn in many fruits.

The dark Demon of Wrath is ashamed, for in his confusion he had become naked. He had not attained the heights, and he had been robbed of whatever he had achieved.

He left the body an empty shell and descended in shame.

He was clothed in the womb of the earths, from where he had risen in brutishness.

THE HYMN TO THE FATHER OF GREATNESS

(A hymn ascribed to Mani, in Parthian.)

You are worthy of praise, beneficent Father, primeaval Ancestor!

Blessed are you, beneficent God!

You, Lord, are the first alif and the last tau.

Through you yourself your pious wish has been fulfilled and accomplished.

All gods and aeons, the deities of Light,

And the righteous bring praise to you, singing "Holy" repeatedly.

The spirits, the plants and all . . . truly implore you to blessing. And bring forth supplications with one voice.

Grant us our pious wish . . .

They bear the form that we have given up from afar.

Be merciful unto us in your mercy;

Show us your form, the noble epiphany, for which we yearn.

Let your brightness shine upon us, sweet source and breath of life!

Make us, your children, strong.

In vain the dark foe boasts, together with the bellicose, rebellious giants, In vain he wishes to cling to the Aeons.

HYMN ABOUT THE CAPTIVITY OF LIGHT

(Manichaean hymn in Parthian.)

Lo, that great Kingdom of Salvation, waits on high,

Ready for those who have gnosis, so that they may finally find peace there.

Sinful, dark Pēsūs runs hither and tither brutally,

She gives no peace at all to the upper and lower limbs of Light.

She seizes and binds the Light in the six great bodies,

In earth, water and fire, plants and animals.

She fashions it in many forms; she molds it into many figures; that you may not be subjected to evil. Guard it with care, preserve it with great steadfastness, so that it may not be soiled by dry or wet blood, just as it, in turn, makes you glad and joyful. And all of you together, keep it from being ... by jealousy and hatefulness ... Remember your fault on the day of ... when by greed it was ...

THE GRAND BIBLE

Begin to Ponder: One's body, with whose sign it is decorated or covered?

In whose service does it stand? And what is it that you eat? For everyone who partakes of the meal and is not worthy of it loses the fruit of his great efforts and is shut out of the Paradise of Light. But the chosen righteous ones and the auditors who believe realize the greatness of the Living Soul and will be joyful in the Paradise of Light, in eternal life ...

Dear brother, cleanse yourself and hear the good message from me.

It is a duty and an obligation to those who know to stand in the Church under this sign and to serve ...

INVOCATION OF THE ANGELS - (A Manichaean text in Persian.)

Come, you shall live together with the mighty angels.
Guard and protect the holy Church,
And cut off the heads of the adversaries,
The foes of peace.
May Raphael, Michael, Gabriel and Sarael,
Together with all the most powerful angels,
Increase peace and faith
For the whole Church of the Eastern Province.
Blessing upon the mighty angels!
May these powerful ones, these humble ones, be praised,
So that they may protect the "sons of the right hand!"
From the spiritual (demonic) and temporal (fleshy) powers.
I bless the God Mani, the Lord,
I venerate your great, bright glory,
I pray to the Holy Spirit,
Together with the glories and strong angels.
Praise to the almighty angels! May they protect
The religion of the gods,
And may they overcome
Those attacking righteousness.
The angel full of wisdom, the loving deity,
Beautiful in appearance, the strong God,
He of noble name, King Frédon, and the valiant Jacob,
May they protect the Church, and us, their children!
May blessing and praise from all of us
Be accepted by the three Lords,
So that they may send us power and strength
On this day and at this time of joy.
May blessing come from the gods on high
And new help from the power of the mighty;
May it come upon the land and its ruler,
So that their faith in the holy religion may increase.

THE INVOCATION OF BAR SĪMŪS - (A Manichaean text in Persian.)

I venerate Bar Sīmūs and Jacob
And praise Bar ...
So that they may increase ...
With Joy ever anew ... for this whole community.
Mihr Yazd, our Father, Redeemer and Benefactor,
Together with the valiant Frédon and all the angels.
May they protect and care for the holy Church
And its blessed head, the Lord of good name.
Oh Sun that brings Light, God Zēnārēs, together with the Mother of the Living,
Mihr Yazd, together with all the angels,
The five and the twelve,
May they all be praised by the holy Church!
May new blessing, new victory, come from God Zurvan
Upon the glories and angels and the spirits of this world,
So that it (the world) may accept the holy religion.
May He (Zurvan) be guardian, friend and protector within and without.
I invoke the powerful angels, the mighty ones,
Raphael, Michael, Gabriel, Sarael,
So that they may protect us from all misfortune
And deliver us from evil Ahriman.
I venerate the Lord Jacob the angel,
Together with the glories, powers and valiant spirits,
That they may protect us with their mighty power
And may lead us within and without.
I joyously venerate the mighty power,
Jacob the angel, the leader of the angels;
Receive from the whole holy Church
Blessing ever anew, and mighty praise!
May peace and new salvation come from God Zurvan,
You glories and spirits!
May blessing and new joy
From the gods and the angels be prepared for you!

May you lead us on this way to salvation!
May new power come from Jacob the angel,
New joy from all the angels!
May this land receive new aid,
May they (the angels) lead it to peace ever new.
Come, you glories, spirits and powers,
Grasp the right hand ...

INVOCATION OF THE GODS IN THE MOON - (A Manichaean text in Parthian.)

Eternal praise from the whole community that has been pardoned.

Chief of the messengers, Lord, Friend, Jesus, Savior, Ruler of the holy religion -
You are eternally holy!
The first of those that go out ... who dispel the dark foes, beloved of the Lights -
You are eternally holy!
Merciful Mother, Maiden of Light, soul of the God Zurvan, head of all wisdom, who has enlightened all the gods -
You are eternally holy!
Soul gathering angels, seven shiplords ...

A CONFESSIONAL PRAYER FOR THE ELECT - (A Manichaean text in Sogdian.)

The first commandment: Truthfulness ...
The second commandment: Nonviolence.
... if by me their divine light has been injured: daily a small portion is lost on the way. For all this I say: Forgive me!
The third commandment: Behavior in accordance with religion, with its two parts.
I cannot remain virtuous ...
First: I do not fret at the cutting off or planting of trees (or even whole) groves of trees. I do not consider the affliction of the sprouts of trees or even the holy Light Element on a spring morning.
We all strive to plant and to sow a garden or a piece of land with our bodies.
Second: the male and the female bodies ...

THE HYMN ON THE END OF THE WORLD - (A Manichaean liturgical hymn in Parthian.)

The message of heaven and the earth's answer:
Hear, oh world, the words of the Lord!
We would invoke the gods that they may save us from this evil age of tyranny, full of strife and unbelief.
Oh angels and twins, save us from all distress.
That time (the end) has come,
Just as the redeemer (Mani) has written.
Here ends the hymn on the End of the World.

THE HYMN ON BODY-AND-SOUL - (A Manichaean liturgical hymn in Parthian.)

Sweet place of rest, oh garden!
May you be a sweet place of rest for me
Return to me, remain in me.
May we be of one accord through your beneficence.
Here ends the hymn on Body and Soul.

THE FUNERARY HYMN - (A Manichaean liturgical hymn in Parthian.)

Set into the world am I, this divine form, deprived of my heavenly apparel. And I saw the redeemer, as he spoke to me in loving kindness.
Hope then came to me when I was constantly oppressed.
The marvel was illumined for me, My mind became joyful.
How quickly, how hastily has come the end of my life?
Free me from terrible distress on this day of death!
Come, my redeemer, accompanied by praise, saving God,
Lord Mani, together with the three sons of God.
Remember, kind God, this believing soul of your own child, an auditor, who follows you.
Beneficent God, think of me, my thoughts are fixed upon the final day.
Come, oh God, look upon me, my helper at this time of death!
Here ends the funerary hymns.

HYMNS TO THE SOUL - (A Manichaean liturgical hymn in Parthian.)

... Worthy are you of salvation.
To you, oh Soul of Light, will I give much counsel, so that you may attain redemption.

Come, oh souls, to this ship of Light!
My most beloved soul, who is happy and noble, where have you gone? Return!
Awake, dear soul, from the sleep of drunkenness into which you have fallen!
Look upon the foes, see how they prepare death all around you!

Reach your home, the heavenly earth created by the Word,
Where you were in the beginning.
The distressed soul cries out loudly because of wicked greed, deceptive delusion and the devouring blaze of fire.
An angel from Paradise has come, a herald from the Kingdom.
Here end the beautiful hymns to the soul.

HYMN IN HONOUR OF THE DOMINIONS OF LIGHT - (A Manichaean Hymn in Persian.)

On the Twelve Dominions.

(...)

Ninth: Righteousness, the sower of goodness.
You are a living tree, a firm column, with which you put the living powers of the Vahman in order, with righteousness and generosity.

And you proclaim them with great righteousness in the lower community and the upper community.

Tenth: Thankfulness, you good redeemer, resurrector of dead souls.

You fulfill the wishes of the three immortal ones, and you give understanding and beneficence to the children of the faith, whole limbs you have vitalised with thankfulness. And you caused Jesus the Splendour to be honoured.

Eleventh: Goodness, which is the living spirit, the wisdom of the Father and the splendour of the gods. You are the revelation of the life of the World of Light, and the first of those revelations, that are full of wondrous power and wisdom.

And you caused the spirit of Zurvan to be strengthened.

Twelfth: Light.

You are Light from the World of Lights. Those that are illuminated by you are themselves signs of Light. You are yourself the praised spirit in the hearts of the blessed. And you freed them from the slavery of being in the state of confusion (mixture of good and evil).

And you praised the radiant Vahman, the ruler of the Church.

We revere with great beneficence the whole community of the elect ...

UNTITLED PARTHIAN HYMN. (Verses from a Parthian hymn.)

... Lead me, Father, to my own family!
Fortunate is every man who in purity and truth
Recognize your skill, your manliness and wondrous power, oh God!

To fulfil completely, oh God, your counsels and your commandments,

I shall strive and wait on you. I am ardent, by day and night.
Earthy pleasures and things of the world, with Greed has avidly and cunningly prepared. Have I given up to your counsel.

Hear, oh God, my supplication, and do not hesitate to accept my veneration and prayer.

Lead me out of this poisonous deep!

This is the way, this is the mystery, this is the great commandment and the gate of salvation.

Fulfill in me, oh God, your will. May your glory protect me and always foster patience, zeal and fear of God in me.

My eye and ear ...

THE CRUCIFIXION HYMN - (A Manichaean hymn in Parthian.)

... Because of Satan the select were chosen by Jesus.

He (Satan) wanted to break through the fiery waves, to burn the whole world with fire. The noble ruler (Jesus) changed his garment and appeared before Satan in his power.

Then heaven and earth trembled, and Sammaël plunged into the deep. The true interpreter (Jesus) as filled with pity because of the Light which the foe had devoured. He had raised it (the Light) up from the deep pit of death to that place of zeal from which it had descended.

Honor to you, Son of Greatness, who has liberated your righteous ones. Protect, now, too, the Teacher Mār Zaku, the great keeper of your radiant herd.

...

THE GRAND BIBLE

Awake, brethren, you chosen ones, on this day of the salvation of souls, the fourteenth day of the month of Mihr, on which Jesus, the Son of God, entered Parinirvana.

Harken, all you faithful:

When the time for the perfection of the Son of Man had come, all the demons knew it. And the lord of the sinful doctrine ... covered himself in deceit. And the demons took counsel with each other. The twelve thrones above were disturbed. Poison flowed down on the lower creation, upon the sons, and the chalice of death was prepared for him (Jesus).

The Jews, the servants of the most high God, conceived of a deception ...

They conspired against the Son of Man. They devised evil; in deception they brought forth false witnesses. Accursed Satan, who had always troubled the apostles, molested the herd of Christ. He turned the treacherous Iscariot into a steed, when the Most Beloved Jesus trusted the disciples.

He (Judas) indicated him to the night-watchman by a kiss on his hand.

He delivered the Son of God to the foes. He betrayed Truth. For the sake of a reward that the Jews gave, he offered up his own lord and teacher.

THE KEPHALIA OF THE LORD MANI

(Excerpt from the Kephalia of the Prophet Mani:

The Three Blows Struck at the Enemy on Account of The Light.)

Concerning the three blows struck at the enemy on account of the light.

He turned again and said:

"The Darkness, the Enemy, on the other hand, received three hard blows and suffered three wars and menacing perils on the part of the Light in these three wars."

"The first blow: He was removed from the center and separated from his Land of Darkness, from whence he had come. He was vanquished in the first war and seized and bound by the Living Soul."

"The second blow: This is the time when he is dissolved and melted away in the great fire and destroyed and annihilated, out of the images, which are all the things in which he exists, and gathered into the fetters corresponding to his first appearance, and so he shall become as he was at the very beginning."

"The third blow, which will strike the Enemy, is the setting in of the end, and the male is parted from the female. The male shall be chained up in the bolos [heap] but the female shall be cast into the grave. He shall be divided into pieces [.] stone in their center of all generations and eternities."

"This is the manner the Enemy shall be bound, in heavy and painful bondage from which there is no way out, ever, but they have succeeded in separating him off and have separated him off for eternity."

"For this reason I say to my loved ones: Harken to my words which I proclaim to thee. Hold fast to the works of life!"

"Endure persecutions and temptations, which will come to you, fortify yourselves in these commandments which I gave you, that you may escape the second death and these last bonds, in which there is no hope of life, and that you may avoid the evil end of the deniers and blasphemers who have seen the truth with their own eyes and have turned away from it. They shall come unto the Place of Punishment at which there is no day of life. For the shining Light shall hide from them, and from that hour onward they shall not see it. The wind and the air shall be taken from them, and from them they shall receive no breath of life from that hour onward. Water and dew shall be removed from them and they shall never again taste these."

"Hail to all those who escape the end of the sinners and deniers and avoid the ruin which confronts them in concealing for all eternity!"

HYMNS AND WRITINGS ASCRIBED TO MANI

THE PRAISE OF THE LESSER ONES

(Hymn ascribed to Mani, in Parthian.)

.... Eternally shall we praise you, we and our kin, who are chosen, and the family, to which we belong, that is those that are of you.

Father, we would call upon you, we would lift up our eyes to you.

Our souls sing before you, so that you may be merciful to us in your great mercy, so that you may send us the helper

PRAISE OF THE GREAT ONES

(Hymn ascribed to Mani.)

Praised, living, vigilant and immortal are you, oh beautiful form, ord Jesus the Splendour, best loved of all the kings of Light, Ruler, Messiah!

Give to us, Lord, of your good gifts, for you are the beginning of all good gifts ...

You are the physician ...

You are, Lord, the redeemer, the savior ...

..... (a number of lines missing)

Praised, living, vigilant and immortal are you, oh blessed sign,

Spirit and beautiful form, Lord Jesus the Splendor!

Most noble of the beings of light,

... loving and beneficent one,

Ardent, bright and glorious one!

You are our God ...

Ruler, God ... Life-giver!

WE WOULD FULFILL: MANI'S HYMN TO JESUS, THE KING

(A hymn ascribed to Mani. Verses in Sogdian.)

Hymn in Praise of Jesus, the King.

With mouths full of praise we would bless thee,

Praise and honor to the great Moon of Light,

To the life-giver, the dear son of the god Zurvân,

To the merciful Lord of the whole world!

You we do invoke with a loud voice,

May your light enter our minds;

Your power is gathered in our limbs,

You have come with Salvation,

You have come with Salvation,

You have come with Salvation,

Light of the whole world!

You have come with Salvation, our whole Self,

You have come with Salvation, Light in our minds,

You have come with Salvation, beneficent God

Who are kinder than all other gods.

(Verses in Parthian, continuing:)

You have come with Salvation, great life-giver of all life-givers.

You have come with Salvation, Third Great One, who are the mediator between us and the Father.

You have come with Salvation, redeemer of our souls from the midst of the dead.

You have come with Salvation, our upper eye, and our ear with which we hear.

You have come with Salvation, our primeval right hand and our breath of life.

You have come with Salvation, our unified nous and our true mind.

You have come with Salvation, our whole intelligence, our ardent thought and our understanding free of grief.

..... (Some verses missing)

You have come with Salvation, our great door and ship of our souls.

You have come with Salvation, our new dominion and our exalted flock, beloved Son.

You have come with Salvation, our beneficent Father and our true hope.

You have come like a father, our beneficent physician.

You have arisen like a mother, and you are helpful like a brother.

You have sent us like a son,

You have served like a servant.

Come quickly, beneficent Father, put our souls in order...

PRAISE OF JESUS THE LIFE-GIVER

(Hymn ascribed to Mani.)

... all in one mind.

And we would stretch out our hands in invocation.

And we would lift up our eyes to your beautiful figure,
And we would open our mouths to call upon you,
And we would prepare our tongues to praise you;
We would call upon you, Jesus the Splendor, the New Dispensation.

You, even you are the just God, the noble physician,

The dearest son, the most blessed soul.

Welcome, liberated sovereign!

Come to help, good spirit, messenger of peace,

Helper of the meek and victor over the aggressors!

Welcome, redeemer of the imprisoned

And physician of the wounded!

Welcome, you who do awaken the sleepers,

Who do rouse those that slumber,

Who do cause the dead to rise!

Welcome, mighty God and sanctifying Voice!

Welcome, true Logos, great lamp and bountiful Light!

Welcome, new ruler and new day!

Welcome, foundation of the worlds and sacred meal of many!

Welcome, gift of the good, blessing of the gentle,

Who is venerated by those that sanctify!

Welcome, Loving Father, munificent benefactor

Of those that take refuge in you!

Welcome, our Father, who are our mighty refuge,

In whom we firmly trust!

..... (six lines missing)

Have mercy upon us and show us your love,

Oh beneficent one who are all love!

And reckon us not among the evildoers!

Save those that have taken refuge in you,

And be merciful to us.

Oh most beloved and loving one,

We have seen you, the New Dispensation,

And we have yearned for you who are all love.

Joyfully have we seen you, loving Lord,

And your name do we acknowledge, Mam-sin.

Separate us from the company of sinners

And distance us from the aggressors.

Lord, we are your own, have mercy upon us!

Come quickly, hasten to vanquish the sinners,

For they are haughty and have said,

"We are who we are, and no one is like us."

Be mighty and vanquish the aggressors!

..... (three lines missing)

We praise your name which is truly praiseworthy,

And your noble greatness which is pure joy.

Praise be to your name, Father,

And honour to your greatness!

Be it so for ever and ever!

UNTITLED PSALM FRAGMENT, ASCRIBED TO MANI.

Welcome, my great stature,

Welcome, my bright form,

Welcome, my shining appearance! ...

Welcome, my powerful word,

From which I let others drink eternal life! ...

Welcome, my nourishing meal,

With which I satisfy the hunger of my friends!

Welcome, my chalice of salvation,

With which I delight the loved ones!

Welcome, my strong shield and my trusty sword of speech and hearing,

And my well-prepared armor, which is in all alertness.

Welcome, comrade and companion in all battles!

THE PSALMS OF THE FESTIVAL OF BEMA

(The Mercy Seat) or the Manichaean Bema Psalms

BEMA PSALM 224

Let us worship the Spirit of the Paraclete.

Let us bless our Lord Jesus who has sent us the Spirit of Truth. He came and separated us from the Error of the world, he brought us a mirror, we looked, we saw the Universe in it.

When the Holy Spirit came he revealed to us the way of Truth and taught us that there are two Natures, that of Light and that of Darkness, separate one from the other from the beginning.

The Kingdom of Light, on the one hand, consisted in five Greatnesses, and they are the Father and his twelve Aeons and the Aeons of the Aeons, the Living Air, the Land of Light; the great Spirit breathing in them, nourishing them with his Light.

But the Kingdom of Darkness consists of five storehouses, which are Smoke and Fire and Wind and Water and Darkness; their Counsel creeping in them, moving them and inciting them to make war with one another.

Now as they were making war with one another they dared to make an attempt upon the Land of Light, thinking that they would be able to conquer it.

But they know not that which they have thought to do they will bring down upon their own heads.

THE GRAND BIBLE

But there was a multitude of angels in the Land of Light, having powers to go forth to subdue the enemy of the Father, whom it pleased that by his Word that he would send, he should subdue the revels who desired to exalt themselves above that which was more exalted than they.

Like unto a shepherd that shall see a lion coming to destroy his sheep-fold: for he uses guile and takes a lamb and sets it as a snare that he may catch him by it : for by a single lamb he saves his sheep-fold. After these things he heals the lamb that has been wounded by the lion: This too is the way of the Father, who sent his strong son ; and he produced from himself his Maiden equipped with five powers, that she might fight against the five abysses if the Dark.

When the Watcher stood in the boundaries of light, he showed to them his Maiden who is his soul; they stirred themselves in their abyss, desiring to exalt themselves over her, they opened their mouth desiring to swallow her.

He held her power fast, he spread her over them, like nets over fishes, he made her rain down upon them like purified clouds of water, she thrust herself within them like piercing lightning.

She crept in their inward parts, she bound them all, they not knowing it.

When the First Man had finished his war the Father sent his second son.

He came and helped his brother out of the abyss; he established this whole world out of the mixture that took place of the Light and the Darkness.

He spread out all the powers of the abyss to ten heavens and eight earths, he shut them up into this world once, he made it a prison too for all the powers of Darkness, it is also a place of purification for the Soul that was swallowed in them.

The sun and moon he founded, he set them on high, to purify the Soul.

Daily they take up the refined part to the height, but the dregs however they erase mixed, they convey it above and below.

This whole world stands firm for a season, there being a great building which is being built outside this world. So soon as the builder shall finish, the whole world will dissolve and set on fire that the fire may smelt it away.

All life, the relic of Light wheresoever it be, he will gather to himself and of it depict and image.

And the counsel of death too, all the Darkness, he will gather together and make a likeness of its very self, it and the Ruler.

In a moment the living Spirit will come he will succor the Light. But the counsel of death and the darkness he will shut up in the dwelling that was established for it, that it might be bound in it for ever.

There is no other means to bind the Enemy save this means; for he will not be received to the Light because he is a stranger to it : nor again can he be left in his land of Darkness, that he may not wage a war greater than the first.

A new Aeon shall be built in the place of the world that shall dissolve, that in it the powers of the Light may reign, because they have performed and fulfilled the will of the Father entire, they have subdued the hated one, they have over him for ever.

This is the Knowledge of Mani, let us worship him and bless him.

Blessed is every man that shall have trust in him, for he it is shall live with all the Righteous. Glory and victory to our Lord Mani, the Spirit of Truth, that cometh from the Father, who has revealed to us the Beginning, the Middle and the End.

Victory to the soul of the blessed Mary, Theona, Pshaijmnoute.

BEMA PSALM 228

He anointed him in his power, he made him perfect by the Spirit of his love. Implore him all.

He appointed him to three powers, to tribulation, to the right hand, to bliss. Implore him all.

He gave into his hands the medicine of life that he might heal the wounded. Implore him all.

He gave light with his Light to our Lamps. Put oil into them by your faith. Implore him all.

He gave the helmsman to the ships; the butter he brought to the warm milk. Implore him all.

He gave the bread of life to the hungry; the clothing he brought to the naked. Implore him all.

He gave light by his love to our Intelligence; he made his faith shine in our Reason. Implore him all.

He brought perfection to our Thought, long-suffering to our Counsel. Implore him all.

He bestowed Wisdom on our Intention that it might be as butter for us. Implore him all.

He sounded with his trumpet in the worlds that are far, that are near, he roused them all. Implore him all.

The ruler of the earth rose up against him and persecuted him in his cities. Implore him all.

He assumed the heart of his judges that they might condemn him like the impious. Implore him all.

They shut him up in their prisons and loaded his limbs with iron. We implore him.

They counseled against him in their evil counsels that they might cast a slur on him daily. Implore him all.

In the power of his glorious Father he gave his Spirit. Implore him all.

He was put to shame, the judge of lawlessness, he brought his wrath down upon his body. Implore him all.

They hung his head upon the gate, knowing not what they were doing. Implore him all.

The wise ones also that are among men bore witness concerning his eminence. Implore him all.

Let us bless him now, my brethren, and sing to him in one spirit. Implore him all.

We pray thee all of us together, the Elect and the Believers. Implore him all.

Do not make reckoning with us now, our Lord, according to the multitude of our sins. Implore him all.

Glory to the Father, who sent thee for the salvation of thy holy Churches. Implore him all.

Glory and victory to the Paraclete, our Light, Man, and the soul of Mary. Implore him all.

BEMA PSALM 230

Light resplendent, the Bema, thou art come; we call unto thee, the children of the Paraclete, our Lord Mani.

I will keep festival for thee today; I have purified my heart, o Bema, holy likeness, that overawes him that approaches it.

I bless thee, o glorious seat, the sign of the Wisdom; we worship the sign of thy greatness and the mysteries ineffable.

Thou art the blessed Root. Thou art the confirmation of the Luminaries.

Thou art the gift of the air. Thou art the manifestation of the victory of the Light.

We see thee now, blessed one, the word that is in singleness of heart: we gaze after thee, the holy one, the that is new indeed.

Thou art he that waits for Christ, that he may judge the sinners through thee: today also though thee the Mind puts to shame the portions of Error.

Thanks to thee and peace, the garland and the palm.

Thou art the new year's day of joy. Thou art the hour of gladness.

Thou art the medicine of the healing of our wounds, which are and the wounds of the Faithful which cannot be healed salvation and rest.

Thou art he that crushes the evil, setting a garland upon godliness; thou art he that cleanses the Light from the Darkness; thou art he that gives rest unto the souls of man.

Thou art the honor that is honored before all the apostles; thou art the throne of the judges of godliness that separate the two natures.

Thou art sparing; thou art compassion entire; thou art the holy Glory to thee, Mani: victory also to thy Bema.

Victory to thy Elect and thy Catechumens and the soul of Mary, Jmnoute, Pshai.

BEMA PSALM 235

This is the memorial of the Living Spirit: this is the memorial of the Twelve Maidens: this is the memorial of the Helmsmen; this is the memorial of the Splenditenens; this is the memorial of the King of Honour; this is the memorial of the King of Glory; the memorial of the great stout-hearted Omophorus.

This is the purity of the Apostle of Light; this is the purity of the Saviour Christ; this is the purity of the Paraclete-Spirit; this is the purity of the Love (agapa); this is the purity of the good Faith; this is the purity of the Perfection; this is the purity of Patience; this is the purity of Wisdom (Sophia) and Godliness.

This is the honour of the Paraclete-Spirit; the honour of fasting, Prayer, and Almsgiving; the honour of the commandment that we lie not; the honour of the commandment that we kill not; the honour of the commandment that we eat no flesh; the honour of the commandment that we make ourselves pure; the honour of the commandment of blessed Poverty; the honour of Humility and Kindliness.

My brethren let us pray with a great power [large section illegible.]

. of your one another. Ye Catechumens, repent in praying with a great prayer [large sections illegible.]

. above the elements. He gave be a sign of the Light.

Thine is the glory and the victory, our Lord Mani

. our Lord Sisinnios, this is the Innaios. Victory to Gabriab, our Lord

. victory to Salmaios, our Lord Pappos our Lord Ozeos; glory to Addas, our Lord Be there victory to all the Living Ones

. to the soul of Plousiane, the Soul of Theona, and the soul of the blessed Mary

BEMA PSALM 237

Sing ye all unto the glorious one, the Sage, the Paraclete, the Spirit of the Dawn, and the Gods and the Father-Gods of the Light, the glorious chiefs of the Kingdom indestructible, they all praying in joy, and their Five Greatnesses.

They render glory unto the Giver of Light, the Sage, the Paraclete.

The Aeons, glorious and unperishing, the holy Emanations of the mother of Life, the First man, the glorious firstborn, the five Elements, active and strong - they render holy glory to the Sage, the Paraclete.

The Beloved of the Luminaries, the straight resplendent Word, and the Great Builder that builds the New Aeon, the strong light-giving the Father of the Living - they render glory unto the Blessed One, the Sage, the Paraclete.

The third Father who is victorious, the Rich one, the Blessed and the Twelve Wise Maidens that of the Light, the Helmsmen third; thou art an envoy, another has send thee to us, o glorious one, the Sage, the Paraclete.

. the Column of Glory and the powers of the Omophori, the Angels and the and the three wheels that are below, the winds, the water and the fire this one alone, the Sage, the Paraclete.

The shining sun and the glorious Maiden of Light and the Righteous Judge and the Light-Mind they render glory unto the Sage, the Paraclete.

. and the Heavens and the congregation of the stars make song with harps and lutes, all worshipping him in joy, and the wise powers the sage, the Paraclete.

. and the mountains of the earth, the rivers the waters, the four worlds and the blossoming trees, the gardens of fragrance, and the breath of the wind - they render glory unto this unperishing one, the Sage, the Paraclete.

The race of the Righteous and the spirits and souls of the wise, the assemblies of the Apostles glorious, the living merchants, the preachers of Light, they render glory to this conqueror, the Sage, the Paraclete.

Sing with the Angels and bless the Mind of the shining Light of the Father, the sun

. and his strong active power and his glorious Wisdom (Sophia), ye sons of joy, render glory unto the Sage, the Paraclete.

Let us all sing together unto Mani, the man of God, on the holy perfect day, and let us be glad and learn the mysteries of the life of the Saviour Jesus and make festival and render glory to the Sage, the Paraclete.

Light your lamps and and keep watch on the day of the Bema for the Bridegroom of joy and receive the holy rays of Light of the good Father, and you the Sage, the Paraclete.

. all of us, the blessed ones, the Sage, the Paraclete who hast forgiven all thy members - the Elect , the Righteous, and the Faithful also together resplendent of the holy Bema.

Honour to the glorious one, the exalted living King, and the Luminaries that are held in honour, and Christ Jesus.

Glory to the Paraclete, our sage Lord and all his holy Elect, and the soul of Mary, Theona!

BEMA PSALM 239

Lo, the amnesty of the forgiveness of sins has come; it is Jesus, who giveth repentance unto him that repents.

He stands in our midst, he winks unto us secretly, saying: "Repent, that I may forgive you your sins".

He is not far from us, my brethren, even as he said in his preaching, "I am near to you, like the clothing of your body".

He that is angry, sins : he that causes wrath is a murderer; he that sheds a life, of him shall it be demanded.

The Good is destined to come : blessed is he by whom it comes ; the Evil too is near to be : woe unto him because of whom it comes.

When thou comest in with thy gift to set it on the table, be reconciled with thy adversary that thy gift may be received from thee.

Look out, my brethren : smite not at the life of them that . pass you O man, thou desirest to honour thyself, let thy fruits for the fruits of the tree which forth

Man, thou lovest thy life: love thy neighbour as thyself; that which do it not, that thou come not to judgement concerning it. If thou art to give a lesson, perform it first before thou givest it : thou shalt be a sign of that

THE GRAND BIBLE

. . . Judge not thy brother in the thing which thou shalt be found . . .

. . . look not at the mote which is in his eye lest . . . all of it beneath thine.

He has need of the physician who goes . . . and bears forth the burning of the medicines, that he may see the light. The physician of the souls, he is the Light-Mind; this is the New Man; the burning medicines are the Commandments. But the cool medicines, they are the forgiveness of sins: he that would be healed, lo, of two kinds are the medicines of life.

Be not ashamed, o Faithful one, as thou goest unto thy . . . life; do not seek to please man and become an enemy of God.

Thou hast been ashamed of Him today: He will be ashamed of thee at the end: do not be at ease in thy body and pay the penalty with thy soul.

For all men are running about, desiring to profit their soul, fearing and all confounded, desiring to save their lives.

The life and death of each man is in his hands, he knowing that perchance this is the man who shall be half dead in the middle of the way.

They all passed him by, none pitied him save only the Faithful who knew their soul.

The fire that dwells in the body, its affair is eating and drinking; but the soul thirst for the Word of God always. Blessed is the man whose heart condemns him not; the faithful man of God judges himself of his own accord.

Pray for thy enemies, bless them that revile thee, that thou mayest be good like thy Father who is in heaven. He that shines . . . that are evil and them that are good equally, spreading his Light upon every man.

Let us be merciful to one another that we may ourselves receive mercy; let us forgive one another that we ourselves be forgiven.

Glory and honour to Jesus, the king of the holy ones and his holy Elect and the soul of Plousiane and the blessed Mary!

BEMA PSALM 204

We bless and sing to thee, our Father Mani, our Saviour, O glorious one.

Thou art he unto whom we call, Father, king, god immortal; hear the prayer of thy fold, O glorious one.

. . . he whom the Father sent forth from on high that he might release the souls that are counted to him, O glorious one.

We now therefore make festival fulfilling thy holy day, passing the night in vigil in thy joy, O glorious one.

Thou art a creature immortal on the day of this third; thou art an envoy, another has send thee to us, O glorious one.

Wash us now therefore in the dew-drops of thy joy, for we are ordained to the service of the holy Bema, O glorious one.

Open to us the passage of the vaults of the skies and walk before us to the joy of thy kingdom, O glorious one.

We are wont to worship the sign of thy seat when thou spreadest it out on the day of the Filling of the Measure which is hidden today, o glorious one.

Glory to thee, Mani, glorious one; victory to thy blessed Bema, o glorious one, and the soul of the blessed Mary.

BEMA PSALM 241

Open the doors of mercy; arise that we may receive the present.

The great Judge is seated: let us gather and glorify him and bless him.

Say: Hail new sun, that has come forth with his Light.

Hail Holy Spirit, that art come today to save us: Our Lord Mani, that forgives us our sins.

Blessing to thy Father peace to the kingdom on high.

Thanks to thy divine brethren who have believed in they coming to us.

Glory to the Aeons of Light who commemorated the things pertaining to the celebration of thy birth into matter.

We worship the ships of Light that ferried thee across as thou camest.

Honour to the Perfect Man, the way of peace whereby thou didst come.

We bless thy Light-familiar, the Christ, the author of our good.

Honour to thy wisdom that has defeated the Error of the divisions.

We bless the Angels that brought thee from bound to bound.

We worship thy sufferings which thou didst endure because of thy children: For thou didst leave thy great glory, thou didst come and give thyself for souls.

Thou didst assume different forms until thou hadst visited all races: For the sake of thy loved ones, until thou hadst chosen them out of their midst.

. . . the earth, the seas and the . . . also.

Thou didst seek out thy beloved, thy Church, until thou hadst found her.

Thou didst appear unto the crowned ones, the princes received thy word.

Shapur honoured thee, Oromazd also received thy truth.

. . . Bahram . . . for he believed not in thy preaching.

He hearkened to thy enemies, the deniers of thy hope.

. . . Herod, who crucified Jesus Christ.

Woe unto them, the children of the fire; for they sinned against thy holy body.

I was speaking of the Magi who looked upon thy blood.

They loved the evil-genius of the persecutors, the murderers of God.

They wrote their lying screeds, they gave them our concerning thee.

O Judge of all the races, they arraigned thee and judged thee.

From the time that thou didst confound their Error they loaded thee with iron and bound thee.

They loaded thy hands and feet and put fetters also upon thy body.

They cast thee into their prisons, thinking that they could hold thee in.

Thou didst spend twenty-six days and nights of them in irons.

. . . thy children beside thee, thou didst embrace them all.

. . . [illegible section]

Thou didst appoint the twelve Teachers and the seventy-two Bishops.

Thou didst make Sisinnios leader over thy children.

When thou hadst set thy affairs in order thou didst implore thy Father, he answered thee.

Thou didst leave them thy body and didst ascend to thy kingdom.

The lawless men were confounded, they brought their wrath upon thy body.

They shed thy blood in the midst of the street of their city.

They struck off thy head and set it on high upon their gate.

They rejoiced in thy murder, knowing not that there is a judgement: For an account shall be demanded of thy death and thy blood shall be avenged.

Their godless city shall receive the recompense for the outrage which it committed.

Blessed are thy loved ones that shed their tears for thee.

Lo, the grief of thy body, the joy of thy spirit that has ascended.

Blessed one, our Father, number us also among thy Elect today.

. . . [illegible section]

The Man who has suffered wrong - lo, the protection of the Judge let him hasten unto it: He whom grief has killed, he on whom anger has leapt:

He for whom lust has soiled the whiteness of his clothes: He from whom obduracy stole away the sweetness of his heart: He whom folly made mock of and took away his wisdom: He for whom the devouring fire allied with his enemies, doing him harm:

He whom overweening pride deceived and tumbled to the ground: Lo, the judge has sat down, he calls out the name of him who has been wronged.

There is no favouring in his judgement, no turning in his justice.

He knows how to forgive him that shall sin and repent.

He makes reckoning with none that shall come to him and implore him.

But the divided man - him he forgives not.

Let us not neglect ourselves and fail in our hearts through our own fault.

Lo, the great physician has come; he knows how to heal all men.

He has spread his medicine-chest, he has called out, - "He that wishes to be cured, come hither!"

Look at the multitude of his cures; there is no cure save in him.

He does not recoil from him that is sick, he does not mock him that has a wound in him.

A skillful one is he in his work: his mouth is also sweet in its words.

He knows how to cut a wound, to put a cool medicament upon it.

He cuts and cleanses; he cauterizes and soothes in a single day.

Look, his loving-kindness has made each one of us reveal our sickness.

Let us not hide our sickness from him and leave the cancer in our members, the fair and mighty image of the New Man, so that it destroys it.

He has the antidote that is good for every affection: His Great Gospel, the good tidings of all them that are of the Light.

His water-pot is the Thesaurus, the treasure of life.

In it there is hot water: there is some cold water also mixed with it.

His soft sponge that wipes away bruises is the Pragmateia.

His knife for cutting is the Book of the Mysteries.

His excellent swabs are the Book of the Giants.

The [...] of every cure is the Book of Letters.

[illegible section.] . . . hot, the two psalms, the lamentations

. . . cool also, his Prayers and all his Logia.

Lo, the test of our physician: my brethren, let us implore him.

May he give us a cure that heals our . . .

The forgiveness of our sins, that he may bestow it upon us all.

May he wipe away our iniquities, the scars that are branded on our souls.

Year by year there is the day: let us not forget, so that it goes . . .

We are his holy ones, they that preach and they that hear, all of them.

He that sings a psalm is like them that weave a garland.

They that answer after him are like them that put roses into his hands.

Victory to the judge of Truth and his glorious Bema.

May he give it to all of us also, his Elect and his Catechumens.

Glory and honour to them that keep festival on this mighty day.

Victory to the soul of Plousiane, Apa Polydoxus, Apa Pshai, Panai, Pshai, Jmnoute, Theona and the soul also of Mary.

SEPARATE PSALMS

TASTE AND KNOW THAT THE LORD IS SWEET
(Preparation for Communion)

Taste and Know that the Lord is sweet.

Christ is the word of Truth; he that hears it shall live.

I tasted a sweet taste, I found nothing sweeter than the word of Truth.

Taste and Know that the Lord is sweet.

I tasted a sweet taste, I found nothing sweeter than the name of God.

Taste and Know that the Lord is sweet.

I tasted a sweet taste, I found nothing sweeter than Christ.

Where is there a kind mother like my mother, Love?

Where is there a kind father like my father, Christ?

What honey is so sweet as this name, Church?

Wisdom invites you, that you may eat with your Spirit.

Lo, the new wine has been broached; lo, the cups have been brought in.

Drink what you shall drink, gladness surrounding you.

Eat that you may eat, glad in your Spirit.

The Bride is the Church, the Bridegroom is Christ.

The Bride is the soul, the Bridegroom is Jesus.

Rejoice, and know you are the sons of the Light.

This is the true joy that will endure with us!

Here is words of wisdom, hear: He that humbleth himself shall be received, he that exalteth himself in self-glory, shall be humbled.

He that dies lives, he that labours has his rest.

After the labour is the rest, after sorrow there is joy again.

Let us rejoice in this joy from the aeons of aeons.

Glory and honour to Jesus, the Majesty of the holy ones, and his holy Elect, and the soul of our Church, the Blessed Mary.

PUT IN ME A HOLY HEART, MY GOD

Put in me a holy heart, my God: let an upright Spirit be new within me.

The holy heart is Christ; if he rises in us, we also shall rise in him.

Christ has risen, the dead shall rise with him.

If we believe in him, we shall pass beyond death and come to life.

The sons of faith, - they shall see faith: lo, . . . come, let us put oil in our lamps.

Let us gather in and become warm milk; this creature . . . hope which has come from on high.

The creature of the Darkness is this body we wear: the soul which is in it is the First Man.

The First Man who was victorious in the Land of Darkness, he also today will be victorious in the body of death.

The Living Spirit that gave help to the First Man, he also today is the Paraclete-Spirit (Comforting Spirit).

One is the Mind that is to come, that reveals, gathering in, choosing his holy Church.

Purify me, my God, purify me within, without: purify the body, the soul and the Spirit.

Let . . . be a holy body for me: the knowledge . . . Spirit and Mind for me.

Purify me, my God, . . . in these three . . .

. . . my mouth . . . and the purity of my virginity.

Jesus has risen: he has risen in three days, the Cross of Light that rises in the three powers.

The Sun and the Moon and the Perfect Man, -- these three powers are the Church of the Great World.

THE GRAND BIBLE

Jesus, the Maiden, and the Mind which is in their midst -- these three powers are the Church of the Little World.

The Kingdom of the heavens, behold, it is within us, behold, it is outside us; if we believe in it we shall live in it for ever.

Glory, victory to every man that has heard these things and believed in them and fulfilled them in joy.

Victory to the Soul of the blessed Mary.

LIGHT YOUR LAMPS

Light your lamps, for lo, the Saviour has come; he of the holy name, he will make revelation.

Let us quickly break the nets of the body . . . lo him that is bound, lest we come to a judgement.

The flesh . . . our Spirit is glad within us.

Come to us, blessed Jesus, and make us glad.

Do not flinch or lose heart, o man: thou hast . . . heedlessly what they that have flinched have done.

Do not glory now, for this is not a place of glorying: the place of glorying is the Luminaries, the place of rejoicing is the Perfect Man.

Many are the ships that have gone down after they were near to mooring to the bank; a number of houses have fallen after the parapet had been reached. So it is also, my brethren, that there is a soul that shall fight at first and the storm arises upon it and the waves seize it.

There is none that can fight if he is committed to both sides.

The insidious and the meddlers never find God; but they that have shut their eyes, to the good, - for them how greatly I care that they should repent.

Unto whom do I go that I may find his heart well-established, that he may support the burden that is upon me?

He knows it, that it is naught but sweet.

Men have been accustomed to the Darkness and have loved the burden of the sins; but do thou be zealous for God, my Spirit, do not flinch within thee.

Do not seek to please men and lose . . . hidden things of shame, - bring them to the Light, o son of God. For what is anything at all in the sight of God save the holy?

The holy also, if they slack, shall suffer.

Be thou like the sun, o faithful man, for he does not say: 'Fair am I', though the Lights are a thing of beauty.

But thou, if thou wouldst be like thy Father -- fair are others glorying in thee and thou holding thy peace; oh that the Saviour were ours: oh that we were worthy of him.

Jesus is a ship: blessed are we if we sail upon it.

The Church is a garland for which they gather in every corner: the garland-weaver who weaves it casts roses . . .

But there are false roses that are esteemed: when thou regardest them they are fair, when thou smellst them there is no smell at all.

Woe to thee, o false rose, for thou hast lost the garland . . . change in time.

Glory and victory to the Paraclete, our joyous Luminary, our sun that has risen for us, the Saviour of spirits, the Helper of souls, and his holy Elect.

Victory to the soul of the blessed, Mary, Apa Panai, Theona.

MISCELLANEOUS MANICHAEAN TEXTS AND FRAGMENTS

A MANICHAEAN PSALM:

A SUMMARY OF THE MANICHAEAN CREATION MYTH

LET US WORSHIP THE SPIRIT OF THE PARACLETE

Let us worship the spirit of the Paraclete (comforter).

Let us bless our Lord Jesus who has sent us the Spirit of Truth.

He came and separated us from the Error of the World.

He brought us a mirror. We looked into it, and saw in it the Universe.

When the Holy Spirit came, he revealed to us the way of truth and taught us that there are two Natures, that of the Light and that of the Darkness, separated from each other since the beginning.

The Kingdom of Light consisted of five Greatnesses, these are the Father and his twelve Aeons, the Aeon of Aeons, the Living Air, and the Land of Light, the Great Spirit blows in them and feeds them with its Light.

The Kingdom of Darkness, however, consisted in five Chambers, these are Smoke, Fire, Wind and Water and Darkness.

Their resolution crawls in them, moves them and spurs them on to make war with one another.

Now as they were warring with each other, they made bold to attack the Land of Light, considering themselves capable of conquering it.

Yet they know not that what they thought will recoil upon their own heads.

But there was a host of angels in the Land of Light which possessed the power to issue forth and overcome the enemy of the Father, whom it pleased that through the Word that he would send, he would subdue the rebels who desired to raise themselves above what was more exalted than they.

Like a shepherd who sees a lion approaching to destroy his sheepfold, he uses guile, takes a lamb and sets it as a snare that he may catch it with it, for with a single lamb he saves his sheepfold.

Afterwards he heals the lamb that has been wounded by the lion.

In this way too the Father acted, who sent his stout Son.

He produced out of himself his Maiden, furnished with the five Powers that she might fight against the five Abysses of the Dark.

When the Watchman stood fast within the frontiers of Light he showed the powers of the Darkness his Maiden, who is his Soul.

They became agitated in the Abyss and wanted to possess her, they opened their mouths and tried to swallow her.

He seized the Maidens power and spread it over the Powers of the Darkness, like nets over fish, he rained her down on them.

Like purified clouds of water, she penetrated into them like a piercing lightning stroke.

She crept inside their insides and bound them all without their ever knowing.

When the First Man had ended his struggle the Father sent forth his Second Son.

He came and helped his brother out of the Abyss.

He built this whole world up out of the mixture that had come into existence out of Light and Darkness.

All the Powers of the Abyss he spread out to the ten Heavens and to eight Earths, he shut them up into this World and made it a dungeon for all the Powers of Darkness.

This World is also, however, a place of purification of the soul which had been swallowed up in the Powers of Darkness.

The Sun and the Moon were set up and fixed in the heights, to purify the Soul.

They take the refined part daily upward to the heights but they destroy the deposit.

They convey it up and down.

This whole World stands firm for a Season, since there is a great Building being erected outside the World.

At the Hour when the Architect shall complete it, the entire World shall be dissolved.

It shall be set afire, that the fire may melt it away.

All Life, the Remnants of Light in every Place he shall gather to himself and form of it a Statue (Eidolon -- image, likeness).

Even the Resolution of Death also, the whole of Darkness, he shall gather in and make an image of itself along with the Archon.

In a moment the Living Spirit shall come.

It will succor to the Light, but the Resolution of Death and the Darkness lock away in the chamber that was built for it that it may lie in chains forever.

There is no other means save this means to bind the Enemy, for he shall not be received into the Light because he is a stranger to it, but he shall also not be left in his Land of darkness, lest he may wage a greater war than the first.

A New Aeon shall be built in the place of this World, which shall be dissolved, so that in it the Powers of Light may reign since they have preformed and fulfilled the whole of the Father's will.

They have overthrown the hateful one, they have defeated him forever.

This is the knowledge of Mani, let us worship him and bless him.

Blessed is every man that may trust in him for he shall live with the Righteous.

Honour and Victory to our Lord Mani, the Spirit of Truth, that cometh from the Father and has revealed to us the Beginning, the Middle, and the End.

Victory to the Soul of the Blessed Mary. Theona, Pshai, Jemnoute.

THE HYMN OF THE FIRST PRIMAL MAN

The good God, the highest of the gods, a diadem and eternal glory, blissful among the lights, was proud and happy when you was born in his realm.

The twelve sons and the aeons of the aeons of the vast air were also happy.

All gods and the inhabitants of his realm - the mountains, trees, springs, the broad strong palaces and halls, were happy through you, Friend.

When the lovely women and girls born of the Sense saw you, they praised you, blessed you, perfect youth.

Songs filled the air. Tambourine, harp, and flute exploded.

All gods stood before you, Prince, son of a king.

Voices ring from the vast air, songs from the Light-Earth, tell the Father of Light;

Born is the battler who make peace.

The all-good highest of the gods gives you three tasks;

Destroy death, strike the enemies, and cover the whole Paradise of Light! You paid homage and went out for battle and covered the whole Paradise of Light.

The tyrant prince was bound forever and the dwelling place of the Dark Ones was destroyed.

The Light Friend, Primal Man, remained until he carried out his fathers will.

COME TO ME MY KINSMAN, THE LIGHT, MY GUIDE.

(A Manichean prayer.)

Come to me, my kinsman, the light, my Guide.

Since I went forth into the darkness I was given a water to drink.

I bear up beneath a burden which is not my own.

I am in the midst of my enemies, the beasts surrounding me; the burden which I bear is of the powers and principalities.

They burdened in their wrath, they rose up against me.

Matter and her sons divided me up amongst them, they burnt me in their fire, they gave me a bitter likeness.

The strangers with whom I mixed, me they know not; they tasted my sweetness, they desired to keep me with them.

I was life to them, but they were death to me; I bore up beneath them, they wore me as a garment upon them.

I am in everything, I bear the skies, I am the foundation, I support the earths; I am the Light that shines forth, that gives joy to the souls.

I am the life of the world; I am the milk that is in all trees; I am the sweet water that is beneath the sons of matter.

I bore these things until I had fulfilled the will of my Father; the First Man is my father whose will I have carried out.

Lo, the darkness I have subdued; lo, the fire of the fountains I have extinguished, as the sphere turns hurrying round, as the sun receives the refined part of life.

O soul, raise your eyes to the height and contemplate your bond, lo, your fathers are calling you.

Now go aboard the Ship of Light and receive your garland of glory and return to your kingdom and rejoice with all the Aeons.

THE END OF THE DEFICIENCY.

(A Manichean eschatological hymn.)

This whole World stands firm for a Season, since there is a great Building being erected outside of the World, At the Hour when its Architect shall complete it, the entire World shall be dissolved.

It shall be set afire, that fire may melt it away.

All Life, the Remnants of Light in every Place he shall gather to himself and form of it a Statue.

Even the Resolution of Death also, the whole of the Darkness, he shall gather in and make an image of itself along with the Archon.

In a moment the Living Spirit shall come.

It will succor the Light, but the Resolution of Death and the Darkness it shall lock away in the chamber that was built for it that it may lie in chains in it forever.

There is no other means save this means to bind the Enemy, for he shall not be received into the Light because he is a stranger to it, but he shall also not be left in his Land of Darkness, lest he may wage a greater war than the first.

A new Aeon shall be built in place of this World, which shall be dissolved, so that in the Powers of Light may reign since they have performed and fulfilled the whole of the Fathers will.

They have overthrown the hateful one, they have defeated him forever.

This is the Knowledge of Mani, let us worship him and bless him.

Blessed is every man that shall trust in him, for he shall live with all the Righteous.

Honour and Victory to our Lord Mani, the Spirit of Truth, that cometh from the Father and has revealed to us the Beginning, the Middle and the End.

Victory to the Soul of the Blessed Mary.

Theona, Pshai, Jemnoute.

JOY CAME OVER ME

. . . Joy came over me and no one will ever be able to tell of it.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

Take unto you the word of Truth O men who love God!

The world is nothing.

There is nothing to be gained in it.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

Men go on thinking that they are at rest and they know not that trouble is being prepared for them.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

They run and break forth till the hour catches up with them.

They have been called and have not understood.

They came empty and go empty.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

I have despised the world in order to give life to my soul.

The things of the flesh I have forsaken, With the things of the Spirit I have made my peace.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

Since I have found my Saviour I have walked in his steps.

Nothing could keep me from receiving this garland.

My brethren, I have received my garland.

How great is the joy prepared for the perfect!
... all of you, my brethren, we inherit it.
My brethren, I have received my garland.

SALVATION OF THE SOUL.

Like the gray wolf I will walk with you; like the black raven I will stay on earth.
Like charcoal to the disease, like the spittle to the whetstone I will be.
You are our powerful and great ruler.
Like gold rounded, like a ball rounded, you are our glorious wise lord.
And your numerous people at your wide breast, at your long seam, you keep and proect, you nurse, take care of.

O SOUL...

This visible Bema (mercy seat), the Word, has been set before thee that it may sow in thee through what is visible the memory of the hidden Law which thou hast forgotten since the day thou didst drink the water of the madness.
O Soul, see: to thee has come the grace of the Day of Rejoicing; do thou reveal without fear all thy sins today and remember thy end and prepare thyself in thy works, for the Bema of Wisdom moves thee thereto.
This is the way of truth, this is the stairway that leads on high, which shall take us on these holy steps!
From the beginning he is this Way, namely the First Man, and Jesus the Radiant, and the Spiritual Advocate; they have summoned thee O Soul!

THE MANICHAEAN BOOK OF GIANTS or The Kawan

Translation: Walter Bruno Henning
Estimated Range of Dating: 250-290 A.D.

(There are two notable Books called "The Book of Giants". One is of Jewish origin written in Aramaic and it probably was once a part of the First Book of Enoch. The other one is the Manichaean Book of Giants which Mani. The Aramaic Book of Giants is an apocryphal Jewish book which expands the Urzeit to Endzeit ('primeval creation' to 'end of time') narrative of the Hebrew Bible and, by its multifaceted elaborations on divine decrees of warning and doom, ties the ancient prophet Enoch (hanök) closer to his generally recognized 'storyline' (as collectively put forth in various Enochic traditions) than does even the story's principal treatise of 1 Enoch. Since before the latter half of the twentieth century, the 'Book of Giants' had long been known as a 'Middle Iranian' work (which some scholars now believe was written originally in 'Eastern Aramaic') that circulated among the Manichaeans as a composition attributed to Mani. As Mani spoke Aramaic, he seem to have made his own version.

During the twentieth century a number of finds shed considerable light on the literary evidence for the Book of Giants. The 1943 publication by W. B. Henning of the Manichaean fragments from the Book of Giants discovered at Turfan in Western China (in what is now Xinjiang Province) have substantiated the many references to its circulation among, and use by, the Manichaeans. Further identification of the Manichaean Book of Giants was revealed in 1971 when Josef T. Milik discovered several additional Aramaic fragments of Enochic works among the Dead Sea Scrolls; he astonished the scholarly world upon announcing that the fragments bore close resemblance to Mani's Book of Giants, then added to the astonishment his belief, too, that the Book of Giants was originally an integral part of 1 Enoch itself. These fragmentary scrolls in Aramaic, which represented an Enochic tradition that was likely introduced to Mani in his sojourn with the Essenes, appeared to have been the primary source utilized by Mani in the compilation of his book, in which he made the legend of the Watchers and the giants "a cornerstone of his theological speculations." And for many scholars, the Qumran fragments confirmed the Book of Giants to originally have been an independent composition from the Second Temple period.

Among the fragments discovered at Qumran, ten manuscripts of the Book of Giants are identified by Stuckenbruck. These fragments (1Q23, 1Q24, 2Q26, 4Q203, 4Q530, 4Q531, 4Q532, 4Q556, 4Q206, and 6Q8) were found in caves 1, 2, 4, and 6 at the site. These discoveries led to further classification of the Enochic works. In the third group of classification, ten Aramaic manuscripts contain parts of the Book of Giants which were only known through the Manichaean sources until the recognition of them at Qumran.

There has been much speculation regarding the original language of the Book of Giants. It was generally believed to have had a Semitic origin. It was R. H. Charles, translator and publisher in 1906 of The Book of Enoch, who asserted that Enoch was "built upon the debris of" an older Noah saga than that in Genesis which only cryptically refers to the Enoch myth.

There are indications that the Book of Giants (parts of which have been found in Hebrew at Qumran) was "originally composed in Hebrew during the 3rd century BC, while the names of the giants Gilgamesh and Hobabish betray a Babylonian provenance". But whatever the reality, one thing remains certain: the Qumran books and their fragments are now the oldest known Enochic manuscripts in existence.

The Book of Giants consists of a grouping of Aramaic fragments which began to be unearthed at Qumran in 1948. Because of the book's fragmentation, it was difficult for the documents' linguistic researchers and specialists to know, in its subsequently varied permutations, the exact order of the content. The 'Giants' work is closely related to the 1 Enoch analogue, which also tells a story of the giants, but one which is far more elaborate. The Qumran Book of Giants also bears resemblance to the Manichaean Book of Giants that came after it. The ancient Qumran community considered the Enochic texts so important that they possessed and retained so many copies in comparison to other textual traditions found there.

The Jewish-Aramaic Book of Giants is an expansive narrative of the biblical story of the birth of 'giants' in Genesis 6.1-4. In this story, the giants came into being when the Watcher 'sons of God' (who, per the story's corroborative Jubilees account [Jub 4:15; 5:6], God originally dispatched to earth for the purpose of instructing and nurturing humanity "in proper ritual and ethical conduct," "to do what is just and upright upon the earth") were seduced by and had sexual intercourse with mortal women, who then birthed a hybrid race of giants.

In the Manichaean Book of Giants, Raphael (Enoch's 'heavenly double') is the conqueror of Ohyah and of all the other Watchers and of their giant-sons. The same work intimates that all four archangels (Michael, Raphael, Gabriel, and Uriel) were engaged in the struggle with the 200 Watchers and their offspring: "and those two hundred demons fought a hard battle with the four angels, until the angels used fire, naphtha, and brimstone..."

(M 101, a to n, and M 911, fifteen fragments of a book, throughout small pieces from the centre of the pages. It has proved impossible, so far, to re-establish the original order of the pages. On purely technical grounds (size of the fragments, appearance of the margins, relative position of tears, stains, etc.), Henning in fact assumed the following fragment sequence: l-j-k-g-i-c-e-b-h-f-a-d-m-M 911-n. Being unable to estimate the cogency of these technical reasons now, because of the absence of any photographic material, he decided to change the order of the first six fragments in the following way: c-j-l-k-g-i, in view of their contents. Unfortunately we do not know in what order Mani had told the story of the giants. The task of finding the original order is made still more difficult by the fact that besides the Kawān the book contained one or two more treatises, namely: (1) Parables referring to the Hearers, and possibly (2) a discourse on the Five Elements. The only fragments that undoubtedly belonged to the Kawān are c-j-l-k-g-i, while the position of the fragments e-b-h is particularly doubtful. It must be borne in mind that whole folios may be missing between apparently successive pages. In order to enable the reader to judge for himself, all the fragments (including the parables) are published here.)

THE COLOGNE MANI-CODEX
 Codex Manichaicus Coloniensis

Translation: Ron Cameron, Arthur J. Dewey, 1979
 Estimated Range of Dating: 5th century AD

(The Cologne Mani-Codex (Codex Manichaicus Coloniensis) is a minute parchment codex, dated on palaeographical evidence to the fifth century AD, discovered in 1969 near Asyut (the ancient Lycopolis), Egypt; it contains a Greek text describing the life of Mani, the founder of the religion Manichaeism. It is the smallest ancient codex known to date. In the same year it came into the possession of the Institut für Altertumskunde at the university in Cologne. The seemingly hopeless task of restoring the codex was successfully completed a few months later by A. Fackelmann in Vienna. What emerged was the earliest extant original Manichaean work written in Greek. The restored work comprises fragments of ninety-six leaves from one codex, measuring 4.5 x 3.8 cm, and a few other, even smaller fragments. The original number of leaves in the manuscript can no longer be determined, as the first and last pages are missing. Each page contains a single column of text, usually twenty-three lines long, written in a minute but clearly legible script. The Greek text bears traces that shows it has been translated from an Eastern Aramaic or Old Syriac Aramaic original. The logoi of Mani himself are repeatedly cited. That it is a compilation from earlier texts is suggested by the names, apparently of teachers that head each section of the text.

Publication: Albert Henrichs and Ludwig Koenen [detailed references see Encyclopaedia Iranica] published an initial report on the work (1970), followed by the first edition of the text, in the years 1975-82. Scrutiny of this text revealed that in a number of instances fragments could be assembled to form longer passages (Koenen and Römer, 1985). This discovery led to their publication of a second edition of the complete codex in 1988, though the volume of commentary on pp. 121-192 of the codex and a glossary of terms for the entire edition have yet to appear. A concordance to the first edition was published in 1985 (Cirillo, Concolino Mancino, and Roselli).

Because of the great importance of the codex, it immediately became the subject of research by scholars of Manichaeism. Aside from numerous interpretive essays by the editors, two symposia in Rende (Calabria) and Cosenza, in 1984 and 1988 respectively, have been devoted entirely to the codex. The papers presented at the first were published in 1986 by Luigi Cirillo and Amneris Roselli, those presented at the second by Cirillo.

Content: The fragmentary text preserved in the Cologne codex deals with Mani's youth and the beginning of his missionary activity, though, because of extensive damage to the leaves, particularly in the last sections, even the most elementary logical connections are often lacking. The account of Mani's introduction to the Elkesaites baptist sect provides the first verifiable date in his life. The child Mani is accompanied by guardian angels and "holy powers" during this whole period, and he experiences wonderful visions, which he still does not understand. The end of the period is marked by the "maturation" (to akaion) of Mani's body, which was originally dated by the editors to his twenty-fifth year but later to the end of his twelfth year. The next certain date is that of the revelation of the teaching through Mani's spiritual companion and twin, the syzygos, during his twenty-fifth year. From that point on the description of Mani's life becomes more detailed, including his initial teaching activities and conflict with the baptists, his failure in the debate, and his final separation from them. This section, which forms the main portion of the preserved text, also contains apologetic and exegetic homilies (e.g., on the truth of the paraclete's witness to the revelation and on the proper understanding of Mani's parousia). The final preserved section covers the beginning of the Manichaean world mission in episodic and legendary terms. The concrete events mentioned include the conversion of Pattikios, Mani's father; the southern Mesopotamian port of Pharat on the Persian Gulf is mentioned, as is the "Median" Ganzak (Greek: Goumazak, Ganazak). The editors date Mani's appearance in the palace of the Sassanid emperor Shapur I to his twenty-sixth year.

The work bears the somewhat puzzling title Peri tes gennes tou somatos autou (On the origin of his body), which Koenen first interpreted in the Pauline sense, as a reference to the creation of Mani's church, his mystic body. The codex would thus be a hagiographical treatment of Mani as part of a comprehensive history of the church. Koenen has since retracted this interpretation, as in many instances the Greek word soma refers specifically to Mani's body and is thus used as a term for the earthly person of the founder of the religion. It can therefore be assumed that the title refers to the Manichaean belief in a spiritual Mani who only temporarily assumed earthly form.

Form and Origin: The Cologne Mani codex is divided into sections, each beginning with a name (e.g., Abiesos, Ana, Innaios, Koustaiois, Timotheos) or simply "the teachers." The editors identified these figures as the transmitters of the texts that follow; the work is thus obviously a compilation from older ones. As some of the transmitters' names (Innaios, Koustaiois) are known from Mani's circle and their successors, the sources must have been of the 3rd century, incorporated into the text of the codex at the beginning of the 4th century. That it was probably originally written in eastern Aramaic (Syriac) is strongly suggested by a number of linguistic features. The transmitters frequently cited the "words" or writings of Mani himself, for instance, his letter to Edessa. At the beginning of the "Living Teachings of Mani", the citation is demonstrably exact. This manuscript of the Greek translation has been dated to the 5th century on the basis of paleographic evidence. The language exhibits many postclassical features and imitates the diction of the Septuagint and the New Testament.

The sources, motifs, and components of the text have been analysed by Henrichs, using the methods of literary criticism, but as yet the literary function of the codex itself has not been studied. The contents and nature of the presentation suggest that it belonged to a popular genre aimed at a broad circle of readers and listeners. Literary works of this kind are otherwise unknown in the tradition of eastern Manichaeism. Although there are some other texts with comparable hagiographical themes, it is doubtful that there is any other instance in which the transmissions of followers were integrated into continuous, conventionalised hagiographical description (Sundermann, 1986). In the west, however, the so-called "Coptic church history," found at Madinat Madi in Egypt but now lost, was comparable. The reports were also given under the "authors' names" (Schmidt and Polotsky, 1933). As the latter work deals with Mani's death and the subsequent fate of the church, it can be concluded that both compilations are parts of a more comprehensive Manichaean church history in Aramaic, Greek, and Coptic, the first part of which is preserved in the Cologne Mani codex.

Importance for Research on Manichaeism: The narrative contained in the Cologne Mani codex follows hagiographic convention, in many places based on the pattern of the life of Christ and often incorporating popular themes, but it also includes historical material, which is of the greatest value for research on Manichaeism. In the text it is asserted that Mani grew up in a Judeo-Christian community of which Alchasaï was regarded as the founder. What had previously been known about this legendary figure was not always consistent with the known practices among the baptists Mani knew (e.g., rejection of marriage). The justification for describing these baptists as Elkesaites has thus been called into doubt a priori. Most scholars regard the testimony of the Cologne Mani codex as credible, with the proviso that the teaching of the founder of a sect can be subject to modification in actual practice among his followers.

It is certain that Alchasaï was known in the Manichaean tradition and that he was probably contrasted, ahistorically, with his own followers as an early advocate of Mani's ideas. This phenomenon can be traced back to widespread older traditions and probably to Mani's own teachings, as is confirmed by the reference to Alchasaï ('Is') in a Parthian Manichaean fragment and by the identification in a 10th-century Arabic text of al-H-s-y-h as the founder of the Mogtasele, a southern Mesopotamian baptist sect related to the Manichaeans.

There is, however, no reason to doubt the assertion in the Cologne Mani Codex that Mani grew up in a Christian-oriented, rather than a Mandaean, community, which is of fundamental importance to an understanding of the intellectual and religious background of his teachings. His earliest teachers were not members of a decidedly anti-Christian sect under strong Persian influence but Jewish Christians who believed in the efficacy of rites and baptism. The gnostic ideas in the new teachings grew out of Mani's differences with those teachers. Mani's teachings were indeed originally what medieval orthodox Christians claimed, a Christian heresy.

The Cologne Mani codex is not a dogmatic tract. Its themes were drawn from fully developed Manichaean dogma. The hope of finding in this text Mani's teachings in their original form, free of later ontological dualism, thus remains unfulfilled; in fact, the "[two] natures" are mentioned frequently in the codex.

Importance for Persian studies: From the point of view of Persian studies, the most important material in the codex is the synchrony provided by the account of Mani's twenty-fifth year: "[When I] was twenty-four years old, the year in which Ardašir, king of Persia, subjugated the city of Hatra and in which his son King Shapur adopted the great crown (diadema megiston), on the 8th (?) day of the month of Pharmuti, according to the lunar calendar [i.e., on 17-18 April 240 AD, counting from the evening of the first day to that of the second] . . .". Marie Louise Chaumont observed that the term diadema megiston corresponds to the expression LB'dydimy of the Paikuli inscription. There is no reason to doubt that these were Mani's own words, and it is clear that he was well informed about current events. Henrichs and Koenen interpreted this reference to the conquest of Hatra by Ardashir I, rather than by his son Shapur, as confirmation of the "late" chronology for the reign of Ardashir put forth by Theodor Nöldeke (Geschichte der Perser) and Hasan Taqizada, but they nevertheless acknowledged that both the early (239 AD) and the late (241 AD) dates suggested for the official beginning of Shapur I's reign are possible while considering the earlier date more probable.

The Cologne Mani codex thus appeared to the editors to confirm the early date (12 April / 1 Nisan 240 AD) for the coronation of Shapur I as ruler over Persia. It should be noted that the date itself is not given in the codex but was derived from a combination of the report there with Ebn al-Nadim's report of the date of Mani's first official public appearance. The respective accounts of the public appearance of Mani on 1 Nisan and his call to proclaim his teachings on 8 Nisan are in fact incompatible; it is possible that reports based on different historical attempts at synchronism were uncritically combined by Ebn al-Nadim.

An important argument for dating the coronation of Shapur I to the year 239-240 AD was put forth by Ruth Altheim-Stiehl on the basis of an examination of the inscription on the Bishopur Stele. Only the dates 223-224 AD for the accession of Ardashir and 239-40 for Shapur are compatible with the period of the stele and the dates in the inscription. On the other hand, it is clear from the Cologne Mani codex that such an early dating of the reign of Ardashir is incorrect, for he must still have been alive in the year April 240 AD-April 241 AD. A number of suggestions for resolving this dilemma have been put forth (for a summary, see Altheim-Stiehl, 1982), but the possibility of different dates for the "fire" (i.e., coronation) of the first two Sassanid kings (223-224 and 239-240 AD respectively) and their first years of official rule (226-227 and 241-242 AD) should be considered.

If Mani really appeared during his twenty-sixth year (241-242 AD, according to the reconstruction of the codex) in the palace of King Shapur I, who was mourning his father's death, that would lend credence to the frequently advanced hypothesis that Ardashir died during that year.)

CONCERNING THE ORIGIN OF HIS BODY

2.2 " . . . little by little [. . .] have shown you [unholy . . .] from many [. . .]. But you will be able to behold that mystery magnificently and most lucidly." And then the angel was hidden [from] . . .

3.2 . . . I (Mani) was protected [through] the night of [the] angels and the powers of holiness who were entrusted with my safekeeping, and they nourished me with visions and signs which they made known to me, slight and quite brief, as far as I was able to bear.

For sometimes like a flash of lightning he [came] . . .

4.3 . . . but he was reassuring me also about this power which is steadfast in affliction.

Now very many are the visions and exceedingly great are the sights which he showed to me during all that time of my youth. But I [. . . remained] in silence. Except . . .

5.3 . . . with wisdom and skill (I was) going about in their midst, keeping the Rest, neither doing wrong, nor inflicting pain, nor following the law of the Baptists, nor speaking in the way they did.

6.2 "... to [him]. But neither do you take [vegetables] from [the] garden, nor do you carry wood for his use.

But the Baptist constrained me, saying: "Get up and come with me to the place where there is wood; take it and carry it." We went away to a certain [date-palm tree], and he climbed up...

7.2 "... If you keep the [pain] away from us [trees], you will [not perish] with the murderer." Then that Baptist, gripped by fear of me, came down from it in confusion, and fell at my feet and said: "I did not know that this secret mystery is with you. Whence was the [agony of the date-palm tree] revealed to you?" ...

8.1 (Mani is now speaking) "[When the date-palm tree said] this to you, why did you become [greatly] frightened and change your complexion? How much more will [that one], with whom all the [plants] speak, be disturbed?" Thereupon he was dumbfounded, beside himself in amazement over me. He said to me: "Guard this mystery, tell it to no one, lest someone become envious and destroy you." ...

9.1 ... [for the sake of the] Rest, one of the leaders of the Law spoke to me, having observed that I did not take vegetable from the garden, but instead asked them (for the vegetables) as a pious gift. He said to me: "Why did you not take vegetables from the garden, but instead ask me (for them) as a pious gift? After that Baptist had spoken to [me] ...

10.1 ... [it] wasted away, [wailing] like human beings, and, as it were, like children. Alas! Alas! The blood was streaming down from the place cut by the pruning hook which he held in his hands. And they were crying out in a human voice on account of their blows. The Baptist was greatly moved by what he saw, and he came and fell down before me. When, then ...

11.1 ... until the fourth year. Then I (Mani) gained entrance to the teaching of the Baptists in which I was reared, while my body was young, being guarded by the night of the Light-angels and the exceedingly strong powers, who had a command from Jesus, the Splendour, for (my) safekeeping. They, then, immediately ...

12.1 ... [from] the waters [a face] of a man appeared to me, showing with his head the Rest, so that I might not sin and bring trouble to him. In this way, from my fourth year until I attained my bodily maturity, by the hands of the most pure angels and the powers of holiness I was protected [without anyone's notice] ...

13.2 ... at another time a voice, like that of the Twin (Didymos Thomas?) spoke to me out of the air, saying: "Strengthen your power, make your mind firm, and receive all that is about to be revealed to you." And again, he said the same: "Strengthen your power, make your mind strong, and submit to all that is about to come upon you." ...

14.1 "... we have been sent out by the great [fathers]."

Baraies the Teacher

My lord (Mani) said thus: "Just as nowadays a young horse, used by a king, becomes the king's mount through the capability of the horse trainers, so that he might sit upon it in honour and glory and carry out his particular [task], in this same way [the mind possesses the] body, [in order to do the] good. ...

15.1 ... of [. . .] place [. . .] for the king's rest; and a certain garment was fitted for the one who put it on; the ship was equipped for the best skipper so that he might catch valued treasures from the sea; the holy place was set up for glory of the mind; and the most holy shrine, for revelation of its wisdom; the [. . .] interest [. . .] has been paid fully ...

16.1 ... in (the) [body], (that) he might ransom those enslaved from the powers (of the other world) and set free their members from the subjection of the rebels and from the authority of those who keep guard, and through it (i.e., the body) he might disclose the truth of its own knowledge, and in it open wide the door to those confined within, [and through it] he might hold out [well-being] to those ...

17.1 ... and from all laws, and (that) he might free the souls from ignorance by becoming paraclete and leader of the apostleship in his generation. Then, at the time when my body reached its full growth, immediately there flew down and appeared before me that most beautiful and greatest mirror-image of [myself] ...

18.1 ... [When] I was twenty[-four] years old, [in] the year in which Dariardaxar, the king of Persia, subdued the city Atra, also in which his son Sapore, the king, crowned himself with the grand diadem, in the month of Pharmouthi, on the eighth day of the lunar month, the most blessed Lord was greatly moved with compassion for me, called me into his grace, and immediately sent to me [from there my] Twin [appearing in] great [glory] ...

19.2 ... [he] (is) mindful of and informer of all the best counsels from our Father and from the good first right hand far away."

And again, he (Mani) spoke thus: "When my Father was pleased and had mercy and compassion on me, to ransom (me) from the error of the Sectarrians, he took consideration of me through his very many [revelations], (and) he sent [to me] my [Twin] ...

20.1 ... [best hope and] redemption for (those who) suffer patiently, the truest instructions and counsels, and the laying on of hands from our Father. When, then, he (the Twin) came, he delivered separated, and pulled me away from the midst of that Law in which I reared. In this way he called, chose, drew, and severed me from their midst [. . .], drawing [me to the] divine side. ...

21.2 (the Twin is instructing Mani concerning) ... who I am, what my body is, in what way I have come, how my arrival into this world took place, who I am of the ones most renowned for their eminence, how I was begotten into this fleshly body by what woman I was delivered and born according to the flesh, and by whose [passion] I was engendered ...

22.1 ... and how [. . .] came into being; and who my Father on high is; or in what way, severed from him, I was sent out according to his purpose; and what sort of commission and counsel he has given to me before I clothed myself in his instrument, and before I was led astray in this detestable flesh, and before I clothed myself with its drunkenness and habits; and who [that one is, who] is himself [my ever-vigilant Twin] ...

23.1 (the Twin showed Mani) ... the secrets and [visions] and the perfections of my Father; and concerning me, who I am, and who my inseparable Twin is; moreover, concerning my soul, which exists as the soul of all worlds, both what it itself is and how it came to be. Beside these, he revealed to me the boundless heights and the unfathomable depths; he showed [me] all ...

24.3 ... reverently [. . .]
and I acquired him as my possession.
I believed that he belongs to me and is (mine) and is a good and excellent counselor.
I recognised him and understood that I am that one from whom I was separated.
I testified that I myself am that one who is unshakable. ..."

25.1 ... And [again] he (Mani) said thus: "With the greatest possible ingenuity and skill I went about in that Law, preserving this hope in my heart; no one perceived who it was that was with me, and I myself revealed nothing to anyone during that great period of time. But neither [did I], like them, [keep] the fleshly custom ...

26.1 I [revealed nothing] of what happened, or of what will happen, nor what it that I knew, or what it is that I had received."

ARTEFACTS AND DOCUMENTS ON GENERAL HISTORY

(This section presents documents that gives information on religious texts and the people who have written them. Here we can find out about the origin or events of people and their beliefs written by eye-witnesses or other contemporary people. Quite some of these texts could be called propaganda works, such as the works of Church officials [the so-called Church fathers, for instance, that led to persecution of people with an other belief, such as the Arians, Jews, or Judaisers [also called Jewish Christians or Judeo-Christian]. Some of these texts show us how vicious the fight between and among those religious groups was.

Biographical records within these texts reveal useful information on people, their language, their language group, their names. Additional facts on geography, education, professions, any kind of relations and relationships reveal how and with whom ancient people interacted. This will make you understand that no individual or group of people live in an isolated vacuum.

Often, it is important what ancient contemporaries have to say, but it is equally significant to recognise what they fail to say. This failure leads to questions, such as "why did Philo of Alexandria, one of the most prolific writers of Antiquity, not write anything about Jesus, his followers or his movement?" We receive first notes about this subject from Titus Flavius Josephus and his students Tacitus and Suetonius. Why is there a general silence about Mohammed up to around 695 AD? He died in 632 and the only document that mentions him (but not by name) is the Doctrina Jacobi, a propaganda pamphlet against Jews written by a Roman Pauline Christian from Carthage. There can be no doubt that any of the documents in this section is vital when it comes to understanding of the texts presented in the Grand Bible.)

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF WENI THE ELDER

Discovered by Auguste Mariette's 1880

James Henry Breasted Ancient Records of Egypt, Part I, §§ 293ff

Translation: James Henry Breasted

Estimated Range of Dating: 2330-2300 B.C.

(The Autobiography of Weni is a tomb inscription from ancient Egypt, which is significant to Egyptology studies. Weni the Elder, or Uni, was a court official of the Pharaohs Teti (2345–2333 BC) Userkare (2333–2331 BC) and Pepi I (2331–2287 BC) of the 6th Dynasty of Ancient Egypt. His tomb inscription is important because it is the oldest record that mentions Semite people whom he called "Sand-dwellers". He most certainly meant Canaanites (Phoenicians) and Arabs.

The Tomb of Weni was discovered by Auguste Mariette in 1880 but went lost because Mariette did not give an exact position of the tomb. It was rediscovered in 1999 by an American archaeologist team led by Dr. Janet Richards. More recent works in the necropolis of Pepi I in Saqqara uncovered a second tomb for Weni with a near identical copy of his biography.

Weni began his career under Pharaoh Teti, and rose through the ranks of the administration under Pharaoh Pepi I Meryre, for whom he was in turn a judge, a general and a vizier. Later, Weni became the governor of Upper Egypt during the reign of Merenre Nemtyemsaf I. As judge he investigated the queen who was apparently suspected of involvement in a conspiracy. While he was general, he reorganised the military into a format that was still in use in the New Kingdom.

Weni rose through the ranks of the military to become commander in chief of the army. He was considered by both his contemporaries and many Egyptologists to have been a brilliant tactician. His victories earned him the privilege of being shown leading the troops into battle, a right usually reserved for pharaohs. Weni is the first person, other than a pharaoh, known to have been portrayed in this manner. Many of his battles were in the Levant and the Sinai. He is said to have pursued a group of Shasu all the way to Mount Carmel. He battled a semi-nomadic people known in Ancient Egyptian texts as "the sand-dwellers" at least five times.

While he was commander in chief of the army, he made several key reforms to the military. He began training his troops to have a pre-emptive rather than a defensive posture. Weni included Nubian mercenaries in the army for the first time and he reorganised the army to control infighting amongst the troops and to minimise uncontrolled pillaging. He recorded his reorganisation of the army in great detail and his reforms lasted until the time of the New Kingdom.

After the death of Pharaoh Pepi, Weni was appointed the governor of Upper Egypt. He made many infrastructure improvements, some of which were beneficial to the military. His most noted project was a canal that ran parallel to the Nile at the First Cataract.)

Text of the Inscription of Weni:

1. Count, governor of the South, chamber-attendant, attached to Nekhen (Hierakonpolis, ancient southern capital), lord of Nekheb [today: El Kab, city in the 3rd nome of Upper Egypt, cult centre of Nekhbet], sole companion, revered before Osiris, First of the Westerners, Weni. He says:

2. I was a child who fastened on the girdle under the majesty of Pharaoh Teti; my office was that of supervisor of [...] and I filled the office of inferior custodian of the domain of Pharaoh.

3. I was the eldest of the [...] chamber under the majesty of Pharaoh Pepi (Pepi I Meryre, "Merit-Re", meaning: "beloved of Re"; see the name Mary, Maria, Miriam, Merie, etc.). His majesty appointed me to the rank of companion and inferior prophet of his pyramid-city. While my office was his majesty made me judge attached to Nekhen. He loved me more than any servant of his. I "heard," being alone with only the chief judge and vizier, in every private matter in the name of the king, of the royal harem, and of the six courts of justice (lit. the six great houses), because the king loved me more than any official of his, more than any noble of his, more than any servant of his.

4. Then I besought ... the majesty of the king that there be brought for me a limestone sarcophagus from Troja (Tura, quarry near Memphis). The king had the treasurer of the god ferry over, together with a troop of sailors under his hand (command), in order to bring for me this sarcophagus from Troja; and he arrived with it, in a large ship belonging to the court, together with its lid, the false door; the setting, two [...], and one offering-tablet. Never was the like done for any servant, for I was excellent to the heart of his majesty, for I was pleasant to the heart of his majesty, for his majesty loved me (lit. his heart was filled with me).

5. While I was judge, attached to Nekhen, his majesty appointed me sole companion and superior custodian of the domain of the Pharaoh, and [...] of the four superior custodians of the domain of the Pharaoh, who were there. I did so that his majesty praised me, when preparing court, when preparing the king's journey or when making stations. I did throughout so that his majesty praised me for it above everything.

6. When legal procedure was instituted in private in the harem against the queen (The charge against the queen is unknown, as is the outcome of the procedure.), Imtes his majesty caused me to enter, in order to hear the case alone. No chief judge and vizier at all, no prince at all was there, but only I alone, because I was excellent, because I was pleasant to the heart of his majesty; because his majesty loved me. I alone was the one who put it in writing, together with a single judge attached to Nekhen; while my office was only that of superior custodian of the domain of Pharaoh. Never before had one like me heard the secret of the royal harem, except that the king caused me to hear it, because I was more excellent to the heart of his majesty than any official of his, than any noble of his, than any servant of his.

7. His majesty made war on the Asiatic Sand-dwellers (possibly Canaanites) and his majesty made an army of many ten thousands; in the entire South, southward to Elephantine (city in the 1st, southernmost nome of Upper Egypt), and northward to Aphroditopolis (Tep-ihet, city in the 22nd, northernmost nome of Upper Egypt); in the Northland on both sides entire in the stronghold, and in the midst of the strongholds, among the Irthet negroes, the Mazoi negroes (Medjay, many of them migrated into Egypt and were employed as police units.), the Yam negroes, among the Wawat negroes, among the Kau negroes, and in the land of Temeh (Tjemehe).

8. His majesty sent me at the head of his army while the counts, while the wearers of the royal seal, while the sole companions of the palace, while the nomarchs and commanders of strongholds belonging to the South and Northland; the companions, the caravan-conductors, the superior prophets belonging to the South and the Northland, the overseers of the crown-possessions, were each at the head of a troop of the South or the Northland, of the strongholds and cities which they commanded, and of the negroes of these countries. I was the one who made for them the plan while my office was only that of superior custodian of the domains of the Pharaoh of [... (lacuna) ...]. Not one thereof [...] with his neighbour; not one thereof plundered dough or sandals from the wayfarer; not one thereof took bread from any city; not one thereof took any goat from any people. I despatched them from the Northern Isle, the Gate of Ihotep, the bend of Horus, Nibmat. While I was of this rank [... (lacuna) ...] everything, I inspected the number of these troops, although never had any servant inspected.

9. This army returned in safety, after it had hacked up the land of the Sand-dwellers; this army returned in safety, after it had destroyed the land of the Sand-dwellers; this army returned in safety, after it had overturned its strongholds; this army returned in safety, after it had cut down its figs and vines; this army returned in safety, after it had thrown fire in all its troops; this army returned in safety, after it had slain troops therein, in many ten thousands; this army returned in safety, after it had carried away therefrom a great multitude as living captives. His majesty praised me on account of it above everything.

10. His majesty sent me to despatch this army five times, in order to traverse the land of the Sand-dwellers at each of their rebellions, with these troops. I did so that his majesty praised me on account of it.

11. When it was said there were revolters, because of a matter among these barbarians in the land of Gazelle-nose (possibly northern Canaan = Phoenicia), I crossed over in troop-ships with these troops, and I voyaged to the back of the height of the ridge on the north of the Sand-dwellers (Canaanites). When this army had been brought in the highway, I came and smote them all and every revolter among them was slain.

12. When I was master of the footstool of the palace and sandal-bearer, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Mernere my lord, who lives forever, made me count, and governor of the South, southward to Elephantine, and northward to Aphroditopolis; for I was excellent to the heart of his majesty, for I was pleasant to the heart of his majesty, for his majesty loved me.

13. When I was master of the footstool and sandal-bearer, his majesty praised me for the watchfulness and vigilance, which I showed in the place of audience, above his every official, above [his every] noble, above his every servant. Never before was this office conferred upon any servant. I acted as governor of the South (Upper Egypt) to his satisfaction. Not one therein [. . .] with his neighbour. I accomplished all tasks; I numbered everything that is counted to the credit of the court in this South twice; all the corvée that is counted to the credit of the court in this South twice. I performed the [. . . (lacuna) . . .] in this South; never before was the like done in this South. I did throughout so that his majesty praised me for it.

14. His majesty sent me to Ibheth to bring the sarcophagus (named): "Chest-of-the-Living," together with its lid and the costly, splendid pyramidion [top of a pyramid] for the pyramid called: "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful," of the queen.

15. His majesty sent me to Elephantine to bring a false door of granite, together with its offering-tablet, doors and settings of granite; to bring doorways and offering-tablets of granite, belonging to the upper chamber of the pyramid called: "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful," of the queen. Then I sailed down-stream to the pyramid called: "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful," with 6 cargo-boats, three tow-boats and three [. . .]-boats to only one warship. Never had Ibheth and Elephantine been visited in the time of any kings with only one warship. Whatsoever his majesty commanded me I carried out completely according to all that his majesty commanded me.

16. His majesty sent me to Hatnub to bring a huge offering-table of hard stone of Hatnub. I brought down this offering-table for him in only 17 days, it having been quarried in Hatnub, and I had it proceed down-stream in this cargo-boat. I hewed for him a cargo-boat of acacia wood (used for ship building.) 60 cubits (1 cubit = c. 50 cm) in its length and 30 cubits in its breadth, built in only 17 days, in the third month of the third season (January during the reign of Merenre, c.2279-2270). Although there was no water in the [. . .], I landed in safety at the pyramid called: "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful," and the whole was carried out by my hand, according to the mandate which the majesty my lord had commanded me.

17. His majesty sent me to dig five canals in the South and to make 3 cargo-boats and 4 tow-boats of acacia wood of Wawat. Then the negro chiefs of Irthet, Wawat, Yam and Mazoi drew timber therefore, and I did the whole in only one year. They were launched and laden with very large granite blocks for the pyramid (called): "Mernere-Shines-and-is-Beautiful." I then [...] for the palace in all these 5 canals, because I honoured, because I [...], because I praised the fame of the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Mernere, who lives forever, more than all gods, and because I carried out everything according to the mandate which his Ka commanded me.

18. I was one beloved of his father, and praised of his mother; first-born [. . .] pleasant to his brothers, the count, the real governor of the South, revered by Osiris, Weni.

THE AMARNA LETTERS

The Tell Amarna Tablets

Bureau of Correspondence of Pharaoh

Translation: Budge, Conder, Knudtzon,

Flinders Petrie, Bezold, Mercer, and others

Estimated Range of Dating: 1390-1330 B.C.

(The Tell Amarna Tablets were discovered in 1887 by a peasant woman of Egypt, amid the ruins of the palace of Amenophis IV., midway between Thebes and Memphis, at the site of the ancient Antinoe, about 180 miles by river south of Cairo. Those tablets under present consideration date about 1480 B.C., and are written to the King of Egypt and to certain of his officials by Amorites, Phoenicians, Philistines and others.

The names of Japhia, King of Gezer; of Jabin, King of Hazor; and, probably, of Adonizedek, King of Jerusalem—contemporaries of Joshua—occur among those of the writers. The events recorded include the conquest of Damascus by the Hittites, that of Phoenicia by the Amorites, and that of Judaea by the Hebrews (Apiru, Habiru, Abhira). The present translations, from the cuneiform characters, are based on the copies published by Dr. Hugo Winckler at Berlin, and Dr. C. Bezold of the British Museum, which include the whole of the letters now in Cairo, Berlin and London.

In dealing with inscriptions the interpretation of which is acknowledged by scholars to present many difficulties, I do not presume to suppose that my translations are beyond criticism, or always final; but I believe that such criticism, which will no doubt lead to improvements, must be confined to details, and will not affect the general result, or the historical value of these most important texts. I may at least claim that the language in which they are written is the mother-tongue of that Syrian dialect which became known to me by speaking it daily for seven years. In dialectic pronunciation, in idiom, and in the peculiar meaning of many expressions the common speech of the Palestine peasantry is perhaps one of the best possible guides to an understanding of the writings of their Canaanite ancestors.

The study of monumental inscriptions is often called a 'by-path' of Biblical knowledge. But in an age of destructive criticism it seems to me to present the most important weapon that can be placed in the hands of those who desire, without seeking to support any particular theory, to arrive at truth concerning the ancient history of Palestine and of the Hebrew people. In the present case we have become possessed of a mass of political correspondence dating about the time when, according to the Bible, the Hebrew invasion under Joshua took place, and which in bulk represents a literature equal to about half the length of the entire Pentateuch. That the Hebrews should be mentioned in such letters as conquering the south of Palestine, and driving out the Amorite kings, will appear natural to those who believe the narrative of the Book of Joshua to represent the history of the Hebrew conquest; and that the date so determined does not agree with the now fashionable theory, which would place the conquest much later, in the time of Seti II., need not in any way disturb our minds. The date which is conjectured by some Egyptologists does not rest on any monumental evidence at all, for the simple reason that the Hebrews are not mentioned in any Egyptian record as yet discovered, and appear for the first time in monumental history in the Tell Amarna letters. The speculation which would make their conquest so much later, while it ignores the Biblical data, is founded only on the libels of Manetho, who wrote at least twelve hundred years later, and who makes Amenophis succeed Rameses. I have never been able to understand on what grounds the date given in the Bible is so set aside, or to agree with the dictum of Dr. Brugsch, for which no evidence is brought forward from monuments, that 'beyond all doubt' Minephthah was the Pharaoh of the Exodus. We should rather, I think, agree with Josephus, the critic who exposed the ignorance of Manetho, in dismissing such opinions as 'incredible fables.' (Claude Reignier Conder, 1892.)

With this concise Preface, Conder introduced The Tell Amarna Tablets [Published for the Committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund in 1894], and what these letters are all about. The extraordinary find of the Amarna Letters allow us to get as close as anyone could get to past events concerning the early Phoenicians, Canaanites, Hebrews, and Egyptians. Conder was one of the first translators of the letters that allow laymen a glimpse into Bible history.

The Amarna Letters were first discovered around 1887 by local Egyptians who secretly dug most of them from the ruined city of Amarna, and sold them in the antiquities market. [Amarna is the modern name of the ancient city of Akhetaten or Akhetaton which means "Horizon of the Aten".] The tablets had originally been stored in an ancient building that archaeologists have since called the "Bureau of Correspondence of Pharaoh". Once the location, where they were found was determined, the ruins were explored for more.

The first archaeologist who successfully recovered more tablets was Flinders Petrie, who in 1891 and 1892 uncovered 21 fragments. Émile Chassinat, then director of the French Institute for Oriental Archaeology in Cairo, acquired two more tablets in 1903. Since Knudtzon's edition, some 24 more tablets, or fragments, have been found, either in Egypt, or identified in the collections of various museums.

The tablets are usually cited with the abbreviation EA, for "El Amarna" but also with VAT or VA Th for "Vorderasiatisches Museum in Berlin", and with BM for "British Museum in London". The initial group of letters recovered by local Egyptians have been scattered among museums in Germany, England, Egypt, France, Russia, and the United States. Either 202 or 203 tablets are at the Vorderasiatisches Museum in Berlin; 99 are at the British Museum in London; 49 or 50 are at the Egyptian Museum in Cairo; 7 at the Louvre in Paris; 3 at the Pushkin Museum in Moscow; and 1 in the collection of the Oriental Institute in Chicago.

The known tablets total 382, of which 358 have been published in German by the Norwegian Assyriologist Jørgen A. [Jørgen Alexander] Knudtzon's. The two volumes (1907 and 1915) in 1600 pages remain the standard edition to this day. The texts of the remaining 24 complete or fragmentary tablets excavated since Knudtzon have also been made available.

The written correspondence spans a period of about thirty years. The archive contains a wealth of information about cultures, kingdoms, events and individuals in a period from which few written sources survive. It includes correspondence from Akhenaten's reign (Akhenaten who was also titled Amenhotep IV), as well as his predecessor Amenhotep III's reign [some authors prefer to use the Greek version of this Egyptian name which is Amenophis.]. This archive primarily consists of diplomatic correspondence between the Egyptian administration and its representatives in Canaan and Amurru, or neighbouring kingdom leaders, during the New Kingdom, between c. 1360–1332 BC.

Overview

The Amarna letters are the most unusual find in Egypt, because they are mostly written in a script known as Akkadian cuneiform, a writing system thought to be in use in ancient Mesopotamia, has actually been the Lingua Franca in the entire Middle East from Egypt to Persia and the language of diplomacy for this period. The language style in the letters can be characterised as a mixed language, Akkadian with lots of Phoenician-Canaanite words and phrases. This influence clearly shows the strength of the Canaanite civilisation in that period of time.

The letters, though written in Akkadian, are heavily coloured by the mother tongue of their writers, who spoke an early form of Canaanite [also called Proto-Sinaitic], the language family which would later evolve into its daughter languages Hyksos-Canaanite, Phoenician / Canaanite and Aramaic / Hebrew. These "Canaanisms" provide valuable insights into the proto-stage of those languages several centuries prior to their first actual manifestation.

Many names in the letters refer to the very same Semitic people given to them by their neighbours and other people who dealt with them. These tablets shed much light on Egyptian relations with Babylonia, Assyria, Syria, Canaan, and Alashiya (Cyprus) as well as relations with the Mitanni, and Hittites (in today's Turkey). The letters have been important in establishing both the history and the chronology of the period. Letters from the Babylonian king, Kadashman-Enlil I, anchor the timeframe of Akhenaten's reign to the mid-14th century BC. They also contain the first mention of a Near Eastern group known as the Habiru (Hebrew). Other rulers involved in the letters include Tushratta of Mitanni, Lib'ayu of Shechem, Abdi-Heba of Jerusalem, and the quarrelsome king, Rib-Hadda, of Byblos in Phoenicia, who, in over 58 letters, continuously pleads for Egyptian military help. Specifically, the letters include requests for military help against Hittite invaders from the north, and to fight against the Habiru (Hebrew) from the south.

Amarna Letters are politically arranged [here using the EA numbers] in a rough counterclockwise fashion:

- 001–014 Babylonia
- 015–016 Assyria
- 017–030 Mitanni
- 031–032 Arzawa
- 033–040 Alashiya
- 041–044 Hatti
- 045–380+ Syria/Lebanon/Canaan

Amarna Letters from Syria / Lebanon [Phoenicia] / Canaan are distributed roughly:

- 045–067 Syria
- 068–227 Lebanon [Phoenicia] (where 68–140 are from Gubla / Byblos)
- 227–380 Canaan (written mostly in the Canaan-Akkadian language).

The Amarna letters are of great significance for biblical studies as well as Semitic linguistics, since they throw light on the culture and language of the peoples of Canaan and Phoenicia in pre-biblical times.

HISTORY CONTEXT

We have found it necessary to depict some basic history of Egypt, her relevant dynasties, and some connotations of the names of those persons involved. All these little puzzle pieces together can explain the Exodus of Moses provided that we ask: What did the Hebrews do on Egyptian soil in the first place? The story of Moses begins already 3 to 5 centuries before him when Abraham, coming from the Sumerian Kingdom of Uruk in southern Mesopotamia, travelling to southern Turkey first, founding the town of Haran [or Harran, named after Abraham's brother, now a village of Sanliurfa, Turkey] and settling there until he was forced by famine to head for Egypt.

A mysterious people, known as Hyksos, immigrated to Egypt at around 1950 BC, pretty much the same time as Abraham. The West-Semitic speaking Hyksos are now identified as "Phoenician Canaanites", the ancestors of the Hebrews. These "Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos" have gradually settled in the area of modern Tell el-Dab'a in the northeastern region of the Nile Delta; it is the area where the Hyksos founded their capital city of Avaris.

The name "Hyksos" (Egyptian: hekau khasut, "ruler(s) of foreign lands"; Greek: Yksos, The Greek form is likely a corruption of Hykossous.) is a term which, in modern Egyptology, describes a people that became known as the "foreign invaders." It particularly designates the kings of the 15th Dynasty of Egypt (c. 1650–1550 BC). The Roman historian Titus Flavius Josephus gives the name as meaning "shepherd kings" or "captive kings" in his book Contra Apion (Against Apion, see Artifacts, Grand Bible), where he describes the Hyksos as they were also mentioned by the Greek-Egyptian historian Manetho. Josephus's rendition may arise from a later Egyptian pronunciation of h-k-s-w-t, which was then understood to mean "lord of shepherds." The seat of power of these kings was the city of Avaris in the Nile delta, from where they ruled over Lower and Middle Egypt up to Cusae. In the Aegyptiaca, a [now lost] history of Egypt written by the Greek-Egyptian priest and historian Manetho in about 300 BC., the Hyksos got a bad reputation.

Archaeologists found a long wall painting with hieroglyph texts in the Tomb of Khnumhotep II (circa 1900 BC). Khnumhotep II (khnw-htp, "Khnum is pleased") was an ancient Egyptian Great Chief, the Governor of the Oryx nome [the 16th nome or province of Upper Egypt] during the reign of pharaohs Amenemhat II and Senusret II of the 12th Dynasty, Middle Kingdom (20th century BC). He is well known for his tomb at Beni Hasan and its decorations.

The wall illustration, which shows a procession of foreigners, is quite a sensational discovery because on it there is a man described as "Abisha the Heqa-kasut [Hyksos]," being Abraham-like figure leading a group of Aamu [Egyptian for Canaanites, from 'Aramu' via 'Ahlamu' = Aramaean]. This is one of the earliest known uses of the term "Hyksos" that ever has been reported on. So, naturally, here comes up the question: Who are the Hyksos? Who are the Canaanites? Who are the Aramaeans?

A great nation or ethnicity often is called by many different names depending on who speaks about them. The English have quite a lot of names like Angles, Angelland, Engeland, England, English, Saxon, Anglo-Saxon, Anglais [Fr], langlee [Am. Natives], Yankee, Yingguo [Chi = England], Yinyu [Chi = English language], British, Brit, Britannia, United Kingdom, UK, United States, US, the States, etc.

The family of English speaking nations is with an age of 1,600 years relatively young. How many more names must be then in use for a nation that has an age of at least 4,000 years! Here are some examples, and surely, most readers will be surprised about the names we are going to show now.

The following array of names denote only the ethnicity which is to most of us known as Canaanite, Phoenician, Hebrew, Aramaic, etc., [in square brackets: the language or culture in which the name has been used.]:

Phoenicia [Greek], Phoinike / Foinike [Greek], Fenekhu [Egyptian] = wood-traders, Punicus [Latin], Ponikijo [ancient Greek]; Punic [English], Carthaginian [English], Carthaginiensis [Latin], Qart-khadashit [Phoenician];

Canaan, Kena'an [Phoenician, Hebrew, Aramaic], Khanaan [Greek];

Aramaean [Aramaic], Syrians [Greek], Assyrians [Greek], Akkadians [Greek];

Hyksos [Greek], Hykossous [Greek], hekau khasut [Egyptian];

Aramaean, saggasu, Sa-gaz [Sumerian] = "destroyer, killer", Aamu [Egyptian], Alamu [Egyptian], Aramu [Phoenician].

And these names mean the very same people but since the religious reforms of Judah's king Hezekiah (in around 700 BC), the following names ALSO denote the Jewish or Judaic religion AND besides that [still] the ethnicity:

Jew [English], Gyu, Giu, Iuu, Iuw, and Iew [Middle English], Juif [French], Jude [German], Yehudi [Hebrew, Aramaic], Yehudim [Hebrew, Aramaic], Yehuda [Hebrew], Yuda [Hebrew], Iudaea [Latin], Iudea [Latin], Judah [German, English], Yadu, Yavad, Yadava, Yaudheya, Yoddheya = "Judaea" [Indian: Sanskrit, Prakrit, Pali etc.].

Israelite, Israel, Ysrael, Yisre'el, Esra'el, Yshril [Hebrew] = "The Rule of God" etc.

Up until about 700 BC [when King Hezekiah made Yahweh the only god of the kingdom of Judah by law], all the above mentioned people worshipped the same kind of gods, at the same kind of food, shared the same kind of cultural habits, wore the same kind of garments, used the same kind of weights and currencies, and above all, they spoke the same kind of west-Semitic language, and they all wrote in the same kind of script: Phoenician!

This may include the so-called "12 tribes" [some of them are historical, some others are non-historical]: Reuben [in Jordan], Simeon, Levi [Levites], Judah [in the Holy Land, and some in India], Issachar, Zebulun, Dan, Naphtali [Phoenician hinterland, Lebanon], Gad [in Jordan north of Reuben], Asher [Phoenicia], Benjamin, Joseph [in Egypt], later split into two half-tribes Ephraim and Manasseh. The Amorites, Moabites, Amalekites, Edomites [Idumaeans], Ammonites [around Amman, Jordan], and the Aramaeans [Syria] may have been either descendants from the 12 tribes or intermarried with Hebrews.

To say it clearly: All these above mentioned people are in fact ONE nation, or to give an allowance, they all do belong to the very same group of nations, just like British, US-Americans, Canadians, Australians, and others who belong to the family of English speaking peoples as Winston S. Churchill writes.

Some of the following tribes are traces from a faraway past: the Beta Israel of Ethiopia; the Jews of the Bilad al-Sudan in West Africa whose ancestors were expelled from Carthage [Tunisia], Morocco, Spain and Portugal; the Sefwi Tribe in Ghana and the Igbo Jews of Nigeria could not yet be 'verified as genuine'; the Bene Israel, Jews of India, in Konkan to nearby cities, Bombay [Mumbai], Pune, Ahmedabad, and Karachi may have arrived in the 5th or 4th centuries BC; the Yehudey Kochin [Cochin Jews or Malabar Jews of the state of Kerala, southwest India, mentioned already by Benjamin of Tudela in the 12th century AD]; the Bnei Menashe [Children of Menasseh (who are officially recognised by Israel), in northeast India in the states of Manipur and Mizoram at the border to Burma]; the Kailfeng youtai zu [the Jews of Kailfeng, Henan] arrived in China via Silk Road during the Han and Tang Dynasties [200 BC - 900 AD].

Only by knowing all these names, we can get a much clearer picture of the nation we call Jews, Hebrews or Israelites. This nation has never only been "a little, weak, and suppressed nation" as the Hebrew Bible wants to suggest to us. From Ethiopia to Scotland, from Carthage in northwest Africa to Xi'an and Luoyang in China, the Hebrew nations, perhaps we should use the plural here, have shaped history and they still do. They have successfully been active in discovering, colonising, and influencing other parts of the World.

Rise and fall of Canaanite rule in Egypt:

As direct heirs to the kings of the 12th Dynasty (1991 BC - 1802 BC), the pharaohs of the 13th Dynasty reigned from Memphis over Middle and Upper Egypt, almost to Nubia in the south. After the immigration of the Hyksos, the power of the 13th Dynasty (1803 BC - 1649 BC) waned progressively over its 150 years of existence. The Hyksos probably did not conquer Egypt in one go but merely sneaked into power positions by using opportunities. In about 1600 BC [according to most scientific estimations between 1630 and 1560 BC], a volcano eruption was speeding up the decline. The massive VEI 7 explosion of the Mediterranean island of Thera brought an unexpected tsunami rolling towards Egypt and other shores, smashing everything in its way and devastating the entire Nile Delta. Most nation states of the eastern Mediterranean got into severe trouble, to say the least. A mini-Ice Age with no summer for two or three years followed. Famine, pestilence, and civil war brought the Minoan civilisation of the island of Crete to extinction and Egypt to her knees. (see: Tempest Stone, Artefacts, Grand Bible) The 13th Dynasty finally came to an end with the conquest of Memphis [20 km / 12 mi south of today's Cairo, Egypt] by the Hyksos rulers of the [Canaanite] 15th Dynasty, in c. 1600 BC.

The 14th Dynasty of Egypt describes a series of rulers reigning over the Delta region of the River Nile. The 15th, 16th, and 17th Dynasties of ancient Egypt are often combined under the group title, Second Intermediate Period. It lasted between 75 (c. 1725-1650 BC) and 155 years (c. 1805-1650 BC), depending on the scholar. Any dating of this period can only be an estimation due to lack of evidence. The capital of the dynasty was probably Avaris. The 14th [Hyksos] Dynasty coexisted concurrently with the 13th [Egyptian] Dynasty based in Memphis.

The rulers of the 14th Dynasty are commonly identified by Egyptologists as being of Phoenician-Canaanite (Semitic) descent, owing to the distinct origins of the names of some of their kings and princes, like Ippu (West Semitic for "grace"), Yakbim ("ja-ak-bi-im"), an Amorite name), Qareh (West Semitic for "the bald one"), or Yaquab-Har. Names in relation with Nubia are also recorded in two cases, king Nehehy ("The Nubian") and queen Tati.

Egypt was divided in North and South. The Fifteenth Dynasty (1650 BC - c. 1550 BC) was entirely a foreign dynasty in ancient Egypt. It was founded by the Hyksos king Salitis, whose people had conquered Lower Egypt. The kings of the Fifteenth Dynasty may have been of Phoenician-Canaanite origin. Pharaoh Kamose is known to have referred to Apophis, one of the kings of the dynasty, as "Chiefstain of Retjenu (i.e. Canaan)". The kings of the Fifteenth Dynasty formed an "Asiatic Kingdom" in the Delta, covering an area which may have included Canaan (and Phoenicia) itself, although the archaeological record is sparse. The dynasty probably lasted for a period of about 100 to 150 years. The Hyksos kings of the 15th Dynasty were based at Avaris and ruled over the North. The Hyksos did not control all of Egypt. Instead, they coexisted with the 16th and 17th Dynasties, which were based in the City of Thebes.

The Sixteenth Dynasty (1803 BC - 1649 BC) of ancient Egypt was a dynasty of pharaohs that ruled the Theban region in Upper Egypt for 70 years. Kamose was the last king of the Theban Seventeenth Dynasty. He was possibly the son of Seqenenre Tao and Ahhotep I and the full brother of Ahmose I, founder of the Eighteenth Dynasty. His reign fell at the very end of the Second Intermediate Period. Kamose is usually ascribed a reign of three to five years. His reign is important for the decisive military initiatives he took against the Hyksos, who had come to rule much of Ancient Egypt. Warfare between the Hyksos and the pharaohs of the late Seventeenth Dynasty eventually culminated in the defeat of the Hyksos by Ahmose I*, who founded the Eighteenth Dynasty of Egypt. (* Ahmose means: lah [the Moon] is born, or more precisely "Child of lah", also transcribed as Yah, Yah(w), Jah, or Aah, the origin of the Hebrew name Yahweh for God. The name Mose [child] is also of Egyptian origin.) In the following centuries, the Egyptians would portray the Hyksos as bloodthirsty and oppressive foreign rulers.

There seem to be disagreement amongst scholars' narrative as to who, Ahmose or Kamose, achieved the victory. The Carnarvon Tablet states that Kamose was the victor. The Carnarvon Tablet is an ancient Egyptian inscription in hieratic recording the defeat of the Hyksos by Kamose. It was found in 1908 by Lord Carnarvon on two wooden tablets covered stucco in fine plaster. It was discovered amongst pottery debris on a ledge close to the entrance of a tomb near the mouth of the Deir el-Bahari valley. Howard Carter believed this tomb to date from the Seventeenth Dynasty. But actually it is now believed that the tablet goes back to the Eighteenth Dynasty of Egypt -- only a little later.

On the reverse side of tablet no. 1 is inscribed the beginning of The Maxims of Ptah-Hotep. On the obverse side of this tablet is a description of Kamose's victory over the Hyksos. The tablet is believed to be a schoolboy's exercise, but the text proved to be very important. As early as 1916, Sir Alan Gardiner assumed that the First Carnarvon Tablet must be a copy of some commemorative stela of pharaoh Kamose. Less than 20 years later, his thesis was confirmed when French Egyptologists Lacau and Chévrier were working on the Third Pylon of Karnak and made the important discovery of two stela fragments. The smallest of them was found in 1932. And in 1935, the larger fragment appeared. Thus, it emerged that the text was copied from Kamose's stelae in Karnak. These newer stelae were published in 1939. On tablet No. 2 there is a heavily damaged inscription.

In the inscription, Kamose exclaims (in a translation by Sir Alan Gardiner) noting the control of Upper Egypt by the Kerma culture of Nubia [the predecessor of Kush]: "I should like to know what serves this strength of mine, when a chieftain in Avaris, and another in Kush [Nubia], and I sit united with an Asiatic [Phoenician-Canaanite] and a Nubian, each in possession of his slice of Egypt, and I cannot pass by him as far as Memphis, the waters of Egypt, (but), behold, he has Hermopolis. No man can settle down, when despoiled by the taxes of the Asiatics. I will grapple with him, that I may rip open his belly! My wish is to save Egypt and to smite the Asiatic!"

Modern scholars believe the Hyksos may have partially inspired the Biblical account. The reconquest of all of Egypt had dramatic consequences for the beaten Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos: They had to undertake the Exodus under the leadership of Mose. He and his people, whom we now know as "Hebrews", returned to Canaan. Moses' connexion to the "royal family of Egypt" through the daughter of pharaoh is not a lie but the truth when we consider the above described facts. And that some form of monotheism took place in Egypt under Pharaoh Akhenaten as well as in Canaan is not a coincidence either. Already Titus Flavius Josephus associated the Hyksos with the Exodus of the Hebrews, the Israelites, from Egypt.

The Hyksos-Hebrews practised many Phoenician or Canaanite customs, but also many Egyptian customs. While the historian Manetho portrayed the Hyksos as invaders and oppressors, this interpretation is questioned in modern Egyptology. Instead, it is certain that Egyptians and Hyksos benefitted from each other.

The Hyksos period marks the first in which Egypt was ruled by foreign rulers. Many details of their rule, such as the true extent of their kingdom and even the names and order of their kings, remain uncertain. The archaeologist E. A. Wallis

Budge states in his History of Egypt, Vol. 3, that some Hyksos kings are well-known by name.

One of those Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos kings of whom we have remains is:— Ra-aa-user, "son of the Sun," Apepa (also Apepi or Ipepi; Egyptian: Ippi, Greek: Apophis; regnal names Neb-khephesh-Re, A-qenen-Re and A-user-Re). His name appears on a monument found at Bubastis by M. Naville in 1887-1889. The monuments which record the name of this king, Apepa I, consists of a red granite fragment of a door-post, on which we have the inscription, "Son of the Sun, Apepa, giver of life," and a mutilated statement to the effect that "he set up pillars in great numbers, and doors in bronze to this god." This is a very important piece of information, for it proves that this Apepa actually built additions to the ancient temple at Bubastis, and it is interesting to note that the king calls himself "son of the Sun" and "giver of life" after the manner of an old Egyptian king.

There is the assumption that the patriarch Joseph arrived in Egypt during the reign of a king called Apapus or Aphobis, who may, perhaps, be identified with Apepa I. or Apepa II.; the Christian writers Dionysius of Tell Mahre and Bar Hebraeus call him Apophis, and Apapos. Whether this be so or not cannot be said definitely, but it is very probable that Jacob's son went down into Egypt during the period of the 16th Dynasty, when the Hyksos had to all intents and purposes become Egyptians. The picture of the Egyptian court, given to us by the narrative in the Book of Genesis, makes it exceedingly improbable that his visit took place during the unsettled times of the 15th Dynasty, before the usurping Semites had settled down to enjoy the property of those whom they had dispossessed.

Another Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos king is Ra'aa-uqenen, son of the Sun, Apepa. From the discoveries which were made at Tanis by the late Dr. H. Brugsch and others we learn that this Ra'aa-uqenen, Apepa II., inscribed his names and titles upon the right shoulders of two black granite statues of the king Mermashou which were set up in the temple there; the king calls himself "Son of the Sun," and "giver of life," and "beloved [of Set]." On the sides and back of the statues Bameses II. added his name and titles, and made several alterations in the inscriptions on them; it is a curious fact that he caused himself to be called "beloved of Sutekh."

The Museum of the Louvre possesses the base of a red granite statue on which were originally depicted figures of the representatives of thirty-six vanquished Nubian tribes, together with their names; an examination of this object has convinced some 3 that the cartouche of Amenophis III., now inscribed upon it, was added by the order of this king, who thus usurped a statue which, there is good reason to believe, was set up by Apepa II. In connexion with Apepa II. must be mentioned here briefly the narrative of the beginning of the quarrel which arose in the 17th Dynasty, about b.c. 1750, between the Egyptian prince of Thebes, who was called Seqenen-Ea Tau-aa-qen, and the Hyksos king his over-lord; the result of the quarrel was that war broke out, and after varying successes, a pitched battle was fought in which the Hyksos king was defeated, and the Theban prince lost his life. Eventually the Theban princes gained their independence. The Hyksos king is said to have been called Apepa, but whether he was Apepa II. or another king of the same name cannot be said.

The third well-known Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos king is Set-aa-Pehpeh, son of the Sun, better known as Nubti. The name of this king, Nubti, is made known to us by the famous "Stele of Four Hundred Years," which was discovered at San, or Tanis, in a fragmentary condition, among the battered pieces of five or six memorial or tomb stelae, all of which dated from the reign of Rameses II.; it was found in the eastern portion of the ruins of the great temple at Tanis, at the place where, judging by the general arrangement of the building, the shrine would have stood. In the upper part of the stele we see Rameses II. making an offering of two vases of wine to the god Set, who is depicted in the usual form and with the usual attributes of the gods of Egypt. The god is called in the text, "Set of Rameses," but in the scene above it the name of the god Set has been chiselled out, a piece of vandalism which was done when the god had ceased to be popular. Behind the king is a figure of the official who dedicated the stele, and close by him are two lines of text which read, "Homage to thy Ka (or double), O Set, thou son of Nut, grant thou a life of happiness, and the following of thy double to the double of the 'erpa' prince, the royal scribe, the superintendent of the horses, the inspector of the desert lands, and the overseer of the fortress of Tchar (i.e. Tanis)."

The main inscription reads:—"May live 'Horus Ra', the mighty Bull, beloved of 'Maat', lord of festivals like his father 'Ptah', King of the South and North, 'Usr-Maat-Ra-setep-en-Ra', son of the Sun, 'Ra-meses-meri-Amen', giver of life, lord of the shrines of the 'Vulture and 'Uraeus', protector of Egypt, vanquisher of foreign (or mountainous) lands, 'Ra', the begetter of the gods, overlord of the two lands, the 'Horus' of gold, master of years, mighty one of mighty ones, King of the South and North (Prenomen and nomen are repeated), prince, over-lord of the two lands by reason of the monuments of his name, 'Ra' who riseth in the heights of heaven according to his will, King of the South and North, 'Rameses'. His Majesty commanded the making of a great stele in granite to the great name of his fathers, having the wish to establish the name of the father of his fathers, king 'Ra-men-Maat', son of the Sun, 'Seti-meri-en-Ptah', permanently and in a flourishing condition for ever, like the Sun, every day."

"Year 400, the fourth day of the fourth month of the inundation (i.e., Mesore), of the King of the, the son of the Sun, loving him, 'Nubti', beloved of 'Heru-khuti', whose existence endureth for ever and for ever. On this day there came to Tanis the 'erpa', the governor of the city, the bearer of the fan on the king's right hand, captain of the bowmen, inspector of the desert lands, overseer of the fortress of Tanis, general of the Matchau (soldiery), royal scribe, superintendent of the horses, priest of 'Ba-neb-Tattu', the first prophet of 'Set', the chief reader of the goddess 'Uatchet', the opener of the two lands, the overseer of the prophets of all the gods, 'Seti', triumphant, son of the 'erpa' prince, the governor of the city, the captain of the bowmen, inspector of desert lands, overseer of the fortress of Tanis, the royal scribe, superintendent of the horses, Pa-Ra-meses, triumphant, born of the lady of the house, the singing woman of 'Ra', 'Thaa', triumphant! He saith, Homage to thee, O 'Set', thou son of 'Nut', thou mighty one of strength in the Boat of Millions of Years, thou overthrowest the enemy who is in the front of the boat of Ra, the mighty one of roarings. . ."

The last signs left on the stele contain the prayer for a happy life. The above translation shows that the stele was set up by an official called Seti, the son of Pa-Rameses and Thaa, in honour of the god Set, and that he did so because Rameses II. gave him orders so to do. Instead, however, of being dated in the day and month and year of the reign of Rameses II., in which it was set up, it is dated in the 400th year of the Hyksos king Nubti, a most remarkable circumstance.

According to M. Mariette, the first paragraph contains four lines and refers to Bameses II. only; the second paragraph relates to the governor of the city only, and, according to Mariette, to the celebration of the new year festival and of the festival of the Crocodile-god, the son of Set. He thought that four hundred years before that time the Hyksos king had established a year for his people, and that the Stele marked the celebration of the 400th anniversary of the first day of that year. The reasons he gave for these views seem to be a little fanciful, but there is little doubt that in the reign of Rameses II. some era was in common use, in the Delta at least, which had been inaugurated by the Hyksos.

The fourth Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos king is called Ra-Seuser-En, son of the Sun, Khian. We shall probably be more correct in assigning the mentioned kings to the period of the Hyksos. Of first importance among these is king Khian, of whom M. Naville discovered the lower part of a colossal statue at Bubastis in black granite. The throne and legs are in a good state of preservation, and, fortunately, the three principal names of the king are clearly legible.

The Horus name of Khian was "Anq atebui," i.e., "embracer of lands"; his Ra name (or prenominal) was at one time read "I-an-Ra." Khian is now generally believed to be the correct reading of the characters.

Another monument of the reign of Khian is the small stone lion which was acquired at Baghdad for the British Museum by the late Mr. George Smith; its importance was recognised by Deveria, who rightly attributed it to the Hyksos period, but who misread the cartouche. Some think that the lion is not the work of an Egyptian sculptor, and that the object was made in Asia, and that the head, having been damaged and recut at some comparatively modern period, has lost its antique character. Be this as it may, the monument is of very considerable interest, and is unique; moreover, it is the largest object of a purely Egyptian character which has ever been obtained from the excavations that have been carried on in sites of ancient Babylonian cities near Baghdad. We may also conclude in respect of Khian that as his monuments have been found in places so widely separated as Bubastis in Egypt, Baghdad in Mesopotamia, and Knossos in Crete, it is pretty certain that he was a powerful monarch, whose rule was far-reaching, and whose influence, as stated in his Horus name, "embraced many lands." That he belonged to the Hyksos people is rendered probable from the fact that on his scarabs he is described as "heq semtu," i.e., "chief of the deserts," a title which has a meaning almost identical with that of "heq Shasu" or "nomad tribes," which is probably the origin of the name "Hyksos."

Of the kings Uatchet and Ipeq-Heru we know nothing, for their names occur only on scarabs, and we know not whether they reigned before or after Khian, and indeed the position of Khian himself in the Hyksos Dynasty is unknown; it is probable, however, that he reigned before Apepa I., and there is reason to think that Khian was one of the first great Hyksos kings.

This little excursion in the history of Egypt and her Hyksos rulers from the 13th to the 16th Dynasties of Egypt has significance for comprehending the contents of the Amarna letters. All dynasties in the Middle East were connected to one another by family relation and marriage. And it is the Amarna Letters that allow us to take a glimpse into an amazing past.

The Egyptian Rulers

Although scholars generally do not recognise the biblical portrayal of the Exodus as an actual historical event, various historical pharaohs have been proposed as the corresponding ruler. We do not have a good documentation about the times when the Hyksos and / or Abraham came to Egypt in the times of the 12th to the 14th Dynasty [c. 1950-1800 BC]. But the Bible makes reference to various pharaohs of Egypt. The Egyptian texts talk about the Hyksos who came to Egypt, and they also tell us about their expulsion from Egypt some 3 centuries later, including the Egyptians' relations to the Habiru after those events. The Bible also tells us about Abraham who went to Egypt, and about Moses who came out of Egypt perhaps 3 centuries later. These include unnamed pharaohs in the legends of the Israelite settlement in Egypt. They also include several later rulers, some of whom can be identified with historical pharaohs. Here an overview:

DEDUMOSE II (died c. 1690 BC): David Rohl's 1995 A Test of Time revised Egyptian history by shortening the Third Intermediate Period of Egypt by almost 300 years. As a by-product the synchronisms with the biblical narrative have changed, making the Second Intermediate Period king Dedumose II the pharaoh of the Exodus. Rohl's theory has failed to find support among scholars in his field.

SENAKHTEENRE AHMOSE was the seventh king of the 17th Dynasty of Egypt during the Second Intermediate Period. Senakhtenre reigned for a short period over the Theban region in Upper Egypt at a time where the Hyksos 15th Dynasty ruled Lower Egypt. Senakhtenre died c.1560 or 1558 BC at the latest. He was the father of Tao, also known under his throne name Sequenre. The 14th, 15th, 16th, and the 17th Dynasties did not follow each other chronologically but some of them existed side by side as they ruled over different parts of Egypt. It is significant to note that the name part "mose, mosis, mes, meses" al mean "Moses" that is in meaning "the child, offspring, or son of".

SEQUENRE TAO (also Seqenera Djehuty-aa or Sekenenra Taa, called 'the Brave', ruled over the last of the local kingdoms of the Theban region of Egypt in the Seventeenth Dynasty during the Second Intermediate Period. He was the father of Kamose AHHOTEP I (also Ahhotep, Aahhotep or Iahhotep, "Iah (the Moon) is satisfied"; Iah or Yah is the origin of the name Yahweh for "God".) was an ancient Egyptian queen who lived circa 1560–1530 BC, during the end of the Seventeenth Dynasty of Egypt. She was the mother of Kamose and Ahmose I. Ahhotep I, is thought to have ruled as regent after the death of Kamose and continued the warfare against the Hyksos until Ahmose I, the second son of Sequenre Tao and Ahhotep I, was old enough to assume the throne and complete the expulsion of the Hyksos and the unification of Egypt. Women had a high status in ancient Egypt and enjoyed the legal right to own, inherit, and will property. A woman becoming pharaoh was rare, however. Only Khentkaues, Sobekneferu, and Neferneferuaten came before her in known records as ruling solely in their own name. Twosret, a female king and the last pharaoh of the nineteenth dynasty, may have been the only woman to succeed her among the indigenous rulers.

WADJKHEPERRE KAMOSE was the last king of the Theban Seventeenth Dynasty. He was possibly the son of Sequenre Tao and Ahhotep I and the full brother of Ahmose I. His reign fell at the very end of the Second Intermediate Period. Kamose, the last ruler of the Seventeenth Dynasty at Thebes, is credited with launching a successful campaign in the Theban war of liberation against the Hyksos, although he is thought to have died in the campaign.

AHMOSE I (1550–1525 BC), founder of the Eighteenth Dynasty, completed the reconquest of Egypt began by his older brother Kamose. He restored Theban rule over the whole of Egypt and successfully reasserted Egyptian power in its formerly subject territories of Nubia and Canaan. His victory resulted in the expulsion of the Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos from the Nile Delta; their "Exodus" under the leadership of Moses is recorded in the Hebrew Bible.

AMENHOTEP I (Egyptian for "Amon is satisfied"; also known as King Zeserkere, and in Greek as Amenotnes I, or Amenophis I.) was the second Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt. His reign is generally dated from 1526 to 1506 BC. He was a son of Ahmose I and Ahmose-Nefertari. There are no records of his reign, however there is the debated possibility that he followed the Hyksos to Canaan and Phoenicia on a military campaign.

THUTMOSE I (sometimes read as Thutmosis, Djehutyemes, Djhutnose, or Tutmosis, Thothmes or Tutmoses in older Greek history books; lit.: "Thoth is born", meaning "Child or Son of Thoth") was the third pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt from about 1526 to 1513 BC [exact dates are debated]. It is believed that he extended Egypt's borders to Ethiopia in the south and to Assyria and southern Turkey in the north.

THUTMOSE II was the fourth Pharaoh of the Eighteenth Dynasty of Egypt. His reign is generally dated from 1513 to 1499 BC [debated]. Thutmose II had to deal with the uprising of the Kingdom of Kush in Nubia for which he dispatched an army under the command of his father's generals. An account of the campaign is given by the Titus Flavius Josephus who refers to it as the Ethiopian War. He is frequently considered best qualified to be the pharaoh of the Exodus based on the fact that he had a brief, prosperous reign and then a sudden collapse with no legitimate son to succeed him.

HATSHEPSUT (1507–1458 BC), meaning Foremost of Noble Ladies, was the fifth Pharaoh of the 18th dynasty of Ancient Egypt. She reigned longer than any other woman of an indigenous Egyptian dynasty, and successfully. Her father was Thutmose I. Her predecessor was Thutmose II [her husband]. She became first Regent [for Thutmose III, his son by his concubine Iset] then Pharaoh and an effective ruler in her own right. While Thutmose III was co-regent with his her, he was head of the army. Hatshepsut established the trade networks that had been disrupted during the Hyksos occupation of Egypt. She led successful military campaigns in Nubia, Canaan, Phoenicia and Syria early in her career.

THUTMOSE III was the sixth pharaoh (1479–1425 BC) of the Eighteenth Dynasty. For the first 22 years of his reign, he was co-regent with his stepmother and aunt, Hatshepsut. He created the largest empire Egypt ever had. 17 campaigns were conducted. Both together conquered lands from the Niyā Kingdom in northern Syria to the Fourth Cataract of the Nile in Nubia.

AMENHOTEP II was the seventh pharaoh of the Eighteenth Dynasty of Egypt. Amenhotep inherited a vast kingdom from his father Thutmose III, and held it by means of a few military campaigns in Syria; however, he fought much less than his father, and his reign saw the effective cessation of hostilities between Egypt and Mitanni, the major kingdoms competing for power in Syria. His reign is usually dated from 1427 to 1401 BC.

THUTMOSE IV was the 8th Pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt, who ruled in approximately the 14th century BC. His prenomen or royal name, Menkheperure, means "Established in forms is Re."

AMENHOTEP III, also known as Amenhotep the Magnificent, was the ninth pharaoh of the Eighteenth Dynasty. According to different authors, he ruled Egypt from 1388 or 1386 to 1351 or 1349 BC, after his father Thutmose IV died. Amenhotep III was Thutmose's son by a minor wife, Mutemwiyā. His reign was a period of unprecedented prosperity and splendour, when Egypt reached the peak of its artistic and international power. It was already during the reign of Amenhotep III, the solar god Aten was extensively worshipped; it was depicted as a falcon-headed man much like the Egyptian god Ra. The first known reference to Aten as a god is in the Story of Sinuhe from the 12th Dynasty [Artefact, Grand Bible]. The word itself appears in the Old Kingdom as a noun meaning "disc, orb, globe or sphere" which referred to anything circular. The sun was called the "disc or sphere of the day" where Ra was thought to reside. By analogy, the term "silver aten" was sometimes used to refer to the moon. High relief and low relief illustrations of the Aten show it with a curved surface, showing that Aten was meant to be a sphere. When Amenhotep III died in the 38th or 39th year of his reign, he left the god Aton as legacy to Amenhotep IV.

AMENHOTEP IV came to power between 1353 and 1351. It is unknown how old Amenhotep IV was when he did this; estimates range from 10 to 23. At first, he continued to reign like his father. He worshipped several different gods, including Atum, Osiris, Anubis, Nekhbet, Hathor, and the Eye of Ra, and texts from this era refer to "the gods" and "every god and every goddess." He engaged himself in the typical royal programmes such as building temples and tombs. He kept peace with his neighbours most of his reign.

May be, in his fourth or fifth year of reign, he lauded actions that stunned the nation: he began a revolution from above. He changed his name to Akhenaten [meaning "Horizon of the Aten"]. In 1346 BC, he moved Egypt's capital from Memphis to a new place which he called after himself "Akhenaten", today known as Amarna. The new capital was at the east side of the Nile and about 8 miles [13 km] long and 3 miles [5 km] wide. At the same time he made the sun god Aten the sole god of the empire by forbidding worship to any other god, creating by doing this the first monotheistic religion in the world. Why he did that gives room for endless speculations. Whether the creation of his monotheist religion has been enforced to curtail the powerful old priest caste can be assumed.

Only one military campaign is known for certain under Akhenaten's reign. Besides that, in the Amarna letters, there are many indications that Akhenaten had somehow neglected his duties toward as his allies in Canaan who constantly requested help in their fight against the Habiru [Hebrew] which he seemingly had ignored. The Habiru were probably a peasant or nomad group of Canaanites who [felt unfairly taxed and therefore] launched a kind of social revolution in order to get rid of the ruling and Egyptian-backed king-priests. Texts in Hebrew Bible [Genesis and Exodus] could be interpreted that these groups, perhaps under leadership of Moses [Mose], succeeded in the end.

In his second or twelfth year, he ordered his Viceroy of Kush, Tuthmose [who was perhaps a family member], to lead a military expedition to quell a rebellion and raids on settlements on the Nile by Nubian nomadic tribes. Otherwise he seemed to have prepared for something else.

That his new religion has to do with the Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos [the in the Amarna letters mentioned Habiru, the Hebrew], is another assumption. Did their influence have effects on Akhenaten's new religion? Or was it just the other way round? Psalm 104 could point out, due to its striking similarity with Akhenaten's Hymn to the Sun [see Scriptures of Egypt, Grand Bible], that monotheism came from Egypt and Akhenaten was its originator. In his book "Moses and Monotheism" Sigmund Freud argued that Moses had been an Atenist priest forced to leave Egypt with his followers after Akhenaten's death.

Another interesting point is that Akhenaten seem to have made his wife Nefertiti an equal co-ruler, a thing that did not happen all to often in history. Between 1336 and 1334 BC, Akhenaten died suddenly and unexpectedly after seventeen years of rule. Cause of death: Unknown.

NEFERTITI, Neferneferuaten Nefertiti that is (c. 1370–1330 BC), was the wife of Pharaoh Akhenaten; earlier name: Amenhotep IV. Nefertiti and her husband were known for a religious revolution, in which they worshipped one god only, the Sun God Aten. She is depicted in many archaeological sites as equal in stature to a King, smiting Egypt's enemies, riding a chariot, and worshipping god Aten in the manner of a Pharaoh. When Nefertiti's name disappears from historical records, it is replaced by that of a co-regent named Neferneferuaten, who became a female Pharaoh. It seems likely that Nefertiti, in a similar fashion to the previous female Pharaoh Hatshepsut, assumed the kingship under the name Pharaoh Neferneferuaten after her husband's death, although this is a matter of ongoing debate. The time after Akhenaten's death was marked by the fall of Amarna and relocation of the capital back to the traditional city of Thebes. In early December 1912, a German archaeological expedition discovered in Amarna the atelier of Thutmose the Sculptor, the King's Favourite Master of Arts. Among the pieces of art the archaeologists dug up was the amazing bust of Nefertiti whose pretty face was looking almost alive as a modern colour photograph. It was the bust that made her famous. The bust is now in Berlin's Neues Museum. Nefertiti died suddenly some time between 1336 and 1330 BC.

ANKHKHEPERURE, in full: Ankhkheperure Smenkhkare Djoser Kheperu (sometimes spelled Smenkhare, Smenkhare or Smenkhkara), was a short-lived pharaoh in the late 18th Dynasty. The names of this pharaoh translate as 'Living are the Forms of Re' and 'Vigorous is the Soul of Re – Holy of Forms'. The identity of this individual is unknown as well as the sex and relationship to Akhenaten. This person suddenly vanished at around 1335–1334 BC.

SMENKHKARE was known to Egyptologists as far back as 1845 from the tomb of Meryre II (Mery-Re, the Beloved of Re; our names Maria, Mary, etc. are of Egyptian origin.). There he and Meritaten (Merit-Aten, the Beloved of Aten), bearing the title Great Royal Wife, are shown rewarding the tomb's owner. The names of the king have since been cut out but had been recorded by Richard Lepsius around 1850. Later, a different set of names emerged using the same throne name: "Ankhkheperu-re-mery Neferkheperu-re [Akhenaten] Neferneferuaten mery Wa en Re [Akhenaten]". This led to a great deal of confusion since throne names tended to be unique. For the better part of a century, the repetition of throne names was taken to mean that Smenkhare changed his name to Neferneferuaten at some point, probably upon the start of his sole reign. That Akhenaten 1336–34, Smenkhkare 1335–34, and Nefertiti 1336–30, died suddenly in a range of overlapping times is extraordinary. Contemporary evidence suggests that a plague ravaged through the Middle East around this time. In times of such a chaos, murder may be another reason.

TUTANKHAMUN (c. 1342 – c. 1325 BC), was an ancient Egyptian pharaoh who was the last of his royal family to rule during the end of the 18th Dynasty (ruled c. 1334 – 1325 BC in the conventional chronology) during the New Kingdom of Egyptian history. His father was the pharaoh Akhenaten, believed to be the mummy found in the tomb KV55 [KV for King Valley Tomb]. His mother is his father's sister, identified through DNA testing as an unknown mummy referred to as "The Younger Lady" who was found in KV35. Tutankhamun took the throne at eight or nine years of age under the unprecedented viceroyship of his eventual successor, Ay, to whom he may have been related. He married his half sister Ankhesenamun. During their marriage they lost two daughters, one at 5–6 months of pregnancy and the other shortly after birth at full-term. Both of their corpses were found in his sarcophagus. His names—Tutankhaten and Tutankhamun—are thought to mean "Living image of Aten" and "Living image of Amun", with Aten replaced by Amun after Akhenaten's death. A small number of Egyptologists, including Battiscombe Gunn, believe the translation may be incorrect and closer to "The-life-of-Aten-is-pleasing" or, as Professor Gerhard Fecht believes, reads as "One-perfect-of-life-is-Aten". Tutankhamun restored the Ancient Egyptian religion after its dissolution by his father, enriched and endowed the priestly orders of two important cults and began restoring old monuments damaged during the previous Amarna period. He did this probably on pressure of the old priest caste. He moved his father's remains to the Valley of the Kings as well as moving the capital from Akhetaten to Thebes. Tutankhamun was physically disabled with a deformity of his left foot along with bone necrosis that required the use of a cane, several of which were found in his tomb. He had other health issues including scoliosis and had contracted several strains of malaria. The 1922 discovery by Howard Carter of Tutankhamun's nearly intact tomb, in excavations funded by Lord Carnarvon, received worldwide press coverage. With over 5,000 artifacts, it sparked a renewed public interest in ancient Egypt, for which Tutankhamun's mask, now in the Egyptian Museum, remains a popular symbol. The deaths of a few involved in the discovery of Tutankhamun's mummy have been popularly attributed to the curse of the pharaohs.

KHEPERKHEPRURE AY, better known just as AY, was probably Nefertiti's father and the penultimate pharaoh of ancient Egypt's 18th Dynasty. He held the throne of Egypt for a brief 4-year period in the late 1300s BC. Prior to his rule, he was a close advisor to two, and perhaps three, other pharaohs of the dynasty. It is theorised that he was the power behind the throne during Tutankhamun's reign. Ay's prenomen Kheperkheperure means "Everlasting are the Manifestations of Ra," while his nomen Ay it-netjer reads as "Ay, Father of the God." Records and monuments that can be clearly attributed to Ay are rare, both because his reign was short and because his successor, Horemheb, instigated a campaign of damnatio memoriae against Ay and the other pharaohs associated with the Amarna Period that was hated by the old priest caste as they lost their posts and power. One important document found in Ay's tomb in Amarna had survived: The Great Hymn to the Aten probably written by Akhenaten.

A man called HOREMHEB managed to seize power after Ay's reign, presumably thanks to his position as commander of the army, and to assume what he must have perceived to be his just reward for having ably served Egypt under Tutankhamun and Ay. Horemheb, also spelled Horemhab or Haremhab (meaning "Horus is in Jubilation"), was probably a brother or cousin of Nefertiti and the last pharaoh of the 18th Dynasty of Egypt. He ruled for 14 years somewhere between 1319 BC and 1292 BC. He had no relation to the preceding royal family other than by marriage to Mutnedjmet, who is thought to have been the daughter of his predecessor Ay; he is believed to have been of common birth. Before he became pharaoh, Horemheb was the commander in chief of the army under the reigns of Tutankhamun and Ay. After his accession to the throne, he reformed the Egyptian state and it was under his reign that official action against the preceding Amarna rulers began. Due to this, he is considered the ruler who reestablished his country after the troublesome and divisive Amarna Period. Horemheb demolished monuments of Akhenaten, reusing the rubble in his own building projects, and usurped monuments of Tutankhamun and Ay. Horemheb presumably had no surviving sons, as he appointed his vizier Paramesse as his successor, who would assume the throne as Ramesses I.

MEN-PEHTY-RE RAMESSES I (Originally called Pa-ramesse-su; in Greek: Rameses, Ramesses, Ramses, in a more literal transcription: "Ramose", meaning 'born of Ra' or 'Son of Ra') was the founder of the 19th Dynasty. He was of non-royal birth, being born into a noble military family from the Nile Delta region, perhaps near the former Hyksos capital of Avaris. He was a son of a troop commander called Seti. His uncle Khaemwaset, an army officer, married Tamwadjesy, the matron of the Harem of Amun, who was a relative of Huy, the viceroy of Kush [Nubia], an important state post. This shows the high status of Ramesses' family. Ramesses I found favour with Horemheb, the last pharaoh of the tumultuous Eighteenth Dynasty, who appointed the former as his vizier. Ramesses also served as the High Priest of Set – as such, he would have played an important role in the restoration of the old religion following the Amarna heresy of a generation earlier, under Akhenaten. reigned 1292–1290 BC or 1295–1294 BC.

MEN-MAAT-RE SETI I (or Sethos I in Greek) was a pharaoh of the New Kingdom Nineteenth Dynasty of Egypt, the son of Ramesses I and Sitre, and the father of Ramesses II. As with all dates in Ancient Egypt, the actual dates of his reign are unclear, and various historians claim different dates, with 1294 BC to 1279 BC and 1290 BC to 1279 BC being the most commonly used by scholars today. The name 'Seti' means "of Set", which indicates that he was consecrated to the god Set (also termed "Sutekh" or "Seth"). As with most pharaohs, Seti had several names. Upon his ascension, he took the prenomen "mn-m3't-r", usually vocalized as Menmaatre, in Egyptian, which means "Established is the Justice of Re." His better known nomen, or birth name, is transliterated as "sty mry-n-ptḥ" or Sety Merenptah, meaning "Man of Set, beloved of Ptah". Manetho incorrectly considered him to be the founder of the 19th Dynasty, and gave him a reign length of 55 years, though no evidence has ever been found for so long a reign.

RAMESSES II (c. 1303–1213; reigned 1279–1213 BC), also known as Ramesses the Great, was the third pharaoh of the Nineteenth Dynasty of Egypt. He is often regarded as the greatest, most celebrated, and most powerful pharaoh of the New Kingdom, itself the most powerful period of Ancient Egypt. His successors and later Egyptians called him the "Great Ancestor". He is known as Ozymandias or Osymandyas in Greek sources, from the first part of Ramesses's regnal name, Usermaatre Setepenre, "The Maat of Ra is powerful, Chosen of Ra". Ramesses II led several military expeditions into Canaan which also includes Phoenicia [Lebanon]. He defeated the Sherden sea pirates who were wreaking havoc along Egypt's Mediterranean coast by attacking cargo-laden vessels travelling the sea routes to Egypt. The immediate antecedents to the Battle of Kadesh were the early campaigns of Ramesses II into Canaan. Ramesses extended his military successes in his eighth and ninth years. He crossed the Dog River (Nahr al-Kalb) and pushed north into Amurru. Egypt's sphere of influence was now restricted to Canaan while Syria fell into Hittite hands. Ramesses II moved the capital of his kingdom from Thebes in the Nile valley to a new site in the eastern Delta. His motives are uncertain, although he possibly wished to be closer to his territories in Canaan and Syria. The new city of Pi-Ramesses [full name: Pi-Ramesses Aa-nakhtu, meaning "Domain of Ramesses the Victor].)

How to find out what the Bible tells us?

Scholars generally do not recognise the biblical portrayal of the Exodus as an actual historical event, or any other event for that matter. Large parts of the Bible can be viewed as literature. As it was the case with any other text in Antiquity, there is no text that could be considered belonging to either one or the other genre. Any text is always a mix of stories, history, lots of precepts and laws, propaganda, political doctrines, slander, blatant lies and misleadings. The use of different names for a person and location, myths and mythologies to hide or blur facts. Although these different qualities of an ancient text multiply problems for the researcher, they can be cracked like a code. We need to arrange the given information in an analytical fashion.

In spite of all these confusing details given in a document, there are always 2 main constant variables which are LANGUAGE and GEOGRAPHY. And because these are the two unchanging values that influence each and every human being, and consequently a nation, we easily can find out what a particular person (or persons) have learned through that language and in that location. It is this learned stuff that defines a person's beliefs, indoctrinated habits and behaviours.

There is a 3rd constant variable to consider when dealing with allegiances or affiliations of people: their BLOOD RELATIONS, meaning their clan and family bonds. If we are smart, we also examine a 4th source of information: the BIOGRAPHY of the person or persons in question; this includes fontnesses, dislikings, friendships, enmities, education and skills, source of income and political power; this includes a thorough examination of their teachers.

One does not need to be a Sherlock Holmes to deduce [1st] with what kind of people we are dealing with once we have established what language they speak and to which group this language belongs, [2nd] to what sort of civilisation and culture a group of people consequently belongs, [3rd] which geographical data a historian has to check, and [4th] what time dating can be estimated.

When it comes to practical analyses, we need to check 4 other details: 1. re-examine the target-text [e.g. the Bible]; 2. compare that text with other texts from that time; 3. identify a landmark or location mentioned in those texts; 4. check the linguistic meaning of the given names.

Taken those 12 points together, we can perform forensic science for solving or clarify historical inconsistencies, contradictions and facts that have been hiding before our very eyes. And there is no need that all the 12 points match; only 2 or 3 matches may let us look into the right direction.

Some language analyses:

When we analyse texts that deal with the two first books of the Bible, Genesis and Exodus. The text talk about the people of Abraham, the people of Moses, the Egyptians, the Canaanites, the Hebrews, the Israelites, the Hittites, Edomites [Idumaeans], and others. When we now try to find out what languages these people spoke, we are in for a surprise: The Egyptians spoke Egyptian, the Mesopotamians spoke Akkadian, an East Semitic language. Arabs, Yemenites, Sabaeans, and some Edomites spoke South-Semitic. The Hittites in the east of modern Turkey spoke an Indo-European language related with Greek, Latin, German, Persian, Indian.

The Phoenicians, Canaanites, Israelites, Judaeans, Edomites, Moabites, Aramaeans [Syrians] - all of them - spoke one and the same language: West-Semitic, among linguists also known as Phoenician-Canaanite! In Egyptian texts, we read about the Hyksos who came to Egypt in about 1900 BC and about Habiru [Hebrew] against whom the Egyptians kept fighting for roughly 500 years. They too spoke Phoenician-Canaanite! In other words: Hyksos, Phoenicians, Canaanites, Hebrews, Israelites did not only speak the same language but shared the same culture, had very similar beliefs, made the same kind of pottery and weapons, and above all, they worked closely together under the bond of blood and language - just like English speaking British, American, Canadian and Australian people do today. Besides that, the discovery of cuneiform libraries in Mesopotamia and Egypt (!) teaches us that the entire Middle East [including Egypt and Persia] had a diplomatic language in use: the Semitic Akkadian language written on clay tablets with cuneiform script.

There are two strings of events narrated in the Tanakh, the Hebrew Bible, that we can call "the 2 most defining moments of the Bible". They are the migration of Abraham [and his people] from his birth place Erech [Uruk] in Mesopotamia first to Canaan [which comprised today's Israel, Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, and the eastern half of Sinai.] and then straight to Egypt. The second defining moment is the Exodus of Moses [and his people] from Egypt to Canaan. The authors of the Bible did perhaps not want to say it clearly, but other documents such as the Amarna letters, an amazing bulk of international correspondence found in Egypt, describe the events quite plainly. They suggest that Abraham and Moses belong to the very same chain of events.

The passages Genesis 12:10-20 narrate how Abraham moves to Egypt to escape a period of famine in Canaan. The unnamed pharaoh, through his princes, hears of the beauty of Abraham's wife Sarai [Sarah] who is summoned to meet him. Because of her, Abraham rises in the Pharaoh's favour and acquires livestock and servants. After discovering Sarah's true relationship to Abraham [she is also his (half)sister, Gen 20:12], the pharaoh chooses not to take her as his own wife. He releases her and Abraham and orders them to take their goods to leave Egypt.

The last chapters of the Book of Genesis (Genesis 37-50) tell how Joseph, son of Jacob / Israel, is first sold by his brothers into Egyptian slavery but is promoted by the unnamed pharaoh to vizier of Egypt and is given permission to bring his father, his brothers, and their families into Egypt to live in the Land of Goshen* (eastern Nile Delta around modern Faqus* [Phakousa, Egyptian: Pa-qas]. Faqus or Faqus is a city in the Egyptian governorate of Ash Sharqiyah Governorate. Local attractions include ancient Egyptian monuments in Tell el-Dab'a* [Avaris], Qantir, and Omm Egrim. Faqus is identical with the ancient city of Phacusa (Egyptian: Pa-kus, Greek: Phakousa), which was the capital of the nome [province] of Arabia.

[* The land of Goshen (Hebrew: Eretz Goshen; also Gesem or Kesem) is named in the Bible as the place in Egypt given to the Hebrews by the pharaoh of Joseph (Book of Genesis, Genesis 45:9-10), and the land from which they later left Egypt at the time of the Exodus. It was located in the eastern Delta of the Nile, lower Egypt; perhaps at or near Avaris, the capital city of the Phoenician-Canaanite Hyksos kings.

Pithom also called Per-Atum [in Greek: Heroöpolis or Heroonopolis], was an ancient city of Egypt. Multiple references in ancient Greek, Roman, and Hebrew Bible sources exist for this city, but its exact location remains somewhat uncertain.

This name comes from Hebrew Pithom which was taken from the Late Egyptian name Pi-Atum (Par-Atama) 'House of Atum'. Atum, a solar deity, was one of the major gods of ancient Egypt, and a sun-god of Heliopolis.

Pithom is one of the cities which, according to Exodus 1:11, was built for the Pharaoh by the forced labour of the Israelites. The other city was Ramses; and the Septuagint adds a third, "On, which is Heliopolis."

Heroöpolis was a large city east of the Nile Delta, situated near the mouth of the Royal Canal which connected the Nile with the Red Sea.

Pi-Ramesses (Egyptian: Per-Ra-mes(i)-su, meaning "House of Ra-Mose") was the new capital built by the Nineteenth Dynasty Pharaoh Ramesses II (1279-1213 BC) at Qantir, near the old site of Avaris. The city had served as a summer palace under Seti I (c. 1290-1279 BC), and may have been founded by Ramesses I (c. 1292-1290 BC) while he served under Horemheb. Why in this Canaanite-Hebrew

In the Book of Exodus, the Israelites—the descendants of Jacob's sons—are living in the Land of Goshen under a new pharaoh who oppresses* the Hebrews [* a slandering propaganda phrase that should probably hide that the Hyksos-Habiru (Hebrew) were actually in charge in northern Egypt at that time. They were most likely not the oppressed but the oppressors of Egyptian citizens in the Hyksos realm!]. He forces them to work long hours without breaks and issues a decree to kill their newborn males in order to reduce their numbers due to concerns about their growing population. Moses, a Levite, is saved by his mother who instructs his sister Miriam to watch over him after he is placed in a reed basket in the Nile River. He is discovered and adopted by the pharaoh's daughter. Miriam asks the princess if she would like an Israelite woman to help nurse the child and returns with Moses' own mother, who is then able to raise her child under royal protection. During his infant years, Moses is instructed about the customs and history of the Israelites, and is taught about Yahweh. Later, Moses is returned to the pharaoh's daughter and raised as part of the royal household.

Re-examination of Genesis

Chapters 1 and 2 are about creation of the Heavens, the Earth, and first life. God recommends "Be fruitful, and multiply." Chapters 3 and 4 are about Adam and Eve, how they sin, get expelled from Eden, about Cain and Abel, Cain murdering Abel.

Chapter 5 is the beginning of the "Book of Generations" in which we find the names of Adam and Eve's descendants. Remarkably, the here mentioned people do not belong to the inner circle of the Hebrews. In fact, the generations and their names refer to all sorts of Semitic tribes, clans, and dynasties, we meet time and again in the Tanakh. Chapters 6-9 contain the story of Noah and the Great Flood originally taken from the Gilgamesh Epic. Then the narrative becomes exceedingly interesting.

Chapter 11 tells us that "Terah took Abram his son, and Lot the son of Haran his son's son, and Sarai his daughter in law, his son Abram's wife; and they went forth with them from Ur of the Chaldees, to go into the land of Canaan; and they came unto Haran, and dwelt there." Ur of the Chaldees refers to the City of Ur in the realm of Uruk [Erech] an area in Sumer, in the south of Mesopotamia. Sumer flourished from 4500 BC to about 1900 BC. According to archaeological dating, the migration of Terah and Abraham coincided with the end of Sumer as political relevant nation state. They went "unto Haran" in the south of Turkey, meaning that they founded the Town of Haran and named it after Abraham's brother. Haran [or: Aran] died in Ur of Chaldees [Ur Kasdim]. Through his son Lot, Haran was the ancestor of the Moabites and Ammonites, and through his daughter Milcah he was ancestral to the Aramaeans. This passage [Genesis 11:31] defines the size of Canaan which reached in the south the area of Petra and in the north the south of Turkey; meaning: all lands of Phoenicia, Aram [Syria], Ammon [Amman, modern Jordan], Israel, Moab, Judah and Edom [Idumaea, northern Arabia] are originally considered parts of the "Promised Land."

This point of view could imply that Abraham was not just a harmless migrant or settler but a conqueror. Bear in mind what connotation of the original form of the name "Abram" represents: abram means "high father," from 'ab', for "father" + 'ram'; to "high." The form "abra'ham," [which was later bestowed to him by God] is glossed as 'ab' for "father of" + 'ha'mon', "multitude of," meaning a 'multitude of,' or many peoples! That sounds much more powerful to an almost threatening degree.

With this knowledge in our mind, the passage in Genesis 17:1-7 make perfect sense: ". . . the LORD appeared to Abram, and said unto him, I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly. And Abram fell on his face: and God talked with him, saying, As for me, behold, my covenant is with thee, and thou shalt be a father of many nations. Neither shall thy name any more be called Abram, but thy name shall be Abraham; for a father of many nations have I made thee. And I will make thee exceeding fruitful, and I will make nations of thee, and kings shall come out of thee. And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee."

It seems that this power was not only bestowed but also executed. The Genesis story reflects events in around 1900 BC. At this time, Egypt was invaded by a forceful people the Egyptian called Hekau-khasut or Heka-kasut, meaning: "ruler(s) of foreign lands", to us better known by its Greek term as "Hyksos.")

EA 1 - THE PHARAOH COMPLAINS TO THE BABYLONIAN KING

(Translation: William Lambert Moran, 1992; The Amarna letter EA1, titled "The Pharaoh complains to the Babylonian King", was written by the Pharaoh Amenhotep III to the King Kadašman-Enlil I. It is part of an archive of clay tablets containing the diplomatic correspondence between Egypt and other Near Eastern rulers during the reign of Pharaoh Akenaten, his predecessor Amenhotep III and his successors. These tablets were discovered in el-Amarna and are therefore known as the Amarna letters. All of the tablets are inscribed with cuneiform writing. The tablet itself is made of Marl clay collected near Esna, 50 km / 35 miles south of Cairo. The letters EA1 to EA14 contain the correspondence between Egypt and Babylonia. Only two of them, EA1 and EA5, were sent from Egypt to Babylonia. The other twelve were written by Babylonians.)

Speak to Kardasman-Enlil, king of the land of Karaduniash, my brother! Thus Nibmu'are'a, the great king, king of the land of Egypt, your brother. With me all is well: may all be well with you. With your house, with your wives, with your sons, with your senior officials, with your chariotry, and in the midst of your territories, may all be exceedingly well. With me all is well, with my house, my wives, my senior officials, my horses, my chariotry and my troops, it is all very well and within my territories it is all very well.

Now I have heard the message you sent to me concerning it, saying "You seek my daughter for your wife and my sister who my father gave to you is there with you but no one has seen her now, whether she is alive whether she is dead." This is what you sent me in your tablet; these are your words. When have you sent your dignitary who knows your sister, who can converse with her and identify her and let him converse with her?

The men who you send me are non-entities. One was the [. . .] of Zaqara, the other was an ass herd of the land of [. . .]. There was not one among them who knows her who was close to your father and can identify her.

Moreover, as for the envoys that returned to you and said she is not your sister, there was none among the two who knew her, and could tell you, more over, she is well and alive. Was there given something into his hand in order to deliver it to her mother?

And as for your writing, saying "You spoke to my envoys while your wives were assembled, standing before you, saying 'Behold your mistress who is standing before you' while my envoys did not recognise her, was it my sister who is like her? And now you wrote, saying "My envoys did not recognize her," and you say, "So who has identified her?" Why do you not send your dignitary who will tell you the truth, the welfare of your sister who is here? Then you can trust the one who enters in to see her house and the relationship with the king.

And when you write saying: "Perhaps it was the daughter of some lowly person either one of the Kaskeans or a daughter of the land of Khanigalbat, or perhaps of the land of Ugarit which my envoys saw. Who can trust those that she is like her? This one did not open her mouth. One can not trust them in anything." These are your words. And if our sister is dead then why would they conceal her death and why would we present another?... Surely the great god Amon knows your sister is alive!

I have appointed her sister to the queen mother as the mistress of the house...one bride of [. . .].

[. . .] concerning all of my wives [. . .] which the kings of the land of Egypt [. . .] in the land of Egypt. And as you wrote saying, "As for my daughters who are married to kings they are neighbours, if my envoys go there, they converse with the m] and they se]nd to me a present. The one that is thus [. . .]" These are your words. Perhaps the kings who are your neighbours are rich and mighty; your daughters acquire something with them and they send it to you, but what does she have, your sister who is with me? But as soon as she acquires something, then she will send it to you. Is it fitting that you give your daughters in order to acquire a garment from your neighbours?

And as for you citing the words of my father, leave it! Don't speak of his words! Moreover, "Establish friendly brotherhood between us." This is what you wrote; these are your words. Now, we are brothers, I and you, both of us, but I got angry concerning your envoys because they speak to you, saying, "Nothing is given to us who go to Egypt." Those who come to me, does one of the two go without taking silver, gold, oil, garments, everything nice more than from another country, but he speaks untruth to the one who sends him? The first time your envoy went off to your father and there mouths were speaking untruths. The second time they went forth and they are speaking lies to you. So I myself said, "if i give them something or if I do not give them, they will speak lies likewise," so I made up my mind about them; i did not give them further.

And as you wrote, saying, "You said to my envoys, 'Has your master no troops? The girl he gave to me is not beautiful!' " These are your words. Not so! Your envoys are speaking untruths to you in this manner! If there are warriors or if there are not, it is known to me. Why is it necessary to ask him if you troops or if you have horses? No! Don't listen to your two envoys that you send here in whose mouths are lies! Perhaps they are afraid of you, so that they tell lies to escape your punishment!

As you spoke, saying, "He placed my chariots among the chariots of the city rulers, you did not review them separately! You humiliated them before the throng which is thus and you did not review them separately." Verily the chariots are here; verily the horses of my country are here! All the chariot horses had to be supplied.

When you sent to my hand a vessel to anoint the head of the girl, you sent to me one gift of pure oil. Are we to laugh?

EA 2 - FROM KING KADASHMAN-ENLIL I TO PHARAO AMENHOTEP III

(Translation: William Lambert Moran, 1992; Amarna Letter EA2 is the letter of the Amarna series of inscriptions designated EA2, which is inscribed with cuneiform writing showing the continuation of a correspondence between Kadasman-Enlil I and Amenhotep III, from EA1. This letter is known to be concerning, A Proposal of Marriage. The letter is part of a series of correspondences from Babylonia to Egypt, which run from EA2 to EA4 and EA6 to EA14. EA1 and EA5 are from Egypt to Babylonia. The composition of the matter of the tablet onto which the letter is inscribed is clay taken from the River Euphrates.)

Say to Mimmuwareya, the king of Egypt, my brother: Thus Kadasman-Enlil, the king of Karaduniyaš. For me and my country all goes well. For you, for your wives, for your sons, for your magnates, your horses, your chariots, and your entire country, may all go very well.

With regards to my brother's writing me about marriage, saying, I desire your daughter, why should you not marry her? ... My daughters are available, but their husbands must be a king or of royal blood. These are the only ones I accept for my daughters. No king has ever given his daughters to anyone not of royal blood.

Your daughters are available, why have you not given me one?

. . . fine horses . . . 20 wooden . . . of gold . . . 120 shekels . . . I send to you as your greeting gift. 60 shekels of lapis-lazuli I send as the greeting gift of your sister, . . . my wife

EA 3 - FROM KADASHMAN ENLIL OF BABYLON TO AMENHOTEP OF EGYPT

(Translation: William Lambert Moran, 1992; Amarna Letter EA3, titled Marriage, grumbings, a palace opening, is a letter of correspondence between Nimu'wareya, this being the ruler of Egypt, Amenhotep III, and Kadasman-Enlil, the king of Babylon. The letter is part of a series of correspondences from Babylonia to Egypt, which run from EA2 to EA4 and EA6 to EA14. EA1 and EA5 are from Egypt to Babylonia.)

Say to Nimu'wareya, the king of Egypt, my brother: Thus Kadasman-Enlil, the king of Karaduniyaš, your brother. For me all indeed goes well. For you, for your household, your wives, and for your sons, your country, your chariots, your horses, your magnates may all go very well.

With regards to the girl, my daughter, about who you wrote to me in view of marriage, she has become a woman; she is nubile. Just send a delegation to fetch her. Previously my father would send a messenger to you and you would not detain him for very long. You quickly sent him off, and you would also send to my father here a beautiful greeting gift.

But now when I sent a messenger to you you have detained him for six years and you have sent me as my greeting gift the only thing in six years 30 minas of gold that looked like silver. That gold was melted down in the presence of Kasi your messenger and he was a witness. When you celebrated a great festival you did not send your messenger to me saying "Come to eat and drink" Nor did you send my greeting gift in connection with the festival. It was just 30 minas of gold that you sent me. My gift does not amount to what I have given you every year.

I have built a new house. In my house I have built a large...Your messengers have seen inside the house and the... and are pleased. Now I am going to have a house opening. Come yourself to eat and drink with me. I shall not act as you yourself did. 25 men and 25 women, 50 altogether in my service I send in connection with the house opening.

...for 10 wooden chariots, and 10 teams of horses I send to you as your greeting gift.

EA 4 - ROYAL DECEIT AND THREATS

(Translation: William Lambert Moran, 1992; Amarna Letter EA4, titled "Royal deceit and threats", is a continuation of correspondence between Kadasman-Enlil I and Amenhotep III. The letter is part of a series of correspondences from Babylonia to Egypt, which run from EA2 to EA4 and EA6 to EA14. EA1 and EA5 are from Egypt to Babylonia.)

. . . Moreover, you my brother when I wrote to you about marrying your daughter in accordance with your practice of not giving a daughter, wrote to me saying, 'From time immemorial no daughter of the King of Egypt is ever given to anyone' Why not. You are king you do as you please. Were you to give a daughter who would say anything. Since I was told of this message I wrote as follows to my brother saying 'Someone's grown daughters beautiful women must be available. Send me a beautiful woman as if she were your daughter. Who is going to say she is no daughter of the king. But holding to the decision you have not sent me anyone. Did you yourself not seek brotherhood and amity and so wrote to me about marriage that we might come closer to each other, and did not I for my part write to you about marriage for this very same reason, brotherhood and amity, that we might come closer to each other. Why then did my brother not send me just one woman. Should I perhaps since you did not send me a woman refuse you a woman just as you did to me and not send her. But my daughters being available I will not refuse to you.

Perhaps too when I wrote to you about marriage and when I wrote to you about the animals ... Now you need not accept the offspring of my daughter whom I shall send to you, but, send me any animals requested of you.

And as for the gold I wrote to you about, send me whatever is one hand as much as possible before your messenger comes to me right now in all haste this summer either in the month of Tammuz or in the month Ab so I can finish the work I am set upon. If during this summer in the months of Tammaz or Ab you send the gold I wrote to you about I will give you my daughter. So please send the gold you feel prompted to. But if in the months of Tammuz or Ab you do not send me the gold, and with it I do not finish the work I am engaged in what would be the point of your being pleased to send me gold. Once I have finished the work I am engaged in, what need have I of gold. Then you might send me 3000 talents of gold, but I would not accept it, I would send it back to you and not give you my daughter in marriage.

EA 5 - GIFTS OF EGYPTIAN FURNITURE FOR THE BABYLONIAN PALACE

(Amarna Letter EA 5, one of the Amarna letters, is a correspondence between Kadasman-Enlil I and Amenhotep III. The letter exists as two artifacts, one at the British Museum (BM 29787) and one in the Cairo Museum (C 12195). The letter is part of a series of correspondences from Babylonia to Egypt, which run from EA2 to EA4 and EA6 to EA14. EA1 and EA5 are from Egypt to Babylonia.)

Thus Nibmuareya Great King, the king of Egypt. Say to Kadasman-Enlil, the king of Karaduniyaš, my brother: For me all goes well. For you may all go well. For your household, your wives, your sons, your magnates, your troops, your horses, your chariots, and in your countries, may all go well. For me all goes well. For my household, my wives, my sons, my magnates, my many troops, my horses, my chariots, and in my countries all goes very, very well.

I have just heard that you have built some new quarters. I am sending herewith some furnishings for your house. Indeed I shall be preparing everything possible before the arrival of your messenger who is bringing your daughter. When your messenger returns, I will send them to you. I herewith send you, in the charge of Shutti, a greeting-gift of things for the new house: One bed of ebony, overlaid with ivory and gold; three beds of ebony, overlaid with gold; one urushu of ebony, overlaid with gold; one large chair (throne) of ebony, overlaid with gold. These things, the weight of all the gold: 7 minas, 9 shekels, of silver; In addition, 10 footstools (footstools) of ebony; [. . .] of ebony, overlaid with gold; [. . .] footstools of ivory, overlaid with gold; [. . .] of gold. [Total 10 x] minas, 10 and 7 shekels, of gold.

EA 6 - AN OFFER OF FRIENDSHIP

(Translation: William Lambert Moran, 1992; Amarna Letter EA 6 is a correspondence from Burra-Buriyash (the king of Babylon) to Nimmuwareya (Amenhotep III) the king of Egypt. According to one source, this letter concerns gifts between two kings. The letter is part of a series of correspondences from Babylonia to Egypt, which run from EA2 to EA4 and EA6 to EA14. EA1 and EA5 are from Egypt to Babylonia.)

Say to Nimmuwareya the king of Egypt my brother Thus Burra-Buriyash the king of Karaduniyaš (Babylon) your brother For me all goes well For you your household your wives your sons your country your magnates your horses your chariots may all go well.

Just as previously you and my father were friendly to one another you and I should be friendly to one another Between us anything else what-so-ever is not to be mentioned. Write to me for what you want from my country so that it may be taken to you and I will write to you of what I want from your country so that it may be taken to me . . . I will trust you . . . Write to me so that it may be taken to you, And as your greeting gift . . . and one . . . I send you

EA 7 - A LESSON IN GEOGRAPHY

(Translation: J. Hill, 2010; Amarna Letter EA7, titled "A Lesson in Geography", is a letter from Burra-Buriyash / Burnaburiash the king of Karaduniyaš (Babylon) to Naphurureya / Napkhururia (Amenhotep IV / Akhenaten), king of Egypt, and, and is part of a series of correspondences from Babylonia to Egypt, which run from EA2 to EA4 and EA6 to EA14. EA1 and EA5 are from Egypt to Babylonia. The letter demonstrates the existence of Middle Eastern trade routes through Canaan and Phoenicia. The artifact is no longer extant having been destroyed during a bombing raid upon the city of Berlin, during World War II.)

To Napkhururia, Great King, king of Egypt, thus speaks Burnaburiash, Great King, king of Karaduniash, your brother. I and my house, my horses and my chariots, my notables and my land, we are well. May well-being reign over my brother and his house, his horses and his cars, his notables and his land.

From the day on which the envoy of my brother arrived before me, my body has not been well, and his envoy has never eaten or drunk before me. See, if you question your envoy, he cannot tell you that my body is not well, and . . . And as my body is not well and my brother . . .

I vented my anger with my brother with the following words: Should my brother not know that I am ill? Why has he not supported my head? Why has he not worried and sent his messengers?

The envoy of my brother has spoken thus: The way is not short, so that your brother can find out and send you greetings. The passage is long to your brother. Who can inform him, so that he sends a greeting to you quickly?

He next spoke thus: Question your messenger if the passage is not long. . .

As I asked my messenger, and he said that the way was long, no longer make I my brother the object of my anger.

As one has said that in the land of my brother there is everything, and that my brother lacks nothing, of everything there is also in my land, and I lack nothing. For a long time we have had good relations between us kings, and we exchange greetings. These relations between us must remain. . .

Only, four mines of beautiful lapis lazuli have I sent to my brother as a gift, and also five teams of horses. When the times are good, I will send with my future messengers many beautiful gifts, and anything that my brother wishes, he can write . . .

I have started an undertaking, and for this reason I write to my brother. My brother should send me much gold, that I need for my work. But the gold that my brother sends me, do not leave it to some official. Let the eyes of my brother inspect it, and let my brother seal it and send it! Because as far as the previous gold is concerned, which my brother did not inspect personally, but which was sealed and sent by an official of my brother, of the 40 mines which I put in the furnace, there was barely anything of value left.

And with regards to Salmu, my envoy, twice has his caravan been plundered. Once it was plundered by Biriazama (Biriawaza), and his other caravan by Pamahu, a governor of a land that belongs to you. And this matter, my brother, you must put right! When my envoy spoke before my brother so may now Shalmu speak before my brother His things should be restored to him and he should be compensated for his losses.

EA 8 - FROM BURNABURIAH, KING OF KARADUNIASH (BABYLON) TO NAPKHURURIA (AMENHOTEP IV. / AKHENATEN)

(Berlin, VA. Th. 152; Published by Abel and Winckler, Der Thontafelfund von El-Amarna, No. 8. Translated by Ungnad in Cressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, 1., p. 129f.; and by Knudtzon. Die El-Amarna Tafeln, p. 85 f. EA 8 is a continuation of correspondence between Naphurureya, king of Egypt, and Burnaburiyash the king of Karaduniash (Babylon).)

To Naphururia, King of Egypt, my brother, thus hath spoken Burnaburiash, King of Karaduniash, thy brother: With me it is well; with thee, with thy land, thy house, thy wives, thy children, thy nobles, thy horses, thy chariots, may it be exceeding well! I and my brother have spoken friendly with one another, and thus have we spoken: "As our fathers were, so will we also be good friends." But now my traders, who came up with Ahutabu, remained behind in Kinahhi [i.e.: Canaan.] for business reasons. After Ahutabu had gone off to my brother, in the city of Hinnatuni of Kinahhi, Shumadda, son of Balumme, and Shutatna, son of Sharatum, of Acco, sent their men and slew my traders, and carried off their money!

Azzu, . . . I have sent to thee, so ask him and let him tell thee. Kinahhi is thy land and its kings are thy servants. In thy land violence has been done me. Chastise them, and the money which they have taken away, restore!

And the men who have slain my servants, slay them, and avenge their blood! But if thou dost not slay these people, they will on another occasion slay my caravans or thy messengers, and then messengers will cease to pass between us. And if they deny it, know this, that Shumadda cut the feet off one of my people, and kept him prisoner; and that Shutatna of Acco set another on his head, and he stands before his face. Cause these men to be brought before thee, and take heed to my welfare! As present I have sent thee three mina of lapis-lazuli. Send my messenger back speedily. May I learn of the welfare of my brother! Do not keep my messenger back! Let him come quickly!

EA 9 - ANCIENT LOYALTIES, NEW REQUEST

(Translation: William Lambert Moran, 1992; Amarna letter EA 9, [Burna-Buriash letter no. 4 of 6], titled "Ancient Loyalties, new Request", is a tall, compact 38 line clay tablet letter of 3 paragraphs from King Burra-Buriash of Babylon and is to the Pharaoh of Egypt (Misri). The Pharaoh is named Neb-Kheper-Ra, [meaning King-Manifested-Ra, meaning Tutankhamun / Tutankhamen, c. 1342 - c. 1325 BC].

The introductory, and salutary Paragraph 1, highlights, peace (shalāmu-shu-ul-mu) for King Burnaburiash, and wishes peace, and well-being to the Pharaoh, and on the many contingents of the Pharaoh's charge, wife, army, the country, etc.

Paragraph 2 highlights the need for gold, for building a mausoleum for Burnaburiash's father, and is an involved paragraph discussing the ancestor father-king's relationships, and the desire for continued good relations, and the exchange of peace gifts between the 'brother kings'.

Paragraph 3 highlights the intrigues of economic and country relationships. Ascending country emissaries, and the vying for trade, and economic trading rights. A dialogue is contained in the paragraph, between the history, and what Burnaburiash would like to see done in the future.)

Text:

Paragraph 1: Say to NibhurreReya (Neb-kheper-Ra-ia), the king of Egypt (Misri), my brother: "message Thus", Thus, the king of Karaduniyash, your brother. For me all goes well. For you, your household, your wives, your sons, your country, your magnates, your horses, your chariots, may all go very well.

Paragraph 2: From the time my ancestors and your ancestors made a mutual declaration of friendship, they sent beautiful greeting-gifts to each other, and refused no request for anything beautiful. My brother has now sent me 2—minas of gold as my greeting-gift. Now, if gold is plentiful, send me as much as your ancestors sent, but if it is scarce, send me half of what your ancestors sent. Why have you sent me 2—minas of gold? At the moment my work on a temple is extensive, and I am quite busy with carrying it out. Send me much gold. And you for your part, whatever you want from my country, write me so that it may be taken to you.

Paragraph 3: In the time of Kurigalzu, my ancestor, all the Canaanites [Kinahi] wrote here to him, saying, "Come to the border of the country so we can revolt and be allied with you!"

My ancestor sent them this reply, saying, "Forget about being allied with me. If you become enemies of the king of Egypt, and are allied with anyone else—will I not then come and plunder you? How can there be an alliance with me?" — For the sake of your ancestor, my ancestor did not listen to them. Now, as for my Assyrian vassals—(i.e. King Ashur-uballit I, r. 1365 and 1330 BC), I was not the one who sent them to you. Why on their own authority have they come to your country? If you love me, they will conduct no business whatsoever. Send them off to me empty-handed.

I send to you as your greeting-gift 3—minas of genuine lapis lazuli, and 5—teams of horses for 5—wooden chariots.

EA 10 - EGYPTIAN GOLD AND CARPENTERS

(Translation: William Lambert Moran, 1992; Amarna Letter EA 10, titled "Egyptian Gold and Carpenters" is the letter of the Amarna series of diplomatic correspondence designated EA 10, which is written in cuneiform writing showing the continuation of a correspondence between Burna-Buriash II (otherwise known as Burra-Buriyas) an ancient king of Babylon (named Karduniash in the 1350BC Amarna timeperiod), and Akhenaten (also known as Amenophis IV), an ancient pharaoh of Egypt. The letter is part of a series of correspondences from Babylonia to Egypt, which run from EA2 to EA4 and EA6 to EA14. EA1 and EA5 are from Egypt to Babylonia.

Within the letter Burna-Buriash II praises the craftsmen of the land of Akhenaten, and requests a model of an animal, either land or aquatic, and he is apparently indifferent to which of the two the pharaoh should choose to have created.

Some part of the contents of the letter indicates (in addition to EA11) that the Egyptian pharaoh married his daughters Meritaten [Mary of Aten, the Beloved of God] and Ankhesenpaaten at a time when they were about 11 or 12 years of age.)

Say to Naphurareya, the king of Egypt: Thus Burra-Buriyas, the king of Karaduniyash (Babylon). For me all goes well. For you, for your household, for your wives, for your sons, for your magnates, for your troops, for your chariots, for your horses, and for your country, may all go very well.

From the time of Karaindash, since the messengers of your ancestors came regularly to my ancestors, up to the present, they (the ancestors) have been friends. Now, though you and I are friends, three times have your messengers come to me and you have not sent me a single beautiful greeting-gift, nor have I for my part sent you a beautiful greeting-gift. I am one for whom nothing is scarce, and you are one for whom nothing is scarce. As for your messenger whom you sent to me, the 20 minas of gold that were brought here were not all there. When they put it into the kiln, not five minas of gold appeared. The ... that did appear, on cooling off looked like ashes. Was the gold ever identified as gold [...] friends with each other] [...] . . .

[...] of a wild ox for [...] [...] when your messenger [...] [...] let him bring to me. There are skilled carpenters⁸ where you are. Let them represent a wild animal, land or aquatic, lifelike, so that the hide is exactly like that of a live animal. Let your messenger bring it to me. But if there are some old ones already on hand, then as soon as Shindishugab, my messenger, reaches you, let him immediately, posthaste, borrow chariots and get here. Let them make some new ones for future delivery, and then when my messenger comes here with your messenger, let them bring them here together.

I send as your greeting-gift minas of lapis lazuli, and concerning your daughter Mayati, having heard about her, I send to her as her greeting-gift a necklace of cricket-shaped gems, of lapis-lazuli, 1048 their number. And when your messenger comes along with Shindishugab, I will make [...] and have it brought to her.

EA 15 - FROM ASHUR-UBALLIT, KING OF ASHUR TO AN UNNAMED EGYPTIAN PHARAOH

(Translation: J. Hill, 2010.)

To the king of the land of Egypt — speak! So (says) Ashuruballit, the king of the land of Ashur. To your house, to your country, to your war chariots and to your army well-being!

I have sent my envoy to visit you and to see your country. That my forefathers until now have not sent, I have sent you today: one fine chariot, two horses, (and) a jewel from precious stone, a date shaped bead from genuine lapis lazuli as a good-wish present, (I) have directed unto you. My envoy, whom I have sent you (only) to visit (you), do not hold him back! May he visit and leave! Your opinion and the situation of your country may he observe, then may he leave!

EA 16 - FROM ASHUR-UBALLIT, KING OF ASHUR (ASSYRIA) TO NAPKHORORIA (AKHENATEN)

(Translation: J. Hill, 2010.)

To Napkhororia, Great King, king of Egypt, my brother, thus speaks Ashuruballit, king of Assyria, Great King, your brother: my well-being reign over you, your house and your land!

I feel very pleased after having seen your envoy. This is felt, in truth... before me. I have sent you a beautiful royal chariot, two white horses, an unfurnished chariot and a beautiful stone seal as gifts. Of the Great King... it is said: The gold is in your land like the dust; Why is there ... in your eyes? I have begun a new palace, and I want to have it ready soon. Send me as much gold as is required for its decoration and for what is needed.

When my father, Ashurnadinahe, ordered his messengers to go to Egypt, they sent him twenty gold talents. And when the king of Khanigbat sent his messengers to your father (Amenhotep III) in Egypt, they sent twenty gold talents to him. See, to the king of Khanigbat (Mittani) I am ..., but to me you have sent only a little gold, which is not sufficient, in spite of the goings and comings of my messenger. If it is your intention that a sincere friendship exist, send much gold! And you may send people on your part, and you will receive whatever you need!

Our lands are far apart, which is why our envoys must travel wisely. Those who detained your envoy were the Sutu (nomadic semites who pledged allegiance to Egypt), his attackers. Dead will I be until I have sent people to take the Sutu attackers... They will not detain my envoy. Why do they have to remain in foreign lands, and die in foreign lands, the messengers? If they have passed in a foreign country a part of their time, and the king has taken advantage of it, they may then remain there and die; the king has, certainly, had a gain. But if he has not had any, why do the messengers send have to die in a foreign country? The envoys are being attacked and die in a foreign land.

EA 17 - FROM TUSHRATTA, KING OF HATTI TO NIBMUARIA (AMENHOTEP III)

(Translation: J. Hill, 2010.)

To Nibmuaria, King of Egypt, my brother, say: Thus says Tushratta, King of Mitanni, your brother. It is well with me. May it be well with you; with Keliya (wife of Amenhotep III), my sister, may it be well; with your household, your wives, your sons, your nobles, your warriors, your horses, your chariots, and throughout your land may it be very well.

When I sat upon my father's throne, I was still young, and Tuhi did evil to my land, and he killed his lord. And, therefore, he did not treat me well, nor the one who was on friendly terms with me. I, however, especially because of those evils, which were perpetrated on my land, made no delay; but the murderers of Artashumara, my brother, along with all that they had, I killed.

Because you were friendly with my father, for this reason I sent and spoke to you, so that my brother might hear of this deed and rejoice. My father loved you, and you loved my father still more. And my father, because of his love, has given my sister to you. And who else stood with my father as you did? The very next year, moreover, my brother's ... the whole land of Hatti. As the enemy came to my land, Teshub (a Hurrian storm-god), my lord, gave him into my hand, and I destroyed him. And not one of them returned to his own land.

Behold, one chariot, two horses, one male servant, one female servant, out of the booty from the land of Hatti I have sent you. And as a gift for my brother, five chariots (and) five teams of horses I have sent you. And as a gift for Keliya-Heba, my sister, one set of gold pins, one set of gold earrings, one gold idol, and one container of "sweet oil." I have sent her.

Behold, Keliya, my sukkal (an official) along with Tunip-ibri, I have sent. May my brother quickly dispatch them so that they may quickly bring back word so that I may hear my brother's greeting and rejoice. May my brother seek friendship with me, and may my brother send his messengers so that they may bring my brother's greeting and I may receive them.

EA 19 - LOVE AND GOLD

(Translation: William Lambert Moran, 1992; Amarna letter EA 19, is a tall clay tablet letter of 13 paragraphs, in relatively pristine condition, with some minor flaws on the clay, but a complete enough story that some included words can complete the story of the letter. Entitled "Love and Gold", the letter is about gold from Egypt (gold mine production), love between father-king ancestors and the current relationship between the King of Mitanni and the Pharaoh of Misri (Egypt), and marriage of women from King Tushratta of Mitanni to the Pharaoh of Egypt.)

Paragraph 1: Say to Nimmureya, Great King, the king of Egypt (Misri), my brother, my son-in-law, who loves me, and whom I love: Message of Tushratta, Great King, your father-in-law, who loves you, the king of Mitanni, your brother. For me all goes well. For you may all go well. For your household, for my sister, for the rest of your wives, for your sons, for your chariots, for your horses, for your warriors, for your country, and for whatever else belongs to you, may all go "very, very well!"

Paragraph 2: As far back as the time of your ancestors, they always showed love to my ancestors. You yourself went even further and showed very great love to my father. Now, in keeping with our constant and mutual love, you have made it for ten times greater than the love shown my father. May the gods grant it, and may Teshup, my lord, and Aman and Teshup, my lord, and Aman make flourish for evermore, just as it is now, this mutual love of ours.

Paragraph 3: When my brother sent Mane, his messenger, saying, "Send your daughter here to be my wife and the mistress of Egypt," I caused my brother no distress and immediately I said, "Of course!" The one whom my brother requested I showed to Mane, and he saw her. When he saw her, he praised her greatly. I will lead her in safety to my brother's country. May Shaushka and Aman make her the image of my brother's desire.

Paragraph 4: Keliya, my messenger, brought my brother's words to me, and when I heard them, they were very pleasing, and I rejoiced very, very much, saying, "Certainly! there is this between us: we love each other." Now, with such words let us love each other forevermore.

Paragraph 5: When I wrote to my brother, I said, "Let us love each other very, very much, and between us let there be friendship." I also said to my brother, "May my brother treat me ten times better than he did my father."

Paragraph 6: I also asked my brother for much gold, saying: "May my brother grant me more than he did by father and send it to me. You sent my father much gold. You sent him large gold jars and gold jugs. You sent him gold bricks as if they were just the equivalent of copper."

Paragraph 7: When I sent Keliya to my brother, I asked for [much] gold saying, ("um-ma")—"May my brother treat me [ten times] better than he did my father, and may he send much gold that has not been worked."

EA 23 - LETTER OF TUSHRATTA OF MITANNI TO AMENHETEP III.

(British Museum, BV. 88-10-13, 78; Published by Bezold and E.A. Wallis Budge, The Tell El-Amarna Tablets in The British Museum (1892), No. 10. Translated by Ungnad in Gressmann, Altorientalische Texte und Bilder, I., p. 130-1; and by Jürgen A. Knudtzon, Die El-Amarna Tafeln, No. 23.)

To Nimturia, King of Egypt, my brother, my son-in-law whom I love, and who loves me, thus hath spoken Tushratta,

King of Mitanni, who loves thee, thy father-in-law: With me it is well. With thee may it be well!

With thy house; with Tathu, my daughter, thy wife whom thou lovest, may it be well! With thy wives, thy children, thy nobles, thy chariots, thy horses, thy warriors, thy lands, and with everything that is thine, may it be very, very, very well!

Thus saith Ishtar of Nineveh, the Lady of countries, all of them: "To Egypt, the land which I love, will I go, and I will wander! Behold, now I have sent her, and she is gone. . . . Behold, in the time of my father did the Lady go to the land, and as, when she formerly dwelt there, men honoured her, so may my brother now honour her ten times more than in the former days! May my brother honour her, and send her away in joy that she may return!"

Ishtar, the Lady of Heaven, may she protect my brother and me! One hundred thousand years and much joy may this Lady give us both! And as is good, so will we do. Ishtar is for me, my god; but for my brother, she is not his god.

[The reverse side of this tablet is inscribed with a note of three lines of Egyptian hieroglyphics, written in black ink, and reading:]

"Year 36, 4th month of the winter, when we were in the southern castle Pr H'wt . . . Copy . . . brought by the messenger."
